T O T H E
K I N G.

SIR,

THE History of the Church of Scotland, under a long Series of Sufferings, from which it was rescued by that great Instrument of Providence, King William of immortal Memory, is, with the profoundest Humility, laid at your MAJESTY'S Feet.

PERMIT me to observe the adorable and just Retributions of the righteous Judge of all the Earth. Your Royal Progenitors, the excellent King and Queen of Bohemia, had the Grace and Honour vouchsafed them, to suffer for our holy Reformation, while they were too much neglected by those in Britain, who ought to have supported them: Your sacred MAJESTY, with all your Dominions, now reap the Fruits of those glorious Sufferings; and your happy Subjects cannot but hope that there are many rich Blessings in Reserve to your MAJESTY and your House, for a great While to come.

YOUR illustrious Father joyned Counsels with His Highness William Prince of Orange, for bringing about, under GOD, that wonderful Turn of Affairs, at the late happy Revolution, which put an End to the Sufferings I have described.

A Period of Time never to be forgotten by Protestants! when our Reformation from Pope-ry, with all the Religious and Civil Interests of Europe, were in the utmost Danger: Popery had made formidable Advances; a bigotted Papist had seated himself upon the Throne, and was in the closest Concert with the French King, who, after he had, contrary to solemn Promises and Treaties, ruined a glorious and numerous Protestant Church, was strenuously carrying on his darling Project of rooting out the Northern Heresy, and grasping hard at the universal Monarchy.

Then the LORD did great Things for us, whereof we were glad: We had not long enjoyed our religious and civil Liberties, till the Time approached, when our great Deliverer, worn out with Cares, was ripe for Heaven, and called to enjoy the glorious Reward of the eminent Service he was honoured to do for GOD and his Generation.

IT

The D E D I C A T I O N.

IT was then kind Providence put him upon securing and perpetuating those great Things our gracious GOD had wrought for us, by entailing the Crown, and settling the Protestant Succession in your illustrious House.

AND we were at a Loss to determine, whether the Revolution it self, or the securing all the Blessings of it to us and latest Posterity, was the greatest Appearance of Providence for us and all the Churches of Christ.

YOUR MAJESTY'S Subjects could not but humbly and gratefully observe the only wise, powerful, and good GOD, preserving this his own Work, amidst all the artful and open Efforts, made afterwards to weaken and even overturn that happy Settlement; till we had the inexpressible Pleasure of seeing the same almighty Arm, at a Season when our Dangers were only equalled by those we had been in at the Revolution, bringing your excellent MAJESTY to the Possession of that Throne you now so much adorn.

MAY our gracious GOD, who performeth all Things for us, preserve you long long upon it.

ONE can scarce help envying the Happiness of that Historian, who shall have the Honour faithfully, and in a Manner worthy of so great a Theme, to transmit to future Ages the Glories of your MAJESTY'S Government, ment, and of such a lasting and happy Reign, as all good Men most ardently wish you: But the Share fallen to me, is to give some Account of a Management, perfectly the Reverse of the Beauties of your MAJESTY'S Administration; in which we see an happy Temperature of the Exercise of that Prerogative, which all good Kings ought to have, with the Liberties of the Subject, and a just Regard to the Constitution, a steady Firmness and Resolution necessary to all great Actions, mixed with that Goodness and Wisdom requisite to so great a Trust,

THE exalted and noble Views which fill your MAJESTY'S Eye, are the Glory of GOD, the Promoting of real Religion, the Felicity of your Subjects, and the Good of Mankind; and we know not which most to admire, your extensive and paternal Goodness to your Subjects, or your Mildness to your Enemies, which, to their lasting Shame, is not able to reclaim them: But my mean Pen is, at best, every Way below this noble Subject, and of late is so blunted with the melancholy Matter of the following History, and our Miseries under preceeding Reigns, that 'tis perfectly unfit to enter upon the Blessings of your MAJESTY'S Government.

MAY I presume to hope, that the uncontestable Facts recorded in this History, the arbitrary Procedure, Oppression and Severities of that Period, the open Invasion upon Liberty and Property, with the hasty Advances towards Popery and Slavery, must, as so many Shades, be of some Use to set forth the Glories of your MAJESTY'S Reign, even with some greater Advantage than the best Expressions of the happiest Pen.

PERSECUTION for Conscience sake, and Oppression in Civil Liberty, flow from the same Springs, are carried on by the same Measures, and lead to the very same miserable End; so that they could scarce misgointogether in a far better Reign than those I describe. When Aſa put the Seer in Prison, he oppressed some of the People at the same Time: But your MAJESTY'S just and conspicuous Regard to tender Consciences among your Protestant Subjects, perfectly secures them from the most distant Fears of any Invasion upon what is valuable to them, as Men, and Members of a civil Society.

GREAT SIR, You have the Glory of making a noble Stand, in a Manner worthy of your self and the great Interests of Religion and Liberty, against the unmanly and anti-christian Spirit of Persecution, Oppression, and Tyranny, so peculiar to Papists, and such who have been guided by their Counsels.

ALL the Protestant Churches are daily offering up their Thanks to GOD, for your generous and truly Christian Appearances in behalf behalf of our oppressed Brethren in Germany, and cannot cease from their most fervent Prayers for Success to your MAJESTY'S Endeavours this way, in Conjunction with the King of Prussia, your MAJESTY'S Son in Law, and other Protestant Powers.

THE Church of Scotland must be nearly touched with the Hardships put upon any of the Reformed Churches Abroad: In Worship, Doctrine, Government, and Discipline, she is upon the same Scriptural Bottom with them. The Palatine Catechism was adopted by us, till we had the Happiness to join with the venerable Assembly at Westminster, in that excellent Form of sound Words contained in our Confession of Faith, ratified by Law, and our Larger and Shorter Catechisms.

WE suffered the Hardships I relate, for adhering to our Reformation Blessings, and humbly claim the Character of contending and suffering for Revolution Principles, even before the Revolution was brought about. And

IT was, when appearing for the Liberties of the Nation, as well as the Principles of our Reformation, that Presbyterians in Scotland were harassed and persecuted; and yet they maintained their Loyalty, and just Regard to the Civil Powers, even when oppressed by them.

THEY have been indeed otherwise represented by their Enemies; but whenever your MAJESTY'S greater Affairs permit you to look upon the following History, I flatter myself you will have satisfying Evidence, That they suffered for Righteousness sake, and not as evil Doers.

THIS they were taught by their Bibles. And now, when we are relieved from such Hardships, our plain Duty and highest Interests are happily combined in an inviolable Attachment to your most excellent MAJESTY'S Person, Family, and Government.

THE least Inclination unto a Popish Pretender to the Crown of these Realms, is a Crime so black in our Eyes, and so contrary to our Principles and Interest, that we want Words to express our Abhorrence of it.

THE Succession in your MAJESTY'S Person and Protestant Heirs, the very crowning Stone of the Revolution, is what we ardently prayed and contended for, before it took place; and from our very Souls we bless the LORD for making it effectual in your MAJESTY'S Accession, and reckon our selves happy in the Honour of avouching our inviolable Duty, Affection and Fidelity to your sacred MAJESTY, our only rightful and lawful Sovereign.

PERMIT me, in the most sincere and unfeigned Manner, to join with the Church of Scotland, in Adoration and Praise to our gracious
GOD

GOD and Redeemer, who, because he loved us, made you King over us, to do Judgment and Justice, and hath raised up your MAJESTY to maintain what he hath wrought for us, to preserve our valuable Privileges, and redress our remaining Grievances, brought upon us under the former unhappy Administration.

MAY the same glorious GOD kindly lead you through such Difficulties as the manifold Sins of those Nations bring in your Way, support your sacred MAJESTY under the Fatigue and Cares with which your imperial Crown is surrounded, pour out his best Blessings upon your Royal Person and Family, and, in his great Goodness to us and those Parts of the World, preserve you long the Arbiter of Europe, and Head of the Protestant Interest; and after an happy and glorious Reign over your Kingdoms, and an extensive and useful Life to the Church of GOD, Mankind and those Lands, receive you graciously to his blessed and eternal Mansions above.

MEAN while, GREAT SIR, in the most submissive Manner, I beg your MAJESTY'S Patronage, and the Liberty to inscribe this History to the Best, as well as Greatest of Kings, and presume, with your Allowance, upon the Honour of Subscribing my self in this

P R E F A C E.

It must appear strange to all disinterested Persons, who know any Thing of Scottish Affairs from the Restoration to the Revolution, that there is a Party among us who deny there was any Persecution of Presbyterians for Conscience sake in that Period, and yet raise a terrible Cry of Severity and Cruelties exercised upon the Episcopal Clergy at and since the happy Revolution.

Presbyterians are loudly called upon, to give an Instance of Persecution during that Time, except for the Crimes of Rebellion and Treason. It is boldly asserted, and published to the World, That no Man in Scotland ever suffered for his Religion. Libels have been printed, and carefully handed about, containing these glaring Untruths; and no small Pains is taken, and many Artifices used, to impress the English Nation with them. Multitudes of Pamphlets were going about after the Revolution, larded with these and such like Aspersions upon the Church of Scotland, to which some just Answers were at that Time given.

A new Cry was raised, to the same Purpose, upon the Death of our glorious Deliverer King William, when a Design was formed to strengthen the Anti-revolution Party, and weaken this Church, by a boundless Toleration, and the Reintroduction of Patronages: But the last Four Years of Queen Anne's Reign were thought a most proper Juncture for propagating those Fallhoods, gradually to prepare the Way for overturning our Revolution Establishment, and consequently the glorious Settlement of the Protestant Succession, and with those the Religion and Liberties of Britain and Ireland. Sir George Mackenzie's Vindication of the Reigns of King Charles and King James, was reprinted, and carefully spread, with many other Pamphlets, containing Facts, Assertions, and Representations of Things, perfectly contrary to the Knowledge and Experience of Multitudes yet alive.

Protestant

The Authors, Abettors, and grand Promoters whereof were the Jacobites, who threw off the Mask at the late unnatural Rebellion, equally Enemies to his most excellent Majesty King George, and the Church of Scotland: And nothing could move them to publish Facts they could not but know were false, save their Engagement in a Party with foreign Papists, their virulent Malice at our present Establishment, and obstinate Zeal for the Pretender, who is educated and confirmed in Romish Idolatry, Contradictions and Tyranny, and therefore the fittest Hand to react the Tragedies of the unhappy Period I am to describe, and worse, if worse can be supposed.

I with the Prelatick Party among us have not been tempted to venture upon such Methods, by the culpable Silence of Presbyterians, who have been so far from rendring Evil for Evil, or measuring out to them according to their Measure; that, it must be owned, they have been much wanting to themselves, their Neighbours, and Posterity, in not representing true Matter of Fact, for their own Vindication.

As this Negligence hath no doubt given considerable Advantage to the other Side, so it hath been much lamented by many, who, at this Distance, want distinct Accounts of the unparalleled Severities of the former Times: And now it is, with some Colour of Reason, improven in Conversation and otherwise, as an Argument that Presbyterians have nothing to say for themselves; and Silence is taken for Confession in Persons so nearly concerned.

It appears high Time then, to let the World know, that Presbyterians have not been so long silent from want of Matter, but from a Regard to the Reputation of our holy Religion, and common Interests of the Reformation. They were unwilling to seem in the least to stir up the Government to deal with the persecuting Party in a way of Retaliation; and, till forced, in their own necessary Defence, to set Matters in their true Light, and expose the severe Treatment they met with, they could have wished the Inhumanities of professed Protestants, towards those who were really such, had been buried in Oblivion.

The following Work being extorted by the Impudence of those who are no Friends to the present Establishment of Church and State, they ought to bear the Blame of any Misimprovement the Enemies of our Reformation may make of that persecuting Spirit, so peculiar to Papists, when it discovers it self among Protestants.

I am assured by a worthy Friend of mine, who was present at a Conversation 'twixt Mr. Jeremiah White, well known at London, and some Persons there of the first Rank, some few Years ago, that Mr. White told, He had made a full Collection of all who had suffered by the penal Laws in England, from the Restoration to the Revolution, for Nonconformity, their Names, the Fines imposed, the Goals where they were imprisoned, &c. That the Number of persecuted Protestant Nonconformists exceeded Sixty thousand, whereof above Five thousand died in Goal. King James, after his Accession, came to be informed of this Collection, and offered Mr. White a large Sum for it, which he generously refused, knowing the Design a Popish Prince probably had in getting such Papers in his Hand, to expose the Church of England, and to extenuate the just Charge of the Tyranny and Persecution of those of his own Religion, if Popery deserves that Name.

But the Spirit of Tyranny, Imposition and Persecution, ought to be abominated wherever it is: Nor do I see what Handle Papists can have to insult Protestants from the Severities narrated in the following History, since 'tis plain these proceeded from themselves. The Duke of York, and his Party, several of whom turned Papists, were at the Bottom of our Persecution in Scotland: Our Prelates were heartily in his Interests; his Dependents were the chief Managers; and any Relaxation allowed in his Reign, was to serve his own Purposes, tho' Presbyterians happily improved it to the strengthening of the Protestant Interest; which, by the good Providence of God, made way for the Revolution.

An Attempt is made, in the following History, to give a well vouched Narrative of the Sufferings of the Church of Scotland, from the 1660. to the never to be forgotten Year 1688. a Work much wished for by the Friends of the Reformation, and Lovers of our valuable Constitution; the Want of which hath been Matter of Regret to the Members of this National Church, and improved to her Disadvantage by Enemies.

The fittest Season for a Performance of this Nature had undoubtedly been Thirty Years ago, when the particular Instances of Oppression and Barbarity, now much forgotten, were recent, and the Witnesses alive. At that Time somewhat of this Nature seems to have been designed: Narratives were gathered, some of which have come to my Hands, but many of them are lost; yet the publick Registers, and the severe Laws made by our Parliaments, and not a few well attested Instances of their terrible Execution, still remain.

Indeed the Courts held in several Parts of the Country, even those clothed with a Council and Justiciary Power, either kept no Registers, or, if they did, they are since lost. It was the Interest of those who exacted Fines, and pocketed them, to suppress what they got; and, in most Cases, they were not bound to give Accounts of what they extorted. Innumerable Cases occur in this melancholy Period, where we cannot expect Accounts of the exorbitant Exactions and Oppressions then so common, such as Subsistence-money, dry Quarters, Riding-money, Bribes, vast Sums paid by the Friends of the Persecuted, Compositions, and the like; to say nothing of the Barbarities committed by the Officers of the Army, Soldiers, and Tools of those in Power, by virtue of secret Instructions, blank Warrants, illimited Powers, and unwritten Orders, for supporting the Government, and encouraging the orthodox Clergy, as was pretended.

At this Distance then, and when most of those who were persecuted, and many of the Witnesses to what passed, are removed by Death, 'tis plain, the following History must appear with not a few Disadvantages, and cannot be so full and particular as it might have been at, or a little after the happy Revolution.

How the Author came to engage in this Attempt, what were his Motives and Views, is a Matter of so little Importance to the World, that 'tis not worth While to take up the Reader's Time with them: It may be of more Use to give some Account of the Materials I had, and somewhat of the Method I have followed in putting them together.

Our publick Records, the Registers of the Privy Council and Justiciary, are the great Fund out of which this History is formed: A great Part of it consists of Extracts from these, and I have omitted nothing in them which might give Light to the State of the Church of Scotland in that Period; tho', in pursuing and making Extracts out of Ten or Twelve large Volumes, several Things may have escaped me.

It is with Pleasure I observe a growing Inclination in this Age to have historical Matters well vouched, and to trace up Facts to their proper Fountains, with a prevailing Humour of searching ing Records, Registers, Letters and Papers, written in the Times we would have the Knowledge of.

If this Temper degenerate not into Scepticism, Incredulity, and a groundless calling in question such Things as, from their Nature and Circumstances, we cannot expect to meet with in Records, I hope, it may tend very much to advance the great Interests of Religion and Liberty: But such is the Frailty and Corruption of our present State, that Men are too ready to run from one Extreme to the other, and, because they are imposed upon in some Relations, to believe nothing at all, altho' the Evidence brought is all the Subject is capable of, and no more can be reasonably demanded.

Now, when I am insensibly led into the Subject of drawing History from publick Papers and Records, I cannot altogether pass some beautiful Strokes, to this purpose, in that noble Historian Josephus. It will be of little Use to most of my Readers to give the original Greek; and therefore I shall insert the Passages from the last English Translation. Many Things ly scattered thro' the Works of that great Man, to this purpose; but, in the Entry of his First Book against Appian, he insists directly upon the Necessity of forming History from Records.

Having taken notice of the Lameness of the Greek Writers this way, he says, The Egyptians, Chaldeans and Phenicians, to say nothing of our selves, have from Time to Time recorded, and transmitted down to Posterity, the Memorials of past Ages, in monumental Pillars and Inscriptions, according to the Advice and Direction of the wisest Men they had, for the perpetual Memory of all Transactions of Moment, and to the end that nothing might be lost. — It is most certain, that there is no Greek Manuscript extant, dated before the Poem of Homer; and as certain, that the Trojan War was over before that Poem was written: Nay, it will not be allowed either, that Homer ever committed this Piece of his to Writing at all, but it passed up and down like a Piece of a Ballad-song, that People got by Rote, till, in the end, Copies were taken off it, from Dictates by Word of Mouth. This was the true Reason of so many Contradictions and Mistakes in the Transcripts.

He enlargeth, in what follows, upon the Faults of the Greek Historians, and observes their plain Clashing and Disagreement. It is evident (adds he) that the History they deliver is not so much Matter of Fact, as Conjecture and Opinion; and that every Man writes according to his Fancy, their Authors still clashing one with another. The first and great Reason of their Disagreement, is the Failing of the Greeks, in not laying a timely Foundation for History, in Records and Memorials, to conserve the Memory of all great Actions; for, without these monumental Traditions, Po- sterity is left at Liberty to write at random, and to write false too, without any Danger of being contradicted. He further notices, That this Way of keeping publick Registers had been neglected in Greece, and even at Athens it self: And adds, Without these Lights and Authorities, Historians must necessarily be divided and confounded among themselves. A Multitude of other Things, to the same purpose, follow, too large to be here transcribed.

The Council and Criminal Court had most of the persecuted People before them; from their Books I have given my Accounts: And the Passages taken from the Records are generally marked with Comma's; this hath drawn out the History to a far greater Length than I could have wished. Every Body will observe, that several of the Passages might have been shortned, and the principal Papers themselves abbreviated, and some Repetitions and Matters of common Form omitted; yet I have chosen to give every Thing as it stands in the Registers and other Vouchers, and to insert the principal Papers themselves in the History or Appendix, rather than Abstracts of them, for several Reasons. As they now stand, they are Self-vouchers: Had I shortned them, and given them in mine own Words, perhaps, such as know me, might have the Charity to believe, I would not knowingly have falsified or misrepresented Matters; but 'tis much better Things stand as they are in the Records. I design, that as little of this History as may be should lean upon me: Let every one see with his own Eyes, and judge for himself, upon the very same Evidence I have; this is certainly the fairest and justest Way. And I am of Opinion, even the necessary Repetitions, and some lesser Circumstances, which might have been omitted, had I compendized the Registers, and other publick Papers, will not want their own Use.

This Method may seem a little to the Disadvantage of those whom I would not willingly have misrepresented. It is plain, very harsh Names and Epithets are given to Presbyterians; and the Sufferers are represented in the most odious Colours, in the Registers, Proclamations, Indictments, and the ordinary Course of the Minutes of the Council. Many Facts are set in a very false Light; a vast deal of Misrepresentations, ill grounded and idle Stories, are inserted; and every Thing unaccountably stretched against the persecuted Side. Some Notice is taken of this in the Body of the History, and Matters set in their true and just Light, as briefly as I could. Had I been writing a Defence of the Sufferers in this Period, much more might have been said: But, as an Historian, I was chiefly concerned to represent Facts; and having given the Representation of Matters, in the very Terms used by the Persecutors themselves, their Severity, and the Innocence of the Persecuted, will appear the more brightly.

When searching the Books of Parliament, I was much discouraged, upon finding the Processes against the Marquis of Argyle, Mr. James Guthrie, and the Lord Waristoun, quite left out; and therefore, generally speaking, I have confined my self to the printed Acts. It had been a Labour too great for me, to have gone thro' all the Warrants; and the iniquous Laws stand full enough in Print. Had the Council Warrants been in Order, no question but considerable Discoveries might have been made of the Iniquity of this Time; but those being unsorted, and in no small Confusion, I was obliged to keep my self by what the Managers have thought fit to put into the Registers; and 'tis surprising to find some Things there, which we shall afterwards meet with.

The rest of the History is made up of particular well vouched Instances of Severities thro' several Parts of the Kingdom, which cannot be lookt for in the Records: Some of them are attested upon Oath; others come from the Persons concerned, their Relations, or such who were present at the Facts narrated. In this Part, I have taken all the Care I could to get the best Informations, and have been reckoned by some a little over nice as to my Vouchers: If I have erred here, I hope, it was the safest Side; and I could not prevail with my self to publish to others, any Thing but what I had as full Evidence of, as the Subject would bear at this Distance.

In the First and Second Books, the Reverend Mr. James Kirk-toun's Memoirs were useful to me, and some short Hints of the Reverend Mr. Matthew Crawford, my worthy Predecessor in the Charge where I serve; these he did not live to complete, as he had done the former Part of the History of this Church to the Restoration. I had communicated to me likewise a considerable Collection of Informations, and other Papers relative to the Persecution of this Church, lodged, after the Revolution, in the Hands of the Reverend Mr. David Williamson, late Minister of the West-kirk. I have had Access also to some valuable Papers belonging once to the Reverend Mr. Alexander Sheils, mostly written before the Revolution. Not a few Gentlemen and Ministers, Relations of the Sufferers in this Period, have sent me well attested Accounts of the Hardships particular Persons met with.

My Brethren and Friends, who have been helpful to me in procuring those Materials, and the Gentlemen by whose Favour I had Access to the Records, will please to accept of this publick and general Acknowledgment of their Goodness. I am a Debtor to so many, as renders it impracticable for me to be more particular; if the following History in any Measure answer its Design, I know this will be the best Return my Friends wish for. Any Thing further necessary to be observed, as to my Vouchers and Materials, will fall in upon the History it self.

My Part, in putting those together, is what I should next speak of, tho' I reckon my self the unfittest of any to say much upon this Head. Since I began to reflect upon Things, I still judged writing of History a very difficult Work, and now I find it so: It is a harder Province still, to write Accounts of Times a Man hath not personally known, and when the greatest part of them were elapsed before he was born; the Task grows, when one has none going before him, nor any Thread to guide himself by; especially when the Times are full of Heat, Rents and Divisions, and any Accounts that remain are various, according as the several Parties stood affected; which occasions very different Representations of Facts themselves: In such a Case, nothing but Honesty and Integrity, with Labour and Diligence, can carry a Writer through.

My Stile, I know, is what cannot answer the Taste of this Age; Apologies for it are of no great Use. I never affected, or had much Occasion to attain any Delicacy of Stile; all I purpose to my self, is to be understood. A Country Life for Eighteen Years, with my necessary Converse among my People, and discoursing to them in my Sermons, as much as I can, according to their Capacity, hath brought me insensibly to express my self in in a Manner which in Print may appear low and flat: Besides, such a Heap of Informations from different Persons, and in various Stiles, as I was obliged to make use of in this Work, may be supposed would have altered a better Expression than ever I was Master of. Indeed I have kept as much by the Papers I made use of, as possibly I could; and there is but a small Part of the History in my Words, which, I presume, may be understood even by English Readers, who, 'tis hoped, will bear with me, tho' I come not fully up to the Propriety of the English Language, nor to the Accuracy and Neatness of their Writers.

The general Method I have used in this Work, was what I was some way obliged to take, and to me it appeared most natural. In this Period which I have described, I had no Line to direct me, me, or any History of Affairs in Scotland during those Two Reigns: I walked in an untrodden Path, and was obliged to make a Road for my self the best way I could. All left me to do, was to class my Materials, Informations, Acts of Parliament and Council, with my Transcripts from the Registers, and to joyn together what the Agreement of the Matter required to be connected. This led me to divide the Work in Chapters and Sections, and those obliged me to make some Repetitions and Resumptions, which otherwise might have been spared. Had I been permitted to keep this History some longer Time by me, I might have pared off those, and cast the Matter in one continued Discourse, without such Breaks; but even these may perhaps not want their Advantage, and may be breathing Places to stop at, in so great a Heap of Matter as is here collected.

After I had formed this History, and published my Proposals for printing it, many Informations were sent me, and I had Access to some Records I wanted before; yea, even during the Time of printing this Volume, some Papers of Consequence came to my Hand: The inserting of what was necessary from these, in the proper Places, hath not a little altered this Work, and made the Connection of Purposes in some Parts less natural than it might have been, if all my Materials had been under my View at first. And my later Informations being fuller, and more circumstantiate, there may perhaps be some seeming Differences 'twixt them and the shorter Hints given in other Places; but, I hope, no real Inconsistency will be found, Truth being what I had still in mine Eye.

In this Collection, I have taken in many Things which might have been omitted, had there been any History of Church or State-affairs published, relating to this Interval; but when gathering Materials, and searching our Records, I thought my self at Liberty to insert every Thing that offered, which might afford any Light to the History of this Period. This hath indeed considerably enlarged the Bulk of the Work; yet, I flatter my self, it may be of some Use to supply our Want of a History of this Time, at least be Materials for others to work upon with less Labour than I have been at: It will likewise render the melancholy History of Sufferings and Persecution a little more pleasant to the Reader, when other Things are mixed with it.

Most part of the principal Papers, and the Facts here inserted, have never yet been published; and therefore, I am ready to apprehend, they may be the more entertaining to this inquisitive

Age:

Age: From those, judicious Readers cannot but have the best View of this unhappy Time. If, in my Inferences from them, I have any where erred, I shall take it most kindly to be set right. I have been very sparing in any Thing which might bear hard upon Persons or Families; but, when narrating Facts, it was impossible to evite giving the Names and Designations of the Actors. This is what needs offend no Body, and they stand open to every one's View, in our publick Records and Proclamations. I have charged our Prelates with being the first Movers of most Parts of the Persecution of these Times: This is a Matter of Fact, fully known in Scotland; and I could not have written impartially, had I not laid most part of the Evils of this Period at their Door. If I have any where used any Harshness in speaking of this Subject, it hath proceeded from a peculiar Abhorrence, I cannot help entertaining, at a persecuting Spirit, wherever it discovers it self, especially in Church-men.

Since we want a Scots Biography, and have nothing almost of the Lives of eminent Ministers, Gentlemen, and private Christians in this Church, I have been the larger in my Accounts of such worthy Persons as fell in my Way, since I cannot but reckon that one of the most useful and entertaining Parts of History: This has led me to give several Instances of Sufferers upon the very same account, when fewer Examples might otherwise have answered the Ends of this History; but I thought it pity that any Thing, which might do Justice to the Memory of those excellent Confessors and Martyrs, should be lost.

From the same Consideration, some principal Papers are inserted in the History and Appendix, relative to the same Subject, where, it may be, fewer might have sufficed: But I judged it worth while to preserve as many of the valuable Remains of this Time, as I could. All of them contain something or other different; and the true Sentiments, deliberate Views, and undissembled Principles of good Men, appear most naturally in their own Words and Papers. Such as think them tedious and irksom, may overlook them with less Pains than I have been at in collecting and inserting them.

In the following Work, I have taken some notice of the Accounts of our Scottish Affairs, during the Interval before me, by the most noted English Historians, Dr. Sprat, Bishop Kennet, Mr. Collier, Mr. Archdeacon Eachard, and others of lesser Name. This, I hope, is done with a Temper and Deference due to their Merit. Their gross Escapes in our Affairs I could not altogether overlook: No doubt, most of them have written according to the Informations they had; and I am sorry we have been to blame, in part, for their Want of better Information. This Nation and Church have suffered not a little by this: I perswade my self, our Neighbours will do us more Justice, when they have a fuller View of our Affairs.

There is another Writer, the Author of the Memoirs of the Church of Scotland, 8vo. London 1717. who deserves some Consideration by himself. As far as he had our printed Historians to guide him, he hath given a very distinct and fair Account of Matters; he hath likewise done the Sufferers in the Period before me, some Justice, in stating the Grounds of their Sufferings: But how he hath fallen into some very gross Blunders, I cannot imagine. He talks of the Indulgence, as a Contrivance of the Prelates and their Friends; which is a plain Mistake. His making the indulged Ministers to accept a Licence from the Bishops, is yet much worse; and indeed, his whole Account of this Matter seems to be a Satyr upon some of the most eminent Ministers of this Church, who had Freedom to fall in with it. In other Places, this Writer bewrays an uncommon Ignorance of our Scottish Affairs: He speaks of the Highland Host as brought down upon the West some time after Bothwel-bridge, and says, That the Reverend Professor Hamilton and Mr. Mitchel were sent up to London, 1717. to get the Act for Tule Vacance repealed; whereas that was done sometime before. These are of a Piece with several Misrepresentations of Fact, in the History of the Union, generally believed to be written by the same Hand. A great Number of other Mistakes might be noticed, as to the Circumstances of the Risings at Pentland and Bothwel, yea, even as to our printed Acts of Parliament; but, I hope, those flow from Inadvertency, whereas his Account of the Indulgence looks like somewhat worse; and the following History will sufficiently set the Facts he hath misrepresented, in their true Light.

Perhaps, an Apology will be here expected for the Imperfections in this History; but I see very little Use of this in a Preface, however fashionable it may be. As I am sure there are no wilful and designed Mistakes in it, so any that may have happened in so great a Heap of Materials, thro' Haste or Misinformation, and in the transcribing a vast Multitude of Papers, shall be cheerfully acknowledged and corrected.

Indeed I could have wished this Work had remained by me some Time longer, that I might have smoothed it a little, cut off some Things, necessary in the first forming of it, from a Heap of unconnected Papers, and brought it to a little better Bearing: But, after the Proposals were printed, the Subscribers pressed my publishing of it; and I found, the longer I delayed, the more it was like to swell on mine Hand. Since that Time near a Hundred Sheets have been added, and I did not know where this would end; so that it comes abroad very much as it dropt from my Pen, in the midst of other necessary parochial and ministerial Work, and without those Amendments I would have desired. I know well enough this lands upon my self, but Necessity hath no Law; and, I can sincerely say, I have more Ways than one crossed mine own Inclinations in this Affair.

I did very much incline, both in the Proposals and History, to have concealed my Name, as conceiving this of very little Consequence in a Work of this Nature; but my Friends overruled me in this, and would not have the History of the Sufferings of this Church, published in an anonymous Way. The Work now comes to the publick View, and must have its Fate according to the different Tempers and Capacities of its Readers.

Some of my Friends have urged me to draw down the Thread of our History, in the Introduction which follows, from the Time where our printed Historians end, and in some Measure to fill up the Gap we have from the Death of King James VI. to the Restoration. I have been of Opinion now of a considerable Time, that the Whole of our Church History since the Reformation, is too large a Field for one Hand, if he have any other Business or Employment; and that it ought to be parcelled out among different Persons, if we have it done to any Purpose. Even that Period, already described by Mr. Knox, Bishop Spotiswood, and Mr. Calderwood, is capable of great Improvement. Many valuable original Papers, Memoirs, and some formed Histories, either not known to those Historians, or overlooked by them, are recovered since the Revolution, and will afford a just Light to that Time: And there is no Want of excellent Materials for forming full Accounts from King James his Death to the Restoration. Several of my very good Friends have large Collections of Papers during both those Periods, and more may be gotten: I hope, ere long a full Account shall be given, by better Hands than mine, of our Affairs before the Restoration; and they have my best Wishes.

The blackest Part of our History in this Church has fallen into my Hands; and I did not think it necessary for me to go any further back than the Time whereof I give the general Hints in the Introduction, which may suffice to let the Reader in to what is immediately connected with the Period I have undertaken. I own, I am not much in Love with Abstracts and Compendis in historical Matters, in which I would have all the Light possible: The largest Accounts, with their Vouchers from original Papers and Records, are still most satisfying to me; and a short Deduction of the former Period of our History would have been of no great Use, and scarce have answered the Toil and Labour it would have cost me.

This History, or rather Collection of Materials for an History, contains a large Number of Facts, and well attested Accounts, which will set the Circumstances of Presbyterians, during Twenty eight Years, in a clearer Light than hitherto they have appeared, and, if possible, may stop the Mouths of such who have most groundlessly aspersed this Church, and do Justice to the Memory of those excellent Persons of all Ranks, who, as Confessors and Martyrs, were exposed to the Fury of this unhappy Time.

It may also, through the divine Blessing, be of some Use to revive our too much decayed Zeal for our Reformation-rights, to unite all the real Friends of the Church of Scotland, from the Observation of the various Methods used by Enemies to divide and ruine her, and serve to quicken our just Warmth against Popery and every Thing that tends to bring us back to the dismal State described in the following History.

Notwithstanding the great Care of the Correctors, through the Author's Distance from the Press, the following Mistakes have happened, which being but few in so large a Volume, the Reader is desired to correct them.

THE INTRODUCTION, CONTAINING,

After a short View of the Publick Resolutions in 1650. a Narrative of General Monk's Management after his Departure from Scotland, an Account of the Steps taken for the King's Restoration, his Majesty's Return, and what was done in relation to the Church of Scotland, till the Meeting of the Committee of Estates in August 1660.

Collected from original Letters of Mr. James Sharp, afterward Archbishop of St. Andrews, the Reverend Mr. Robert Douglas, and other Presbyterian Ministers, this Year.

ONE of the blackest Periods of the History of the Church of Scotland being fallen to my Share, it would not be out of the Road, if I should continue the Thread of our Ecclesiastical History from the Demise of King James VI. where our printed Historians end, to the Restoration of King Charles II. where my Attempt begins, and do somewhat to fill up that Blank.

Indeed several important Memoirs, and written Accounts of that remarkable Period, in my Hands, with not a few original Papers of that Time, would afford me Matter enough for such an introductory Essay: But it is enough for me to venture upon the Twenty eight Years following; therefore I choose rather to communicate any Thing of this Nature, in my small Collections as to our History, to my worthy Friends who have that Part among their Hands, and can manage them much better than I can pretend to. I shall here, then, very much confine my self to the Year wherein the publick Imprisonments, and other Hardships upon Presbyterian Ministers, Gentlemen, and Noblemen, began.

If once I had remarked, that when Matters were going smoothly on after King James's Death, the Tory high-flying Laudian Faction, whose Successors, headed by Chancellor Hyde, put King Charles II. upon all the Heights he ran to in England, and the Encroachments he made upon the Church and State-constitution in Scotland; that violent Party, I say, put King Charles I. upon palming Books and Bishops, and other Innovations upon us here.

This issued in the strange Turn Affairs took, at our second and glorious Reformation in 1638. when this Church was again settled upon her own Base, and the Rights she claim'd from the Time of the Reformation were restored, so that she became fair as the Moon, clear as the Sun, and terrible as an Army with Banners. It is hard to manage a full Cup, and I shall not take upon me to defend every Step in that happy Period; the worst Step I can observe, was their unhappy and unchristian Divisions upon the Head of the Publick Resolutions.

And because in the following Period there will be Occasion to mention those Resolutions several Times, I shall give a View of the Matter of Fact relating to them, as succinctly as I can, without dipping at all into the unhappy Debates on either Side.

Rise of the
solutions.

When King Charles II. was, in the Year 1649. invited home, upon settling the Conditions of Government, or Claim of Right, and he had taken the National Covenant as explained, together with the Solemn League, and was thereupon solemnly crowned at Scone; a considerable Number of Noblemen and Gentlemen complained of the Hardships put upon them, who were his Father's Friends, and, as they alledged, well disposed to his Majesty, in their being excluded from the Army and Judicatories, by the Act of Classes, and other Laws now made.

Although the King did reckon a good many of them well disposed for his Service, and fit enough to maintain and extend the Prerogative; yet these People, now called Malignants, and very justly, from their violent Opposition to the Liberties and Rights Civil and Ecclesiastical of the Church and Kingdom, were suspected by such as had all along appeared firm for our Reformation in the Church, and a limited Management in the State; and those apprehended the other would soon possess the King's Ear, and lead him to such Measures as would overturn all that had been done since the 1638. and therefore for some Time they opposed their coming in.

But the King soon fell upon Measures to divide these who had the Management at his Accession, and to gain a Majority for taking off the former Restrictions, and to let his Friends come in to the Army and Judicatories, under some Conditions that were never kept. The Church, whose Judgment, as to Sin and Duty in publick Matters, was now much regarded, must next be gained to make some Declarations in favour of this Design; and, as it always fares with Churchmen when they side into Parties, according to the different Factions of Politicians, and go beyond their Line to please great Men, they split, according to the Two different Parties at Court; whereas hitherto they had been most united and harmonious.

The English had invaded the Kingdom, and obtained a Victory at Dumbar: This Occasion was improved to push the taking off Restraints lying upon these who were reckoned the King's Friends, tho' they had opposed the Work of Reformation since the 1637. in their Admittance to the Army and Judicatories, while a Part of them are up in Rebellion in the North. Accordingly the King published an Indemnity, and wrote to the Committee of Estates and Commission of the Kirk, that these Men might be entrusted and employed.

This was then refused. The Defeat at Hamilton falling out soon after, that was made a new Argument for admitting of Malignants; and it was urged, That the standing standing Forces were too weak for defending the Kingdom against the Enemy, unless the whole * fencible Men, without Distinction, were raised. And the Moderator of the Commission was importuned by Letters from the King, now at Perth, where the Parliament then sat, to call a Commission pro re nata, to give their Judgment in this Matter. The Ministers against the Resolutions alledge, that many Members were not advertised, that the Diet was so short, the Members could not come up.

* i. e. Men able to bear Arms.

A Quorum of the Commission met at Perth, where the Parliament put the following Question to them in cunning enough Terms.

Parliament's Query to the Commission.

- ‘ What Persons are to be admitted to rise in Arms, and to joyn with the - ‘ Forces of the Kingdom, and in what Capacity, for Defence thereof against
- ‘ the Armies of the Sectaries, who, contrary to the Solemn League and Covenant
- ‘ and Treaties, have most unjustly invaded, and are destroying the Kingdom?

The Commission of the General Assembly, December 14th, 1650. gave the following Answer.

Their Answer, Dec. 14. 1650.

- ‘ In this Case of so great and evident Necessity, we cannot be against the - ‘ raising of all fencible Persons in the Land, and permitting them to
- ‘ fight against this Enemy, for Defence of the Kingdom; excepting such
- ‘ as are excommunicated, forfeited, notoriously profane or flagitious, or
- ‘ such as have been from the Beginning, or continue still, and are at this
- ‘ Time, obstinate, and professed Enemies, and Opposers of the Covenant and
- ‘ Cause of GOD: And for the Capacity of Acting, that the Estates of Par- ‘ liament ought to have, as we hope they will have, special Care, that in
- ‘ this so general a Concurrence of all the People of the Kingdom, none be
- ‘ put in such Trust and Power, as may be prejudicial to the Cause of GOD;
- ‘ and that such Officers as are of known Integrity, and Affection to the
- ‘ Cause, and particularly such as have suffered in our former Armies, may
- ‘ be taken special Notice of.’

As soon as this Answer was given, the Parliament in their Act of Levy, did nominate some of the most considerable of those reckoned formerly Malignants, who had been excluded from the renewing the Covenant, Places of Trust, and even Access to Sacraments, for their Opposition to the Work of Reformation: And more than Half of the Colonels of this Sort, and some of the general Officers, and great Numbers of the Soldiers, were such as had been with Montrose and Mackdonald. In short, the Bulk of the Officers and Army, had been either involved in the Engagement, or in some Respect or other had opposed the Work of Reformation since the Year 1638.

Many Ministers being dissatisfied at those Resolutions and Actings, a good many Presbyteries signified their Dissatisfaction with such Courses and Resolutions, particularly those of Stirling and Aberdeen. Upon this the Commission did, January 7th, publish a Warning and large Answer to the Letter from the Presbytery of Stirling, in which they vindicated their Answer to the Parliament's Query; which increased the Contention, drew forth new Answers and Replies; and the Flame rising, the Opposers of the Answer to the Query were branded with the Character of Malignants; all Ministers and Preachers were, by the Commission, discharged to speak, or write against these Resolutions. And an Act was made, ordaining Presbyteries to proceed with the Censures of the Kirk against such as did oppose the Resolutions; and in May the Commission transmitted the Copy of another Act to Presbyteries, ordain-ordaining such who opposed the Resolutions to be cited to the next Assembly at St. Andrews, by which a good many, who opposed the Resolutions, were kept from being Members of that Assembly.

To give the Whole of this Matter together ; though the former Answer to the Query, and what followed upon it, be strictly called the Resolutions, and the Ministers who approved this Answer, The Brethren for the publick Resolutions, and the Opposers of this Way Antiresolutioners and Protesters, yet the Gentlemen who by these Methods were got into the Army, did not stop here, but pushed their Design to get into Judicatories; from which they were excluded by the Acts of Classes 1646 and 1649. which debarred such as had joyned Montrose, and were in the Engagement, from publick Offices of Trust, and in short, all Malignants.

Query by the Parliament, in Prosecution of the former Resolutions.

In order to get this Act of Classes rescinded, the King and Estates of Parliament proposed to the Commission of the Kirk the following Query.

- ‘ Whether or not it be sinful and unlawful, for the more effectual Pro-
- ‘ secution of the publick Resolutions for the Defence of the Cause of the - ‘ King and the Kingdom, to admit such to be Members of the Committee
- ‘ of Estates, who are now debarred from the publick Trust, they being such
- ‘ as have satisfied the Kirk for the Offence, for which they were excluded,
- ‘ and are since admitted to enter into Covenant with us?’

The Commission, upon some Considerations, found it proper at first to delay giving an Answer: But, upon the 3d of April, the Moderator received a Letter from the King and Parliament, earnestly desiring a Meeting of the Commission to be called at Perth, the 17th of April 1651, “ That after a due Consideration of the ‘ Acts and Declarations emitted by the Church, and the other Grounds contained ‘ in the Narrative of the Acts of Classes, in so far as Conscience can be concern- ‘ ed therein, his Majesty and Parliament have a positive Answer, not only to the ‘ Query in the Terms wherein it was propounded, but likewise their clear and de- ‘ liberate Judgment and Resolutions, if it be sinful and unlawful to repeal and re- ‘ scind the Act of Classes.’ And upon the 23d of April, another Letter came to the Commission, much to the same Purpose.

Commission’s Answer, April, 1651.

To both, the Commission, after some previous Cautions, gave this Answer. ‘ As for the Solemn League and Covenant, the solemn Acknowledgment and En‘ gagement, and former Declarations emitted by this Church (which are set ‘ down as Grounds in the Narrative of the Act of Classes) we do find they do ‘ not particularly determine any definite Measure of Time, of excluding Per‘ sons from Places of Trust for bypast Offences; but only bind and oblige ac‘ cordingly to punish Offenders, as the Degree of their Offences shall require or ‘ deserve, or the supreme Judicatories of the Kingdom, or others having Power ‘ from them for that Effect, shall judge convenient, to purge all Judicatories, and ‘ Places of Power and Trust, and to endeavour that they may consist of, and be ‘ filled with such Men, as are of known good Affection to the Cause of God,
‘ and of a blameless and Christian Conversation, (which is a moral Duty com‘ manded in the Word of God, and of perpetual Obligation;) so that nothing ‘ upon the account of those Grounds doth hinder, but that Persons formerly ‘ debarred from Places of Power and Trust for their Offences, may be admit‘ ted to be Members of the Committee of Estates, and the Censures inflicted ‘ upon them by the Act of Classes may be taken off and rescinded without Sin, ‘ by the Parliament, in whose Power it is to lengthen or shorten the Time of ‘ those

those Censures, according as they shall find just and necessary) providing they be Men who have satisfied the Kirk for their Offences, have renewed and taken the Covenant, and be qualified for such Places, according to the Qualifications required in the Word of God, and expressed in the solemn Acknowledgment and Engagement, &c.

As soon as the Court had this Return, the Parliament rescinded the Act of Classes in all its Articles; by which great Numbers formerly excluded were brought into Parliament, and nominate as Members of the Committee of Estates, and made capable of Places of Trust. And in a little Time, the malignant Party, at least the Bulk of them, were admitted to the chief Places of Trust, and got the Management of all into their Hand.

The General Assembly met at St. Andrews in July, where the Brethren against the Resolutions, protested against the Lawfulness and Freedom of the Assembly. Three of the Subscribers were, after Citation, deposed, and one suspended, and the Actings of the Commission approved. The same Heats continued in the next Assembly 1652: And when Cromwel had effectually prevented the Meeting of any more Assemblies, and the Debates had been carried on in Synods and Presbyteries, and in Print before the World; at length, in the 1655 and 1656. Conferences were agreed on for Union, and the Matter was carried to London, before the Usurper. At length some Sort of Union was made up in most Synods and Presbyteries after Cromwel's Death, and Things went pretty smooth, till the King, upon his Return, declared his Displeasure with the Opposers of the Resolutions, and some of them were first fallen upon; and, in a little Time, the whole honest Presbyterian Ministers were struck at, and sent to the Furnace to unite them.

Having premised this, I come now to hand my self and the Reader into the Beginning of our direct Persecution, August 1660. by giving a short View of Matters from the Time of General Monk's leaving Scotland, till the Meeting of the Committee of Estates, where I'll have Occasion to take notice of several Matters of Fact, both in Scotland and England, as to the Restoration of the King, which I have not met with any where else, but in the Letters before me, which are mostly 'twixt Mr. James Sharp and Mr. Robert Douglas, and some from Mr. Sharp to Mr. John Smith, one of the Ministers of Edinburgh, and others.

From the very Words of those Letters, (which shall be marked thus 'I shall endeavour to form an Account of the great Turn of Affairs this Year, whereby the Reader will have most plain Evidences of the Reverend Mr. Douglas, and the rest, their Integrity and Faithfulness, and Discoveries, how careful they were to preserve our valuable Constitution, upon the King's Return; and as sensible Proofs of Mr. Sharp's Jugling, Prevarication, and betraying the Church of Scotland, and his Treachery to the worthy Ministers who entrusted him. The Reader is intirely indebted to the reverend and worthy Mr. Alexander Douglas, Minister of the Gospel at Logie, for what is in those Letters, which in a most obliging Manner he communicated to me, with a short Narrative of the Reintroduction of Episcopacy, writ by his venerable Father Mr. Robert Douglas, of which I shall make some Use in the following History.

In November 1659. General Monk left Edinburgh, where he had been since the Usurper's Reduction of Scotland, and by slow Marches reached London in January, and soon gave a Turn to publick Affairs in favour of the King's Restoration. It appears very probable to me, that he was encouraged secretly by Mr. Robert Douglas; but I come to the Matters of Fact in the Letters, which I exhibit according to their Dates.

General Design of this Introduction.

Abstract of the Letters which passed 'twixt Mr. Sharp and Mr. Douglas and others.

Letter, January 10. 1660. January 10. Mr. David Dickson and Mr. Robert Douglas, in their Letter to General Monk, signify their entire Confidence in him as to the Affairs of Scotland, and the Necessity of one from them to be near his Person, to put him in Mind of what is necessary, and acquaint them with the State of Things; and they ask his Pass for Mr. James Sharp. Before the Receipt of theirs, the General ordered Mr. Auditor Thomson to write from York to Mr. Sharp; and in his Name he desires Mr. Sharp 'to undertake a Winter Journey, and come to him at London with all Speed; defers the communicating the Reasons till he be there, wishes he may communicate this with Mr. Douglas only, because the General does not desire this to be made too publick.' And January 16. the General himself writes a Letter from Ferry-bridge to Mrs. Dickson and Douglas in the following Words.

' I Received yours of the 10. Instant, and do assure you, the Welfare of your Church shall be a great Part of my Care, and that you shall not be more ready to propound, than I shall be to promote any reasonable Thing that may be for the Advantage thereof: And to that end I have herewith sent you, according to your Desire, a Pass for Mr. Sharp, who the sooner he comes to me, the more welcome he shall be, because he will give me an Opportunity to shew how much I am a Well-wisher to your Church, and to your selves '

A very humble Servant,

GEORGE MONK.

Instructions to Mr. Sharp, February 6. Upon the 6. of February several Ministers met at Edinburgh, and agreed to send up Mr. Sharp, with Instructions to this effect, That he endeavour that the Church may enjoy her Privileges, That he testify against the late sinful Tolerati-on, That he essay to get the Abuses of vacant Stipends rectified, That Ministers may have the Benefit of the Act abolishing Patronages; and, that in case any Commission be granted for settling Ministers Stipends, he endeavour to have it in good Hands; which I have annexed, App. No. 1.

At the same Time they write to General Monk, and 'recommend Mr. Sharp to him, as one whom they have instructed, and who is to communicate his Instructions with his Lordship, and they have sent him up to prevent any bad Impressions that may be given of them at London. They add, That though it be not their Way to intermeddle with civil Affairs, yet the Miseries of the sinking Nation, make them humbly request his Lordship may endeavour to ease them of their Grievances.'

By another Letter they recommend Mr. Sharp to Colonel Wetham; and by a Third, to Mrs. Calamy and Ash, to be communicate with Mrs. Manton and Coupar, and any others they think fit; wherein they desire them to be assisting to him in the Management of his Trust, for the best Advantage of this afflicted Church.

Mr. Sharp's Letter, Feb. 14. Mr. Sharp's first Letter, of February 14. takes Notice of his Arrival at London the 13. his kind Reception by Mr. Manton, who signified to him the large Character the General gave of the Ministers in Scotland, and Mr. Douglas in particular; 'That he had immediate Access to the General, who recommended him to Sir Anthony Asbly Coupar, and Mr. Weaver, Two Parliament-men. He adds, That the City who, two Days ago, were much sadned by the unhandsom Act put upon the General, with a Design to bring him into an odium with the City, is now mightily pleased with the General's Letter to the Parliament.

Upon

Upon the 16. of February, the General sends an Answer to what was written to him with Mr. Sharp, importing, ' That Mr. Sharp is dear to him as his good Friend, but much more having their Recommendation, and he cannot but receive him as a Minister of Christ, and a Messenger of his Church; that he will improve his Interest to his utmost for the Preservation of the Rights of the Church of Scotland, and their afflicted Country, which he loves, and had great Kindness from; that it shall be his Care, that the Gospel-ordinances, and Privileges of God's People may be established both here and with them. He seeks their Prayers for God's Blessing upon their Counsels and Undertakings, intreats them to promote the Peace and Settlement of the Nations, and do what in them lies to compose Mens Spirits, that with Patience the Fruit of Hopes and Prayers may be reaped, and assures them he will be careful to preserve their Profession in the Honour they so much deserve.'

Monk's
Letter,
Feb. 16.

Mr. Douglas, February 23. ' acquaints Mr. Sharp with the Receipt of his and the General's Letters, desires he may mind what he spoke about the Lords Crawford and Lawderdale, and promises to write about them to the General, if need be: He desires Mr. Sharp to encourage the General in his great Work, for the Good of Religion, and Peace of the Three Nations, through all the Difficulties he may meet with. He adds, You your self know what have been my Thoughts from the Beginning of this Undertaking, which I have signified to himself; though I was sparing to venture my Opinion in ticklish Matters, yet I looked upon him as called of God in a Strait, to put a Check to these who would have run down all our Interests.'

Mr. Douglas's
Letter, Feb. 23.

By a Letter from London, February 21. Mr. Sharp signifies to Mr. Douglas, ' That the secluded Members of the long Parliament are restored, to the Joy of all honest People; that he is satisfied he is come up, since that, though little can be done at present for the Cause we own, effectually, yet one from the Church of Scotland bears a Construction that will be for the Reputation of the Church. He says, Friends are satisfied with our late Proceedings with Monk, and bless God we were not wanting in such a Juncture; that on Saturday he had a private Conference with the General, and so far sounded him as he got Encouragement for some of the most eminent secluded Members to apply to him. Upon Munday, Four of them sent him with some Propositions to the General, to which he brought them a satisfying Return. He adds, That Ministers and good People look upon it as the only Expedient for securing Religion, and dashing the Designs both of Cavaliers and Sectaries, that the secluded Members be restored, rather than that a Parliament should be called with Qualifications which would only tend to the securing of the Interest of the Rump, which is now the Third Time the Derision and Scorn of all Men: That with no small Difficulty the General was brought to admit the secluded Members, which was kept very close till this Morning. Yesterday the Rump voted their Seclusion, and this Morning the secluded Members entred the House with the Acclamations of the People, 73 in Number to 18 of the Rump. Mr. Manton was called to pray to them; and they made void all done against them these Eleven Years, appointed the General Commander in Chief of the Forces of the Three Nations, took off the Imprisonment of the committed Citizens, and liberate Sir George Booth: That they are to appoint a Council of State to sit till the Parliament be called, April 20. After Four or Five Days they design to dissolve themselves, and so make void the Title and Claim of the long Parliament: That the General, in his Speech, declares for Presbyterian Government not rigid, and hath writ to the Officers of the Army: That both contain Expressions which will not be pleasing,

Mr. Sharp's

‘ but the present Necessity of Affairs causeth some to put a fair Construction upon them. Once more the publick Cause of those Nations is like to be in Honour, the Phanatick Fury quelled, the Expectations of all sober Men raised, and Scotland somewhat better reputed. In this great Turn Providence is remarkably seen. The Rump intended to bottom themselves upon the Sectarian Interest, and are now dashed upon that Account, and the almost dying Hopes of God’s People revived. Mr. Sharp desires to be recalled, since nothing can be done till the Parliament sit; and the General told him, Nothing could be done, till there be a full House, as to his Instructions: He adds, That ’tis surmised by some, that before those who now sit, rise, somewhat will be started concerning the Covenant; others think, it will not be yet Time: But however (says he) the publick covenanted Interest, and our Concernment in it, ought not to be neglected. I hope this Week our noble Prisoners will be released, and I am next Day or Thursday to pay them a Visit.’

Mr. Douglas’s Letter, Feb. 28.

In Answer to this, Mr. Douglas writes to Mr. Sharp, Feb. 28. and signifies, ‘ That he may be sure it soundeth harsh in the Ears of all honest and understanding Men, to hear Presbytery, the Ordinance of Jesus Christ, reflected upon by the Epithet of Rigidity. We confess (adds he) Rigidity may be Fault of Men, and may be the Fault of those among our selves, who weakned the Unity and Authority of this Kirk: But the Faults of Men ought not to be charged upon the Ordinance of God, nor upon others who have disallowed and disavowed those Actings. I still entertain Hopes, that Presbyterial Government will be better known to be well consistent with, and helpful to the Government of the State. And as to his Return, leaves it to himself, with the Advice of the General.’

Mr. Douglas’s Letter to Monk, March 1.

Upon March 1. Mr. Douglas writes to General Monk, thanking him for his kind Reception of Mr. Sharp, and encouraging him to go on in the great Work he had among his Hands. He adds, ‘ I have been very much satisfied from Time to Time, to hear what good Opinion your Lordship entertained of Presbyterial Government; and I am confident you shall never have just Cause to think otherwise of it. There is no Government so good in itself, but it may be abused by the Corruptions of Men; yet the Faults of Persons are not to be fixed upon the Government, nor ought it to be rejected because of the rigid Miscarriages of some, whose irregular Actings have been hateful to true Presbyterians, as the Issue of Mens Corruptions, and not the genuin Fruit of the Government. It is a blessed Mean appointed of God, for the Preservation of Truth and Verity in the Kirk, and singularly useful to preserve and press Obedience to Magistracy. It was no small Contentment to all here, when we heard of your Lordship’s grave Advice for abstaining from multiplying Oaths and Engagements, as a Way to attain sooner unto Settlement: Honest Men will follow their Duty without such Engagements; and they who fear not an Oath, will be forward enough to take it when it is imposed, and as forward to break it when Occasion is offered. Determinations will be without doubt more kindly entertain’d, and bear the more Weight with Men, when they are known to flow, not from an imposed Constraint, but from an unconstrained Freedom and Inclination, bottomed upon Conscience and right Reason.’

Mr. Sharp’s Letter, March 1.

Mr. Sharp’s Letter of March 1. to Mr. Douglas, apologizes for his so seldom writing, and signifies he is so much engaged in Business, that he is deprived of his Rest; That People observing the great Countenance the Lord General gives him, press him so, that he is forced to abandon his Chamber all the Day, and much of the Night; That he declines altogether meddling in the Business of particular Persons; That though little is yet done to the Church and Nation, yet his being being at London hath not been useleſs as to the publick Cauſe: 'That the Cava'iers

' point him out as the Scottiſh Preſbyter, who ſtickled to bring in the ſecluded
' Members, to undo all by the Preſbyterian Empire: That, before the Admiſſion
' of the ſecluded Members, he had ſpoke to the General concerning the Windſor
' Priſoners, and ſignified his Commiſſion from Mr. Douglas ſo to do; and after
' preſſing the Vote of the Houſe relating to them, he went to Windſor, and advi-
' ſed their Writing to the General, and carried their Letter, which he promiſed to ' answer; and every Day ſince, he had been with ſome of the moſt conſiderable of ' the Houſe, who have promiſed to move effectually for their coming to London, ' which will be ſpeedily: That the General tells him, his being at London is of ' Uſe to him: That the Houſe hath yet a Fortnight to ſit, and have reſolved to
' ſpend the firſt Hour every Day about ſettling Religion, and the reſt of their ' Time upon ſettling the Militia: That the City Miniſters have offered ſome De-
' ſires to be made uſe of by ſome Members of the Houſe; a Copy of which he ſends.
' He adds, That worthy Mr. Aſh tells him, that Three Months ago, when the ' Commiſſioners came down to General Monk, he wrote to you (Mr. Douglas) by ' one of them, which it ſeems was not delivered: That in the Letter, I (Mr.
' Sharp) wrote to Lawderdale about that Time, I had this Expreſſion, That he ' might be confident General Monk would be for a good Parliament: Upon this he ' (Lawderdale) ſent to Mrs. Calamy, Aſh, and Taylor, which encouraged the ' flagging City. He ſent alſo to Oxford, and elſewhere; which gave the firſt Oc-
' caſion of Addreſſes from the City and Counties, to the General, for a free Par' liament.'

The Deſires of the City-miniſters, mentioned in this Letter, I have annexed, Deſires of the City
Miniſters,
App. No. 2.
App. N^o. 2. They are for ſuppreſſing Papiſts, for Sanctification of the Sabbath, againſt the Diſturbance of Miniſters, for a Committee to approve Miniſters, for a Declaration of Adherence to the Confeſſion, Catechiſms, Directory, and Form of Church-government preſented by the late Aſſembly, againſt Moleſtation of Miniſters, and for a National Aſſembly of Divines.

In Mr. Sharp's Letter to Mr. John Smith, March 4. he regrets the Death of Mr. Mr. Sharp's Letter,
March 4.
Law at Edinburgh, and tells him, 'That the Houſe have voted the Confeſſion of ' the Aſſembly to be the Doctrine of the Church of England, except the Two ' Chapters about Church-diſcipline and Cenſures, which are remitted to a Commit' tee, where 'tis thought they will ſleep till the Parliament ſit. They have ap' pointed Dr. Owen to be before them on Thursday, in order, as 'tis thought, to ' reſtore his Deanry to Dr. Reynolds. This Day the Houſe have releaſed our Scots
' Priſoners, who have given Security to the Council for their good Behaviour, and ' their Eſtates will ſoon be reſtored: That Ireland is ſecured, and all Quakers, A-
' nabaptiſts, and Seſtaries baniſhed: That ſome Judges are appointed for Scot- ' land, but the Parliament will not meddle with them. He adds, He is in a Peck ' of Troubles to get the City Miniſters ſet about their Buſineſs. That Day a large ' Meeting named Four of the falteſt and honeſteſt to ſit on Munday, and Mr.
' Sharp with them, and afterwards to meet when he ſees fit. He names Five,
' whom he calls warping Brethren, and no Friends to the Covenant-intereſt, whom
' a Member of the Houſe of Commons hath undertaken for; but (ſays he) they
' muſt not be truſted. He adds, I tell what your Mind is as to the Civil Buſineſs;
' and honeſt People here, who are but few, either in the City or Houſe, are
' of one Heart with you. The great Fear is, That the King will come in, and ' that with him, moderate Episcopacy, at the leaſt, will take place here. The ' good Party are doing what they can to keep the Covenant-intereſt on Foot; but,
' I fear, there will be much ado to have it ſo. They dare not preſs the voting for Presbyterian

‘ Presbyterian Government, lest it bar them from being elected next Parliament.
 ‘ Our Friends in the City think it were not amiss, that from the Nation of Scotland were published a Declaration: But I think it not yet seasonable. It were ‘ good you have your Thoughts upon it in Time; and the Intent would be, to ‘ guard against Settaries upon the one Hand, and Cavaliers upon the other. For ‘ God’s Sake, take care that our People keep themselves quiet, and wait till the ‘ Lord give a fit Opportunity. Matters here are in a very ticklish discomposed ‘ Condition. They say, Ireland hath sent for the King; but I do not believe it.’

Mr. Sharp’s
 Letter,
 March 6.

March 6. Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas; and, with reference to the Complaint in his of the 28 of February, upon the General’s declaring himself to be for Presbytery, but not rigid, he says, ‘ As to the Reflection upon Presbytery, by the ‘ Epithet of Rigidity, the Carriage of the true Friends of it hath given sufficient ‘ Proof of the Causefulness of that Aspersions; yet upon all Occasions, you see, it ‘ doth not fence against it. The Consistency of it with the Civil Government, ‘ seemeth to be clear from the present Parliament, who, if they sit a little, intend ‘ to ratifie what they enacted about it, 1647. though the Buz of some is loud enough, No Bishop, no King. The House Yesterday, in their Preface to the Act
 ‘ owning the Confession of Faith as the Doctrine of the Church of England, did ‘ mention the Covenant as one of the Grounds upon which they were induced to ‘ make such an Ordinance: Whereupon the Motion was stated, That the solemn ‘ League and Covenant should be revived, and an Order made for printing it, and ‘ setting it up in all the Churches of England and Wales, and the Doors of the ‘ Parliament-house: To which none in the House offered to make any Contradiction. And this Day the League and Covenant, in great Lombard Paper, is to ‘ be sold in all the Shops in London. This hath given a great Alarm to the Se- ‘ ctarian Party, who centre in Lambert, who, refusing to give Security for keeping the Peace, was Yesternight laid in the Tower; and they are proceeding against others of that Party. Waristoun hath been with me; his Drift is, That ‘ I may deal with the General, that he may have a personal Protection, Payment
 ‘ of his Debts, or enjoy his Places at least. I have declined to meddle in it.’

In his Postscript to this Letter, he tells Mr. Douglas, ‘ That Mr. Calamy, Mr. Ash, and Mr. Taylor are honest, and after his own Heart. They say, I (Mr. Sharp) am useful to them; sure they put me to Toil enough in speaking to Parliament Members, the General and his Officers. Honest Men are at a Stand what to think or do. If this Parliament rise, and another sit, they conclude we can have no Security for Religion or Liberty: The following will bring in the King immediately. This cannot sit longer, unless a House of Lords be called, and this the Army will not give way to. Most of the Members have no Inclination to sit longer. This Clashing of Parties is like to cast all in Confusion; and the Cavaliers and Settaries are waiting their Opportunity. All that wish well to Religion apprehend, that if this Parliament do not continue to sit, the King must come in without Terms, and therefore do judge it best to call him in Time. I never saw England in such a Posture. God knoweth how to interpose. The Papist and Settary will joyn Issue, expecting Toleration; and the honest Party are like to be swallowed up.’

Mr. Douglas’s Letter,
 March 13.

Mr. Douglas answers the former, March 13. and tells him, He is refreshed with the reviving the League and Covenant, recommends Mungo Murray to Mr. Sharp’s Counsel and Assistance.

Mr. Sharp’s Letter,
 March 10.

March 10. Mr. Sharp signifies, That he had Mr. Douglas’s to himself and the General, of March 1. which the General received, and said he would make a Return turn. He adds, That the General hath much countenanced Presbyterian Ministers, and still professeth to be for that Way: ' That the Sectarian Interest is on the waning Hand, and moderate Episcopacy setting up its Head: That upon Thursday our noble Prisoners were liberate, upon Security to keep the Peace, and not to return to Scotland, without Leave of Council or Parliament: That they are highly esteemed by the English. He wisheth a Commission were immediately sent up from Scotland, to Crawford and Lawderdale, to act in Capacity of Commissioners for the Kingdom of Scotland. ' The Parliament are this Night upon settling the Militia of the City and Nation, with this Proviso, That all in it shall own the Cause of the Parliament against the late King, to be just. He adds, That several Parliament Men and the Lord Manchester, think he hath Privacy with the General, and send him (Mr. Sharp) to him on all Occasions, and the General by him communicates his Mind to his Friends in the City, and he is employed in all that relates to Religion; so that he hath scarce any Time to write: That he had met with Reports once and again, that you (Mr. Douglas) Mrs. Hutchison, Dickson, Wood; and himself, should have said, We could wish to be settled in a Commonwealth-way, and were against the King's coming in on any Terms. Whereupon he went to the Earl of Manchester, Lord Wharton, and several Parliament Men, to whom it was buzzed by Colonels Wetham and Gumble, and flatly contradicted it as a Slander; declaring that nothing would satisfy Scotland but the King on Covenant Terms, and that it was contrary to their Mind he should be brought in on Cavalier Terms: That he, finding many possessed with the Belief, that the King, while in Scotland, broke all Terms, and the Engagements he was under by Treaty, and was vicious, and unclean, and a Scorner of Ordinances, and a Discountenancer of Ministers, had detected those great Lies and malicious Forgeries, and declared, He could not say the King broke to us, and that the honest Party were well satisfied with him; that by Covenant and Treaty, he engaged by all lawful and peaceable Ways to endeavour Uniformity in Doctrine, Discipline, &c. in the Three Nations. The Difficulties, adds he, from the Army, are overcome; the Militia is so settled, that General Monk hath the absolute Power of the Army; and the Agitators and Army cannot now stop the Design on Foot. There is no satisfying the People without the King; a Treaty with him will soon be set on Foot. The General, and leading Men in the House, are now settled in a mutual Confidence. The great Thing now is, Whether this House shall continue or dissolve: If they continue, they lose their Reputation, and will not be able to act for a Settlement; if they dissolve, they fear the next Parliament will bring in the King, without Security to Religion and the publick Cause. But, adds he, I apprehend they must dissolve themselves, and set that on Foot, before the sitting of the next Parliament, which will secure the honest Interest: However, they are resolved on that which will upon the Matter settle Presbyterian Government.'

To this Letter Mr. Douglas answers, March 15. and signifies his Satisfaction that the General supports Presbyterian Government and Ministers. He adds, ' It is best that Presbyterian Government be settled simply; for we know by Experience, that moderate Episcopacy (what can it be other than Bishops with Cautions) is the next Step to Episcopal Tyranny, which will appear very soon above Board if that Ground once be laid. You know the old Saying, Perpetua dictatura via ad imperium. Our constant Moderators was a Step to Bishops, and they once entred, soon broke all Caveats.' He adds, He had Thoughts of a Commission to Crawford and Lawderdale Three Weeks ago, but knows not how a Meeting shall be got to give it, and to add others if necessary.

Mr. Douglas's Letter, March 15.

Further

Further, Mr. Douglas that same Day writes to Mr. Sharp about the Calumnies cast upon them, and says, ‘ The Report of their being for a Commonwealth is a mere Forgery: That they professed any settled Government better than Anarchy, and submitted to Providence in their present Condition: That it may be they were mistaken for some of their Brethren the Protesters, to whom, says he, the King’s Return is Matter of Terror, because of their Miscarriages to him. You know, adds he, That the Judgment of honest Men here is, for admitting the King upon no other Terms but Covenant-terms, wherein Religion, the Liberties of the Nation, and his just Greatness, are best secured; that as to the King he never broke, but at the short Start at St. Johnstoun, which was occasioned by the Remonstrance; that his Countenance was favourable to the Ministry; and if Mr. Gillespy and others were not so cheerfully looked upon by him, it was because of their opposing the Resolutions for the Defence of the Kirk and Kingdom against an unjust Invasion. As to his personal Faults, they did not appear to them: That he heard him say, in reference to the settling Presbyterian Government in England, that, by Advice of Parliament, and a Synod of Divines, he would endeavour the Uniformity whereunto the League and Covenant engages. All this he offers to get attested, if need be, and wishes a Meeting were warranted to authorize Commissioners to act for poor Scotland; and does not doubt, but the noble Persons he (Mr. Sharp) speaks of, being Prisoners of many Prayers, will be cordial for the Good of the Kirk and Kingdom, and not suffer themselves to be deceived again, by admitting those to Counsels and Actings who have undone all.’

And, March 17. Mr. Dickson, Mr. Douglas, and Mr. Hutchison, write a joyned Letter to Mr. Sharp, vindicating themselves from being for a Commonwealth; and meddle with no other Parts of the Letter he wrote. The same Day they write a Letter to General Monk, encouraging him to go on, and thanking him for his Countenance.

Mr. Sharp’s
Letter,
March 13.

March 13. Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, and tells him, ‘ The House have resolved to do nothing in Prejudice of what passed in favour of Religion before the 1648. To what before he had said on the Covenant, he adds, That it was ordered to be read in all the Churches, once in the Month, every Year; that they have appointed a Committee for Approbation and Ordination of Ministers; and therein upon the Matter have approved the Directory and Form for Church-government; that this Day Dr. Owen was outed of his Deanry of Christ’s Church, Oxon, and Dr. Reynolds put in his Room; that the House had further ordered, that none suffer any more for the Sake of the Engagement, and voted it to be utterly void henceforth. By the abovenamed Clause in Militia Act, ordering all to declare the Parliament’s Justice in their War against the King, they have guarded against the Cavaliers; and, by their adding, that Magistracy and Ministry are Ordinances of God, they guard against Sectaries and Levellers. Last Sunday, says he, I went to Mr. Calamy’s Church with our noble Prisoners, where Mrs. Calamy and Taylor gave publick Thanks for their Liberation. This Day, the Form and Order of the King’s Coronation, with Mr. Douglas’s Sermon, and the Speeches made, are printed, and selling at London, printed according to the First Edition at Aberdeen. He adds, The Difficulties about Sitting or not Sitting of this House continue: But sit or not, they will declare for King, Lords and Commons. The Militia is in the Hand of those who are Enemies to a Commonwealth. He adds, That Sunday last, the General sent his Coach for Mrs. Calamy, Ash, and me; and we had a long Conversation with him in private; and convinced him a Commonwealth was impracticable, and to our ‘ Sense beat him off that Sconce he hath hitherto maintained; and came from him

‘ as being satisfied of the Necessity of dissolving this House, and calling a new Par‘ liament. We urged much upon him, that the Presbyterian Interest he had e‘ spoused, was much concerned in keeping up this House, and settling the Govern‘ ment on Terms; but in regard he had so lately declared against the House of ‘ Lords, and continuing of this House, he could not do it so reputably. The ‘ secluded Members, though they could out-vote the Rump, yet cannot so ‘ well proceed against the Rumpers in this as in another Parliament.’

Upon the 15. of March, Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, ‘ That Yesterday
‘ the House passed the Bill for Approbation of Ministers, granting this Power to One ‘ and thirty Ministers, all Presbyterian save Three or Four. This, (says he)
‘ in a Church constitute as ours, were not more tolerable than Mr. Patrick’s ‘ (Gillespy’s) Parchment; but here ’tis looked on as a very advantagious Act. They ‘ have confirmed all Ordinances in favours of Presbyterian Government, extend‘ ing them to all Counties in England. The House will dissolve on Saturday or ‘ Munday. The Commonwealth Party are now for any Thing but the King’s ‘ coming in; they would set up Monk, but he will not be induced to it. The Cava- ‘ lier Spirit breaks out very high, and is like to overturn all. We scarce see how ‘ a War can be avoided. The General is confident to carry his Point. The Po‘ pish Party are at Work, and the Jesuite Provincial Bradshaw, who came over from ‘ Spain to Lambert and Vane, with above a Hundred thousand Pounds Sterl. is still ‘ here, and very busy.’

Mr. Sharp’s
Letter,
March 15.

March 20. Mr. Douglas writes to Mr. Sharp, That he had his of the 13th, and is well pleased that the Parliament’s defensive War is vindicated. He says, Anarchy and Tyranny, and likewise Contempt of Magistracy, are to be guarded against; and as Hierarchy hath been the Bane of the Kirk of God, so decrying the Ministy, and a lawless Liberty, hath poisoned the Kirk with Heresy and Error. He tells Mr. Sharp of a Meeting of the Protesters at Edinburgh very unfrequent; but that ’tis said they wrote a Letter to the General in favours of Waristoun.

Mr. Douglas’s Let-
20.

The same Day Mr. Douglas writes a Letter to the Earl of Crawford, wherein he congratulates him on his Liberation, and his firm Adherence through his Sufferings to his Principles, and takes the Freedom to tell him and the Lord Lawder- dale, ‘ That on their Deliverance they will, like wise Scotsmen behind the Hand, ‘ be careful not to suffer themselves to be befooled again by fair Prettexts and Pro‘ mises, to admit to their Counsels, and publick Employments, Men that never ‘ loved their Master, their Country, themselves, or the Cause they owned and ‘ suffered for; but by their Rigidity, and Precipitancy, and Ambition to set up ‘ themselves and Followers, had ruined King, Kirk and Country; and, if readmit‘ ted, will play the same Game over again; Burnt Bairns dread the Fire; And ‘ adds, He is not against Compassion to such as deserved the contrary, but would ‘ never trust them with Places. He beseeches them to improve their Enlargement
‘ in a solid Settlement of the Nations, according to our Obligations by the solemn ‘ Oaths of God. And he begs his Lordship and Lawderdale may write down to ‘ their Acquaintances in Scotland, to avoid Divisions, and leave off their Plotings ‘ for their private Interest, and let all give Way to the publick Interest of Kirk and ‘ State.’ That same Day a common Letter signed by Mrs. Dickson, Douglas, Ha- milton, Smith, and Hutchison, is sent to Crawford, Lawderdale and Sinclair, congratulating them on their Liberation.

Mr. Dou-
glas’s Letter to the Earl of Crawford.

Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. John Smith, March 17. That Yesterday the Parliament did dissolve themselves, after they had issued Writs for another Parliament to meet 25. of April. Mr. Sharp seeks to be home, and declines coming to be Minister

nister of Edinburgh. He says, Some sudden Rupture of the Sectarian Party is feared, and those who are against the King's coming in, seem desperate.

Mr. Douglas's Let-
22;

March 22. Mr. Douglas answers Mr. Sharp's last of the 17. and signifies his great Concern in the new Parliament; and wishes that the late Parliament, in a Consistency with their Declarations to the Country, and Promises to the General, could have continued sitting. This he takes to have been the Method that would have brought Matters to the best Issue. And he expects and hopes the General, whose Honour now is engaged, will keep all in Peace till the Parliament sit down. He desires Mr. Sharp to stay as long as he can be serviceable to the General, or Lords lately released.

Letters
March 12.

Upon the 12. of March, the Lord Broughill, Colonel Georges Governor of Ulster, and Mr. John Greg, in Name of the Presbyterian Ministers of Ulster, write Letters to Mr. Douglas, with a Gentleman Mr. Kennedy, whom they send over to reside at Edinburgh, desiring a close Correspondence with Scotland, and shewing their hearty Concern for settling Religion and Liberty, and Uniformity in the Three Nations, in Concert with General Monk; and desiring Mr. Sharp, or Mr. Wood, or some trusty Friend, to be sent over to Ireland, to concert Measures for the Settlement of all those upon righteous and solid Foundations.

The 28. of March, Mr. Douglas and the Ministers of Edinburgh write Answers to those Letters, accept of their kind Offer, and signify they have writ to Mr. Sharp by his Brother, whom they send up express to London to him, as one who is well acquaint with their Affairs, signifying their Desire to him, and intreating Mr. Sharp, or his Brother, to come over from London to them. How Mr. Sharp ordered this Affair at London, we shall find from the Detail of the Letters before me.

Mr. Douglas's Let-
29.

March 29. Mr. Douglas writes to Mr. Sharp with his Brother, That if the General be jealous of Ireland, he needs not acquaint him with their Desire to him to go thither: That they know nothing, but they agree in one Thing; and leaves it to Mr. Sharp to take what Course he thinks fittest; and if he find that the Proposal either feed or breed jealousies, the least he can do is, to let my Lord Broughill understand that the Affair was communicate to him (Mr. Sharp;) and that he excuse himself the best way he can. Mr. Douglas signifies, he sends him up the rude Draught of a Paper, which might be fit to be published at the Meeting of the Parliament. This Paper I insert, App. N^o. 3. as the Sense of so great a Man as Mr. Douglas, on the present Juncture of Affairs.

Mr. Sharp's
Letter,
March 24

Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, March 24. declining his being called to be Minister of Edinburgh, and pressing another may be pitched upon. In his Post-script he acquaints him, That Lawderdale and he had been dealing to stop the English Judges from coming down till the Parliament meet: That the English are willing Scotland be as free a Nation as they are; but the General is for keeping us in Subjection, till he see how Matters go in the Parliament: That they will essay to delay the Instructions and Commissions to them, as long as may be.

Mr. Douglas's Let-
31.

March 31. Mr. Douglas writes to Mr. Sharp, pressing a Meeting in Scotland, either of Shires and Burghs, or of a select Committee, for choosing Commissioners to deal in these Matters that concern Scotland in general, and to see to the Nation's Interest. He adds, 'He cannot but admire God's Hand, in moving the late Par'liament to revive the solemn League and Covenant, which is the only Basis of 'settling these distracted Nations. The League and Covenant, says he, is hated
'by many in England and Scotland, because it puts a Restraint upon Malignants,
'the Prelatical Party, the Phanauxs, and those who are loose and profane; which 'ought so much the more to increase the Affections of all honest Men to it, as the only Mean of effecting a religious and righteous Settlement. He tells Mr. Sharp, That there is a great Noise of one Hardie, who hath preached before the General in the Babylonish Fashion, and vehemently cried up the English Hierarchy, and the rest of the Romish Relicks that remained in England after the first Reformation; which is made use of here (Edinburgh) to the General's Disadvantage.
'the

In the Postscript to this Letter, Mr. Douglas urgeth further a Warrant for a Meeting at Edinburgh, to choose Commissioners to look after the Nation's Interest; and adds, 'There is now a Generation risen up, which have never been acquainted with the Work of Reformation, nor with the just Proceedings of this Nation, and therefore would condemn them, the Covenant, and all their honest and loyal Actings, according to the Covenant Principles. You will not believe what a Heart-hatred they bear to the Covenant, and how they fret that the Parliament should have revived it. What can be expected of such, but the pursuing of the old Malignant Design, to the marring and defacing of the Work of Reformation settled here, and well advanced in the neighbouring Nations? I am informed, that those are to have a Meeting here on the 5th of April, and have no Purpose to wait upon a Warrant, but go on upon such an Election, as will be dissatisfying to the Sober and Well-affected of the Nation. 'Tis Matter of Admiration, that they are unwilling that Crawford and Lawderdale (being upon the Place, and having given such Proofs of their honest and loyal Affections) should be employed in Matters of that Concernment: But those worthy Noblemen may be assured, that the Affections of all honest Men are upon them. There are Three Parties here, who have all of them their own Fears in this great Crisis: The Protesters fear that the King come in; those abovementioned, that if he come in upon Covenant Terms, they be disappointed; and those who love Religion and the Liberty of the Nation, that if he come not in upon the Terms of the League and Covenant, his coming in will be disadvantageous to Religion and the Liberty of the Three Nations: Therefore I exhort Crawford, Lawderdale, and your self, to deal with all Earnestness, that the League and Covenant be settled, as the only Basis of the Security and Happiness of these Nations.'

Upon the 27. of March, Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, desiring to be recalled. He signifies, 'That the Elections are mostly of the Royal Party, which causeth Fear of Mind among the sober Party: That Warristoun that Day took Journey for Scotland. He excuseth the General's Letter to them, as having some Expressions in it not so favourable, put in by Gumble, who is at the Bottom for Episcopacy. He tells Mr. Douglas, That the Printing of his Sermon at King Charles's Coronation, at London, hath offended the Episcopal Party, which doth not much matter: That the Declaration at Dumfermling, bearing the King's Acknowledgment of the Bloodshed by his Father's House, is what he knows not how to excuse: That Lawderdale and he endeavour to vindicate Scotland's treating with the King upon the Terms of the Covenant, from the Necessity England now find themselves in, of treating with the King upon Terms, before his Return. He adds, Some of the Episcopal Party have sent Messages to me twice or thrice, to give them a Meeting, which I have refused; and upon this I am reported, both here and at Brussels, to be a Scottish rigid Presbyterian, making it my Work to have it settled here. They sent to desire me to move nothing in prejudice of the Church of England, and they would do nothing in prejudice of our Church. I bid tell them, It was not my Employment to move to the prejudice of any Party; and I thought, did they really mind the Peace of those Churches, they would not start such Propositions; but all who pretend for ‘ civil Settlement, would contribute their Endeavours to restore it, and not meddle ‘ unseasonably with those remote Cafes. The Fear of rigid Presbytery is talked ‘ much of here by all Parties; but, for my Part, I apprehend no Ground for it; I ‘ am afraid that something else is like to take place in the Church than rigid Pres‘ bytery. This Nation is not fitted to bear that Yoke of Christ; and for Religion, ‘ I suspect it is made a stalking Horse still.’

Mr. Dou-
 glas's Letter, April 3.

April 3. Mr. Douglas answereth Mr. Sharp's last, and signifies, ‘ That if it be ‘ not offensive to the Presbyterians at London, he sees no Cause but Mr. Sharp ‘ might have met with some of the Prelatick Party. Since Presbyterial Govern‘ ment, says he, is settled in Scotland, you were not to capitulate with them about ‘ that; but it had been worth the Pains, if you could have, by fair Dealing, per‘ swaded them not to obstruct the settling of the Civil Government, and to leave the ‘ Ecclesiastick Government to the Parliament, who, as 'tis to be hoped, being Men ‘ of Conscience, will find themselves bound to settle according to the Covenant.
 ‘ You might have shewed them likewise how falsely Presbyterial Government is char‘ ged with Rigidity, and with how much Meekness and long-suffering Patience it ‘ labours and waits for the reclaiming of Delinquents that ly under the Scandal of ‘ transgressing known and unquestionable Laws; whereas the lordly Dominion of ‘ Prelacy doth rigidly impose Laws on Mens Consciences, about the Observance of ‘ Ceremonies, and severely censureth, both Civilly and Ecclesiastically, Men who
 ‘ out of Conscience dare not conform to them: So that the Challenge of Rigidity ‘ may be justly retorted on Episcopacy. Those Things you might have calmly ‘ debated with them; but herein I would have you do nothing without the Advice ‘ and Allowance of Presbyterians, who, being upon the Place, can best judge of the ‘ Expediency of such a Meeting.’

In the Postscript to this Letter, Mr. Douglas again urgeth, That Warrants be sent down for the choosing Commissioners to appear from Scotland. He says, Glencairn is much for the Committee spoken of before; and he wonders the General can forget Scotland's ready Offers of their Service to and with him, in his first Undertaking, which he hath often acknowledged: Adds, ‘ I do not like that we ‘ should be so often put to make Apologies. Our Faith and Integrity, both to ‘ Monarchy and Presbyterial Government, is more to be valued than theirs who ‘ call them in question. It will be strange, if the Affections of these People be ‘ more enlarged to those great Interests, than ours who have been suffering for ‘ them, and were active for them, when none of them durst appear. If they ‘ think it be a Fault, that we laboured to have Presbyterial Government establish‘ ed with them, and were as tender of their Concernments as of our own, they ‘ would do well to be plain, and shew us wherein the Fault lieth; for we supposed, ‘ that we were engaged thereunto by the League and Covenant: If that Oath, which ‘ was so solemnly sworn at the Coronation, be left out of the Form of Coronation, ‘ it seems purposedly done, to hide and keep in Oblivion the Care that hath been ‘ taken here of their Concernments in England, because they resolve to mind no‘ thing of our Concernments.’

Mr. Sharp's
 Letter,
 March 31.

Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, March 31. ‘ That there is no Fear of any ‘ Disturbance from the Army; and, as the General declared at first, so he hath laid ‘ Things effectually, that the military Power shall not maintain a separate Interest ‘ from the civil: That all People he is among are Englishmen, and incline to keep ‘ Scotland at under, and either incorporate, or make us distinct, as they shall find ‘ most serviceable to their Interest: That he is of Opinion, the King, both in ‘ point of Honour and Interest, will restore us, and make us a distinct Kingdom.
 ‘ No Man questions now the King's being called in; that the real Presbyterians in the City have desired a Meeting with the Earl of Lawderdale and Mr. Sharp, on Munday, to concert Matters against Sectaries and Cavaliers; which they design to keep.

‘ in

April 5. Mr. Sharp signifies to Mr. Douglas, 'That the General was positive that he (Mr. Sharp) should not leave him; that a Warrant for sending Commissioners could not be obtained, for Reasons to be communicate to him at Fidburgh; that my Lord Lawderdale, and the noble Prisoners, are very useful for their Country. In his Postscript he says, Waristoun had applied to him, to deal with the General, that he might have his Office, and his Debts paid; but I declined: That his Wife gives it out, that, had it not been for Mr. Sharp, the General would have restored him to his Office; but, after the General heard he was gone, he told me (Mr. Sharp) That Waristoun would have little Use of his Grant of Six hundred Pounds, and, ere Three Months ended, he would not be worth a Groat; that he (the General) would take care, none of the Remoustrants should have any Trust in Scotland; that the Judges were only sent down for the Fashion, and in a Month or Two there would be a Change; that it was Necessity put him on it, and a little Time would shew, it was not for Scotland's Hurt: That, as for sending Commissioners from Scotland to the Parliament, it was neither for our Reputation or Advantage; and that, if we be quiet, our Business would be done to our Mind. He adds, That he behoved to stay at London; that the General had told him, he would communicate his Mind to him, and none else, as to Scots Affairs; and that in Civil Things he might signify his (the General's) Judgment to such whom he could trust. He adds, That, according to their Appointment, they had a Meeting with Ten Presbyterian Ministers, whom they could trust, where Lawderdale, they, and he agreed upon the Necessity of bringing in the King upon Covenant Terms, and taking off the Prejudices that ly upon some Presbyterians against this. There are Endeavours for an Accommodation between the moderate Episcopalian Party, and the Presbyterians: But, says he, at our Meeting, Lawderdale and I obtained of those Ministers, that they should not give a Meeting to the Episcopal Men, till they first met among themselves, and resolved on the Terms they would stick to. The King is acquainted with all Proceedings here, and wants not Information of the Carriage and Affection of Scotland. The Parliament will address him, some say, in hard, others upon honourable Terms. I see not full Ground of Hope, that Covenant Terms will be rigidly stuck to. The Paper you sent me by my Brother, anent the Settlement of the Government, will be of good Use to me.'

Mr. Sharp's
Letter,
April 5.

By his Letter, April 7. he signifies to Mr. Douglas, That all further Applications for Commissioners from Scotland must sleep; and adds, 'The Lord having opened a fair Door of Hope, we may look for a Settlement upon the Grounds of the Covenant, and thereby a Foundation laid for Security against the Prelatick and Phanatick Assaults; but I am dubious if this shall be the Result of the Agitations now on Foot. The Story of Hardie's preaching before the General, in the Babylonish Habit, is a mere Forgery. We intend to publish some Letters from the French Protestant Ministers, vindicating the King from Popery, and giving him a large Character. The Sectaries will not be able to do any Thing to prevent the King's coming in: Our honest Presbyterian Brethren are cordial for him. I have been dealing with some of them to send some Testimony of their Affection for him; and Yesternight Five of them promised, within a Week to make a Shift to send a Thousand Pieces of Gold to him. The Episcopal Party are making Applications to the Presbyterians for an Accommodation; but the Presbyterians resolve to stick to their Principles. I saw a Letter this Day under

Mr. Sharp's
Letter,
April 7.

‘ the King’s Hand, exhorting his Friends to Moderation, and Endeavours for ‘ composing Differences amongst his good People. ’

Mr. Sharp’s Letter, April 12. April 12. Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, That his Work is not lessened by the Interval of Parliaments; that the General had left it on Mr. Calamy and him, to name such as should preach before him; that the Phanaticks will essay their worst on Lambert’s Escape, but the General is on his guard. ‘ It was resolved, adds he, That in this Juncture, we may speak one by one with any of the Episcopal Party; and I having told them, that some Motions had been made to me of speaking with them, they prayed me not to decline it. To-morrow I have promised to meet with Doctor Morley who came from the King. The King is at Breda. The Parliament at its first Sitting will, ’tis expected, call him in. Some say the Settarian Party have made Application to him, to bring him in without Terms. The Dutch have offered to prepare Lodgings, and defray his Charges during the Treaty. The French Ambassador presses his going to France; but he refuses. ’

Mr. Sharp’s Letter, April 13. Again Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, April 13. That the Elections are mostly of Antirepublicans; that Lawderdale and he had been visiting Mr. Baxter. The Insolencies of the Cavaliers are so great, that the sober Part of that Name emit Declarations against them. He adds, ‘ There is some Talk, that for the more reputable settling of the Church of England, a Synod will be called from all the Reformed Churches. All that were upon the Parliament’s Side, are gone into the calling in of the King, and they are now only intent upon Terms. The General will admit of no other Way of Treaty, but by a Parliament. The Council, fearing that the Parliament may bring him in without sufficient Security to such who acted in the War against his Father, are now upon framing Propositions to propose to the Parliament: This is kept secret, but I am promised a Copy when they are agreed unto. I continue in my Opinion, That Scotland should make no Applications till the King come in. I have received Letters from Mr. Bruce at the Hague, and the King is satisfied that Scotland keep quiet. I have sent yours, and one from my self, to my Lord Broghill. ’

Mr. Douglas’s Letter, April 21. Mr. Douglas writes to Mr. Sharp, April 21. That Commissioners are coming up, against his Mind, and that of others; yet wishes that the General may put Respect on them: That Glencairn is following, and wishes there may be a good Correspondence ’twixt him and Lawderdale, and therest of the noble Prisoners. He adds, ‘ I am engaged to believe, that he will do any Thing that may be for the Liberty of the Nation, and for our covenanted Interest here, and I have so much from him my self; and my only Desire is, That all who truly mind the Nation’s Interest, may not divide, but concur unanimously without By-ends, and Self-respects. ’

Mr. Sharp’s Letter April 19. April 19. Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, ‘ That the Plot of the Phanaticks appears to be broke: That a Messenger from Lambert going to the King is taken, who was to assure the King, if he will trust to the Army Lambert could make, they would bring him in without any Conditions. Lambert is sculking, no Body knows where. Most of the Army have yielded to bring in the King upon Terms. If the Cavalier Party do not drive him on precipitant Measures, the Parliament will bring him in upon Terms, honourable to himself, and safe to the Nations. Most of the Members of Parliament are thought to be for Moderation. I find they incline not to put him upon justifying the late War. The Business of Religion will be altogether waved in the Treaty, and referred to be settled by a Synod. I have certain Accounts this Day, that one Mr. Murray came on Saturday to London from Scotland, and went on Munday beyond

‘ yond Sea. He told some Persons here, that he had Letters from the Nobility ‘ in Scotland to the King, shewing they were in Readiness to rise for him. This ‘ is a divisive Way, which will prove foolish and destructive to the Nation, if ‘ persisted in. I apprehend the Gentleman hath been sent by Middleton, and ‘ hath brought those Stories from some of our sweet Lords.’

To this last, Mr. Douglas answereth, April 24. and tells him, That Mr. Murray came from Middleton, and is returned with a general Answer by the Lords: That he believes no Information that comes that Way, will be for their Concern-ments, and the Bearer can give little Information of the Carriage of honest People in Scotland. ‘ But, adds he, if the King be settled, I do not value Mis-

Mr. Douglas's Letter, April 24.

‘ representations, for then I hope our Religion and civil Interests will be settled,
‘ which will be sufficient to all, who singly mind the Publick. As to what Mr.
‘ Sharp had writ, that the King was not to be urged to justify the War made ‘ against his Father, Mr. Douglas says, They would do well, when they do not ‘ put him to a direct justifying of it, to provide against his quarrelling the Law‘ fulness of it: That he conceives that War will come under an Act of Oblivi-
‘ on; and that it does not appear convenient to touch much upon the Lawful‘ ness of defensive War; and since it is passed, it ought not to be meddled in:
‘ And that whatever hath been in the Prosecution, and Close of it, evil, yet it was ‘ undertaken upon necessary Grounds, for our civil and religious Interests. He ‘ wishes, That instead of a Synod of Foreign Divines, the Bottom of all were ‘ to be the Assembly at Westminster their Procedure, and there is little Need of ‘ the Help of Foreigners in that Matter.’

Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, April without Date, That all Care is taken against Risings: That he gave the General a full Account of what he had sent him from Ireland, and he is fully satisfied: That some of the King's Party are for bringing him in without Terms; but his more sober Friends are against it. The General will only have him in by a Parliament; and the best Accounts from himself bear, That he is desirous to come in upon Terms, and by a Parliament, whose Addressees he will attend. The Council have gone through the most sticking Parts of the Articles to be laid before the Parliament for a Treaty; that of an Indemnity, and Sales and Purchases, which the King will agree to. There is another Rub like to rise from the House of Lords, that some say Northumber- land and Manchester design to ingross all Offices to themselves and Dependents, and to exclude the young Lords from Sitting, till the Treaty be finished. He adds, ‘ No Notice is taken of Scotland in the Treaty; we shall be left to the ‘ King, which is best for us; God save us from Divisions and Self-seeking. I ‘ have acquainted Mr. Bruce how it is with you, and what you are doing, and ‘ advised him to guard against Middleton's Designs, and those who sent that ‘ Murray over to the King. If our Noblemen, or others, fall upon factious ‘ Ways, and grasp after Places, they will cast Reproach upon their Country, and ‘ fall short of their Ends. I fear the Interest of the Solemn League and Covenant
‘ shall be neglected; and for Religion, I smell, that moderate Episcopacy is the fairest ‘ Accommodation, which moderate Men who wish well to Religion, expect. Let ‘ our Noble Friends know what you think fit.’

Mr. Sharp's Letter, April.

A Letter from Mr. Douglas to Mr. Sharp, April 26. bears, ‘ That he hopes
‘ the Nation will not suffer by the Commissioners coming up against all Advice.
‘ He fears the King hath but slender Information of the Carriage of the honest ‘ Party in Scotland, and their Disposition: That he wisheth the General would ‘ permit him (Mr. Sharp) to go over and give the King Information, concer‘ ning his and our Carriage. He wishes the King may know who were and are ‘ his

Mr. Douglas's Letter, April 26.

his real Friends. He is content that Scotland be not mentioned in the Treaty, providing we have the Liberty of a free Nation, to deal for keeping what we already have both in Church and State. So long as this Party that now acts get their Will, we will never be without Divisions and Animosities. I fear Mr. Bruce hath not sufficient Credit for us. If the solemn League and Covenant be neglected, it seems to me that the Judgment on these Nations is not at an End. The greatest Security for the King and those Nations, were, to come in upon that Bottom. If it shall be neglected, I fear it shall give too great Advantage to our Ranters here, who are crying it down. If moderate Episcopacy shall be the Result of all the Presbyterians Endeavours, it will be a sad Business, for moderate Episcopacy is two Steps of the Ladder, to climb up to the highest Prelacy: No Caveats will keep them in such a Moderation, but ambitious Spirits will break all Bonds. It is very well known, what Endeavours King James VI. had here to get a moderate Episcopacy settled in constant Moderators, with their own Consent to Caveats, to keep them in Subjection to their own Presbyteries and Synods, and to lay down their Places every Year at the Feet of the General Assembly; as appears by the Meeting at Montrose, where honest Men did protest against it, and tell the King, They did see constant Moderators stepping up to the Height of Prelacy, which fell out in a few Years; they broke all Caveats, and came to that Height of Tyranny, which was compesced with very much ado: And this was the Beginning of all the Stirs in our Nation. You may be assured, that England is better acquaint with, and more inclined to Episcopacy, than Scotland was at that Time: They need not think that it will stop at moderate Precedency, but will take on Pomp, Dignity, and Revenues to uphold it, and all other Supports of the Hierarchy; then it will be too late to aim at another Frame of Government. It appears to me, that God has put this fair Opportunity in their Hand, that they may fall upon the Government of his own Institution, which would prove a strong Defence against Errors, Heresies, and Profanity, that they talk so much of. The Time is so favourable, that it will be their own Fault if they want a settled Government in the Kirk; it is not probable that the King will deny it; it will not ly upon him, but upon the Kingdom, who will neither seek it, nor have it. If the Presbyterians in England shall find the Smart of the Want of that Government, it is just with God that it should be so; seeing they reject his Ordinance, and will have a Plant of their own settling, which God never planted. Whatever Kirk-government be settled there, it will have an Influence upon this Kingdom; for the Generality of this new upstart Generation have no Love to Presbyterial Government, but are wearied of that Yoke, feeding themselves with the Fancy of Episcopacy, or moderate Episcopacy. Our Desire is, that Presbyterial Government be settled; if not, we shall be free of any Accession to the Breach of a sworn Covenant.

Mr. Sharp's
Letter,
April 28.

April 28. Mr. Sharp signifies to Mr. Douglas, That the Design of closing with the King now appeareth above Board. Yesterday the young Lords came to the House, who, with those of the Year 1648. made up Thirty six. There will, 'tis thought, be no notice taken of Qualifications in the House of Commons. Both Houses are adjourned till Tuesday, when a Message will come from the King.

Mr. Sharp's
Letter,
May 1.

By his next Letter, May 1. Mr. Sharp acquaints Mr. Douglas, that a Letter was presented to each House, from his Majesty, by Sir John Greenfield, the General's Cousin; and refers for other News to the Diurnal: That those Three Days the General had been speaking to him to take a Trip to the King at Breda, and he knew not how to decline it, and is sorry he cannot stay till he have Mr. Douglas's Mind.

Mind. If he thinks fit to send over any Congratulation to the King, or Orders to himself, it may come up in my Lord Crawford's Packet.

In his Postscript he adds, 'General Monk has been these Ten Days pressing me to go over to the King, to deal that he may write a Letter to Mr. Calamy, to be communicated to the Presbyterian Ministers, shewing his Resolution to own the godly sober Party, and to stand for the true Protestant Religion, in the Power of it; adding withal, That it will be fit you were there, were it but to acquaint the King with the Passages of my Undertaking, known to Mr. Douglas and you, and to tell him of Matters in Scotland. He spoke to me Three several Times this last Week, and now I am resolved to go, I hope, to do some Service to the honest Party here, and indeed to ours at Home. If you think fit to write to the King, the sooner the better. I have spoken to Glencairn, and shewed him what you wrote to me about him.'

May 4. Mr. Sharp writes from London to Mr. Douglas, That he could not get off to Breda to this Day. 'The Presbyterian Ministers of the City,' after several Meetings, have resolved to send over next Week some Ministers from the City, Oxford and Cambridge, to congratulate the King: And I am desired to acquaint the King with their Purpose, and dispose for their Reception; or, if it be possible, that he would write to both Houses by way of Prevention, that they would secure Religion in reference to some Points. Some Particulars of Secrecy the General hath recommended to me, and given Orders to transport me in a Frigate. I have got a large Letter to the King, and another to his prime Minister. Providence hath ordered it well, that my going carries the Face of some Concernment in reference to England; but I shall have hereby the better Access and Opportunity to speak what the Lord shall direct as to our Matters, and give a true Information of the Carriage of Business. I think, I need not stay above Ten Days. It will be best to address the King by a Letter. Presbyterians here are few, and all are Englishmen, and these will not endure us to do any Thing that may carry a Resemblance in pressing Uniformity: For my Part, I shall not be accessory to any Thing prejudicial to the Presbyterian Government; but to appear for it in any other way than is within my Sphere, is inconvenient, and may do Harm, and not Good.'

Mr. Robert Douglas writes to Mr. Sharp, May 8. That he durst not write of his going to Holland, till his last, of April 26. and observes now, That his Motion and the General's came together. He adds, 'I perceive by all that you write, that no Respect will be had to the Covenant in this great Transaction, which if neglected altogether, it fears me that the Lord will be highly provoked to Wrath. It will be the Presbyterians Fault, if they get not as much settled, at least, as was agreed on by the Synod of Divines, and ratified by Parliament; for I perceive that the King will be most condescending to the Desires offered by the Parliament; but I leave that. However our Desires may be for Uniformity in Doctrine, Worship, Discipline and Government; if they will not press it themselves, we are free. Your great Errand will be for this Kirk. I am confident the King will not wrong our Liberties, whereunto he himself is engaged. He needs not declare any Liberty to tender Consciences here, because the Generality of the People, and whole Ministry have embraced the established Religion by Law, with his Majesty's Consent. It is known, that in all the Times of the prevailing of the late Party in England, none here petitioned for Toleration, except some inconsiderable naughty Men. Whatever Indulgence the King intends to Persons who have failed under the late Revolutions, yet he would be careful to do it so as they shall be in no Capacity to trouble the Peace of the Land,

I doubt not but you’ll inform the King of the Circumstances and Condition of our Kirk: It is left wholly upon you to do what you can for the Benefit of this poor distracted Kirk, that the King’s Coming may be refreshful to the honest Party here; since no Directions from us can well reach you before you come back to London. Receive the inclosed to his Majesty, a true Copy of it for your self. ’

Instructions to Mr.
Sharp at Breda,
App. No. 5.

The Letter of this Day’s Date, to the King, signed by Mrs. Douglas, Dickson, Hamilton, Smith, Hutchison, I have insert, App. No. 4. and shall make no large Abbreviate of it. They put him in mind of his Covenant, and expect Protection in their Establishment, and that he will settle God’s House in all his Dominions, according to God’s Word. In short, it differs not far from Mr. Guthrie’s Address, for which he was seized August 23. as we shall hear. With this Letter they send Instructions to Mr. Sharp, which I likewise have annexed, App. No. 5:

Letter,
from Ireland, with an Answer,
May 8.

I shall scarce break the Thread of this Account, by taking notice that, May 8. Mr. Douglas answers a Letter dated April --- from the Governor of Ulster, wherein is signified the Governor’s Joy to hear of the Unanimity in Scotland on Covenant Principles; that he hopes the prevailing Party in Ireland will carry on their Work of Reformation: That the Army is right, as appears by their Declaration inclosed: That they are in great Fears, some about the King may perswade him to come in otherwise than upon the Call of his People in Parliament upon a Covenant Account. To this Mr. Douglas, in Return, acquaints the Governor, how refreshing his was; regrets so few mind the main Business of Reformation; hopes that God will appear for his own Interests, and is perswaded, that if the Parliament mind the Business of Religion, the King will accord to their Proposals.

Ministers
Letter to Earl of Roths
when going to Breda, May 10.

As soon as the Ministers of Edinburgh were acquainted with the Earl of Roth’s his going over to Breda, May 10. Mr. Douglas and Mr. Hutchison write a Letter to him, signifying, They are glad his Lordship is repairing to the King, and that he will have Opportunity to give an Account of the true State of Affairs during the late Revolutions. They beg he may lay out himself for the Good of the Church, that she may enjoy all her Liberties established by Law. That he knows the constant Adherence of the Body of Ministers to the King during the late Revolutions, and how cordial they have been in the late Change: That he knows likewise, how much the People adhere to the Establishment of the Church, so that there is no Pretext for an Indulgence to such as shall recede from it, but many Inconveniencies would ensue upon the granting it. Those Things they beg his Lordship may lay before the King, that he may not hearken to any Advice to their Prejudice, though they hope there is none such.

App. No. 6:

Likewise they send over a Letter with the Earl to the King, the Purport of which is, to congratulate his Majesty, and to express their Thoughts of the gracious Message he had sent to the Parliament of England; as the Reader will see from the Letter it self, App. No. 6.

Letter to the Earl of Crawford
and Lawderdale,
May 10.

That same Day, May 10. Mrs. Douglas and Hutchison write to the Earl of Crawford and Lawderdale at London, and signify how satisfying it is to them to understand that their Lordships endeavour to keep an entire Union, and good Understanding among us in this Kingdom. They recommend the Earl of Selkirk, as very much for this. They add, ‘ There is another Particular we are necessitate to trouble your Lordships about, concerning the Worship of God in the King’s Family, when it shall please the Lord to bring him to England. We are sensible how he hath been necessitate to make Use of the Service-book. A‘ broad,

‘ broad, which if it should be set up at his Return, your Lordships know what ‘ may be the Consequences. We judge it will trouble many of this Kingdom, ‘ who will account it their Duty to be about his Majesty, and yet are engaged ‘ against that Way of Worship: It will give a great Dash to the Hopes of many
 ‘ in that Kingdom, whose Judgments are against it, and yield Advantage to ma‘ ny who malign this happy Change; and probably upon that Practice it may ‘ be again generally set up in that Kingdom, and so may prejudge all future ‘ Settlement of Religion. In this Exigent, we could find out no better Expe‘ dient, than to recommend this Particular to your Lordships Wisdom and ‘ Prudence; that if you think fit, by dealing with his Majesty himself, with fit ‘ Persons in both Houses, and with honest Ministers, this may be prevented,
 ‘ and some appointed to attend his Majesty, for performing Family-worship till ‘ there be a Settlement. And it is our humble Opinion, that (abstracting from ‘ our Judgment of the Thing it self) his Majesty’s Forbearance, till there be a ‘ Settlement, is the most safe Course. Since the Episcopal Divines themselves ‘ have many of them forborn it in England these Years bypast, we can see no ‘ Prejudice following upon his Majesty’s keeping his Way which he observed in Scot- ‘ land, till there be some Establishment in Matters of Religion, to a more general ‘ Satisfaction. We shall no further trouble your Lordships at this Time, but to ‘ request that whatever his Majesty hath been pleased to declare concerning Eng- ‘ land, yet Care may be had, that no Liberty may be granted in this Church to ‘ overturn the established Religion, wherein there is so general and harmonious ‘ Agreement among us. ’

The same Persons, that same Day, write to Mr. Sharp, signifying, ‘ That be‘ side the former Instructions they sent him by way of London, he may re‘ member the great Inconvenience that will ensue upon the King’s using the Ser- ‘ vice-book when he returns, and use all fit Means to prevent it; and mind to ‘ inform the King, that no such Concession is necessary to Scotland, as he hath ‘ given in his Declaration as to England. ’

May 12. The abovementioned Ministers of Edinburgh, write a Letter to Mrs. Ca- lamy, Ash, and Manton, which, because of its Importance, is referred to frequently afterward, and added, App. No. 7.

May 22. Mr. Douglas writes to Mr. Robert Alison of Newcastle, Member of Parliament, in Return to one he had received from him, in which he appears to have pressed Mr. Douglas to undertake a London Journey at this Juncture. After Mr. Douglas hath expressed his Satisfaction with this great Turn of Affairs, and shewed how solicitous all honest Men are for the Settlement of the Church of England; he adds, ‘ These worthy Men who revived the League and Covenant, ‘ gave great Encouragement to all Lovers of Religion, and of lawful Authority. I ‘ am not without Hopes there are many worthy Patriots with you, who may be ‘ able to perswade the Parliament, of the Inexpediency, to say no more, of re‘ turning to Prelacy and the Service-book. I apprehend that indeed you do ‘ rightly take up the Case, that if your selves do accord to a Settlement of Pres‘ bytery, and the Directory, the King will willingly grant it. I trust, the LORD who ‘ hath done so great Things for us, and particularly England, in this Revolution,
 ‘ will not so far leave them, as they shall forget the Covenant, and what in pur‘ suance thereof hath been done by the Assembly and Parliament, and neglect ‘ such an Opportunity, whereof they never had the like; and it is to be doubted
 ‘ if ever the like return. I am unclear as to the Expediency of my coming up at ‘ this Time. I have frequently spoken and written to the Lord General, and ‘ doubt not of his Willingness to concur with honest Men; and have written lately to the Ministers of London; and you have Mr. Sharp with you at London ready to joyn. Much will ly in the Parliament's own Inclinations, and they have the Prayers of all honest Men, that they may be directed to settle that Government, which we by Experience have found the most effectual Mean for restraining Error, and suppressing Profanity. And I judge the Activity of honest Men should be exerted to deal with Members, and if Need be, I shall write again to the General, if Mr. Sharp shall advise it.'

Mr. Douglas's Letter, May 22.

Mr. Douglas writes the same Day, May 22. to Mr. Sharp, signifying what they had done since his Departure, contained in the above Letters sent with the Earl of Rothes. He doubts not but Mr. Sharp hath managed his being with his Majesty, for the Interests of Christ; and wishes he may be helpful to the Ministers of London, with all Caution and Wariness, that, adds he, 'your doing for them tend not to the undoing of our selves. We are very hopeful that his Majesty will be mindful of us, and will be loth to entertain Suggestions to the Prejudice of the established Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government of this Church: And if the Violence of some press an Alteration, we are confident he will graciously repress that Insolence, and vouchsafe us the Enjoyment of the Liberties and Privileges of this Kirk, ratified by the Laws of this Kingdom; which we have stood for, against the Opposition of those who plied the usurping Powers for the Overthrow thereof, by the plausible Argument of their Compliance with them against Monarchy, whereunto they affirmed we adhered, as indeed we did. We hope, his Majesty will be in Case to distinguish 'twixt these, who, for their own Interest, have struck in with all Changes, and those who were fixed in their Principles for lawful Government.'

Mr. Douglas's Sentiments as to Mr. Sharp his being corrupted at Breda.

It is high Time now to return to Mr. Sharp at Breda, where Mr. Douglas, in his Account of the Introduction of Prelacy, is of Opinion he was corrupted. Perhaps the Reader may be pleased to have what Mr. Douglas says there, in his own Words, and they are as follow. I profess, I did not suspect Mr. Sharp, in reference to Prelacy, more than I did my self, no more than the Apostles did Judas before his Treachery was discovered: I did not suspect him for that, more than I did suspect him for taking the Tender, after he came out of the Tower so long before us. But since I find that has been his Trickling; and when he went over to Holland, he had a Letter from a prime Nobleman to the King, signifying that he was Episcopal in his Judgment. This was revealed to me after he was made a Bishop. The first Thing that gave me a Dislike at him was, when he was in Holland he wrote some in Commendation of Hyde, an Enemy to our Nation and Presbyterial Government. I durst not as yet believe my self in this, having no more save his Commendation of Hyde: But it appeared afterwards, that in Holland he was a great Enemy to the Presbyterian Interest; and when we wrote a favourable Letter for the Earl of Rothes, and with him a Letter to the King, he dissuaded the Earl from delivering the Letter. When at London, he was enraged that we had written to the Ministers of London. He dealt also treacherously with the Brethren who came from Ireland, in dissuading their Addresses to the King. When he came to Scotland, he dealt earnestly against all Addresses made to the Parliament against Prelacy. He dealt treacherously with the King, making him believe, that there were no considerable Persons against Prelacy; but would have perswaded the King, that all our Lives were in his Hand, and he might do what he pleased; and the Man never rested, till he was brought himself to a Chair. This Passage I thought proper here to insert from Mr. Douglas's own original Copy now before me, both to shew the Hypocrisie, in what of Mr. Sharp's Actings we have seen, if his treacherous Design was a forming all this While, as we may suspect from his taking the Tender; and to evince it it fully, as well as lay open some Springs of what he says and does in the following Letters.

Mr. Sharp's only Letter from Breda to Mr. Douglas, in this Collection, is dated May 11. where, after he hath given him an Account of his Voyage, and that on the 8th at Night he got to Breda, where he was led to the Court by Alexander Bruce, where the Marquis of Ormond introduced him to the King, to whom he delivered his Letters, and next Morning at 9. had an Hour and an Half with the King alone in his Bed-chamber. In the Evening, the King took him to walk in the Garden, near an Hour. ' He adds, He found the King's Memory perfectly fresh as to all Things in Scotland; that he asked by Name, how it was with Mr. Douglas, Mr. Dickson, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Hutchison, and Mr. Wood; and having asked how Mr. Smith was, he said laughing, Is his broad Sword to * the fore? I answered, I knew it was taken from him, when he was made a Prisoner, but his Majesty might be perswaded Mr. Smith would be provided of one when his Service required it. The King said, He was sure of that, and of the Affections of all honest Men, to whom he bid me remember him. He further asked how Mr. Bailie was, and said, He heard Mr. Law, and Mr. Knox of Kelsø was dead, adding, That both he and the Kingdom had a Loss by their Removal. The King, adds Mr. Sharp, surpasseth all ever I heard or expected of him. I gave him an Account of my Management at London, and congratulate his Majesty in your Name, which he took very kindly. The States are to congratulate him, and it is happy he is acknowledged by so great a Protestant State: He is little obliged to France and Spain.

May 26. Mr. Sharp writes from London to Mr. Douglas, That he is returned to that Place that Day; that he came in one of the King's Frigats with the London Ministers: He gives the Particulars of the King's landing, General Monk's meeting him at Dover, and the Parliament's congratulatory Letter, and their Desire he may come to the City by Water. He adds, ' I find the sober Presbyterian Party have no Reserve but in his Majesty's Clemency, of which they have no Cause to doubt; that he received all their Letters since the 3. at London, and would take the first Opportunity to present their Letter to the King; had it come to him in Holland, he would have presented it there, where he had Opportunities to have spoken to the full as to the Matter of it. I find the King very affectionate to Scotland, and resolved not to wrong the settled Government of our Church. For settling Religion here, I apprehend they are mistaken who go about to settle the Presbyterian Government. '

Mr. Sharp's
Letter,
London,
May 26.

Mr. Douglas, by his Letter May 29. acquaints Mr. Sharp, That many of all Sorts are thronging to London. ' I trust, adds he, the King will not fall upon Scots Affairs, but remit them to the ordinary Way agreeable to the Laws of the Land. I suspect Counsel may be given to do that which may dissatisfie many, for there are many who seek their own private Good; but I am not afraid his Majesty will give way to what may be prejudicial to the Nation. Cassils, and Mr. James Dalrymple of Stair, are coming up; the first is beyond all Exception. The Protesters think to obtain somewhat by their Means, but I believe the King will not meddle with that which concerns the Kirk's Interest, but refer all to a General Assembly, which he must call for taking away those Differences. You know the publick Resolutions are for the King's Interest, and we have nothing standing as a Testimony of our Loyalty to Magistracy, but those Actings by the Commission of the Kirk, and General Assembly, in defence of our lawful Magistrate, against the Attempts made upon the Government. Those have been the Ground of our Sufferings, from the Day of his Majesty's Departure, to that of his Return. Before his Majesty do any Thing, he will let us have a favourable Hearing. We intend nothing against Mens Persons, only we desire our Proceedings may be seen to the World, and that our Integrity and Respect to lawful Magistracy may appear. It will be grievous to all honest Men here, if England miss this Occasion of settling Religion and Government. Whatever may be pretended for us, and the securing of our Government, it cannot be thought but England's Condition in Ecclesiastick Matters will have a great Influence upon this Nation, at least, the troubling our Peace. We have great Hopes his Majesty will grant in Matters of Religion, what his Parliament desires. The Strain of too many Protesters in their Preachings is, that we are in hazard of Episcopacy, and a Service-book, and press private Meetings as necessary to uphold the Power of Godliness. It is looked on strangely here, that there is never so much as an Advertisement from our Brethren in England, concerning the Estate of their Kirk, or any Desire to us to deal for the Good of it; not that we have Thoughts to go without our own Line, to meddle with the Affairs of another Kirk, though we might plead some more Interest in them than any other, by virtue of our solemn League and Covenant: If they prudently foresee, our doing any Thing in their Business might relish ill, and resolve to do for themselves. If the Lord shall keep them from the Service-book, and Prelacy, and settle Religion among them, according to the solemn League and Covenant, we have all we desire, and shall look on it as a gracious Return to our Prayers on their behalf.

De-

Mr. Sharp's
Letter,
May 29.

May 29. Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, and gives him a large Account of his going to Breda. He says, 'General Monk's Design in my going was, That I might give his Majesty an Account of all the Passages of his Undertaking, from his coming from Scotland to the Parliament's owning the King; that I might acquaint him how necessary it was to follow Moderation in his After-management; and to move the King to write to some of the City Ministers, by them to be communicate to all Presbyterians, intimating his Majesty's Design to suppress Profanity, and countenance Religion with Power. I insisted on several Things in yours to me, and was the first Minister of the Three Kingdoms, who avowedly addressed the King. I made my Address in Name of the Ministry of the Church of Scotland. I was most kindly entertained, and the King hath a great Affection for our Country and Kirk. After I had been several Times with his Majesty, and he naming a particular Time to me to wait on him for his Dispatches to England, and Letter to the City Ministers, I began to speak about Scotland, when he told me, He would reserve a full Communing about that till his coming to England. I found his Majesty most willing to restore our Kingdom to its ancient Privileges, and preserve the settled Government of our Church, in both which, I was bold expressly to move, and had a very gracious satisfying Answer. The English Ministers were much satisfied with the King's receiving of them. I kept much Company with the Ministers that came over, and returned to England with them; and by Conversation I can make a probable Conjecture of the Tendency of Matters as to Religion in England. I have much to say on this Head, which I cannot write at present; I shall only say this, That for me to press Uniformity for Discipline and Government upon the King and others, I find would be a most disgustful Employment, and successless: For though the King could be induced to be for it, it were not in his Power to effectuate it, the Two Houses of Parliament, and Body of this Nation being against it: And if I may speak what I know, and can demonstrate to you, 'tis already past remedying. I know very few or none who desire it, much less appear for for it. And whoever do report to you, or believe that there is a considerable Party in England, who have a Mind for a Covenant-uniformity, they are mistaken; and as you say in yours, May 8. if they will not press, we are free. I see no Obligation by Covenant to impose that upon them which they care not for. If you knew what I know, I am persuaded you would not be very urgent upon that Point. For my Part, I shall have no Occasion to what may cross that Uniformity, but I have no Freedom to an Employment which can have no other Effect but the heightning an Odium upon our Church, which is obnoxious already to many upon such an Account, though I know causelessly. I have heard of your Letter to Mr. Ash, who only has seen it, and Mr. Calamy and Manton. The Rumour goes in the City, I know not if Occasion be taken by that Letter, that the Ministers of Scotland have declared their Dissatisfaction that the King is brought in but upon the Terms of the Covenant. I am afraid that such Rumours are at this Time studiously raised, and I see more and more the Need of using Caution with those here who have had large Experience of Anglorum, &c. And I have Cause to think, that we shall have a Discovery of it, as much now as ever. I shall present your Letter to his Majesty, as soon as the Throng upon his coming to Whitehall is a little over.

June 2. Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas. 'Upon Thursday Night the King called me into his Closet, where I presented yours of the 8 of May to him. Having read some of it, and looked on the Subscriptions, he told me he was glad to see a Letter from your Hands; and it being late, and being to go to the House to Morrow, he would afterwards consider it, and send a Return, and deferred me to come to him Two or Three Days after, when the Throng was over. I had yours of the 10. of May, with that to the King, which is not yet delivered by the Earl of Rothes. I shall look on the Earl of Selkirk and Lord Lorn, as noble Patriots, well affected to the Interest of Religion. I shall never espouse the Interest of any Person or Party; 'tis our common Interest to keep an equal Way with all who mind the Good of Kirk and Country: And my Endeavour is to prevent Animosities, and to beget and keep Harmony. Cementing and piecing will be our Mercy, and dividing more our Reproach than we are aware of. The King hath allowed the Noblemen who are here, to meet and consult what is proper to be offered for the Good of the Nation; they meet on Munday: It is in his Heart to restore us to our Liberties and Privileges if our Folly do not mar it. Yesterday the King went to the House of Peers, passed some Bills, and emitted a Proclamation against Profaneness. There is a Day of Thanksgiving appointed in England: I wish we may give some publick Testimony of our Sense of the Mercy of the King's Return in Scotland. In the House of Peers, upon a Motion made, that the Form of Prayer appointed in the Liturgy to be used in that House, be practised, 'tis done. The Service-book is not yet set up by both Houses, but they will probably soon do it in all Churches. I shall next Week send a Copy of the Letter of the City Ministers to the King in Holland. They resent his Father's Murder, but not one Word of the Director or Confession of Faith. I gave a Hint by the Tuesday's Post, how it concerned us to use Caution, in offering to any here what may seem to be meddling or imposing; and I am every Day more and more confirmed, that it will be a Prejudice upon us, both in our Religious and Civil Rights. I was at a Meeting Yesterday at Sion College, with about Sixty Ministers, where it was very solemnly debated, Whether they should petition his Majesty and the Two Houses, that the Exercise of Religion by the Ordinance of Lords and Commons, according to the Confession of Faith, and Directory for Worship, and Form of Church-go-

' verment might be continued, until the Parliament shall provide otherwise. This,
 ' after long Debate, was referred to a Committee, to be considered of against next ' Week. There is a Conference on Munday, to be betwixt Six Presbyterians and ' Six moderate (as they call them) Episcopals; but I resolve not to be at it. From ' any Observation I can make, I find the Presbyterian Cause wholly given up and ' lost. The influencing Men of the Presbyterian Judgment are content with Epif-
 ' copacy of Bishop Usher's Model, and a Liturgy somewhat corrected, with the ' Ceremonies of Surplice, Cross in Baptism, Kneeling at the Communion, if they be ' not imposed by a Canon, sub poena aut culpa. And for the Assembly's Confession,
 ' I am afraid they will yield it to be set to the Door; and that the Articles of the ' Church of England, with some Amendments, take Place. The moderate Epif-' copalians and Presbyterians fear, that either the high Episcopal Men be upper-
 ' most, or that the Erastians carry it from both. As for those they call rigid
 ' Presbyterians, there are but few of them, and these only to be found in the Pro' vince of London, and Lancashire, who will be inconsiderable to the rest of the Na' tion. A knowing Minister told me this Day, That if a Synod should be called by ' the Plurality of Incumbents, they would infallibly carry Episcopacy. There are ' many nominal, few real Presbyterians. The Cassock Men do swarm here; and ' such who seemed before to be for Presbytery, would be content of a moderate
 ' Episcopacy. We must leave this in the Lord's Hand, who may be pleased to pre' serve to us what he hath wrought for us. I see not what Use I can be any longer
 ' here; I wish my Neck were out of the Collar. Some of our Country-men go to ' the Common Prayer. All Matters are devolved into the Hand of the King, in ' whose Power 'tis to do absolutely what he pleases in Church and State. His Heart ' is in his Hand, upon whom are our Eyes.'

Another from Mr.
 Sharp,
 June 2.

In another, dated likewise June 2. Mr. Sharp acquaints Mr. Douglas, That he had received his Note of May 26. ' As to your coming up, when I was with the ' King on Thursday Night, I moved, upon some Considerations, his Majesty might ' write for you. He answered, Pray you, let it be done; and calling upon Law-
 ' derdale, ordered him to draw a Letter for him to sign, that you might come ' up to him speedily. This Letter Lawderdale promised to have ready this Night,
 ' but it will be Munday ere he get it done. The Rumour is here, that there are ' several Ministers coming as Commissioners from Scotland and Ireland: I know ' not who hath given Occasion to it, but I apprehend it will not be seasonable at ' this Time; we would wait a little, till we see how Matters frame. I am confi' dent, if Ministers come here at this Juncture, they will be discountenanced, and ' give Suspicion of driving a disobliging Design. I find our Presbyterian Friends
 ' quite taken off their Feet; and what they talk of us, and our Help, is merely
 ' for their own Ends. They stick not to say, That, had it not been for the Vele-
 ' mency of the Scots, Mrs. Henderson, Gillespy, &c. set Forms had been conti' nued; and they were never against them. The King and Grandeess, are wholly ' for Episcopacy; the Episcopal Men are very high. I beseech you, Sir, decline ' not to come up. It will be necessary you come and speak with his Majesty, for ' preventing of Ill, and keeping our Noblemen here right. Your coming will ' certainly do much Good; and tho' I know the Temper of the Brethren, yet I ' see not what their coming will signify at this Time, and am apt to think they ' will not get Content. I have no Design in this; I speak my Heart to you, that ' you may do more alone for the Good of Kirk and Country, than they all. Few ' or no Scotsmen will be about the King in Places of Significancy. Lawderdale is ' of the Bed-chamber; he promises to keep Roths with himself. The Parlia' ment, when it meets, will make all void since 1639. and so the King will be made King (that is, absolute there as here) and dispose of Places and Offices as he pleases.
 ' made

Mr. Douglas and Mr. Smith write a Return to those Two last of Mr. Sharp's, Mr. Douglas's Return to the Two former, June: June, without the Date. 'That they are refreshed with his Majesty's safe Arrival. As to that Part of your Letter about Uniformity, we thought fit, say they, to give you this Return of our Thoughts. 1. It is not our Opinion to impose any Thing upon his Majesty; yet humbly to represent to him, that he and the Parliament may settle Religion there according to the Terms of the Covenant, we think it no Crime, yea, we count it a Duty for our own Exoneration, though it should not prove successful: And if it be held a Crime to make known to his Majesty so innocent a Desire, it may be feared, that the keeping of it here may come under the same Account. 2. We cannot be induced to believe that it were unfeasible if his Majesty would be pleased to intimate his Royal Inclinations thereunto; but we conceive it would find Acceptance, when we remember, that the Reviving of the League and Covenant by the Ordinance, after the restoring the secluded Members, was acceptable and refreshing. 3. The Question is not, Whether there be many or few for it? but, Whether it be our Duty, whereto we are obliged by the Oath of God, in such an Opportunity, when Settlement of Religion is intended, humbly to desire, that it may be done according to the Terms of the Covenant? And though, if they slight the Matter, we cannot impose it upon them, yet, for our own Exoneration before God and Men, we are obliged to desire it. 4. We cannot but be affected with Grief to consider, that it should heighten an Odium upon our Kirk, to desire that Ministers may carefully endeavour, by their humble Addresses to his Majesty and Parliament, to prevent the Reintroduction of those once rejected Reliques, Episcopacy and the Liturgy, which have bred so much Trouble and Persecution to the faithful Ministers and Professors of the Gospel there, and have had such a bad Influence upon this Kirk. 5. Our Letter to some Brethren there, is so innocent, that we are not afraid of the Judgment of sober Men, though it were printed; and for any Misrepresentation that hath been raised, whether upon it, or otherwise, it is a mere Calumny: For we were, and are, and could not but be well satisfied with his Majesty's Restitution to his Kingdoms, for which we so heartily prayed, and so seriously longed. Nor can it be interpreted Dissatisfaction with his Majesty's Restitution, that, when he is restored, we humbly represent to his Majesty our Desires for settling of Religion according to the Terms of the Covenant. There is just Ground of Suspicion, that such Reports are raised by some of our own Countrymen there, who are Enemies to the Reformation established, and labour the abolishing of the Covenant of the Three Nations. Dear Brother, we have writ these Things to you, for your Information, and Encouragement against those discouraging Rencounters you meet with, in this Juncture, from Men that are either downright Enemies to the Reformation of Religion, or are but Friends of Gallio's Temper. Yours of the 2. of June holds forth, that there is a great Defection there, from the Grounds of the League and Covenant; which continued in, cannot but highly provoke the Lord.'

By this plain and full Letter of Mr. Douglas and Mr. Smith, we may see how Remarkably they deal with Mr. Sharp, how fixed they stand to the Principles and Profession of the Church of Scotland; and the Reader cannot but regret, that they had such a Person to correspond with, as this Betrayer of the Church of Scotland. Whether Mr. Douglas's Jealousies of him by this Time were fully formed, I know not; but a great deal of Plainness is used with him; and, had he followed those Instructions and Principles laid down in this Letter, and formerly, I doubt not but much much more might have been done for the Work of Reformation at this Time. However, these worthy Persons did lay the Matter candidly before him, whom they had unhappily confided in as their Commissioner; and what could they do more in the present Circumstances? Other Letters were sent, much to the same Purpose.

Accordingly, June 7. Mrs. Dickson, Douglas, Hamilton, Smith, and Hutchison, send a joynt Letter to Mr. Sharp, in which they say, 'That, upon the Occasion of the late wonderful and comfortable Revolution, we held it our Duty, upon the account of our solemn Engagement to God, and our brotherly Affection, and our Respect to the Quiet of the established Interests of this Church, to express the Thoughts of our Heart to some of the reverend Ministers of London, for our Exoneration, resolving to intermeddle no further in the Affairs of others, save to express our humble Opinion. But having learned by your last, of your being present at the Meeting in Ston College, and other Conferences of our reverend Brethren; as we do thankfully acknowledge the Respects hereby put upon you, so we have appointed, that your being at these Consultations may, through the Lord's Blessing, not prove unprofitable for the Good of the common Interest of Religion, which, we know, is most dear to all honest Men: And therefore we hope and desire, that (as you have Opportunity to express your Judgment before these reverend and worthy Men) you will not omit to acquaint them, how much it lieth on the Hearts of all good Men here, that God may lead them forth to a right Improvement of this Opportunity, after which many, who now sleep in the Lord, did so much thirst and long. We suppose it is not a desperate Work, humbly to deal with his Majesty (who is so excellent and moderate a Prince) for the preventing of Episcopacy and the Liturgy, which by Experience they have found so bitter and prejudicial to themselves and many others in England, and which, if they once be established, may very speedily revive the Complaints of godly Men. And we hope, that the great Pains of the learned Assembly of Divines (so heartily and unanimously approved in this Church, and so much owned in England) will not be so easily lost; but that godly honest Men will endeavour what they can to have those good Beginnings entertained, and yet further advanced, as Need requires. The Condition of the Times does necessitate us again to apologize for what we thus write unto you; if we could satisfie our own Consciences, and approve our selves to God, and Posterity, who will reap the Fruit of our Improvement of this Opportunity, we are so far from any pragmatical Humour, that we could with much Ease to our selves sit down in Silence, as if no such Matters were in Agitation about us: But, apprehending that your being on the Place in this Juncture, and it being known that you are owned in your Employment there by the Body of the Ministry of this Church, we conceive, that it may be looked upon as if we were satisfied with any Proceedings prejudicial to our former Engagements, unless you express our Sense of Affairs as you have Occasion, with that Prudence, Respect and Discretion that becometh; whereof we hope you will be careful, so long as you stay there.'

Their Letter to him,
June 9.

The prudent, and yet zealous Concern of those faithful Watchmen, the reverend Ministers of Edinburgh, at this Juncture, appears yet further by their Letter next Post, signed by the last named Persons, to Mr. Sharp, of the Date June 9. which likewise deserves to be transcribed here, and follows. 'By our last to you of the 7th Instant, we acquainted you, That however the Conscience of our Obligation by Covenant, and our Sense of the Hazards to which this Church hath been exposed by the former Settlement of England, do put us on earnestly to desire an acceptable Settlement there; yet Fear of Offence hath perswaded us to ' move

‘ move no further in that Business (after our Exoneration by Letter to some there) ‘ then to desire you so to walk in it, as might not conclude us, by reason of our ‘ Silence, in an Approbation of what may be established there contrary to our Co‘ venant. Yet, amongst our Solicitudes, we cannot apprehend that we will offend ‘ any, if we humbly lay before his Majesty our Thoughts of those Affairs; and ‘ therefore have sent you an inclosed Paper, containing the Sum of our Thoughts, ‘ and Motives inducing us to use that humble Freedom; whereof (and of what ‘ else may occur to your self to the same Purpose) we seriously intreat you to make ‘ prudent Use, in laying the Particulars therein contained before his Majesty. He ‘ is gifted to his People in return of their Prayers, and their Expectations are fix‘ ed on him, as the Man of God’s right Hand, who will refresh the Hearts of all
 ‘ the Lovers of Zion; and honest People (whatever be represented to their Fears)
 ‘ can never be perswaded but his Majesty will perform all Things according to the ‘ Covenant. His Majesty hath been pleased so much to respect faithful and honest ‘ Men in their humble Freedom, that we will not doubt of his Acceptance of this ‘ Mite from your and our Hand, which floweth from much real Zeal for his Ma-‘ jesty’s Happiness, and without which we could not be satisfied we had dealt faith‘ fully. Be strong in the Lord, and wait for him who hath done great Things
 ‘ for us, whereof we are glad, and hath hereby encouraged us to wait for Mercy
 ‘ to his Zion. To his Grace we commend you, and are, &c.’

The Paper sent along with this Letter, is intituled, Some few Particulars Particulars which Mr. Sharp is desired humbly to propound to the King’s Majesty by Conference, to be pro-at fit Opportunities; and ’tis a little too large to be insert here; therefore I pounded to have put it in the Appendix, No. 8. and go on in my Abstract of this remarkable the King.
 Correspondence. App.No. 8.

June 5. Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, That he had his of the 29. of May; Mr. Sharp’s that the Scotsmen at London had concurred in a Paper, containing their De- Letter, fires to his Majesty as to Scotland, which was that Week to be presented. He hath June 5.
 not yet had Opportunity to speak to the King: That he reads that Day in the News Paper, That Mr. Douglas and Mr. Dickson are repairing to London, and wishes it may hold, and designs to move to the King, that some Brethren best known to his Majesty may be sent for. He does not perceive the Ministers at London design to give them any Advertisement concerning the State of the Church:
 And adds, ‘ I pray the Lord keep them from the Service-book and Prelacy. If the ‘ King should be determined in Matters of Religion by the Advice of the Two ‘ Houses, ’tis feared that covenanted Engagements shall not be much regarded.
 ‘ All sober Men depend more upon the King’s Moderation and Condescensions, ‘ than what can be expected from others. The Episcopalians drive so furiously,
 ‘ that all Lovers of Religion are awakened to look about them, and to endeavour
 ‘ the Stemming of that feared Impetuosity of these Men: All that is hoped is to ‘ bring them to some Moderation and Closure with an Episcopacy of a new Make.
 ‘ You may easily judge how little any Endeavour of mine can signify to the pre‘ venting of this Evil; and therefore, how desirous I am to be taken off, and re‘ turned to my Charge. I am still full of Fears, that England shall lose this Op‘ portunity of settling Religion. It is broadly rumoured in the City and at Court, ‘ That Scotland are all in Arms for the Covenant: This is a Pretext made to ‘ keep us under Force. There is Talk of a Petition from the City in refe‘ rence to the Covenant, and that we from Scotland are the Promoters of it; but ‘ I apprehend that it will come to nothing. However, the high Carriage of the ‘ Episcopal Men gives great Dissatisfaction: The Lord may permit them thus ‘ to lift up themselves, that thereby they may meet with a more effectual Check.

‘ Bishop

Bishop Wren preached last Sabbath in his Lawn Sleeves at Whitehall. Mr. Calamy and Dr. Reynolds are named Chaplains to his Majesty I hear Mr. Leighton is here in Town in private.

Mr. Douglas's Letter, June 12.

Mr. Douglas, June 12. answers the former, and tells Mr. Sharp, There was never an Intention of Mr. Dickson and his coming to London. If, says he, our Brethren, after what we have writ to them and you, lay not to Heart the Reformation of their Kirk, we are exoner'd, and must regret their Archness (Backwardness) to improve such an Opportunity, and be grieved for the Relapse into the sickly Condition, and grievous Bondage of the Hierarchy and Ceremonies. If the Presbyterians would deal effectually with those concerned, making use of the Advantages of a good Cause far advanced in the former Parliament, the Covenant Engagements, the gracious Disposition, and Moderation of the King, and of the high and furious Drivings of the Episcopalians, they might by the Blessing of God, be in a far better Condition, than 'tis probable they shall be, considering their Neglect. That Scotland is in Arms for the Covenant, is a broad Lie, when broadly rumoured; if such Pretences be forged for keeping an Army on us (and they are daily coming with more Forces) it will be a Sin against God, and a Dishonour to his Majesty. But we are perswaded, his Majesty will defend us, and our ancient Privileges. 'Tis much to be lamented, that such Men as Wren, whose corrupt Principles, and wicked Practices, in persecuting conscientious Ministers, though conform, are too well known to be so soon forgotten, should have the Impudence to appear in Publick, with these Babylonish Brats. The excommunicate Sydeserf, pretended Bishop of Galloway, and Mr. James Atkin, a deposed Minister, and excommunicate, took Journey hence on Friday last, for London, perswading themselves, that Prelacy will come again in Fashion here; but I hope they shall never see that Day, or rather Eclipse of our Day. I doubt not but you'll carefully guard against all that is intended to the Prejudice of the established Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government of this Kirk.

Mr. Sharp's Letter, June 9.

June 9. Mr. Sharp, in his to Mr. Douglas, signifies, That he has little pleasing Matter to write of: That he is pleased with my Lord Cassils's coming up; he fears we have not many like him to look to. My Lord Lowdon is not yet come up. That he himself endeavours not to mingle in their particular Interests and Differences, but presses Union. There are none, adds he, here, but disclaim the Protesters: That he visited the Earl of Selkirk, Lord Lorn, and Tweeddale, who professeth his abandoning the Protesters: That Twenty eight Scots Noblemen, and some Gentlemen, had presented a Petition to the King, for withdrawing the Forces, and calling a Parliament; the King received it graciously. It is thought, the Committee of Estates will first meet, in order to the calling a Parliament. The French Ambassador is commanded forthwith to remove. Those who are Incumbents in sequestrate Livings are left to the Course of Law, whereby above a * Thousand in the Country and Universities will be ejected. I can (says he) do no good here for the stemming of the Current for Prelacy, and long to be home: Whatever Dissatisfaction may be upon good People, yet no considerable Opposition will be made to Prelacy. I hope, the Lord will see to the Preservation of his Interests among us. I gave some Hints formerly about this, and, by what yet appeareth, I see no Ground to alter my Thoughts, that our meddling with Affairs now will be useless, and of no Advantage to our Cause. The sad Apprehensions I have of what I find and see as to these Matters, bring me into a languishing Desire to retire home, and look to God, from whom our Help alone can come. I hope, you will consider of what is fit to be done. If you see Cause of Application in this critical Juncture, you'll take me off, after my long continued Toil.'

Mr. Douglas answers this last, June 14. and signifies to Mr. Sharp, He wishes all were as fixed as Cassils. 'You may, adds he, let the Protesters sleep, for they are not to be feared; they are to be pitied rather than envied. Concerning Pre-lacy, we have delivered our Mind fully in former Letters; and when we have exposed our selves, we must leave that Business on the Lord, who will root out that stinking Weed in his own Time, whatever Pains Men take to plant it, and make it grow. We expect, at your Conveniency, you will give us an Account of what Letters and Papers you have received since your Return to London; after which, we shall give you an Answer about your abiding there, or coming home.'

In another Letter without Date, but, by a Passage in it, I conjecture 'tis writ June 10. Mr. Sharp tells Mr. Douglas, 'I now begin to fear the long contended for Cause is given up. Three Months ago, some here were pressing upon the Presbyterian Party, both in the House and City, to make themselves considerable by Conjunction of Counsels, and pursuing in an united way the same End and Interest: This could not be compassed. Then the dissolving of the secluded Members (which some attribute to some of themselves, others to General Monk, I know both had a Hand in it) and Jealousies mutual between Army and Parliament, made way for the King's coming in without Conditions; whereupon the Episcopal Party have taken the Advantage: And they finding now, that the influencing Men of the Presbyterian Party are content to yield to a moderate Episcopacy, and a reform'd Liturgy, craving only that Ceremonies be not imposed by Canon, do shift all Offers for Accommodation, and do resolve to set up their Way, and, under pretext of fixing and conforming all to their Rule, for avoiding of Disorder and Schism (as they say) give Cause to apprehend, that Matters Ecclesiastick in England will be reduced to their former State. This does exceedingly saden and perplex the Hearts of sober good People, and Episcopal Men carry as if they concluded nothing could stand in their Way. There were, last Week and this, some Endeavours for getting a Petition in Name of the City, That Religion might be settled according to the League and Covenant; but the inconsiderate and not right timing of that Motion, has exceedingly prejudged that Business, if not totally crushed the Design, so as it occasioned a cross Petition by the most considerable of the City, That in all Petitions hereafter there might be nothing mentioned which had a Relation to the League and Covenant, and that nothing should be moved of this Nature to the common Council, till their Meeting be full. It hath been generally bruited here, and had Belief with some, that the Petition for settling Religion according to the Covenant, was set on Foot and influenced by the Scots, and Commissioners were coming from the Church: They name, in the Diurnals, Mr. Douglas and Mr. Dickson, with a Gybe. This was so openly spoke of, that, in their Meeting at the common Council, it was moved by one, that they might put off their Petition till the Scots Commissioners came to Town, they being upon the Way; and currently it was talked of in and about the City, and I enquired by divers, If I knew any Thing of it? I apprehend, this Rumour has been industriously raised and spread by some, to cast the greater Prejudice upon us, who will have it still believed that we are Sticklers to inflame all, and will not rest till we have our Presbytery imposed upon England (this is their Strain) and therefore it will be necessary for the King to keep on a Force upon us. I have done what I could for vindicating us from giving any Ground to that malicious Report, professing, That whatever the Judgment of the Church of Scotland might be as to these Matters (which is sufficiently known) yet we had no Hand or Meddling in that Petition: For my own Part, I knew nothing of it till the Morrow after it was framed (as indeed I heard not of it till the Munday, when the Talk was, that it was to be presented to the House) neither had I heard of any Commissioners coming from the Church. I said further, That from the Northern Counties, and other Places, there had been Endeavours used to draw Petitions for the settling of Presbyterian Government; and this hath been by an underhand Way set on Foot, by some of the House of Commons, giving this Encouragement, That the Church of Scotland would joyn with them. But the crushing of the City-petition will render all these Motions ineffectual, and, I fear, give Advantage and Ground to the Episcopal Party, who now make it their Work to put off the Meeting of a Synod, which hitherto hath been in the Talk of all, seeking to settle their Way before a Synod can be called. I see generally the Cassock Men appearing every where boldly, the Liturgy in many Places setting up. The Service in the Chapel at Whitehall is to be set up, with Organs and Quiristers, as formerly. No Remedy for this can be expected from the Parliament, who, for the Majority, are ready to set up Episcopacy to the Height in Matters Ecclesiastical; and with the rest moderate Episcopacy will go down. The sober Party have no Reserve but in the King, whose Inclinations lead him to Moderation; God bless him, and prevent the sad Consequences which may come upon this Way.

Judg-

Our Noblemen, and others here, keep yet in a fair Way of seeming Accord; but I find a high loose Spirit appearing in some of them, and I hear they talk of bringing in Episcopacy into Scotland; which, I trust, they shall never be able to effect. I am much sadned and wearied out with what I hear and see. Some leading Presbyterians tell me, They must resolve to close in with what they call moderate Episcopacy, else open Profanity will upon the one Hand overwhelm them, or Erastianism (which may be the Design of some Statesmen) on the other. I am often thinking of coming away; for my Stay here, I see, is to little Purpose. I clearly see the General will not stand by the Presbyterians. Mr. Calamy is at a Stand whether to accept of being King's Chaplain, and I think it will not be much pressed upon him. The King has taken into his Council divers who were upon the Parliament's Side, but none of them are against moderate Episcopacy. The General took me to his Majesty on Thursday last; but the Throng is so great, I could have no Opportunity for private Communication.

As to your coming up, tho' upon my Motion, upon Thursday was Se'en-night, that you should be sent for, the King did most willingly yield to it, and desired a Letter might be drawn to that Purpose by Lawderdale; yet I am tossed in my Thoughts about it since, which I have communicated to Crawford and Lawderdale; and they are at a Stand in it. Upon the one Hand, I consider your coming might be of great Use to the Church and Country at this Time; his Majesty, bearing a great Respect to you, would certainly be much swayed with your Advice: Upon the other Hand, when I weigh how much the Prelatical Men do here signify, and what a jealous Eye they will have upon you and your Carriage, bearing no good Will, I perceive, to you, and the publick Affairs not yet put in a Way of Consistency; I fear, your coming at this Time, which will be attended with Charge and Toil, may give you small Content, when you will find that you can have but little Time with the King, and 'tis not your Way to deal with any Body else; so that in Ten Days you will weary. When Matters come to a greater Ripeness, Two or Three Months hence, your coming may be of more Use and Satisfaction to your self, and Advantage to the Publick. I know the King will not be desirous as yet to send for any other of the Brethren. And if I thought you would come hither before the Instructions for the King's Commissioner to the Parliament were drawn, you might do much good; else, I know a little of your Way, and am so tender of your Content, that I fear it will not be so convenient. However, I have put all off till I speak with the King, and know his Mind fully in it. If I find him positive in his Desire of your coming, immediately you shall have notice; if not, I shall give you an Account accordingly. Pardon my writing thus confusedly my Heart unto you. Your coming at this Time can do no good, I am perswaded, to the Presbyterian Interest here, but you will expose your self and our Government at Home to more Jealousies and sinister Construction; and for our Church-government I trust it shall be preserved in spite of Opposition, and I would have you reserved from Inconveniencies on all Hands, that you may be in better Capacity to act for it. As for my self, I see that here which gives me small Content, and were you here, I believe you would have less; and therefore I intreat I may have Leave speedily to return. I know you are not capable of being tickled with a Desire of seeing the Grandeur of a Court, and you would soon tire were you here; and the Toil and Charge of coming hither, and returning in so short a Time (it being necessary you be at home against the Sitting of the Parliament) will be, in my Apprehension, much more than any Good can be done at this Time. The Protesters Interest cannot be kept up, and I apprehend the Parliament will handle them but too severely. The Design is to overturn all since the Year 1640. and to make the King absolute. Elisha Lighton is not so significant a Person as that by his Means his Brother can do us hurt.

June 12. Mr. Sharp answers Mr. Douglas his Letter of the 5. and tells him, That since a Thanksgiving is ordered in England, they will consider what is to be done in Scotland; that he has not yet got any Return from the King to their Letter, he is so throng. That Two Days ago my Lord Rothes told him, he was taking an Opportunity to deliver that Letter sent by him. That the Ministers of London will make a Return to that Letter sent them. That Letter, adds he, may be owned, and contains only a Testimony of your Affection to this Church; I wish they may repay the like to you. What Use they will make of it, he knows not. He adds, 'For my Part, whatever Constructions may be put on my Way here, I have a Testimony that my Endeavours have not been wanting for promoting the Presbyterian Interest according to the Covenant. I cannot say they have been significant, as Matters are now stated. There are few Ministers of the Presbyterian Perswasion of any Note here, to whom I have not communicated your Readiness to concur in your Sphere, for advancing the Ends of the Covenant; and upon several Occasions both here, and in Holland, I have acted with them in order thereunto. I have spoke also with some of another Judgment, and given them an Account of our Principles and Way, to evidence we are not Persons of that surly Temper, nor our Profession so inconsistent with Magistracy and Peace, as hath been represented. Possibly thereby I have not avoided that Fate which is incident to Men of such Employment, in this ticklish Time; and therefore must prepare for a Lash from both Hands. But I am the less solicitous what Usage I meet with, that I am assured my Ends have been straight, and if I have failed in any Mean, it hath been through Mistake, and not any dishonest Purpose: I leave my Reputation to the Lord. It is my Duty to acquaint you, from Time to Time, with the Condition of Affairs, as they relate to our Cause, and, according to my Apprehensions, to give you my Collections from them. Others may be of another Opinion, but

Letter,
June 12.

‘ I am still of the Mind, that our interposing in their Matters here, further than ‘ we have done, will not bring any Advantage to our Cause, nor further those Ends
 ‘ we think our selves obliged to pursue at this Time. I have not yet come to know ‘ his Majesty’s Resolution, for sending for some of the Ministers of Scotland;
 ‘ But for what I can learn, it is not his Purpose to do it till his Affairs here take ‘ some Settlement. He was pleased last Week to say to me before General Monk,
 ‘ That he would preserve our Religion, as it was settled in Scotland, entirely to ‘ us. My Stay here will be of no Use upon many Accounts; ’tis most necessary
 ‘ I come Home, and speak with you before Resolution be taken what is incumbent ‘ to be done by you. I am not edified by the Speeches and Carriage of divers of ‘ our Countrymen in reference to the Covenant and Ministry, when they are ‘ come up here. I have small Hopes the Garisons in Scotland will be removed,
 ‘ the Lord’s Controversy is not yet at an End with us.’

Mr. Dougglas’s Letter,
 June 19.

Mr. Douglas answers this in his to Mr. Sharp, June 19. and says, That before they heard of the Thanksgiving in England, they had appointed the Day he writes upon, as a Day of Thanksgiving for the King’s Return, in the Presbytery of Edinburgh, and wrote of their Appointment to other Presbyteries, who, he hears, are to keep the same Day. He adds, ‘ I suspect the King’s Coronation is delay‘ ed upon a Prelatick Interest. I wish the King were crowned before any Thing
 ‘ of that Nature be concluded upon, that his Majesty may not run to a contrary ‘ Oath; my Heart trembles to apprehend any Thing of that Kind. It were a ‘ happy Thing to have Religion settled upon Covenant Terms, that Prelacy, so ‘ solemnly cast out, may not creep in again under pretext of a moderate Episco‘ pacy. This will be found a playing with the Oath of God, seeing moderate ‘ Episcopacy, as they call it, is unlawful, and a Step to the highest of Episcopacy.
 ‘ Ministers there need not deceive themselves, by thinking that it will stand there ‘ without the Ceremonies, that is impossible; and ’tis a received Maxim, No Cere- ‘ mony no Bishop, they having nothing to uphold their Pomp, but the Ceremo‘ nies. You know I am against Episcopacy, Root and Branch. I wish the King
 ‘ would put that Business off himself, upon the Parliament and Synod of Divines;
 ‘ and if they will have that moderate Episcopacy, let it be a Deed of their own, ‘ without Approbation by his Majesty. I fear our gracious Prince meet with too ‘ many Temptations from the Generality of that People, who love Prelacy, and
 ‘ the Service-book. I pray he may be kept from doing that which may offend ‘ God, who has delivered him.

Mr. Sharp’s
 Letter,
 June 14.

June 14. Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas. ‘ This Day the King called for ‘ me, and heard me speak upon our Church-matters, which I perceive he does ‘ thoroughly understand, and remembred all the Passages of the Publick Resoluti- ‘ ons. He was pleased again to profess, that he was resolved to preserve to us the ‘ Discipline and Government of our Church, as it is settled among us. When I ‘ spoke of calling a General Assembly, he said he would call one how soon he ‘ could; but he thought the Parliament would be called and sit first. I found the ‘ end of his Majesty’s calling for me, was to give me Notice, that he thought ‘ it not convenient to send for Ministers from Scotland at present: When his ‘ Affairs were here brought to some Settlement, he would then have Time and ‘ Freedom to speak with them, and to send for them to come to him. He thought ‘ it was fit for me to go down and give you notice of this, and the State of his ‘ Affairs here, and that he would write by me to you; and called to one of his ‘ Bed-chamber to seek for your Letter, which I delivered, saying, It would be ‘ found in one of his Pockets, and a Return should be sent, and my Dispatch ‘ prepared this next Week. I find his Majesty speaking of us and our Concern-

ments

ments most affectionately. There hath been some Talk in the City of a Petition from the Ministers about Religion, but some leading Men not thinking it expedient, it was waved. Mr. Calamy, Mr. Manton, and Dr. Reynolds are sworn Chaplains: Some say Mr. Baxter is to be admitted likewise, and when it is their Course to officiate, they are not tied to the Liturgy, but, others having performed that Service, they shall only preach till they be clear to use it. The King hath ordered a Letter to Dr. Reynolds and Mr. Calamy, ordering them to nominate Ten to themselves, of their Judgment, to meet in a Conference with Twelve of the Episcopal Party whom he will nominate.

Mrs. Dickson, Douglas, Wood, Hamilton, Smith, and A. Ker write to Mr. Ministers at Edinburgh their joynt Letter to Mr. Sharp, June 21. That since the King desires he should come down, they are willing he come. They are confident he will refresh them with the Tidings of his Majesty's constant Purpose, to preserve to them their Liberties and Privileges, so solemnly engaged to, and advantageous to his Majesty's Greatness, and Government. They profess they never intended, nor do intend to press Presbyterian Government on other Kirks, otherwise than by laying before them the Warrantableness thereof from God's Word, and the Efficaciousness of it, being God's Ordinance, by his Blessing to suppress Errors and Profaneness. And particularly, they thought it incumbent on them to lay before their Brethren their Duty, to endeavour by Addresses to King and Parliament, that the Sin of a Party, who laid aside the Covenant, may not now be made the Sin of the Nation. Since the Lord, in his gracious and wise Providence, has restored the King's Majesty and Parliament to their just Rights and Privileges, so notoriously and wickedly wronged against the express Obligation of the Third Article of the Covenant; they wish, and it may be in Equity expected, that the Rights of God and of Religion, unto which there is an Obligation in the other Articles, should be established; that what is God's may be given unto him, as what is Cesar's is and ought to be given to him: That their Tenderness to his Majesty makes them desire that he may be kept free from giving his Royal Approbation to Prelacy and the Service-Book, and may rather lay the whole Matter upon a Synod of Divines, who, by peaceable Debates, may come to resolve upon that which is most agreeable to the Word of God, and upon his Parliament, who may come to further Clearness upon the Result of their Debates.

Mr. Sharp June 16. acquaints Mr. Douglas, he had received by that Post Mr. Sharp's Letter, June 16. One of the 7. and Two of the 9. with the inclosed Paper, which, adds he, contains Matters of such ample and important Consequences, as will take longer Time to manage, than I have in this Place, and give Work for employing more than One or Two: Considering the King's present Throng, I would take Three or Four Months to propose them in a Way effectual, or becoming the Grandeur of so great a Prince. These are Materials, I hope, will be laid up for more solemn Addresses. I have a Testimony, that I have not been wanting to improve any Opportunity I had during these Transactions for the Interest of our Country and the Covenant. This will bear me up under the Constraints my Employment at such a ticklish Juncture lays me open to. I trust when I return to make it appear, I have pursued the publick Ends of Religion, as far as the Condition of Affairs would bear; and I have been biassed by no selfish Ends. If Informations you have received about the State of Affairs here, have come from better Grounds than what I have given, I shall not justify my Mistake; but for any Observation I can make, I profess it still to be my Opinion, that I know no considerable Number, and no Party in England that will join with you for settling Presbyterian Government, and pursuing the Ends of the the Covenant. And albeit I am perswaded, that our Engagements are to be religiously observed; and of all Concernments, that of Religion ought to be secured, yet, with all Submission and Reverence to your Judgments, I am not satisfied, that 'tis incumbent to me (as the present State of Affairs is circumstanced) to press further than I have done the Matter of the Coronation Oath in Scotland, and settling of Presbyterian Government upon this Nation, which I know will not bear it on many Accounts. And, under Correction, I apprehend our doing of that which may favour of meddling or interposing in those Matters here, will exceedingly prejudice us, both as to our Civil Liberty, and Settlement of Religion. It is obvious, how much the Manner of settling Religion here, may influence the disturbing and endangering of our Establishment: Yet Providence having concluded us under a moral Impossibility of preventing this Evil; if, upon a remote Fear of Hazard to our religious Interests, we shall do that which will provoke and exasperate those who wait for an Opportunity of a Pretext to overturn what the LORD hath built among us, who knows what sad Effects it may have? The present Posture of Affairs looks like a Ship foundered with the Waves from all Corners, so that 'tis not known what Course will be steered: But discerning Men see, that the Gale is like to blow for the Prelatick Party; and those who are sober will yield to a Liturgy, and moderate Episcopacy, which they phrase to be effectual Presbytery; and, by this Salvo, they think they guard against Breach of Covenant. I know this Purpose is not pleasing to you, neither to me. I shall, if I find Opportunity before my coming away, acquaint his Majesty with as many of your Desires, as Conveniency will allow. I shall also make them known to such Ministers as I meet with; and at present, till a Door be opened for a more effectual Way, this will be a Testimony, that you are not involved in an Approbation of what may pass here in Prejudice of the Covenant. Parliament Men know that I have often spoke to them of our firm Adherence to the Covenant; and if any of them would excuse their not taking Notice of it, by our not clamouring by Papers to the House about it, I am doubtful they think what they speak: But more of this upon my Return, which I so much desire, when I have so much Dissatisfaction with the Course of Affairs here. The King speaks to our Countrymen about the Affairs of Scotland on Munday next: I wish we were all soon Home, for little Good is either gotten or done here. The LORD fit us for future Trials, and establish us in his Way.

Mr. Sharp's
Letter,
June 19.

June 19. Mr. Sharp writes again to Mr. Douglas, acquainting him, ' That he had his of the 12. and had little to add: That he had been with some City Ministers, and Mr. Gower of Dorchester an eminent Presbyterian Minister, who speaks with Regret of the Neglect of the Covenant; but, says he, I see no effectual Way taken to help this; your Exoneration is sufficiently known to them, and I wish I could write you had any Encouragement from them to go further. I see little the Presbyterians can, or intend to do for the promoting that Interest. The surest Friends to our Religion and Liberty of our Countrymen, since they came here, are of Opinion, that your further interposing can do no Good, but will probably bring Hazard to the Settlement among us. I hope this Week to have his Majesty's Letter signifying his Resolution to preserve the established Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government of our Kirk, and that we shall have a General Assembly; and then I shall come Home with your Leave. If we knew how little our Interests are regarded by the most Part here, we would not much concern our selves in theirs. If we cannot prevent the Course taken here, we are to trust GOD with the Prefer-

‘ vation of what he hath wrought for us. Yesterday his Majesty gave Audience
 ‘ to the Commissioners from Ireland, who, among other Desires, moved, that Re‘ ligion might be settled there, as it was in the Days of the King’s Grandfather ‘ and Father, that Establishment being the only Fence against Schism and Con‘ fusion. From this we may guess what our Presbyterian Brethren may meet with.
 ‘ In the Evening our Lords attended the King, and General Monk was present.
 ‘ Crawford and Lawderdale spoke so before the King for the removing Garisons, ‘ that the General could not answer them. At the end the King desired they ‘ would consult among themselves, and give their Advice about calling a Par‘ liament, and till then, how the Government of the Kingdom was to be settled.
 ‘ This Day they met frequently, and, after some Debates, not without Heat and ‘ Reflections, it was referred to a Committee of Twelve to draw up a Petition to ‘ his Majesty, That the Government might be managed by his Majesty, and the ‘ Committee of Estates nominated by the Parliament at Stirling, until the sitting ‘ of the Parliament, which, they thought, might be called by Proclamation le‘ gally; and they humbly desired that all the Forces might be withdrawn, and,
 ‘ if it seem good to his Majesty, he might, in the place of the English Garisons, ‘ put in Scottish. This Paper in a Day or Two they are to present. By the Tem‘ per that appeared in the Generality of this Meeting, I know not what may be ex‘ pected by us; the Lord fit us for the Trials that abide us. Mrs. Gillespie is ‘ come up to petition the King for the Continuance of her Husband’s Place, and ‘ he is thought not to be far off.’

June 21. Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, That his of the 14. was come to Mr. Sharp’s him: ‘ That the Course of Prelacy is carrying on without any Opposition; so that Letter, ‘ they who were for the Moderation thereof, apprehend they have lost their Game, June 21:
 ‘ No Man knows what this Overdriving will come to. The Parliament complain
 ‘ of his Majesty’s Moderation, and that he does not press the settling all sicut ante.
 ‘ God only knows what Temptations and Trials are abiding us. I have made ‘ such Use of your Papers as is possible. You stand exonerated as to any Compliance ‘ with the Times, or betraying the common Cause by your Silence, in the Judg‘ ment of all to whom I have communicate what you have ordered me to do. Our ‘ Task is to wait upon God, who hath done great Things we looked not for,
 ‘ and can make those Mountains Plains.’

June 23. he writes to Mr. Douglas, ‘ All is wrong here as to Church-affairs. E- Mr. Sharp’s ‘ piscopacy will be settled here to the Height; their Lands will be all restored: Letter
 ‘ None of the Presbyterian Way here oppose this, or do any Thing but mourn June 23:
 ‘ in secret. We know not the Temper of this People, to have any Thing to do ‘ with them. All the Bishops in Ireland are nominate. Dr. Bramble is Archbi‘ shop of Armagh: And they are to sit down next Session of Parliament. I am ‘ divers Times with Cassils and Lorn, who are fixed to us. I suspect, the general ‘ Bent of our Countrymen carries them to Erastianism among us. I hear, your ‘ Pulpits ring against the Course of Affairs here, and your Sermons are observed ‘ particularly. All Persons in England, who have acted in the publick Contests ‘ since the 1646. are like to suffer one way or other; and this will cast a Copy to ‘ the Proceedings in Scotland. I find some very eager to prosecute such at the next ‘ Meeting of the Committee of Estates or Parliament.’

June 26. Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, That he had received his of the 19. Mr. Sharp’s
 ‘ That the King’s Coronation is thought to be delayed, upon the Reason he spoke Letter,
 ‘ of. Dr. Gauden hath written against the Covenant. Petitions come up from Coun- June 26:
 ‘ ties, for Episcopacy and Liturgy. The Lord’s Anger is not turned away. The Ge-‘ nerality of the People are doting after Prelacy and the Service-book. Dr. Crofts, ‘ preaching

‘ preaching before the King last Sabbath, said, That for the Guilt he had contracted in Scotland, and the Injuries he was brought to do against the Church of England, GOD had defeated him at Worcester, and pursued his Controversy with a Nine Years Exile; and yet he would further pursue him, if he did close with his Enemies, meaning those of the Presbyterian Perswasion who are of the Privy-council. The King expressed his Dislike after Sermon, calling him a passionate Preacher. The Episcopal Party take all Methods to strengthen themselves: They have reprinted Mr. Jenkins’s Petition in the Tower, and Recantation Sermon. Some Ministers of the City tell me, they are endeavouring to promote a Petition, that Religion may be settled with Moderation; yet, for avoiding Offence, they will not take notice of the Covenant, or Presbyterian Government.’

Another of the same Date.

By another Letter, of the same Date, Mr. Sharp tells Mr. Douglas, ‘ That he had seen a Paper of Sir John Chiesly’s, in his Vindication, wherein he declares, ‘ That by the Remonstrance they intended not to exclude the King, but proposed, if they had carried the Victory at Hamilton, to have joyned him: In it Sir John insists upon his not complying with the English, and refusing Offices under them. Lawderdale and Cassils are both convinced we ought not to meddle with the Affairs of England. We thought best to put off the speaking to the King of a General Assembly, till he signify his Pleasure about calling a Parliament. Some of our Noblemen here are against the Covenant and a General Assembly, Men of no Principle railing against the Ministry; but the leading sober Men are for both; only they differ about the Time of calling the Assembly: If it should be before the Parliament, it would have no Authority; and they fear you would be too tender of the Remonstrators, for they are resolved to take Order with the Remonstrance at the Parliament. Some think the Assembly might sit before the Parliament, but most are for its sitting afterwards. In the King’s Declaration for calling a General Assembly, Lawderdale and I were thinking, ’tis fit the Assemblies at St. Andrews and Dundee be mentioned as what his Majesty owns; which will put a Bar upon the Elections of Remonstrators, or else they must renounce their Judgment. We were speaking, whether it were fit that the Assembly which was interrupted by Lilburn, 1653. should be called to sit again. These Hints I give you, that you may send your Mind, and a Draught for calling an Assembly in the Way you would have it. When it shall please GOD to give it us, it will be expected that the Remonstrance, Protestation, and all that has followed, be disclaimed. Cassils thinks, you went too far in your Propositions for Peace; and that, they not being embraced, you ought not now to stand to them, but, for the Vindication of the Government of our Church, you ought to disown all the Absurdities of the Protesters. I know no Call nor Shadow of Reason for us to mingle with what relates to the English Church. The Presbyterian Ministers are now busy to get Terms of Moderation from the Episcopalians. There are Discontents and Grumbings, but the Episcopal Men have the Wind of them, and know how to make use of it. I am convinced, your coming up, either before this, or now, would have been to no Advantage, but much to your Discontent; afterwards the Opportunity, I believe, will be far more seasonable. A Friend of Lambert’s did move, that the King should send Lawderdale to the Tower, to speak with him privately, and he would discover all the Treacheries in Scotland, which he knows better than any Englishman: He promised he would send Lawderdale to Lambert, to know these Villanies. I find, the King bears no Respect to Lowdon or Lothian. Dr. Reynolds, Mr. Manton, and Baxter, were this Day with the King. Mr. Calamy is ill of the Gout. Mr. Ash tells me, they will write an Answer to yours. The King, after the General and Chamberlain had

‘ spoke to him of endeavouring Reconciliation ’twixt Episcopal Men and others, said, He would make them agree. The Calling of a Synod is put off. The King, having spoke the other Night of Mr. Cant’s Passionateness, fell a commending of you. I have spoke with Broughill to the full, and cleared his Mistake of any Stirs among us; he professeth great Friendship for us.’

By his next to Mr. Douglas, June 28. Mr. Sharp tells him, ‘ I cannot see how it is possible for me, or any one else, to manage the Business committed to me by your Letters of the other Week, with any Shadow of Advantage; but a certain Prejudice will follow upon our further moving in these Particulars that are so disgustful here. I am baited upon all Occasions with the Act of the West-kirk, and the Declaration at Dumfermling. The Protesters will not be welcome here; their Doom is dight, unless some, upon design of heightning our Division, give them Countenance, which I hear whispered among some Noblemen. No Good will follow on the Accommodation with the Episcopal Party; for these who profess the Presbyterian Way, resolve to admit moderate Episcopacy; and the managing this Business by Papers will undo them: The Episcopal Men will catch at any Advantage they get by their Concessions, and, after all, resolve to carry their own Way. Those Motions, about their putting in Writing what they would desire in point of Accommodation, are but to gain Time, and prevent Petitionings, and smoothe over Matters till the Episcopal Men be more strengthened. I find that there is a Conjecture, and not without Ground, that Middleton will be Commissioner to the Parliament. The Garisons will not be taken off till next Summer. The Committee of Estates will sit down, and make Work for the next Parliament, which will be soon called. The King hath declared his Resolution, not to meddle with our Church-government; which hath quieted the Clamourings of some ranting Men here, as if it were easy to set up Episcopacy among us. I saw this Day a Letter from one in Paris, That some learned Protestants in France, and of the Professors at Leyden, were writing for the Lawfulness of Episcopacy; and, if the King would write to the Assembly in Charenton, July next, there would be no Doubt of their approving his Purpose to settle Episcopacy in England. Our Noblemen who are of any Worth, are fast enough against Episcopacy amongst us; but I suspect some of them are so upon a State-interest rather than Conscience, and all incline to bring our Church-government to a Subordination to the Civil Power. The Committee of Estates and Parliament will exercise Severity against the Protesters. It will be yet Ten Days before I get off.’

Mr. Sharp writes another Letter to Mr. Douglas, June 28. and signifies his Receipt of that of the 21. and his Satisfaction that they have given him Leave to return; and runs out upon the great Mercy of the King’s Restoration; and adds, ‘ Although we want not our Fears, let us procure what is wanting by Prayer, and not dwell too much on Fear, lest we sour our Spirits: That he writes this, because he hears some in Scotland cast down all that is done, because the great Work of Reformation is not done. He adds, Yesterday I asked our Friends, honest Mr. Godfrey and Mr. Swinton, What they thought was fit for us to do at present? They answered, They saw nothing remaining, but Prayer and waiting on God. The other Day, Mr. Calamy, Dr. Reynolds, Mr. Baxter, and Mr. Ash, had a Conference with the King, whose Moderation and Sweetness much satisfied them. It issued in this, That the King desired them to draw up in Writ the Lengths they could go for meeting those of the Episcopal Way; and promised, he would order the Prelates and their Adherents to draw their Condescensions, and, after he had seen both, he would bring them to an Accommodation, in spite of all who would oppose it.’

Mr. Sharp’s Letter, June 28.

Another Letter of the same Date.

‘ it. Some Friends of the Presbyterian Way are very solicitous about this Business, fearing that what they do now may conclude all their Party, and lest they fall into an Error in limine, which cannot be retracted, that is, if they give in their Paper of Concessions, those will be laid hold on, and made use of by the other Party as granted; and yet they remit nothing of their Way, and so break all with Advantage: I spake to them to guard against those Inconveniencies. Mr. Calamy sent to me Yesterday, to tell me of their Proceedings; but I told him and others, I would not meddle in those Matters; that their Accommodation, and falling in to moderate Episcopacy and reformed Liturgy, was destructive to the Settlement among us. Next Week they are to have Meetings on these Heads; but I see not through them, and expect no Good of them.’

Mr. Douglas's Letter,
July 3.

July 3. Mr. Douglas acknowledges the Receipt of Mr. Sharp's of the 23, 26 and 28. and notices, That Croft's seditious Sermon before the King, is much like the Way of the Usurpers, who justified all their Procedure, by the signal Providence of God against the Royal Family. Croft's Sermon, and Gauden's Book, says he, may stir up Men to speak for Presbytery against Prelacy. He desires him, when he comes off, to appoint some to receive Letters from them, and deliver them to Lawderdale. After this, adds he, ‘Assemblies are not to interweave Civil Matters with Ecclesiastick; and he wisheth that the King were informed of this, that, after our Brethren went from us, our Proceedings were abstract from all Civil Affairs; and he is confident, when the Assembly sits, all those former Ways will be laid aside.’

that same Date.

That same Day he writes another Letter to Mr. Sharp, and, as to his and others preaching against the Course carrying on in England, he says, ‘Except it be to pray that the Kirk of England be settled according to the Word of God, and the King and Parliament directed, we meddle not with England: Neither can it be thought that we should preach against Prelacy in England, where there are none of that Way to hear us. Some indeed here make it their Work to possess People with the King's Purpose to bring in Prelacy to Scotland; which hath necessitate me often in publick to vindicate his Majesty, and signifie he hath never discovered any such Purpose, but rather professed the contrary; which hath satisfied honest People here, who were discouraged with such Apprehensions. If it be your Mind at Court, that we should not speak of Presbyterian Government in Scotland, and that our Covenant may be kept here, then I hope never to be of it; for we had never more Need, considering the Temper of many here, and our Countrymen with you. Mr. John Stirling and Mr. Gillespie came to me from a Meeting of the Protesters, desiring us to joyn with them in a Representation to the King; but I declined this, as I hinted before in one of mine. I think, an Assembly cannot sit till the Government of the Nation be settled; but when the Parliament has sit, it will be necessary. I have sent you the Draught of a Proclamation for a free General Assembly; or, if his Majesty will have the Assembly that was raised 1653. a small Alteration will make it answer. (This Draught is annexed, App. No. 9.) I think it necessary, that, when the King intimates a Parliament, a Petition come from this to his Majesty, for his convening that Assembly pro re nata; upon which Petition, a Proclamation may be issued. Let our noble Friends know of this, and such a Petition may be soon got.’

Draught of a Proclamation for a General Assembly,
App. No. 9.

Account of the Dumfermling
Declaration,

‘As to what you write of the Declaration at Dumfermling, I was one who went to his Majesty with it first, before any Commissioners were sent; and, after hearing his Scruples, he knows, if he remember, that I did no more press him with it: And when I returned, I endeavoured to satisfy the Commissioners; and when they

‘ they were naming other Commissioners to send again to his Majesty, I said, I would not go; and they thought me too favourable a Messenger for such an Errand, and sent good Mr. Hamilton, with some whom they thought would press it more: And, after his Majesty had signed it, and written a very honest Letter to the Commission, to alter some Expressions in the Declaration, the Protesters carried it by Multitudes, that not one Word of it should be altered.’

‘ As for the Act of the West-kirk, I shall declare to you the Truth of that Business, for none can do it better than Mr. Dickson, Andrew Ker, and I. We met first at Leith, Mr. Dickson, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Thomas Kirkaldy, and I only, all the rest were Protesters. When such an Act was offered, we debated on it about the Space of Three Hours, and finding them obstinate, I, being Moderator, dissolved the Meeting. After that, the Officers being dealt with by them, a great many of them professed that they would not fight at all, except they got something of that Nature, and upon that, there was a Meeting at the West-kirk drawn on for Accommodation, where the Quorum was Twenty three Ministers, Eighteen of whom were for satisfying the Officers with such an Act; and Nine Ruling Elders, Six of whom were violent for it. Mrs. Dickson, Hamilton, Kirkaldy and I, were still against it, till, after Conference, Two of us, with some of them, after solemn Protestation that there should be no Use made thereof, but to shew it to the Officers for Satisfaction, it was agreed on by that Plurality, that it should be enacted, which was carried to the Committee of Estates by them, and approven there; and it was by me inclosed in a Letter to David Lesly, in which I declared it was merely for Satisfaction of some Officers, that now they might fight against the common Enemy. My Memory serves me not to declare what further was in it, yet, notwithstanding of all Professions to the contrary, it was published that Night in Print, without either my Hand at it as Moderator, or Mr. Ker’s as Clerk; which afterwards was made evident at Perth, and the Chancellor being posed, who gave Warrant to print it? he professed publickly, he gave none. The King’s subscribing the Declaration at Dumfermling, made the Act null: But that did not satisfy us, after we saw their Way which they took, notwithstanding of his Majesty’s Subscription, continuing to oppose all the Resolutions which were taken for his Majesty’s Preservation, and the Kingdom’s Defence; and in the Assembly at St. Andrews and Dundee, where his Majesty’s Commissioner was present, the Assembly took to their Consideration that Act of the West-kirk, and put an Explication upon it. It is not full enough, because by the Enemy’s coming to Fife, we were forced to go to Dundee. Thereafter our Troubles growing upon us, after much hot Debate about the condemning it altogether, having so many to deal with in that troublesome Time, the Assembly only came this Length; I hope the next Assembly shall make it full enough.’

And of the Act of the West-kirk.

‘ Two Things would be well considered: These Men now called Protesters were not then discovered to be such Enemies to the Proceedings of the Kingdom as afterward they appeared; and therefore Pains was taken to condescend in some Things to keep them fast: And next, they had infected many of the Officers, who were made unwilling to fight, except they were satisfied in their Scruples, and we behoved to condescend in some Things to engage them, as in granting a Warrant to raise an Army in the West, to encourage them to fight. But after they were found to fall on the Remonstrance, and those Ways, there was never any Thing in the least yielded to them, as all our Procedure will make evident when seen by a General Assembly; which will be to us a standing Testimony of our Honesty and Reality in pursuing his Majesty’s Inter-rest, and the Kingdom's, in our Sphere, against all Opposers. The Mistrust of those with you made me at such Length lay before you; what may inform you in these Matters.

Mr. Douglas's Letter, July 5. His Thoughts upon the Accommodation at London.

July 5. Mr. Douglas adds, ' In my last, I overlooked the Matter of the Accommodation. My Thoughts of it are, 1. That the Matters of Offices and Ordinances, which ought to be of Christ's Appointment, admit not of a Latitude to come and go upon: Which they suppose, who by way of trying, give Commissions and Condescensions in the Matter of Episcopacy, and the Service-book. 2. By their Accommodation they yield up what they had gained, through the Blessing of God, by the Labours of a learned Assembly, and was agreed to by the Parliament. 3. Not only their Concessions will be improven, as you well observe, but also whatever the Hierarchists may happen to condescend to at present, ad faciendum Populum, they will not keep longer than they find a Convenience to step over, at their own Ease, to their wonted Height. Their present Carriage, and the open Appearances of the most violent of them, makes this plain. 4. I believe those learned Men will, on second Thoughts, perceive, that 'tis a Task, if not impossible, yet very difficult to propose Concessions, which may satisfy the Presbyterians in England, without Conference with them, and Communication of Counsels. For which Effect, and that the Odium of the Miscarriage ly not on them, it may be expected from their Wisdom, that they will endeavour a Meeting of the honest and learned Men of the Ministry, to consider of the Matter. 5. Whatever be the Event and Effects, it will be a Comfort to honest Men, they had no Hand in the Reintroduction of those Things they cannot be free of in a Way of Treaty and Condescension. Those Things being considered, we cannot approve of that Way, and you do well not to meddle in it. '

Mr. Sharp's Letter, July 3.

Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, July 3. and says, ' I lately spoke with some who have the chief Management, and had Opportunity to clear the Integrity of honest Men, from the Year 1651. to this. For any Thing I can observe, the King and his Ministers have such a Resentment of the Protesters Way, that we shall need rather to plead some Indulgence, than fear any Favour. Lawderdale denies he sent any Letter to Mr. Patrick Gillespie; and all his Eloquence will scarce secure him from being accountable, when an Inquisition is made into the Affronts he put upon the King and his Authority, and his Intrusions upon the Town and University. The King told the Four Presbyterian Ministers at their last Conference, he would have the Church of England governed by Bishops. And when it was replied, that they were not Enemies to regulated Episcopacy, he bid them put in Writ their Concessions, and what Regulations they thought needful. He promised that none of them should be pressed to Conformity, until a Synod determined that Point, and that all who had entered into Livings whose Incumbents are dead, should be continued, and others, before they were outed, should be provided for. They have had several Meetings since. At their first, they voted they would treat with the Episcopal Party upon Bishop Usher's Reduction: But I apprehend they will go a greater Length, and to Morrow I shall know of Mr. Calamy the Particulars. I trust you will not think it convenient I be present at Meetings where such Concessions are made. The King will give our Countrymen their Answer very soon; and it is, that the Committee of Estates will speedily sit down, with Limitations as to the Time, and their proceeding as to Sequestrations, or Finings till the Parliament sit. If the Accounts here of Expressions Ministers use in their Pulpits be true, I wish Ministers would moderate their Passions at such a Time. '

By

By another Letter July 3. Mr. Sharp acquaints Mr. Douglas, ' That he sees no Ground to think undeserving Men will be in Request, as is reported with them in Scotland. I have, adds he, acquainted the King's prime Minister with Mr. Gillespie's Character in case he come here: I have also acquainted that great Man with your Deservings of the King. The King hath not yet considered how to manage his Affairs as to Scotland, and all he says to our Countrymen here will be but for the Fashion. That which will be effectual, must proceed from his Cabinet Council, consisting of Three Persons, whom he will call in a few Days, and set apart some Time with them on purpose to manage Scots Affairs. Middleton will be Commissioner, who professeth a great Regard to you. I apprehend Glencairn will be Chancellor, Crawford Treasurer, Newburgh Secretary, Sir Archibald Primrose Register, Mr. John Fletcher Advocate. General Monk desires you may write to the Presbyterian Ministers in the North of Ireland, to leave off their indiscreet Preaching against the King, and not praying for him. I hope these Reports are aggravated, but since the Commissioners of that Kingdom have petitioned for Episcopacy, I am afraid they be persecuted. Cassils is honest, but not for this Court. ' Another of the same Date.

Mr. Douglas answers the Two last, July 12. As to the Expressions in Pulpits, he says, Some Men take a Liberty to speak, which will not be remedied, but by a General Assembly; and if this be meant of others who have been all along for the King, 'tis but a Calumny. 'Tis another Forgery which you write, of the Ministers of the North of Ireland: Mr. Peter Blair is just now come over, and assures us they all pray most cordially for his Majesty. I hear of some Protesters in the North of Scotland who pray not for the King, but none in Ireland. A General Assembly will help us, and give them Advice in Ireland. Your Matters at London are yet a Mystery to me. Mr. Douglas's Letter, July 12.

July 7. Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, he had his June 28. ' The Ministers have had several Meetings at Sion College since my last: They have many Debates, and are not all in one Mind; yet they have all agreed to Bishop Usher's Model, to Set Forms, and an amended Liturgy; they desire Freedom from the Ceremonies. Some Yesterday spoke in the House for Episcopacy, and Mr. Bainfield speaking against it, was hissed down. The English Lawiers have given in Papers to shew that the Bishops have not been outed by Law. The Cloud is more dark than was apprehended. Mr. Hart, Richardson, and Kays are to be in Town this Night from the Ministers of the North of Ireland. Their coming is ill taken by the Commissioners from the Convention there, who have petitioned for Episcopacy. Affairs begin to be imbroyled here; many fear a Break. The Presbyterians are like to be ground 'twixt Two Mill-stones. The Papists and Phanatics are busy. Argyle is this Day come to Town, and he will not be welcome. ' Mr. Sharp's Letter, July 7.

July 10. Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, That Crofts is discharged the Court. The Episcopal Men are bowing a little; the Presbyterians have finished their Concessions; the Issue will be the emitting of a Declaration by the King about moderate Episcopacy, amended Liturgy and dispensing with the Ceremonies. They will subject to any Episcopacy; they will act under moderate Episcopacy, and own Bishops may be acknowledged as Civil Officers imposed by the King. I find no Inclination in the King to meddle with our Church-government. The Marquis of Argyle was sent to the Tower last Lord's Day. He adds, ' He is not of their Mind, who would not have you preach for Presbyterian Government, holding up the Covenant, and keeping out Prelacy from Scotland; but I am still of the Opinion, That there is neither Necessity, nor Mr. Sharp's Letter, July 10.

Advantage to meddle with the Settlement, whether Civil, or Ecclesiastick, here in England. Dear bought Experience should make us wary of mingling with the Concerns of a People, who bear no Regard to us. You'll have many Letters as to the Manner of Argyle's Commitment, and I say nothing of it. His Warrant mentions the Cause to be High Treason, whether for past Actings, or what he may do at this Time against the King's Interest, I know not. This Day the Lord Lorn was permitted to see his Father. I'll endeavour to move, That one of the Instructions to the Committee of Estates may be to see to the preserving the Government of the Kirk, and particularly of the Acts of the General Assembly at St. Andrews and Dundee; and then that after the Parliament a General Assembly be called. I doubt if the Motion, for the King's taking notice of the Assemblies since the Interruption of his Government, take. I have frequently observed in Converse here for our Vindication, that by the Influence of the protesting Party among us, we were led out to some Exorbitancies not chargeable on us or our Kirk. Honest Cassils, Lowdon, Lothian, and Lorn, have been pressing a Conference before the King, with Crawford, Lawderdale, Roths, and Glencairn, to debate the Expediency of a Committee of Estates; but this, favouring of Faction and Division, is not liked by the King. The Motive of Cassils and the rest for avoiding the Committee, is the Apprehension they have of the others Design to quarrel the Parliament, 1649. and so to render their Actings culpable. I engage in no Party, while I am here, that I may know how the Wheels move. There is a Necessity I get and keep Acquaintance with the Episcopal Party, as well as Presbyterians, and with those about Court who manage the King's Affairs, though they be no Friends to Presbyterians; though I will hereby be exposed to the Constructions of Men. I am confident the King hath no Purpose to wrong our Church in her Settlement; my greatest Fear is their introducing Eraastianism. Chancellor Hyde, and those of that Party will have Middleton Commissioner, and some of our Noblemen have told the King, it is their Desire he be the Man. 'Tis probable Lawderdale will be Secretary.

Mr. Douglas's Letter, July 19.

July 19. Mr. Douglas answers the last, and tells Mr. Sharp, 'That there is no Fear of their meddling with Civil Affairs in their Judicatories: We, adds he, have Reason to know that these are to be kept distinct without Encroachment. When the King grants a General Assembly, it will be seen how consistent Presbytery is with Monarchy. I was never urging for an Assembly before, or in Time of Parliament. It shall be sufficient to us, that nothing be done in Parliament to the Prejudice of our established Kirk-government, and that the Assembly be indicted shortly after. I think it will do as well, that the Members of the Assembly be chosen after the established Order, as that the last Assembly be called. Some of the Protesters are here met, they will get none of us to joyn them in what they do.'

Mr. Douglas's Letter, July 21.

July 21. Mr. Douglas writes again, and desires Mr. Sharp to give the Lady Argyle all the Comfort and Assistance he can, when she comes up to see her Lord. He adds, When Sir James Stuart and Sir John Chiesly were seized, Mr. Gillespie was here at the Meeting of Protesters, and saw fit to remove. Two came to me from the Meeting, and desired we would joyn them in a Letter to the King anent Episcopacy in England. I told them, We could not joyn with them in any Thing of that Kind; and wished them to consider, that the Circumstances they stood in, with reference to the King, were not good. When they asked me, If I thought not it requisite to bear Testimony against Prelacy there? I answered, I thought not; and told them, I was afraid it might be hurtful to them; and we could could not, to any Advantage, press any Thing now for England. I hear, they have resolved to do nothing at this Time; but, if any Thing were done in reference to the Remonstrance, they would give their Testimony.

Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, July 14. ' That he had communicate his Thoughts upon the Accommodation to the Brethren of the City. They have some Sense of the Inconveniencies you mention; but they excuse themselves from the present Necessity they are under, and the Duty they ow to the Peace of the Church. They gave in their Paper to the King on Tuesday last, which he ordered them not to communicate, till he made his Pleasure known. After he heard them read it, he commended it, as favouring of Learning and Moderation, and hoped it might give a Beginning to a good Settlement in the Church. When I heard of the Contents of that Paper, I asked, If they thought it consistent with their Covenant Engagements? They said, They judged so; for they had only yielded to a constant Precedency, and a reformed Liturgy. I fear, they have hereby given a Knife to cut their own Throats, and do find the Episcopals prosecute their own Way. This Morning the King called me to his Closet alone, where I had the Opportunity to give a full Information, as to all those Particulars you by your former Letter did desire; and, I must say, we have Cause to bless the Lord for so gracious a King. A Letter will be writ in a Day or Two, and I will get off. Ere long the Parliament will restore the Bishops Lands. There are universal Complaints of the Ejection of many honest Ministers throughout the Land, and the Readmission of many not well qualified. ' Mr. Sharp's Letter, July 14.

Next Post, Mr. Sharp writes to Mr. Douglas, and acquaints him, ' That upon Munday there was a long and an hot Debate in the House of Commons about Religion. The high Episcopal Men laboured to put to the Question the whole complex Business about Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government of the Church of England, that none other should take place, but what was according to Law. The other Side, consisting of Presbyterians, i. e. for the most part moderate Episcopal Men, urged, That the Particular about Doctrine might only at that Time be put to the Question. After Debates till Night, it came to this Issue, That the House should adjourn the taking the Matter of Religion into their Consideration until the 23. of October; and, in the mean time, they should desire his Majesty to take the Advice of some Divines about the settling and composing of Differences about Church Matters. Thus all is put into his Majesty's Hands. Whether this shall contribute to the regulating or heightning the Episcopal Way, there are different Conjectures: However, all Offices in the Church and Universities are just filling with Men of that Way. Two Ministers from Ireland, Mr. Kays an Englishman, and Mr. Richardson a Scotsman, came to Town some Time since; they have been several Times with me, and let me see their Address, signed by Sixty Ministers and upwards, and their Letter to the London Ministers. Their Address is well penned, and contains nothing which can give Offence, unless the Episcopalians except against the designing the King to be our covenanted King, and engaged against Error and Schism, Popery and Prelacy; and therefore pray, that Reformation may be settled according to the Covenant. The London Ministers civilly received them, but I do not hear of their assisting them. I have given them Advice as to the managing of their Employment, and have made way for them to the General, if by him they may have Access to the King. I have brought them to my Lord Cassels, and am to take them to Crawford and Lawderdale. I am afraid their Success be little; but 'tis well they are come over, to vindicate the Aspersions cast upon them as to ' Undu-

‘ Undutifulness, and to obtain some Abatement of the Rigour and Persecution they ‘ have Cause to fear from the Prelates. They have need, honest Men, of our ‘ Prayers; for the crushing of them will blast the Lord’s Work, in that Kingdom, ‘ in the Bud. I told you in my last, that on Saturday I was with the King: The ‘ Sum of what he is graciously pleased to grant as to Church Matters, was by his ‘ Order cast into a Letter, which was read to him on Munday, and approved, I ‘ being present, and ordered to be put in mundo, for signing with his Hand, and ‘ affixing his Privy Seal. I trust it shall be refreshing to all honest Men (and he ‘ gives the Heads of it, which need not be here insert.) He adds, This is all I ‘ could desire, as Matters are stated; and I adore the Goodness of God, who ‘ hath brought my Six Months toilsom Employment to this Issue. I have asserted ‘ our Cause to his Majesty and others, and pleaded for Pity and Compassion to our ‘ Opposers. I have not spoke of any Thing favouring of Severity or Revenge. I ‘ had almost forgot my urging his Majesty to call a General Assembly, which, he ‘ told me, could not now be resolved upon as to the Time, till he should more fully ‘ advise about ordering his Affairs in Scotland. And, upon the Motion of his own‘ ing the Assembly at St. Andrews, 1651. he readily yielded to it, as the fittest ‘ Expedient to testify his Approbation of our Cause, and his Pleasure that the Dis‘ orders of our Church be remedied in the approved Way. You’ll easily see why ‘ he could not own these Assemblies, that were holden after the Interruptions of ‘ his Government.’

Mr. Sharp’s
 Letter,
 July 26.

July 26. Mr. Sharp acquaints Mr. Douglas, That several of our Countrymen are not satisfied with the King’s gracious Declaration as to the preserving our Government.
 I am advised to put off my Journey Two or Three Days, that I may take Care that, by Instructions to the Committee of Estates, the King’s Assurance in his Letter may be made good; and probably those Instructions will be perfected this Week.
 The King’s Condescension, that the Acts and Authority of the General Assembly at St. Andrews and Dundee be owned, doth take in the Acts of the Commission preceeding it. Upon my Motion of it to his Majesty, he was satisfied with the Reasons I gave, from his own Concernments and ours. After the Parliament, the Assembly, I hope, will be indicted. As soon as the King hath nominated a Secretary, I shall leave the Copy of the Proclamation you sent, with him, for calling the Assembly. I gave you Account, on the 24. of the large Opportunity I had with his Majesty to clear you from all Mistakes and Aspersions, according to the Particulars of the Information you sent me; and the King is sensible the Stretches came from the overbearing Sway of those Men. We hear here of another Meeting of theirs: I wish they would forbear them; and if they forbear them not in Time, they will draw a Check upon themselves. You’ll have had Notice of the King’s Answer to the Paper presented by our Lords: After Insinuations of his great Regard for Scotland, he tells them, The Field Forces shall be withdrawn presently, the Garisons as soon as may be, and the Garison of Edinburgh, as soon as a Scottish Garison can be raised. The Committee of Estates sits down August 23. and is not to meddle with Persons or Estates, and to fill up their Number with those who, by Remonstrance or otherwise, have not disclaimed the King’s Authority: The Proclamation for this Committee is preparing. The Proceedings to settle Episcopacy in England and Ireland go on apace: The Bishops will be speedily nominate for England, as they are mostly already for Ireland. The Brethren from Ireland are at a great Stand what to do: The General, Manchester, or any Person of Interest, refuse to introduce them to the King, if they present their Address. They have writ to their Brethren for Advice. The most they can expect, will be a Forbearance a little in the Exercise of their Ministry, but they will not be permitted

permitted to meet in Presbyteries, or a Synod. I give them all the Assistance I can, though they get none from the City Ministers.

Mr. Sharp writes next, July 28. and tells Mr. Douglas, That Argyle will be sent down to the Parliament, to be tried: His Friends wish rather he were tried before the King. No Petition from the Protesters will be acceptable to the King. I wonder how they expect you should, by a Conjunction with them, involve your self in their Guilt and Hazard. Their Remonstrance will be censured. Yesterday the King went to the House, and, in an excellent Speech, pressed an Indemnity to all who had not an immediate Hand in his Father's Murder. I spoke this Day with our Brethren from Ireland, who tell me, By the Advice of their best Friends here, they are resolved to expunge out of their Address the Expressions which might be most offensive, and to tender a smooth one to his Majesty, without mentioning their Exception against Prelacy, or craving Reformation according to the Covenant; and the Drift of their Desires are, to be permitted the Exercise of their Ministry, and such a Discipline as may guard against Error and Profaneness.

Mr. Sharp's
Letter,
July 28.

By his next, of August 4. to Mr. Douglas, he tells him, That the Two Brethren from Ireland had been with him, and signified, that Yesterday they had been introduced to the King, who received their Address and Petition (which they did smoothe) and caused read them, and spoke kindly to them, bidding them be confident, they should be protected in their Ministry, and not imposed upon; he would give Orders to the Deputy of Ireland to have a tender Regard of them. They are going home, much satisfied with this Answer.

Mr. Sharp's
Letter,
August 4:

August 11. Mr. Sharp signifies, 'That the Apprehensions of Scotsmen here are much altered, since his Majesty hath been pleased to yield to what I humbly offered, by his Condescensions in that Letter. I thought, it was not amiss to acquaint several here with it; and their Expressions about the Government of our Church are much moderated. The Letter of the Ministers of London, in Answer to yours, is, after much Belabouring, signed by them; and I am to have it to Morrow. The Episcopal Party here are still increasing in Number, as well as Confidence. Some think, they fly so high, that they will undo their own Interest.'

Mr. Sharp's
Letter,
August 11:

This Collection of Letters ends with a Letter from Mrs. Calamy, Ash and Manton, in answer to that of the Ministers of Edinburgh, of June 12. and 'tis insert App. N^o. 10. and with this I shall conclude this Extract, and large Abbreviate of this Correspondence. The King's Letter to Mr. Douglas, to be communicated to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, with what followed thereupon, will come in upon the History it self.

Letter of the Ministers of E-

App. N^o.
10.

I have chosen to give this Introduction mostly in the very Words of the Letters themselves, and I have omitted nothing in them I thought necessary to give Light to this great Change of Affairs. Some Things, minute, and of no great Importance in themselves, are inserted, because they tend to give Light to other Matters of greater Weight. And though this Abbreviate be larger than what at first I hoped it might have been, yet containing a Summary of upwards of Thirty Sheets of Paper, and a great Variety of Matter, both as to the Church of Scotland, and Matters in England at this critical juncture, and nothing being left out that might clear this Part of our History, I flatter my self, it will not be unacceptable to the curious Reader. To shorten it, and as little as might be interrupt the Narrative, I have turned over Eight or Ten principal Papers to an Appendix, which immediately follows. I could not avoid some Repetitions, neither could I, without spending more Time than I had to allow, reduce this Narrative to any other other Method than what it lies under in the Letters themselves; and by this, the Reader hath the Benefit of having it in the very Words of the Writers. Some Passages in them need to be explained, yet I was not willing to write Notes upon them, but let them continue in their own native Dress. A few warm Passages, relative to the late unhappy Debates, I thought good to bury, as of no great Use to us now.

Upon the Whole, this Abstract will give a fuller View, than I have any where seen, of the Apostacy of that violent Persecutor Mr. Sharp, and how inconsistent he proved with his own Pretensions and Professions. I suspect, and there seems Ground for it from what is above, that Mr. Sharp, Mr. Leighton, Bishop Sideserf, and others at London, were concerting the Overthrow of the Church of Scotland, with the High-fliers in England, when Mr. Sharp is writing such Letters as we have seen, and, in the mean time, waving and burying the Applications made to him by the reverend Ministers of Edinburgh. And here we have an undoubted Proof of the Diligence, Activity, and Faithfulness of worthy Mr. Douglas, and the rest of the Ministers who joyned him: And, when we compare what is above insert, with what shall occur in the Body of the History, as to the Letter to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, and the Senses put upon it, the Reader must observe the disingenuous and base Trick put upon the Church of Scotland therein. I come now to the History it self.

Instructions to Mr. Sharp, from Mrs. David Dickson, Robert Douglas, James Wood, John Smith, George Hutchison, and Andrew Ker, February 6. 1660.
No. I.

YOU are to use your utmost Endeavours that the Kirk of Scotland may, without Interruption or Inroad, enjoy the Freedom and Privileges of her established Judicatures, ratified by the Laws of the Land.

2. Whereas, by the lax Toleration which is established, a Door is opened to very many Errors, and loose Practices in this Church; you shall therefore use all lawful and prudent Means to represent the Sinfulness and Offensiveness thereof, that it may be timely remedied.

3. You are to represent the Prejudice this Church doth suffer by the interverting of the taking Stipends, which by Law were dedicated to pious Uses; and seriously endeavour, that hereafter taking Stipends may be intromitted with by Presbyteries, and such as shall be warranted by them, and no others, to be disposed of and applied to pious Uses, by Presbyteries, according to the 20 Act of the Parliament 1644.

4. You are to endeavour that Ministers, lawfully called and admitted by Presbyteries to the Ministry, may have the Benefit of the 39 Act of the Parliament, Intituled, Act anent abolishing Patronages, for obtaining summarily, upon the Act of their Admission, Decreet, and Letters conform, and other Executorials, to the effect they may get the Right and Possession of their Stipends, and other Benefits, without any other Address or Trouble.

If you find that there will be any Commission appointed in this Nation, for settling and augmenting of Ministers Stipends, then you are to use your utmost Endeavours to have faithful Men, well affected to the Interests of Christ in this Church, employed therein.

Desires of the City Ministers, February 1660. No. II.

It is humbly desired,
1. THAT there may be a speedy Course taken against Jesuits, Papists, Priests, and all Popish emissaries.

2. That an effectual Course also be taken for the better Sanctification of the Sabbath, and to prevent the opening of Shops by Quakers, and all other Profanation of the Sabbath; and, in order thereto, a certain Act, bearing Date September 27. 1651. Intituled, An Act for Relief of religious and peaceable People from the Rigour of former Acts of Parliament in Matters of Religion (whereby many have taken Encouragement to neglect the publick Ordinances) may be considered and repealed.

3. That the Disturbance of the Ministers, in the publick Worship of God, may be prevented and punished.

4. That certain Ministers may be appointed for the Approbation of all Ministers who shall be admitted into Livings, till the next Parliament take further Order.

5. That they would be pleased to declare, that they still own the Confession of Faith, the Catechisms, Directory, and Form of Church-government pretended to them by the late Assembly of Divines, and approved of by several Ordinances of Parliament.

6. That Care may be taken, that godly ordained Ministers, who are in sequestred Livings, may not be molested, through the Want of some Formalities in Law as to their Institution.

7. That they would please to consider what may be done in order to the calling of a national Assembly of Divines, to be chosen by the Ministers of the respective Counties, with due due Qualifications, that so, by the Blessing of God upon this Ordinance, we may have Hope for the healing of our sinful and woful Divisions.

The Judgment of some sober-minded Men in Scotland, concerning the Settlement of the Government in the Three Nations. N^o. III.

FOR the Settlement of Government, Two Things are mainly considerable; the one is concerning the Power of settling it, the other is concerning the Form of the Government to be settled.

Concerning the Power of settling Government, it is in the Three respective Parliaments of England, Scotland, and Ireland. It is Matter of no small Contentment to us, that there is a full Parliament to meet in England, of whom we have the Confidence that they will do right for themselves; yet we must plead, that de jure belongs to the Three Nations to consult and conclude, in their respective Representatives, that wherein all of them are severally concerned; for quod omnes tangit, ab omnibus tractari debet. In which Purpose it may be considered, 1. That England is but a Part, and their Representative doth only represent that Part; now no Part can conclude and determine the Whole. 2. All the Three Nations have always had their respective Parliaments, until the unhappy Changes under the late Usurpation, which hath overthrown the Liberties of all the Three Nations. 3. If any Thing be determined by a Part, which is not agreeable to the Mind of the rest, it must be imposed without a free Consent, and by Force; and this is the Continuance of that very Bondage upon others, under which both they and we have lien this while bygone. 4. A greater Freedom of Expression is required in this Particular, in so far as concerneth Scotland, which is in a worse Case than any of the other Two; because the Power that is in the other Two, by divine Providence, puts them in a Capacity to act for themselves; whereas Scotland is, by that same Power, impeded from acting toward their own Liberty. If the Force upon the secluded Members, that hindred them from acting according to their Trust, was unjust, and was taken off according to Justice, then all the Acts of Violence thereafter committed by these who acted that Force, upon these who enjoyed their own Freedom before, are unjust, and cannot, without owning the Injustice of others, be still continued unto their sad Restraining from acting as a free Nation. It were to be wished that the Injustice thereof were a little better considered; upon which account, let it be remembred, 1. How well Scotland hath deserved of England; for being intreated for, and by their Commissioners, they took their Lives in their Hand, and hazarded themselves, to deliver their Brethren from a fearful threatened Bondage; and yet the Recompence that they have gotten, hath been, to be unjustly invaded, and many Thousands of them killed, starved, imprisoned, and removed to the far Parts of the World: Unto this Matter, the Words which the Lord commanded to be spoken before the Host of Israel, by the Prophet Oded, may be well applied, 2 Chron. 28. 9, 10, 11. Behold, because the Lord God of your Fathers was wroth with Judah, he hath delivered them into your Hand, and ye have slain them in a Rage that reacheth up unto Heaven. And now ye purpose to keep under the Children of Judah and Jerusalem, for Bond-men and Bond-women unto you: But are there not with you, even with you, Sins against the Lord your God? Now hear me therefore, and deliver the Captives again, which ye have taken captive of your Brethren; for the fierce Wrath of God is upon you. 2. That that unjust Invasion was never imputed unto the Nation of England, but unto a Party which then and thereafter kept England in Bondage, as well as others: But if now, when the Lord hath opened a Door of Hope unto them for their own Liberty, they keep their Brethren still in Bondage, and do not behave themselves toward their oppressed Brethren, in their Speeches to the Army, and in their Actions toward their Brethren, as the Heads of Israel spake and did, 2 Chron. 28. 12, 13, 14, 15. They will add one Trespas to another, and make it to be a national Sin, which will draw from the avenging Hand of divine Justice a national Judgment. 3. That the Body of this Nation evidenced their Willingness and Readiness to hazard themselves unto the utmost, and to lay out themselves above their Ability, toward the promoting of the generous Intentions of General Monk, whom the Lord raised up, to put a Stop unto the violent Actings of those that were in a Way of undoing Religion and Liberty, and to make way for the Meeting of a full and free Parliament. These Things, being well weighed in the Balances of an impartial Judgment, will strongly plead, that Scotland ought to be a Sharer with England and Ireland, in the settling of Government.

Concerning the Form of the Government, it is either Civil, or Ecclesiastical.

As to the Civil Government, it may be supposed to be intended either in a Commonwealth, or in a single Person.

The Civil Government of these Three Nations cannot be settled in a Commonwealth for these Reasons. 1. The People of these Nations have been so accustomed unto Monarchy, that they can hardly put their Neck under another Form of Government. 2. However it be pretended to be a Commonwealth, yet it is really and in effect but an Oligarchy, the carrying on of the Interests of some few particular Persons. 3. Such a Commonwealth is but introductory to a single Person, as late Experience hath made it evident in the Practice of the Protector, who turned their Republick unto Government of a single Person, viz. of himself. 4. It is held as a Maxim in the Politicks, That it is dangerous to change the Government of a Kingdom, so long as there are righteous Heirs of the Crown to plead their Right, lest the Kingdom be continually vexed with new Wars and Broils, and involved in Blood, so often as they have Will and Power to endeavour the forcible Possession of that which is known to all neighbouring Princes, to be their undoubted Right. 5. If the Settlement of Government be in a Commonwealth, it will necessitate the keeping up of Armies, to impose that Form upon these of the Nations, who cannot in Conscience give Way thereto; and how disadvantageous and dangerous this is, may be seen. 1. By the vast Expences which they will draw to, and these must be wrung out of the Estates of People: A Taste of this the Nations have had these few Years bygone, wherein there hath been more imposed upon the People, than in Hundreds of Years before. 2. What Security can be had from these Armies, but they may act over again what the Armies before them have lately acted, and model the Government to their own Pleasure, or make themselves the Rulers of all. 6. A Commonwealth, out of a preposterous Desire of securing Civil Interests, useth to bring with it no small Disadvantage to the true Reformed Religion, by Toleration of Errors and Heresies. A sad Proof of this these Nations have had in late Times under the Essays for a Commonwealth, wherein Errors of all Sorts, Heresies and Blasphemies have abounded, more than they have done in any such Time since the Days of Christ. 7. It seems that God is not pleased with such a Change in these Nations; for since it began, they have been tossed, like a Tennis-ball, from Hand to Hand, without any Settlement, which hath made the Government to be like washing Floods, overflowing the Banks, when once it hath gone out of the right Chanel; and though Men have been framing a Government upon the Wheel, yet the Lord hath broken it all, intimating this very Thing, That a Commonwealth is not the Foundation wherein these Nations can safely rest.

As to the settling of a Civil Government in a single Person; Reason and Conscience plead, that that single Person be the righteous Heir of the Crowns. For, 1. Though the Nations were necessitate to undertake a lawful defensive War, to preserve Religion and their civil Rights and Liberties, against the Breaches made upon both, by wicked Counsellors misleading the Father; yet since the Parliament found Reason to have readmitted the King, whereupon by Force, so many Members were secluded, his Son who hath never acted any Thing of that Kind, should not be reputed to be in a worse Condition than himself, and so manifestly injured as to be denied Readmission to his just Right. 2. However the Father was engaged in War against England, yet his Son was never so engaged, but only against a prevailing Party which kept England under Bondage, and kept him under Banishment. 3. The Three Nations are not at Liberty to make choice of any single Person that they please, but have determined themselves in the solemn League and Covenant; which hath been solemnly sworn in them all, professing in the Sight of almighty God, that one main End they aim at, is the Honour and Happiness of the King and his Posterity; which was afterward renewed in many Declarations, wherein they profess their Integrity and Sincerity, in pursuing of the War, without any Prejudice intended to the King's Power and Authority, or his Posterity. 4. It is expected, that the ensuing Parliament (the happy and peaceable Meeting whereof is earnestly desired) will endeavour to redress the Wrongs which themselves and the Nation have received, by the Practices of these that violently oppressed them; and it is no less expected, that they will restore Persons to their due Rights, who were outed of them by the same Violence which oppressed the Nation, lest the Parliament's Injustice, in denying Suum cuique tribuere, become the Sin of the Nation. Non tollitur peccatum, nisi restituatur ablatum. 5. The setting up of the righteous Heir will secure the Nation against the Fears of Invasion from Abroad, or Insurrections from within, upon the account of any Interest to the Government, and so take away the Necessity of keeping up standing Armies, to the exhausting of the Country, and endangering of a settled Government. 6. All the well affected to Government in Scotland, can give this Testimony unto him who is righteous Heir, That he was faithful in his Treaties, did countenance the honest Ministry, and religious Duties, and was without any known Scandal in the Course of his Conversation, which are Qualifications desirable in a single Person for settling of Government. 7. The good Hand of divine Providence doth lead, as it seems, unto that single Person, by keeping the Government unsettled until the sitting of a free Parliament, by instructing and fitting him for a just and moderate Government in the School of Affliction, and and by mercifully inclining the Hearts of the Body of the People toward him: Whereas for a While, there was an Alienation of Affection in many from that Family, that coming out of the Furnace of Affliction, as a Vessel fitted for honourable Employments, he may be called unto the Throne by the Representative, and heartily embraced by the Body of the People.

Self-seeking Men will not want Objections against the settling of the Government in this Way. 1. Purchasers of Crown-lands, and of other Casualties and Emoluments belonging thereto, out of fear to be deprived thereof, will be great Sticklers in Opposition to this Settlement. This Objection were easily answered, if Covetousness were not both unsatiable and unreasonableness. For, 1. The Rent of the Lands, and other Things of that Nature during the Years of their Possession hath equalled, if not exceeded the Price which they laid forth upon the Purchase. 2. It were most unjust that the Three Nations should suffer, and be at the Expence of keeping up Armies for maintaining a few private Men in an unrighteous Purchase: The Nations had far better buy out their Purchases, than be at the Expence of maintaining Armies. 3. To deny him Admittance to the Crown, that he may not be admitted to the Possession of his Lands, were to add Sin to Sin, and to maintain a lesser Sin by committing a greater. No Man will suffer it to enter into his Mind, that the Parliament will make this their Sin. 2. Such as have been accessary to the grand Injuries done to his Father, will fear that he prove vindictive against them, if he should be admitted; but an Act of Oblivion will secure them, and an Act of Indemnity will secure all others in reference to the Actings of these latter Times: And as to the defensive War undertaken by the Parliaments of the Three Nations, the Lawfulness thereof may, and ought to be declared and secured in Law. 3. The honest and sober Party may, upon sinister Information, be possessed with Fears that he shall introduce an arbitrary Government, but his Admittance is not pleaded for upon any Terms, but upon the Terms of the League and Covenant, wherein all the Rights and Liberties of the Parliaments and People of the Three Nations respective are secured, and which he hath most solemnly sworn and subscribed in Scotland.

Whatever other Objection may be moved from the Fears of Men, it may be considered, that what is incumbent upon the Nations, whereunto they are obliged before God and Men, should be done, committing the ordering of contingent Events to the good and wise Providence of the LORD of the whole Earth.

For the Government of the Kirk in Scotland, they are determined unto Presbyterian Government, as that which is most agreeable to the Word of God, being thereto obliged by their National Covenant, and by the solemn League and Covenant; and the other Two Nations are obliged by the League and Covenant, to endeavour the Preservation of the Reformed Religion in the Church of Scotland, in Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government, according to the Word of God, and the Example of the best Reformed Churches. 2. For England it is expected from the Parliament thereof, that is shortly to sit, that they will ratify the 30 and 31 Chapters of the Confession of Faith, as well as the late Parliament hath ratified all the rest of it.

Though there may be some in England for Episcopacy, and some for other Forms, yet Presbyterian Government ought to be pitched upon, for these Reasons. 1. Episcopacy and other Forms are Mens Devices, but Presbyterian Government is a divine Ordinance. 2. The Three Nations are tied by the League and Covenant to endeavour the Extirpation of Prelacy, that is, Church-government by Archbishops, Bishops, &c. and to endeavour the nearest Conjunction and Uniformity, as in Religion, Confession of Faith, Directory for Worship, and Catechizing, so in Form of Church-government. 3. The Maintenance of the Episcopal Hierarchy requireth huge and vast Rents, which might be employed to far better Uses; more is laid out for the upholding the lordly Grandeur of one of that Hierarchy, than many able, faithful and laborious Ministers of the Gospel live upon. 4. It is known by sad Experience in England, that Episcopacy hath been the Inlet unto Popery, Arminianism, and other Errors which were on Foot, and fomented by them before the late Troubles; and other Forms which Men have been modelling, have brought forth Swarms of Errors, Schisms, and unhappy Divisions in these Nations; only Presbyterian Government being Christ's Ordinance, stands as a Wall and an Hedge against all these, as Scotland hath tried by Experience, in which, so long as Presbyterian Government stood in Vigour, no Error in Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government durst set out the Head. 5. Presbyterian Government doth well agree with any lawful Civil Government, though Presbyterians have no Reason to be indifferent to any Form of Civil Government, since they know what Good hath been enacted towards the Establishment of Presbyterian Government in the Three Nations under Kingly Government; and it may be truly said of it, That in the right Exercise thereof, it is the best School to teach Subjects due Obedience to the lawful Magistrate. It is maliciously suggested by the Enemies thereof, that it is intolerably rigid in the Exercise of it, which may take with good People, who are unacquainted therewith: For removing whereof it may be considered, 1. That the Errors of Men, in abusing of this Ordinance of God, ought no more to reflect upon it, than the Errors of Men abusing other divine Ordinances, ought to reflect upon them. 2. Presbyterian Government hath within it self a sufficient Guard against the Aberrations of Men; for inferior Kirk-judicatories are in their ownings liable to the Trial and Censure of the Superior Judicatories, until it come at length to the General Assembly, which useth to take a Course for redressing all Abuses, so that there is nothing needful but the Authority of the Civil Magistrate to countenance them in their Proceedings. 3. It is so far from being rigid, that all Tenderness is used toward the ignorant to bring them to Knowledge, Meekness toward the restoring of those that are fallen through Infirmary, Painfulness to reclaim these that are of a different Judgment, and patient Forbearance even toward the Obstinate, that, if possible, they may be reclaimed before they be proceeded against by the highest Censure of the Kirk; and yet it being a divine Ordinance, which restrains Looseness, Profanity, and Error, it needs not be wondered at if Men of Judgment, that it be reckoned as rigid by these who love a lawless Liberty in Opinion and Practice.

Seeing it is now both the Desire, and Hope of all honest and sober Men, that the Lord, by his good Providence, will bring the Parliament to sit in Peace and Freedom, they would seriously consider how much it concerneth them to look well unto the building and ordering of the House of the God of Heaven; for it hath been observed by very godly and judicious Men, that because there was no Care taken to settle the Affairs of the Kingdom of Christ, but by a vast Toleration, a Way opened for a Flood of Errors to enter upon the Church: The Lord justly permitted Confusions to come upon the State, and made the various Vicissitudes of State Mutations to be the Astonishment and Derision of all about. That abomination which hath provoked the Lord to Jealousie must be removed, as they would expect God's Blessing upon the Nation, and upon their Endeavours for the solid Settlement of a righteous Government.

That there is a free Parliament to sit in England, is a Matter of no small Comfort, and giveth good Hope to the well affected in the Nations; only it is their earnest Desire that it may be free indeed, and not as it hath been in these late Times. To make a free Parliament a threefold Freedom is requisite. 1. That there be a Freedom in reference to the Matters therein to be handled; and in particular, that they be not predetermined in that which is the main Matter, by the Army, or any other in Place or Power, toward the settling of any Government contrary to the Minds and Inclinations of the Bulk of that Body which they represent. 2. That there be a Freedom in their voicing, without being overruled. It was thought most absurd, and an Encroachment upon the Freedom of Parliament, when the King seized upon some Members of the House; what shall be then thought if a whole Parliament should be raised, and not permitted to sit? But this Usage is not to be feared, since it hath pleased the Lord, in his Providence, to make my Lord General instructed for their Meeting; it is expected that he will also prove vigilant and faithful for their peaceable Sitting. 3. There is a Freedom requisite for the Subjects to present their Desires and Overtures for the Government, that they may be more kindly accepted than hath been the Use in late Times, wherein a Man hath been accounted an Offender for a Word. The People of Scotland have all this while, under the Variety of Changes, lived peaceably, submitting unto Providence, and do yet in a peaceable way wait patiently for Relief, and Enjoyment of their just Liberties. If they shall happen to be frustrate of their Expectation, they must in Patience possess their Souls, till God appear for them: But better Things are hoped for from this Parliament, which God hath raised up to act for publick Interests, and common Liberty. It is Time in their Endeavours to settle these distracted Nations: They will meet with many Difficulties; but if all the well affected were to speak unto them, they would speak in the Words of Azariah the Son of Oded, 2 Chron. 15. spoken to Judah in those Times, when there was no Peace to him that went out, nor to him that came in, but great Vexations were upon all the Inhabitants of the Countries, and Nation was destroyed of Nation, and City of City, for God did vex them with all Adversity. Be ye strong therefore, let not your Hands be weak, for your Work shall be rewarded: Upon the hearing of which Words of Oded, they took Courage, reformed Religion, put away all these Things that were abominable in the Sight of God, and entered into a Covenant to seek the Lord God of their Fathers with all their Hearts, and all their Souls.

Letter to the King's Majesty, from Mrs. Robert Douglas, David Dickson, James Hamilton, John Smith, and George Hutchison, Edinburgh, May 8. 1660. N^o. IV.

May it please your Majesty,

WE cannot but admire the Faithfulness and tender Compassions of the Lord our God, who keepeth Covenant and Mercy, in that it hath pleased him to have respect to the long and sad Afflictions of your Majesty, and of your faithful Subjects, and to the many Prayers put up to him, in great Trials of Affliction, by opening so comfortable and promising Door of Hope, that he will repossess your Majesty in your just Rights, and restore unto your People their Rulers as at the first, and their Counsellors as at the Beginning, and that probably (which we hear your Majesty so much desires) without Effusion of Blood: This is the Lord's Doing, and it is wonderful in our Eyes, that we may not only enjoy the Liberty (whereof we have been long, to our great Grief, deprived) to tender our faithful Service at such a Distance, but are filled with Hopes to enjoy your Majesty's Presence in your own Dominions, as a bright Sunshine after a long and tempestuous Night, to prove a Shelter and Encouragement to all these who delight to walk in the Ways of Truth and Peace. And, when we abstract from Instruments in all the late Revolutions, we cannot but further adore the holy and wise Providence of God, who, having preserved your Majesty's Royal Person in imminent Hazards, hath seen it fit to breed you (as another David) in the School of Affliction, that you may be an eminent Instrument in his right Hand, to promote the Interests of his Son Jesus Christ, and to rule for him; whereof your Majesty's Moderation of Spirit, and Steadfastness in the Truth, in all your sharp Trials, have been comfortable and refreshing Evidences to all who have heard thereof. Sir, As the Condition of your Majesty, and of your Dominions, have been no light Affliction of Spirit to us, and to the Lord's faithful Servants in this Church with us, these Years bygone, while we have been forced to encounter with Difficulties, both from among our selves, and from without; so it hath been no small Addition to our Affliction, that we could not any other way express our Duty to your Majesty, than by our Endeavours to sympathize with you, and our Prayers to God for you; for any comfortable Account whereof, we do heartily bless him, and do resolve, in the Power of his Grace, to give him more Employment, till it please him to perfect that good Work which he hath begun. But now, since it hath pleased God to open a Door (which we have long desired) for our Brother Mr. Sharp to come and wait upon your Majesty, we could not any longer forbear to present by him this our humble Address, in Testimony of our loyal Affection to your Majesty, and our humble Acknowledgment of the Lord's Goodness to these your Dominions, in this comfortable Revolution of Affairs, making way for your Majesty's Reinstalment. If it had been expedient in this Juncture of Affairs, your Majesty might have expected an Address from the Generality of the Ministers of this Church, who, we assure your Majesty, have continued, and will continue in their Loyalty to Authority, and the Maintenance of your just Rights, in their Stations, according to these Principles by which your Majesty left them walking in Opposition both to Enemies from without, and Disturbers from within: But, doubting that such an Application is not yet seasonable, we have desired Mr. Sharp to inform your Majesty more fully of the true State of this Church; whereby, we trust, your Majesty will perceive our Painfulness and Fidelity in these trying Times, and that the Principles of the Church of Scotland are such, and so fixed for the Preservation and Maintenance of lawful Authority, as your Majesty needs never repent that you have entered into a Covenant for maintaining thereof: So that we nothing doubt of your Majesty's constant Resolution to protect this Church in her established Privileges, and are no less confident (tho' we presume not to meddle without our Sphere) that your Majesty will not only hearken to the humble Advices of those who are concerned, but will also, of your own Royal Inclination, appear to settle the House of God, according to his Word, in all your Dominions. Now the Lord himself bless your Majesty; let his right Hand settle and establish you upon the Throne of your Dominions, and replenish your Royal Heart with all those Graces and Endowments necessary for repairing the Breaches of these so long distracted Kingdoms; that Religion and Righteousness may flourish in your Reign, the present Generation may bless God for the Mercies received by you, and the Generations to come may reap the Fruits of your Royal Pains. So pray,

Directed,
For the King's Majesty.

Instructions for Mr. James Sharp, in reference to the King, May 8. No. V.

1. YOU shall fully inform the King of the constant Fidelity of the Body of the Ministry of Scotland, to him; and that (however some Endeavours were of Necessity used, to prevent Prejudices to the Government of the Kirk, yet) Conscience hath been made, of not complying with any that have been in Power, nor seeking or receiving any Benefit from them, notwithstanding many Hazards to which they were daily exposed by reason of their Fidelity, many Temptations from those who would gladly have conciliate their Favour, and many Trials and Temptations from those among our selves, who, to drive their own Designs, did fall off to those in Power, and did endeavour to irritate them against us, as constant Adherers to the King, and Enemies to them.

2. If need be, you may inform the King of the Testimony to the Government of the Kirk of Scotland, and the constant Adherers thereunto, extorted even from Adversaries; in that, however they did own that Party in this Church who did homologate their Way, yet they were forced to acknowledge that we were the Men of sober and rational Principles, and therefore did endeavour to gain us, but in vain.

3. In informing of our constant Adherence to the King, and our dealing with God for him, if any Occasion be offered, to clear our forbearing to express his Name in our publick Prayers, you may clear, that it was only a forbearing to express royal Titles, lest thereby greater Prejudice might have ensued, both to the Work of the Gospel, and to the King's Affairs; but the Thing it self was constantly kept up by us, even in Publick, in so far that it was still charged upon us, that though we forbore the Name, yet we did the Equivalent.

4. When ye have Occasion to sound the King's Inclinations concerning Religion, ye may inform, That all honest Men have their Eyes much upon his Majesty's self, that he will not only be ready to hearken to wholesom Counsel, but will of himself give eminent Proof of his being taught in the School of Affliction, to be an eminent Promoter of Reformation, as another Josiah; and particularly, you may inform, That as we doubt nothing of his Constancy in adhering to what he is engaged unto by Covenant, as to us; so, whatever Motives he may have to take another Course in England, either to incline to an Episcopacy, or to give a Latitude to Variety of Ways (wherein, beside our Judgment of the Things themselves, and the Consideration of the King's Engagement, we cannot but foresee many Inconveniencies; and, for your further Instruction in this Particular, we refer you to the Letter of April 26. and a Paper of March 27.) yet there is no Shew even of Conveniency or Advantage, to alter any Thing of the settled Government of the Kirk of Scotland, wherein all the People are generally principled, and do acquiesce.

You may also inform how necessary it is, that the King, in dealing with this Kingdom, do give an equal Countenance to all who have adhered to him, in these late Revolutions; and that Care be taken, that no Factions made by any, upon any Thing, be allowed to the Prejudice of others no less faithful. You know, that, among the King's real Friends, some have taken more Liberty to make the best they could of the late Times, who now seem to set themselves among those who would be greatest Courtiers; and we have nothing to say against any particular Favour the King may please to put upon them; yet, if those, and others with them, should be only countenanced, and others under a Cloud who have made Conscience to abstain from the least Shadow of Compliance, it cannot but sadden honest Men much, give Occasion to real Compliers to insult over them, and exceedingly prejudge the King's Affairs, who, we trust, will hold to his old Principle, That he came not to be a Head to a Faction, but a King to all.

As for those among us, with whom you know we have had so much Vexation, you may inform, if you find Cause, That we really wish no Evil to their Persons, nor shall, for our Part, stumble, if the King exercise his Moderation toward them; yet we apprehend their Principles to be such (especially their Leaders) as their having any Hand in Affairs, cannot but breed continual Distempers and Disorders.

When you have Occasion to speak concerning the settling of Religion in England, you may further remember to inform the King how many Presbyterians are in England, who have cleaved to him, who cannot acknowledge Episcopacy to be of God's Institution, and cannot but expect hard Things if that Yoke be imposed upon them: Also you may inform of what Stamp divers of the later Episcopal Divines are, who not only run that Length in affecting Episcopacy, as to acknowledge the Patriarchates of Rome in the Western Church, but, in point of Doctrine, have published many strange Tenets, contrary to the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches, and of the Church of England, and orthodox Bishops in former Times. The settling of the Interest and Way of Men of such Principles, would give sober and orthodox Men Cause to fear the overturning of all Religion. You may also inform what Errors, Arminianism, Popery, &c. were hatched under Episcopacy, in the latter Times thereof.
and

Letter to the King's Majesty, from Mrs. Robert Douglas, David Dickson, and George Hutchison, Edinburgh, May 10. 1660. with the Earl of Rothes. No. VI.

May it please your Majesty,

WHILE your Majesty's faithful Subjects in this Kingdom were waiting upon the Lord for a comfortable Account of the late promising Revolution of Affairs, it pleased him, who remembreth his People in their low Estate, to refresh their Spirits, which have so long groined under so much Bondage, with the News of your Majesty's gracious Message to your Houses of Parliament of England, and their Proceeding thereupon, toward the Instalment of your Majesty in your just Right. Upon the first Hearing thereof, such of your Majesty's faithful Subjects, Ministers in this City, as had Occasion at any Time to be near your Royal Person, did hold it their Duty to make their humble Address, which they desired Mr. Sharp to present to your Majesty: And now the Earl of Rothes having made us acquainted with his Purpose to come and wait upon your Majesty, we have taken the Opportunity again to express our humble and sincere Affection to your Majesty, and our hearty Rejoycing in the Lord, who hath filled our Mouths with Laughter, because of this Change of his right Hand. This noble Lord (a true Lover of your Majesty, and his Country, and the true Interests thereof) can inform your Majesty with many of our Afflictions of Spirit under our Bondage, and how often our Grievs have doubled upon us, while we lookt for Peace, and behold, Trouble, and while many Endeavours to put a Period to our Miseries have been blasted, and contributed only to the augmenting thereof: But now we are like Men that dream, while we consider how eminently the Lord himself hath appeared, in turning again our Captivity. Hereby we are encouraged to trust our faithful God in all Exigents, who, after so many Years Success, hath fulfilled what he hath recorded in his Word against Oppressors and Ufurpers; and we cannot but look upon his doing all these great Things for your Majesty, and your Kingdoms, as a Token for Good, and Pledge of much further Kindness to be manifested. We may assert it to your Majesty, that as the Lord hath kept our Hearts from fainting during our long Captivity, and made us confidently expect a Revolution, and overturning of all the Designs of bloody Men; so no small Part of our Refreshment did flow from our Hopes, that your Majesty, being restored to your Kingdoms, after that God hath for a long Time trained you in the School of Affliction, shall give singular Proofs of your Proficiency therein. Your faithful Subjects do expect, that the Lord's so wonderful preserving and restoring of your Majesty, will produce no ordinary Effects; but as the Case is singular, so the Consequences thereof shall be proportionably comfortable. And, in all the Hazards to which Religion may be exposed, their Eyes are fixed upon your Majesty, as the Man of God's right Hand, who will not only give your Royal Assent to what your Subjects shall humbly propose, in order to the Security and Settlement thereof, but will, by your Majesty's own Example, and by improving the Royal Power, make it appear unto the World, that it is in your Heart to order the House of God according to his Word, who hath been pleased to respect your Majesty and your Royal House; so that your Subjects may be excited to their Duty, and encouraged to walk after such a Pattern. Your Majesty's constant Adherence to the Protestant Religion, amidst so many Temptations, and the Moderation of your Royal Spirit, expressed in your late gracious Message, are Pledges of our Hope, that Religion shall flourish in your Majesty's Reign, and that all good Men shall reap the Fruit of those many Desires and Prayers, put up to God in behalf of your Majesty and your Royal Family; and in particular, this Church do nothing doubt of your Majesty's Royal Protection and Countenance to the Religion therein established, wherein it hath pleased the Lord so to confirm and establish all Ranks of Persons, notwithstanding all the Delusions of the Time, that (beside the Justice of the Thing it self) there will be no Hazard to any Interest, to preserve all the Privileges thereof inviolable. We have briefly laid open these Thoughts of our Heart, which our sincere Desire of your Majesty's Happiness and Prosperity doth suggest unto us; and we trust the Lord will give your Majesty Understanding in all Things, and instruct you to judge and esteem of Counsels, according as they shall be found consonant to the Will of him who is the supreme

Supreme Lawgiver. To his rich Grace, and wise Direction, your Majesty is recommended by,

Letter to Mrs. Calamy, Ash, and Manton from Mrs. David Dickson, Robert Douglas, James Hamilton, John Smith, and George Hutchison, Edinburgh May 12. 1660. N^o. VII.

Right Reverend and dear Brethren,
As we often had Occasion of comfortable Correspondence with our Brethren in England, and under our late Distresses have several Times given you an Account of our Case, and have been refreshed with your tender Respects toward us, so we held it our Duty to pour out our Hearts unto you, upon Occasion of this signal Revolution of Affairs, wherein the Lord's Hand hath so eminently appeared, that our Mouths are filled with Laughter, and our Tongues with singing. We are indeed as Men who dream, when we consider how the Lord hath so ordered this Dispensation, as to give us Hopes to see our lawful Magistrate possessed in his just Rights, in so harmonious and peaceable a Way. And though we doubt not but many will now be active to have Reformation of Religion at least obstructed; yet we cannot but hope, that the Lord, who hath done all these Things for us, is so far from a Purpose to destroy us, that he is putting in our Hands a blessed Opportunity of advancing his Kingdom, if we were fitted for such a Mercy, and the Dispensation be rightly improved. Though it hath pleased the Lord so far to advance his Work in this Church, as that all the Privileges and Interests thereof are established by Law, with the King's Royal Consent, whereunto the People have generally submitted, even in our late Confusions, and though we purpose not to stretch our selves beyond our Line; yet our tender Sympathy with honest Men there, and even Respect to the Welfare of this Church (Experience having taught us how much Influence the Condition of Affairs with you had upon us) makes us apprehensive of the sad Consequences of setting up Episcopacy, and the Use of Liturgy again, under which Religion hath suffered so much, as your selves do well remember. We hope the Lord is putting it in your and your Brethrens Hearts to lay forth your selves at this Time for preventing those Evils, and what may have a Tendency thereunto, or may encourage People to look toward these Ways. We may assure you, that you have to do with a moderate Prince, who is ready to hearken to sound and wholesome Counsel, whereof we had large Experience, in that his Majesty was not only content to descend to lay aside the Service-book, and observed the Directory of Worship in his own Practice and Family, all the while it pleased God to continue his Majesty with us. You have now the Advantage of humble Dealing with a Prince long trained in the School of Affliction, and preserved therein, and (we trust) fitted thereby to be an eminent Instrument in God's right Hand for the Advancement of his Son's Kingdom: And therefore we trust his Majesty will hearken to what humble Advice God shall put in your Hearts for him, that he may be exemplary in his own Practice, and put forth his Royal Power for Satisfaction of honest Men in the Matters of Religion. We are far from prescribing unto you our Reverend and dear Brethren, or from being any Thing doubtful of your Vigilance and Activity in this Juncture of Affairs; but it flows only from our Abundance of Affection, and the Conscience of our Obligation by Covenant, that we have given you the Trouble of these few Lines. We know how incumbent it is to us in our Stations, to forbear to intrude upon the Work of others, and do purpose to demean our selves accordingly; yet we are most confident that this Expression of our brotherly Love will not be unacceptable unto you. And we shall pray, that the Lord may give you Understanding in all Things, and may lead you forth in his right Hand, to act in your Stations at this Time for the Good of Religion; and for the settling of that Government in the Church, which you have so solidly asserted by Writing, and which is the most effectual Mean to stop the Current of Profanity, and damnable Errors and Heresies, as we have found by Experience: For we fear that if this Opportunity, which God hath put in our Hands, be lost, it will hardly (if at all) be recovered. And if the Lord be pleased to assist you in the managing thereof, it shall be your your Rejoycing to have been instrumental in refreshing the Spirits of honest Men in all the Three Nations, and your Labour shall be acceptable to God, through Jesus Christ, and tend to the Advantage of the true Religion in the present and succeeding Generations. We add no more, but that we heartily recommend you to the Lord's rich Grace, and are

Your very loving Brethren,
David Dickson,
Mr. Robert Douglas,
Mr. James Hamilton,
Mr. John Smith,
George Hutchison.

Some few Particulars which Mr. Sharp is desired to propound to the King's Majesty by Conference, at fit Opportunities. N^o. VIII.

1. ALbeit we doubt not of his Majesty's being satisfied of our Loyalty and good Affection to his Service; yet you may, from Time to Time, further assure his Majesty, that our gracious God hath eased our Spirits of a long and sad Pressure, by overturning all these bloody Usurpers, and restoring his Majesty to rule over us, and hath hereby sent us a gracious Return of these many Petitions we have put up to him in Times of deep Distress on that behalf, which hath raised our Expectations, that the Lord, who hath done all these Things for us, hath a Purpose of doing much Good to these Kingdoms by his Majesty's Means.

2. You may signify unto his Majesty, how much we are refreshed with the Intimations we have received of his Resolution to restore us unto our civil Liberties, and to preserve the Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government of this Church. This we look upon not only as an acceptable Service to the King of Kings, whose Interests we believe these are, and as an Act of special Kindness and Favour in his Majesty, to look to the Preservation of their just Rights, Civil and Ecclesiastical, who did expose all to Hazard, and much real and sad Suffering, in pursuance of their Duty and Loyalty to his Majesty, and who have made it their Study in these trying Times, to give Evidence that their Religion and Reformation doth teach them Loyalty: But we look upon it also as a notable Advantage to his Majesty's own Interests, who shall hereby give Proof, that (notwithstanding the rigid Dealing of some toward his Majesty in some Particulars, which you know we do heartily disapprove) no Afflictions or Temptations have prevailed with his Majesty, to withdraw him from his first voluntary Engagement to his People, and the Oath of the Covenant, and shall also fix unto his Majesty an Interest which, we are persuaded, will cleave fast unto him and his Interests in all Exigents; for you may assure his Majesty (which we intreat may be understood without reflecting on any, without any Desire in us to continue Factions among loyal Subjects) that among the various Tempers of his Subjects, he will find none more fixed for him than Men of the Principles of the Church of Scotland are, and will be.

3. As to the settling of Religion in his Majesty's other Dominions, you may inform his Majesty, that we are very far from intruding our selves upon the Affairs of others, or meddling without our Sphere; and therefore have been very sparing to communicate Counsels with any there, as your self knows; yet there are not a few Considerations (beside our Judgments of the Things themselves) which prevail with us humbly to pour forth our Hearts before his Majesty himself, such as our cordial and sincere Desires (as the Searcher of Hearts knoweth) towards the Prosperity of his Majesty's Throne, and the completing of this so glorious a Work, our Fear to be found unfaithful to his Majesty, who, as he hath been pleased graciously to admit of our Freedom formerly, so, we believe, doth still expect it from us, having by his gracious Letter since the late sad Separation, not only invited, but conjured some of us to it, our Knowledge of the Temper of many People here and elsewhere, whereof possibly his Majesty may not be so fully informed, and our hearty Desire that this blessed Revolution may be completely comfortable to all honest and loyal Subjects who have suffered under the late Tyranny, and have been earnest Dealers with God for the Accomplishment of what they now see with their Eyes: These are some of the Motives which prevail with us, to desire that his Majesty may be informed in these few Particulars.

1. How much it will concern his Majesty to reflect upon the Proceedings at his Majesty's ly's Coronation here, and seriously consider what is incumbent now to be done thereupon, that being his first publick Transaction with his Subjects.

2. His Majesty would be informed, how suitable it would be for a Prince, so educated by God, and preserved and restored by him, not only to agree to the humble Desires of his Subjects, but to let forth somewhat of his own Inclination toward an acceptable Settlement of Religion. As his Majesty's Practice in Scotland, and his Resolution to preserve these Things with us, do assure us of his Majesty's Approbation thereof in his Judgment, and of his Readiness to give his Royal Assent to what shall be proposed agreeable thereunto: So his Majesty's Royal Inclination being known, we doubt not of a more general Concurrence, than while good People are kept in Suspence.

3. You may inform his Majesty, that we humbly propose this Expedient of his Majesty's prudent putting forth himself in this Business, not only upon the account of Conscience as to the Thing it self, but upon Point of Prudence also, for the good of his Majesty's Affairs. We shall not concern our selves to dive into the Temper of Independents and other Sectaries, and how they may relish Episcopacy and the Liturgy in this recent Settlement of Affairs, nor trouble you with an Account of what Noise is raised upon the very Appearance thereof by others whom you know: But if his Majesty knew what Grief of Heart the Fear of Episcopacy and the Service-book, is to many loyal and honest Subjects, who have much and often mourned in secret for him, and do now rejoyce in his wonderful Restitution, and how much it would refresh them to be secured against these Fears, we are confident he would be most ready to satisfy such Subjects who will count nothing temporal too dear to be laid forth as his Majesty's Affairs shall require: And tho' it may be conceived that the Affairs of England do nothing concern them; yet they cannot but remember from former Experience, what Influence the State of the Church of England hath had upon this Church. Beside this, as we know there is a very considerable Plantation in Ireland of loyal and honest Presbyterians, who will be ruined by Episcopacy and the Liturgy, so we apprehend that in England, however People, fearing the worst, be content of any Thing that is better than it, yet when they shall see a Settlement of these Things wherewith they are dissatisfied, it cannot but be very grievous to them.

4. His Majesty is to be humbly informed, that at least (if these humble Intimations from us have no Weight) it would be expedient not to conclude and determine in these Things suddenly; but that his Majesty and his Parliament take Time till he know the true Temper of his Subjects, and what will be his real Interest, which will be better known afterward when his Majesty shall have Leisure to understand his People's Inclinations by himself, and his good People shall have Confidence, knowing his Majesty's Disposition, freely to represent the true State of Things.

These Things have lien upon our Hearts, to have them freely imparted to his Majesty, out of no other Design, next unto the Glory of our Lord, but that we may witness our Zeal to his Majesty's Prosperity and Happiness. And we shall not cease to pray that God may guide his Majesty, and make him wise as an Angel of God, to do these Things that shall be well pleasing in his Sight, and which may happily settle these long distracted Kingdoms.

Draught of a Proclamation for an Assembly. No. IX.

CHARLES, by the Grace of GOD, King of Scotland, England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, to Our Lovits, Heralds, Messengers, Our Sheriffs in that Part, conjunctly and severally, specially constitute, Greeting: Forasmuch as, through and upon occasion of the Looseness and Distraction of these late Times, divers Disorders have broken forth in the Church of this Our ancient Kingdom of Scotland, which We do hold it Our Duty, in Our Royal Station, to heal and restrain by proper and fit Remedies: And considering that National and General Assemblies are the most proper and effectual Remedies for preventing and curing such Distempers within this Church; and that notwithstanding there are divers Laws and Acts of Parliament of this Kingdom, warranting and securing the National Assemblies within the same, and it hath been the laudable Practice of Our Royal Predecessors to authorize and countenance these Meetings, and We Our selves were graciously pleased to honour the Assembly at St. Andrews and Dundee with the Presence of Our Commissioner; yet the armed Violence of the late Usurper did not spare to make forcible Interruption to these Meetings, so that the same have been intermitted for a long Time: And seeing it hath pleased GOD graciously and wonderfully to restore Us to Our just and ancient Right and Government, and to hear and satisfy the earnest Prayers and Desires of the good People of this Nation in that behalf, We are resolved to improve the Power and Authority he has given Us, to his Honour, and for promoting and advancing Religion and Piety, and repressing Error, Profaneness and Disorder within this Kingdom, and, in order to these Ends, to apply and restore these Remedies, which have been so long wanting and withholden upon the Occasion foresaid. Therefore We have thought fit to indict and call a General Assembly, and, by these Presents, We do indict, appoint, and ordain a free General Assembly of this Church, to be kept and holden at Edinburgh the Day of next, at which Time We purpose, God willing, that a Commissioner from Us shall be there, to represent Us and Our Authority: And We will and ordain, that Presbyteries, and others concerned, may choose, elect, and send their Commissioners to that Meeting.

OUR WILL is herefore, and We charge you straitly, and command, That, incontinent these Our Letters seen, you pass, and make Publication hereof at the Market-crofs of Edinburgh, and other Burghs of this Kingdom, wherethrough none pretend Ignorance; and that you warn thereat all and sundry Presbyteries, and others concerned in the Election of Commissioners to General Assemblies, to the effect aforesaid, and also all Commissioners from Presbyteries, and others having Place and Vote in Assemblies, to repair and address themselves to the said Town of Edinburgh, the said Day of and to attend the said Assembly during the Time thereof, and ay and while the same be dissolved; and to do and perform all which, to their Charges, in such Cases appertaineth, as they will answer to the contrary.

Per REGEM.

Letter from Mrs. Calamy, Ash, and Manton, to Mrs. David Dickson, Robert Douglas, James Hamilton, John Smith, and George Hutchison London, August 10. 1660. No. X.

Reverend and beloved Brethren,

WE had sooner returned our Thanks to you, for your brotherly Salutation and Remembrance of us, but that we expected the Conveniency of Mr. Sharp's Return, hoping by that Time Things would grow to such a Consistency, that we might be able to give you a satisfactory Account of the State of Religion among us. We do, with you, heartily rejoice in the Return of our Sovereign to the Exercise of Government over those his Kingdoms; and as we cannot but own much of God in the Way of bringing it about, so we look upon the Thing it self as the Fruit of Prayers, and a Mercy not to be forgotten. Hitherto our God hath helped us, in breaking the formidable Power of Sectaries, causing them to fall by the Violence of their own Attempts, and in restoring to us our ancient Government after so many Shakings, the only proper Basis to support the Happiness and just Liberties of these Nations, and freeing us from the many Snares and Dangers to which we were exposed by the former Confusions and Usurpations: Therefore we will yet wait upon the Lord, who hath in part heard us, until all those Things, concerning which we have humbly sought to him, be accomplished and brought about. We heartily thank you for your kind and brotherly Encouragements, and shall in our Places endeavour the advancing of the covenanted Reformation, according to the Bonds yet remaining upon our own Consciences, and our renowned Professions before God and Man; and though we cannot but foresee potent Oppositions and sad Discouragements in the Work, yet we hope our God will carry us through all Difficulties and Hazards, at length cause the Foundations now laid to increase into a perfect Building, that the Top-stone may be brought forth with Shoutings, and his People cry, Grace, Grace unto it.

We bless God on your behalf, that your Warfare is in a great Measure accomplished, and the Church of Christ, and the Interests thereof, so far owned in Scotland, as to be secured, not only by the uniform Submission of the People, but also by Laws, and those confirmed by the Royal Assent, a Complication of Blessings, which yet the Kingdom of England hath not obtained, and (though we promise our selves much from the Wisdom, Piety and Clemency of his Royal Majesty) through our manifold Distractions, Distances and Prejudices, not like suddenly to obtain: Therefore we earnestly beg the Continuance of your Prayers for us, in this Day of our Conflict, Fears and Temptations, as also your Advice and Counsel, that, on the one Side, we may neither by any Forwardness and rigid Counsels of our own, hazard the Peace and Safety of a late sadly distempered, and not yet healed Nation, and on the other Side, by undue Compliances, destroy the Hopes of a begun Reformation. We have to do with Men of different Humours and Principles; the general Stream and Current is for the old old Prelacy in all its Pomp and Height, and therefore it cannot be hoped for, that the Presbyterian Government should be owned as the publick Establishment of this Nation, while the Tide runneth so strongly that way; and the bare Toleration of it will certainly produce a Mischief, whilst Papists, and Sectaries of all Sorts, will wind in themselves under the Covert of such a Favour: Therefore no Course seemeth likely to us to secure Religion, and the Interests of Christ Jesus our Lord, but by making Presbytery a Part of the Publick Establishment; which will not be effected, but by moderating and reducing Episcopacy to the Form of Synodical Government, and a mutual Condescendency of both Parties in some lesser Things, which fully come within the Latitude of allowable Differences in the Church. This is all we can for the present hope for; and if we could obtain it, we should account it a Mercy, and the best Expedient to ease his Majesty, in his great Difficulties about the Matter of Religion: And, we hope, none that fear God, and seek the Peace of Sion, considering the perplexed Posture of our Affairs, will interpret this to be any Tergiversation from our Principles, or Apostacy from the Covenant; but if we cannot obtain this, we must be content, with Prayers and Tears, to commend our Cause to God, and, by meek and humble Sufferings, to wait upon him, until he be pleased to prepare the Hearts of the People for his beautiful Work, and to bring his Ways (at which they are now so much scandalized) into Request with them.

Thus we have, with all Plainness and Simplicity of Heart, laid forth our Straits before you, who again beg your Advice and Prayers, and heartily recommend you to the Lord's Grace, in whom we are

SUFFERINGS
Church of SCOTLAND.

BOOK FIRST.

From the Restoration 1660, to Pentland-Engagement 1666.

THE heavy Persecution of Presbyterians in Scotland, from the Restoration 1660. to the Revolution 1688. is as amazing in the Springs of it, as surprizing in its Nature and Circumstances: And the following Narrative of it will open a very horrid Scene of Oppression, Hardships, and Cruelty, which, were it not uncontestably true, and well vouched and supported, could not be credited in After-ages.

I am perswaded, the Advocates for the Methods taken during the two Reigns I am to describe, must be put hard to it, to assign any tolerable Reason of so much ungrateful and unparalleled Severity, against a Set of Persons who had, with the greatest Warmth and Firmness, appeared for the King's Interest, when at its lowest, and suffered so much, and so long, for their Loyalty to Him, in the Time of the Usurpation.

The Violences of this Period, and the playing one Part of Protestants against another, in my Opinion can no way be so well accounted for, as when lodged at the Door of Papists, and our Scots Prelates; who, generally speaking, were much of a Spirit with them. Indeed so much of the cruel, bloody, and tyrannical Spirit of Antichrist, runs through the Laws and Actings of this Period, as makes this very evident to me. I am not so uncharitable as to charge with Popery all the Prelatists, who held Hand to, and were the Authors of this Persecution; but I am very sure they played the Game of Rome very fast, and bewrayed too much of one 1660. of the worst Branches of Popery, a cruel persecuting Temper, towards such who differed from them for Conscience sake.

It is useless, and, in some Cases, unfair to load Princes with all the Iniquity committed under their Reign: How far King Charles II. was chargeable with all the Steps taken by those he made Use of in Scotland, is not my Business to determine. It is probable he wished, when it was too late, that he had less followed the Counsels of France and his Brother.

Whether the Two Brothers, in their Exile, or almost with their Milk, drunk in the Spirit and Temper of Popery; whether both of them in their Wandrings were present at Mass, and assisted at Processions; whether the eldest died as really in the Communion of the Church of Rome, as his Brother gave out, I do not say: But to me it is evident, and ere I end, will be so to the Reader, that under their Reigns, Matters, both in Scotland and England, were ripening very fast toward Popery and Slavery.

this Period towards Popery.

Every Thing pointed this Way, and favoured the darling Project of Rome and France, the Rooting out the Northern Heresy. The hasty Dissolution of the Parliament of England, which had so cheerfully invited the King Home, most of whom were firm Protestants; the gradual putting of the most important Posts and Trusts in the Hands of such as were indifferent to all Religions, and no Enemies to that of Rome; the breaking in upon the Constitution, Liberties, and excellent Laws of Scotland; the evident carefing, and shewing Favour to every Person and Course that tended to advance arbitrary Government, and the Enlargement of the Prerogative, and served to abridge the Power of Parliament, and Liberty of the Subject; the open Toleration of Papists; the plain Spite and Hatred which appeared against the Dutch and Holland, the great Bulwark of the Reformation abroad; the burning of London; the Dover League; the mighty Efforts made to compass a Popish Succession, and many other Things, put it beyond all Question, that Papists were not only open, but very successful in their Designs, during this Period.

Among all their Projects, they succeeded in none more, than that of playing our Scots Bishops, and their Supporters, against the Presbyterians. And nothing could more advance the hellish Design, than the removing out of the Way such zealous Protestants and excellent Patriots, as the noble Marquis of Argyle, the good Lord Wariston, and the bold and worthy Mr. James Guthrie. Nothing could gratify the Papists more, than the banishing such eminent Lights, as the Reverend Mrs. Mcquaird, Livingstone, Brown, Nevoy, Trail, Simpson, and others; together with the illegal imprisoning and confining, without any Crime, Libel, or Cause assigned, such excellent Gentlemen as Sir George Maxwell of Nether-pollock, Sir William Cunningham of Cunningham-head, Sir Hugh Campbell of Cesnock, Sir William Muir of Rowallan, Sir James Stuart Provost of Edinburgh, Sir John Chiesly of Carswell, Major General Montgomery, Brother to the Earl of Eglington, Major Holburn, George Porterfield and John Graham, Provosts of Glasgow, with several others who will come to be noticed in this Book.

By such Steps as those, and others to be mentioned in the Progress of this History, Popery mounted the Throne; and our Holy Religion, and excellent Constitution were brought to the greatest Danger, and the very Brink of Ruin: From which, by a most extraordinary Appearance of Providence, the Lord delivered us at the late happy Revolution, which, under God, we owe to the never to be forgotten King William of immortal Memory.

General Method in this History.

In my Accounts of the Barbarities of this unhappy Time, I shall go through the Transactions of each Year, as they lie in Order, as far as my Materials and Vouchers will carry me. This appears to me the plainest and most entertaining Method: And though now and then some Hints at other Affairs, besides the Persecution of Presbyterians, will come in of Course, and I hope will be the rather allowed, that as yet we have no tolerable History of this Period, as to the Church and Kingdom of Scotland; yet I shall still keep principally in my View, the Sufferings of Scots Presbyterians, in their Religious and Civil Rights.

Its Division.

Agreeably therefore unto the Three most remarkable Æra's of the Period I have undertaken, I have divided this History, as in the Title, into Three Books: And for the Reader's easier Access and Recourse to every Particular, and the Help of his Memory, as well as my better ranging the great Variety of Matter come to my Hand; it will not be improper, however unfashionable, to divide every Book into Chapters, and those again into Sections, according as each Year offers more or less Matter. This Book then I begin with

CHAPTER I.

Of the State and Sufferings of Presbyterians, during the Year 1660.

WHEN the King was restored to his Dominions, May 29th, 1660. no Part of his Subjects had a better Title to his Favour, than the Presbyterians. English Writers can tell, what Influence the London Ministers had upon the City-petition, which, by Papers I have seen, appears to have had a very considerable Branch of its Rise from Scotland: As also, what Interest the Presbyterian Ministers in the City, had with the prime Managers there, and what Return they very quickly had for their Share in the Restoration.

Presbyterians Share in the Restoration and City-petition.

In Scotland, Mr. Robert Douglas was the First, as far as I can find, who ventured to propose the King's Restoration to General Monk, and that very early: He travelled, 'tis said, incognito in England, and in Scotland engaged considerable Numbers of Noblemen and Gentlemen in this Project. From his own original Papers, I find, that when Monk returned from his First projected March into England, Mr. Douglas met him, and engaged him again in the Attempt; and when at London, the General appeared to him flow in his Measures for the King's Restoration, Mr. Douglas wrote him a very pressing Letter, and plainly told him, "That if he lost Time much longer, without declaring for the King, there were a good Number in Scotland, with their Brethren in Ireland, ready to bring his Majesty Home without him." Yea, the Ministers in Scotland were all of them vigorous Asserters of the King's Right, and early embarked in his Interest.

Mr. Robert
Douglas his particular Activity.

Yet all this was soon forgot, and Mr. (afterwards Chancellor) Hyde, a violent Zealot for the English Hierarchy, is made chief Favourite, and Lord Chancellor of England. And Mr. James Sharp, who was the earliest, and most scandalous Complicier with Cromwell, and the only one he had for some Years, not only signed his owning of the Commonwealth, and that neither directly nor indirectly he should ever act for the King; but by taking the Tender he solemnly abjured the whole Family of the Stuarts. This infamous and Time-serving Person, by Middleton's Means, is put at the Head of Affairs in the Church of Scotland, and managed Matters entirely to Hyde, and the high-flying Party in England, their Satisfaction.

All this forgot,
and Hyde and Sharp at the Head of Affairs.

Upon the King's Return, great was the Run of our Nobility and Gentry to London. It was impossible to satisfy all their Expectations: Such who missed Posts, were entertained with Promises, and for a while behaved to please themselves with Hopes. The chief Offices of State were soon disposed of: The Earl of Middleton was to be Commissioner when the Parliament should meet; the Earl of Glencairn is made Chancellor, the Earl of Lawderdale Secretary, the Earl of Crawford Lord Treasurer, Sir John Gilmore President of the Session, Sir Archibald Primrose Clerk-register, and Mr. (afterwards Sir) John Fletcher King's Advocate.

Officers of State at the King's Return
in Scotland.

Some View hath been given in the Introduction of the Transactions of the former Part of this Year; yet it may be of some Use to draw down an Abstract of Matters from General Monk's leaving Scotland, until the King's putting the Government of Affairs in the Hands of the Committee of Estates, who sat down in August; and next, to consider their Proceedings, and the Hardships they put upon Ministers, Gentlemen, and others, till the Sitting down of the Parliament. Thus this Chapter will fall in Two Halves.

Division of this Chapter.

SECT. I.

Containing a short Deduction of our Affairs in Scotland, from General Monk's leaving it, to the Sitting down of the Committee of Estates at Edinburgh, August 23^d, 1660.

HAD we any tolerable History of this Church and Kingdom, since the Union of the Two Crowns, I should have come straight to the proper Subject of this History: But I shall, till a larger Account be given, hand my self and the Reader into it, by the following short Hint of Things in Scotland.

Confusions after Cromwell's Death.

After the Death of Oliver Cromwell, there was nothing in England but one Confusion upon the Back of another. April 1659. his Son Richard dissolved the Parliament; and in a little Time he is forced to demit, and Things fall into a new Shape almost every Month: Several of the Counties in England run to Arms, and Matters were in the greatest Disorder imaginable.

Monk manages all in Scotland, and imprisons many Noble men and others.

Mean while General Monk manages all in Scotland; and, during these Risings in England, apprehended and imprisoned the Earls Marishal, Montrose, Eglinton, Selkirk, Glencairn and Lowdon, Lord Montgomery, L. General David Leslie, Viscount of Kenmure, the Lord Lorn, Earl of Seaforth, Sir James Lumsden, Colonel James Hay, Earl of Kelly, Major Livingstone, and the Earl of Roths. Such of them as took the Tender, and gave Bond for their peaceable Behaviour, were soon liberate.

New Turns in England.

In October, Lambert threatened to attack the Parliament then sitting at London, but was repulsed, and by them divested of his Command, and Seven Persons appointed to govern the Army, whereof Monk was one. But in a little Time Lambert returned, dismissed the Parliament, and shut the Doors of the Parliament-house. October 19. Monk called together all the Officers of the Army in Scotland, and engaged them by Oath, to submit to, and serve the Parliament, cashiered all he suspected, imprisoned some, and modelled all according to his Mind.

Army secured in Scotland.

Monk refuses to obey the Orders of the English Army, and resolves to march into England.

The Army now prevailing in England, chose first a Council of State, consisting of Ten Persons, and next a Council of Twenty four, made up of the Officers of the Army: Monk was left out of both; and they sent down Orders for the Meeting of the Session, Exchequer, and other Courts in Scotland, which had not met since Richard Cromwell's Dimission. General Monk refused to put those Orders in Execution, as coming from an incompetent Authority, and resolves to march up with his Army to London, and restore the Privileges of Parliament.

His Speech to the Scots Commissioners, Nov. 15, 1659.

Before his Departure, he called together to Edinburgh the Commissioners from most Part of the Shires in Scotland, the Magistrates of Burghs, and a good many of the Nobility and Barons; who met in the Parliament-house, November 15. 1659. The General had a Speech to them to this Purpose, "That it was not unknown to them what Revolutions were happened; that some of the Army had put a Force on the Parliament of England, which he was resolved with God's Assistance to re-establish, and for that End was going with his Army to England; that with respect to the Nation of Scotland, his Regard to them was such, that if he had Success in his Design, he would befriend them in all their just Liberties, and study the Abatement of their Cefs: If the Business went contrary to his Expectation, then his Fall should be alone to himself, and not to their Prejudice, whose Help he was not to take; but desired, as they loved their Country, and their own Standing, that they would live peaceably, and see to the Peace of their several Shires and Burghs, according to their Stations; and if any Rising should fall out during his Absence, that they should suppress the same, let the Pretext be what it would; and that he would leave Orders with the Garisons he left, to assist them in so doing, and give his Mind more fully to them in Writ."

After rejecting the Articles sent him from England, marches to Berwick, Dec. 2.

November 22. Monk and his Army marched off to England; and when at Haddingtoun, he received Articles from the Council in England: Which not being satisfying, he returned with his Officers to Edinburgh, where, after Consultation, they rejected the Articles, as contrary to their Principles, which were to be governed not by the Sword, but a Parliament lawfully called, in the Maintenance of which they were engaged by Oath. Accordingly an Answer was returned to England, November 24. and, December 2. he marched with his Army to Berwick, where he continued some time; and December 12. the Commissioners of the Shires received from him their Commissions for keeping the Peace in his Absence.

English Parliament meet Dec. 25. declare Monk General, who marches to London, Jan. 4, 1660.

The City of London, and many other Places, having declared for a Parliament, and against the Army, Lambert marches up from the Borders, whither he had come with the Army to oppose Monk; the Parliament sit down December 25. and Monk is declared General over all the Forces of the Three Kingdoms. And January 1. 1660. he follows Lambert, Fleetwood, and their Armies, and marches straight to London. The daily Melting away of the Army under Lambert and the rest, and the almost general Cry through England and Ireland for a free Parliament, with Monk's successful Arrival at London, and his Management till the King's Return, is at full Length to be found in the English Historians: And some Hints have been given of what concerns Scots Affairs, in the Introduction; so that I may pass over the former Part of this Year very briefly.

A new Parliament called, April 25. Some Things done mean while.

February 21. the secluded Members took their Places in the Parliament, to the Number of about Eighty, and of the Rump there were but Twenty one; so the former carried all as they pleased. General Monk is made Commander in Chief by Sea and Land. Writs are issued for a free Parliament to meet April 25. Mean while they confirmed the Solemn League and Covenant, and ordered it to be set up and read in all the Churches of England. Thus, as Bishop Kennet remarks, the Solemn League and Covenant did really conduce to the bringing in of the King. They ratified the Assembly's Confession of Faith, with a Reservation of Chap.

30. and 31. to further Consideration. Colonel Morgan, whom Monk had ordered in January to return to Scotland with a Thousand of the Army, when he saw all going so well in England, is appointed Commander of the Forces and Garrisons in Scotland. March 13. they rescind the Engagement taken by all Ranks, to be faithful to the Commonwealth of England, without King and House of Lords; and in Room of this, ordain all in Office to declare the War undertaken by both Houses of Parliament against the late King, just and lawful, and that Magistracy and Ministry were the Ordinances of God.

In Scotland, Edward Moysie, Henry Goodyear, Crook junior, John Howie, Esquires, and Sir John Wemyss, Sir James Hope, James Dalrymple, John Scougal of Humbie, James Robertson, and David Falconer, were appointed to be Civil and Criminal Judges, their Quorum Five, and to go in Circuits. But this Order took no Effect, every Body now expecting the King's Return.

The Parliament at London likewise liberate the Earl of Lawderdale, the Earl of Crawford, and Lord Sinclair, whom the Usurper and the Rump had kept Prisoners in the Tower now near Ten Years. A Day of Fasting and Prayer was also appointed to be kept April 6. for Conduct to the Parliament.

April 25. the Parliament sat down, and upon the 1st of May came to several Resolutions, "That the Government of England is by King, Lords, and Commons; That the King of Scotland is King of England," and others, which the Reader will meet with in the printed Accounts of this great Turn of Affairs; and I shall not repeat them. May 8. the King was proclaimed at London, and May 14. at Edinburgh. Sir John Granvil went over to his Majesty with Money; Lawderdale and Crawford went over with him. And we have seen that Mr. Sharp went about the same Time, and there probably concerted the Ruin of this Church, and the Measures very soon now entered upon against Presbyterians. May 29. the King entered London with great Solemnity, and published a Proclamation against Profaneness. I shall only take Notice of a few more Hints relative to the State of Affairs in Scotland, before the settling the Government in the Committee of Estates.

In April and May, the Synods met, where there appeared a very good Disposition towards healing the Rent 'twixt the Resolutioners and Protesters: And had not Mr. Sharp, by his Letters from London, diverted this upon the King's Return, and put him, and the Managers about him, upon beginning the Persecution, with attacking the Remonstrators, and the Ministers, who were Antiresolutioners, a little Time would have completed the Union. But Mr. Sharp had his own private Resentments against Mr. Rutherford, Mr. James Guthrie, the Lord Waristoun, and others of the Protesters, to gratify; and by that, was to pave the Way to ruine all firm Presbyterians; and therefore he put the Government upon the Measures we shall hear of, in which some of our Noblemen, fretted at the Discipline of the Church, willingly joyn'd him; and we have seen by his Letters, so dunned Mr. Douglas and others at Edinburgh, with his Accounts of the King's Dislike of the Protesters, and the approaching Evils upon them, all of his own procuring, that those good Men kept off from compromising Matters, and nothing in the Affair of the Union was effectually done, till all were cast to the Furnace together.

May 1. the Synod of Lothian met. Mr. Douglas opened it with a Sermon from 1 Cor. 4. 1. the Notes whereof are in mine Eye. Therein, after many judicious Remarks against Prelacy, from Ministers being Stewards, he warns his Brethren to keep equally at Distance from Malice and Sectarianism; he compares Profaneness and Malignancy to Rocks at Sea, which appear; and Sectarianism to quick Sands on the Shore, which swallow up People, before they are aware. He notices that Kingly Government in the State, and Presbyterian in the Church, are the greatest Curbs to Profaneness. He explodes the foolish Saying, No Bishop, no King. "Shall, says he, Kings, which are God's Ordinance, not stand, because Bishops, which are not God's Ordinance, cannot stand? The Government by Presbtery is good, but Prelacy is neither good in Christian Policy or Civil. Some say, May we not have a moderate Episcopacy? But 'tis a Plant God never planted, and the Ladder whereby Antichrist mounted his Throne. Bishops got Caveats, and never kept one of them, and will just do the like again. We have abjured Episcopacy, let us not lick it up again. Consider the Times past, how unconstant Men have proven, like Cock-boats tossing up and down; leave them, and come in to the Ship, walk up to the Way of the Covenant; and if this be not the Plank we come ashore upon, I fear a Storm come, and ruine all."

The Presbyterians in Scotland were extremely lift up with the King's safe Return, and in a little Time were but ill handled for their hearty Concern in the Restoration. Mr. Douglas preaching in Edinburgh, upon the Munday after the Parliament of England agreed on the above Resolutions, gave his Auditory an Account of the great Turn of Affairs, adding, that "it hath pleased the Lord to roll away all Difficulties which hindred the King from his Crown, and he who sold us for our Iniquities without Price, hath restored us without Money."

A Day of Thanksgiving was kept at Edinburgh, June 19. for the King's Restoration. After Sermons were over, the Magistrates came to the Cross, where was a covered Table with 1660.

Judges appointed in Scotland.

Lawderdale, Crawford and Sinclair liberated.

Parliament meet, and restore the King.

Synods in Scotland meet. The Prospect of Healing prevented by Mr. Sharp.

Mr. Douglas his Sermon before the Synod of Lothian.

They keep a Thanksgiving, June 19.

1660. sweet Meats; the Cross run with Wine, Three hundred Dozen of Glasses were broke, the Bells tolled, Trumpets sounded, and Drums beat. There were Fire-works upon the Castle-bill, with the Effigies of Cromwel, and the Devil pursuing him, till all was blown up in the Air. Great Solemnity, Bonfires, Mulick, and the like, were in other Places upon this Occasion.

But very quickly, a good many who had been Sharers of those publick Rejoycings, found they had Hardships to reap from the Restoration, and perhaps that they had exceeded a little in them.

Sir James
Stuart and Sir
John Chiesly
20th, July 14.

We shall afterwards hear, that upon the 8th of July, the Marquis of Argyle is seized at London: And upon the 14th of July, Orders came down to Major-General Morgan, to secure Sir James Stuart Provost of Edinburgh, Sir Archibald Johnstoun of Waristoun, and Sir John Chiesly of Carswell, who was knighted in the Isle of Wight, and protested against the Death of King Charles. The first and last were caught; but Waristoun got off for a little: Whereupon he was summoned by Sound of Trumpet to render himself; and a printed Proclamation was published with Tuck of Drum, ditcharging all Persons to reser him, and offering a Reward to such as should apprehend him, as follows.

By the Commander in Chief of His Majesty's Forces in Scotland.

Proclamation
for apprehending
the Lord
Waristoun.

WHEREAS I have received an Order from His Majesty, for apprehending the Lord Waristoun, and securing his Person in the Castle of Edinburgh; and he being withdrawn, and obscuring himself, as also making Refusal to yield Obedience to His Majesty's Commands: These are to authorize and impower any Person or Persons, in His Majesty's Name, to use their utmost Endeavours for apprehending the said Lord Waristoun, to keep him in safe Custody, and bring him in to me; for which Service they shall receive One hundred Pounds Scots. And in case any Person or Persons shall harbour and conceal the said Lord Waristoun, and not make speedy Discovery of him, they will be deemed guilty of Treason, and will be proceeded against accordingly. Given under my Hand at Edinburgh, July 16. 1660.

THOMAS MORGAN.

Observes upon
it.

This is the first publick arbitrary Step, and in the Progress of this Work we shall meet with a great many of this Nature. Without Libel or Cause given, by a private Order, not only a worthy Gentleman is attacked, and a Reward offered, tho' a very mean one, to his Apprehenders; but reserting him is declared Treason, and those guilty, to be proceeded against to the Death. No doubt the English Commander had Warrant from our Scots Managers at Court for so severe a Proclamation, and it is of a Piece with the After-steps we shall see were taken.

Swintoun apprehended at London.

July 20. Sir John Swintoun of that Ilk, one of the Judges under Cromwel, and called the Lord Swintoun, was taken out of his Bed, in a Quaker's House, in King's Street, London, and sent in Fetters to the Gate-house. We shall afterwards hear he was sent down to Scotland with the Marquis of Argyle. He had been once a zealous Professor of Reformation, and a Covenanter; but falling in with the Usurper and English Sectaries, he first turned lax, and of late took on the Mask of Quakerism. It is said, the Queen Mother and Papists took a Care of him, and brought him off. And indeed Quakerism is but a small Remove from Popery and Jesuitism. He was no more a Presbyterian, and the present Run was against such, as being chiefly opposite to the Designs in Hand.

William Govan seized.

Upon the 26th of July, one William Giffen, or Govan, whom we shall find execute the same Day with Mr. James Guthrie, was seized, upon a false Information, that he had been present upon the Scaffold, when King Charles I. was beheaded, and imprisoned in the Castle of Edinburgh; and for what I know, he continued in Prison, till next Year he was brought to a publick Death.

Those are some of the previous Steps, as an Introduction to the Committee of Estates, in whose Hands the King lodged the Government of Scotland, by his Proclamation August 2^d, till the Parliament should meet, and a Council be named; and their Procedure will take in what is further remarkable this Year. This will be the Subject of the next Section.

S E C T. II.

Of the Proceedings of the Committee of Estates, their Imprisoning Mr. James Guthrie, and other Ministers, August 23. the King's Letter to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, and other Things this Year.

IT was some Time before the Throng of English and foreign Affairs allowed the King to consider the Case of Scotland; and after several Meetings of those who were now in great Numbers from this Kingdom at Court, his Majesty came to a Resolution to lodge the Government in the Hands of the Committee of Estates, named by the last Parliament we had in Scotland. This he signified by the following Proclamation.

CHARLES R.
Tall Our loving Subjects of the Kingdom of Scotland, or others whom these do or may concern, Greeting. Forasmuch as it hath pleased Almighty God to remove that Force and armed Violence, by which the Administration of Our Royal Government, among Our People there, was interrupted; and We being desirous to witness Our Affection to, and Care of that Our ancient Kingdom, of whose Loyalty We have had many Testimonies, have resolved, that until a Meeting of Parliament, which We are presently to call, the Government shall be administrate by Us, and the Committee of Estates named by Us and Our Parliament 1651. and therefore do hereby call and authorize the said Committee to meet at Edinburgh the 23d of August instant. And We do hereby require Our Herald, Pursevaunts and Messengers at Arms, to make Publication hereof at the Market-cross of Edinburgh, and all other Places, &c. Given at Our Court at Whitehall, August 2, 1660. and of Our Reign the Twelfth Year.

Proclamation calling the Committee of Estates.

The Members of this Committee had all of them appeared hearty in Profession for the Constitution of this Church and our Reformation; they had concurred with the King, in taking the National and Solemn League and Covenant; and some of them had advised the King to make that remarkable Declaration at Dumfermling, August, 1650. which since has made such a Noise, as being a Hardship put upon the King, and is so diametrically opposite to the Course now entering on, that I thought it worth the inserting, App. N^o. 1.

Observes upon the former Steps of the Committee of it.

I have seen no exact List of the Members of this Committee; but I little doubt Persons were named upon it 1651. who did not now meet with them. The Earl of Glencairn came down, and was received with great Parade, as High Chancellor of Scotland, at Edinburgh, August 22. And next Day, August 23. the Committee sat down, Nine Noblemen, Ten Barons, and as many Burgesses; and the Chancellor presided. The Members were all of one Kidney, and hearty in prosecuting the Designs now on Foot.

App. N^o. 1.

That same Day, Mr. James Guthrie Minister at Stirling, Mr. John Stirling, and Mr. Robert Trail Ministers at Edinburgh, Mrs. Alexander Moncrief at Scone, John Semple at Carsphairn, Mr. Thomas Ramsay at Mordingtoun, Mr. John Scot at Oxnam, Mr. Gilbert Hall at Kirklistoun, Mr. John Murray at Methven, Mr. George Nairn at Burntisland, Ministers, with two Gentlemen, Ruling Elders, Mr. Andrew Hay of Craignethan near Lanark, and James Kirkco of Sundwell, in the Parish of Dunscore in Niddsdale, were met and convened in the private House of Robert Simpson in Edinburgh, to draw up an humble Address and Supplication to the King, "Congratulating his Return, expressing their entire and unfeigned Loyalty, humbly putting him in Mind of his own and the Nations Covenant with the Lord, and earnestly praying that his Reign might be like that of David, Solomon, Jehoshaphat, and Hezekiah." As may be seen in the Paper it self, App. N^o. 2.

Meeting of Ministers at Edinburgh, Aug. 23.

The Occasion of this Meeting, upon which so much followed, was this; The Brethren and Ministers, who in their Sentiments could not approve of the publick Resolutions, did very much fear and jealousy Mr. James Sharp, now at London, by the Allowance, and at the Desire of a good many of the Brethren for the Resolutions. They were apprehensive of Designs hatching just now against the Church, not from the publick Resolutioners, but Mr. Sharp, and others, who struck in with them. Whereupon once and again they wrote to the Ministers of Edinburgh, of the other Side, that they might joyn with them in a dutiful Address to his Majesty, at such a Juncture.

App. N^o. 2.

Occasion of their Meeting.

We have seen the Occasion of the Coldness and Delays made in this Affair, by the Ministers of Edinburgh, in the Introduction. They were excellent Men, but it must be owned, that they trusted too much to Mr. Sharp; and by his Suggestions and Letters, every Thing of this Nature was crushed.

Two former Meetings had been concerted at Edinburgh, of Ministers from the different Corners of the Church; but the Brethren had not come up to them. Matters seemed still to grow more and more threatening to the Church-establishment, and no other Way appeared to be left them, but to act in this Manner. There were no Assemblies to be expected, there was no Commission, and Synods were not to meet till October. Therefore the abovenamed Persons, a small Part of many who were to have met, found themselves under a Necessity to do somewhat in such a Crisis. So they formed the foresaid Supplication, which they designed to have communicate to a larger Meeting, before it was sent to Court.

The Ministers apprehended,

The Chancellor and others coming to the Knowledge of this Meeting, the Committee of Estates were acquainted with it; and some Persons were immediately sent, who came upon the Meeting, when the Scrolls and other Papers were before them, which are mentioned in the Act of Confinement, and seized all. I find those Papers were the first Draughts of Letters to some Brethren, desiring another Meeting at Glasgow in September, about the Supplication, with Instructions to some of their Number, when they went West with a Draught of the Supplication, that it might be considered by the Brethren of the Synod of Glasgow; that if they found Cause, they might joyn in it: Such as came from the Committee, asked for the Supplication it self, which the Ministers gave them a Copy of, without any Difficulty.

and imprisoned.

When the unfinished Scrolls and the Supplication were read in the Committee of Estates, they were sent straight to Court; and all who had been present at the Meeting, save Craignethan, who happily escaped, were committed to close Prison, in the Castle of Edinburgh, by the Act of this Day's Date, App. No. 3. without ever calling the Ministers before them, or hearing what they had to say in their own Defence.

App. No. 3.

Remarks on this Procedure.

This illegal and unprecedented Step, the first Act of our Committee of Estates, was a Preamble to that horrid Scene of arbitrary Proceeding, Oppression and Cruelty, which now began to open. Mr. James Guthrie was never liberate, till a glorious Martyrdom, and the Truth made him free; and the rest underwent very great Hardships.

On the Time of it.

It hath been observed, that this was done that very Day, a Hundred Years after, in which the idolatrous, tyrannical, contradictory and cruel Religion of Popery was abolished in Scotland, and the Reformation was established. Indeed from this Day, and forward, for Twenty eight Years, we were going very fast back to Babylon, and wide Steps were taken to reintroduce Popery and Slavery.

Upon the Act of Imprisonment.

A careful Comparing of the Supplication with the Committee's Act, will sufficiently expose the last. The Ministers were chiefly attacked, because they were Protesters; and yet such as were of that Denomination, most firmly asserted the King's Title under his Exile; and Mr. James Guthrie, and others of them, suffered much from the English for their Loyalty, when Mr. Sharp, who now managed all, took the Tender, and fell in with the Usurper.

Ingratitude was but a lesser Aggravation of this violent Procedure; it was plainly illegal: Besides the known Privilege of all Subjects to address the Sovereign, there were then Laws unrepealed, to which the Members of the Committee themselves had assented, warranting them to meet and supplicate. The Usurpers, when Scotland was under their Feet, did not hinder Ministers to meet, except in their general Assembly. In short, this Step was very unequal, as well as ungrate and illegal, since that very same Day, the Committee liberate several Persons imprisoned for Murder, and other atrocious Crimes. But those were not the Things at present they were in Quest of.

Ministers in Prison supplicate.

Under their Confinement in the Castle, the Ministers agreed upon a Supplication, and sent it to the Committee of Estates, whereof I have not seen a Copy; but by other Papers of this Time, I find in it, "They promised no more to prosecute the Remonstrance 1650. and "expressed their Sorrow for giving their Lordships any Offence, by the Unseasonableness of "their late Meeting, at which they were seized." The Chancellor insisted, they should acknowledge their Fault, in meeting upon such a Matter. But the Ministers, apprehending this would be a receding from their designed Testimony; and such a Declaration affecting not only the Manner and Time of their Meeting, but the Business and important Matter upon which they met, might have very ill Consequences at this Juncture, refused to go this Length; though the Advocate, who had taken the Tender, when many of them were suffering for their Loyalty, and Firmness to the King, threatened to found a Process of Treason upon their Supplication.

The Sympathy of their Brethren with them.

The People under the pastoral Charge of the now imprisoned Ministers, were extremely afflicted with their Confinement, and ready to make all proper Applications. I find Mr. Stirling's Session at Edinburgh, and no doubt Mr. Trail's also, acquaint him with their Design to supplicate in his Behalf, which is delayed, till they know the Issue of their own Supplication. All I have of this, is in the following Letter from Mr. Stirling to his Session at this Time, which breathes much of a Christian and Ministerial Spirit, and states the Cause of their Sufferings; and therefore I have insert it, App. No. 4. as what deserves a Room in this Collection.

App. No. 4.

Motion in their Behalf, in the Synod of 1660.

There was a Motion likewise in the Synod of Glasgow, at their Meeting in October this Year, for a Supplication in Favour of the imprisoned Ministers; but it was much opposed by some Ministers who turned Bishops, and their Underlings, and some worthy Members who exercised too much Charity for their false Brethren.

Thus they continued a considerable Time in Prison, till at length a good many of them were let out of the Castle, but still confined to their Chambers at Edinburgh, till the Sitting down of the the Parliament; some of them had only their Prison changed: And several other Ministers were seized, as we may hear in the further Accounts of the Procedure of the Committee, 1660. which I come now to hint at.

Mr. Archdeacon Eachard's Account of the Imprisonment of those Ministers, Vol. III. p. 39. deserves our Notice. In the Progress of this History, we shall find him once and again giving very indistinct and unfair Representations of our Scots Affairs during the Period before me, in the short and lame Hints he hath. Here he speaks of those Ministers as the prime Managers of the Church of Scotland; whereas tho' they were excellent Persons, yet at this Juncture they were far from being the prime Actors in the Church. We have seen that they could scarce prevail to have any Meeting among Brethren of their own Sentiments, and how thin the Meeting they had was. But this Innuendo must be made, that they were the prime Ministers of the Kirk-party, that the odium of the Remonstrance, unlawful Meetings, and seditious Papers, and other hard Names now made use of against the Remonstrators, might ly upon all Presbyterian Ministers. It would seem to be with some such View as this, that he says, They met and drew up a Remonstrance. I can scarce think this Author is so absolute a Stranger to the Scots History, as to blend the Remonstrance formed Ten Years before, with the Petition drawn up by Mr. Guthrie, and the Rest at this Time, tho' we shall meet with as gross Mistakes in the celebrated English Writers, when they treat of Scots Affairs. But one must think he would have his Reader believe, that all those excellent Ministers were Remonstrants. An Historian ought to give every Thing he speaks of, its own Name, and not talk of a Supplication under that of a Remonstrance. It was a Piece of greater Justice in Mr. Eachard, a few Lines below, to take Notice of the King's Proclamation concerning the Carriage of his Subjects Nov. 1. 1660. and candidly to insert the Clause discharging Addressees to his Majesty, except by the Parliament or Committee of Estates, with the Promise of an Indemnity, which for private Ends was long delayed.

Remarks on
Mr. Eachard's
Account of this Affair.

Next Day after the Ministers were seized, the Committee of Estates go on to somewhat that was more extensive, and discharge all Meetings without the King's Authority, and seditious Petitions. The Proclamation will stand best in its own Light.

Proclamation by the Committee of Estates, against unlawful Meetings, and seditious Papers. At Edinburgh, August 24th, 1660.

The Committee of Estates, in Obedience to His Majesty's Proclamation, being met, and taking to their serious Consideration, the Goodness of God, who in his great Mercy hath restored the King's Majesty to the Exercise of his Royal Government; and withal considering His Majesty's great Care of, and Affection to his ancient Kingdom of Scotland, in Calling and Authorizing the said Committee of Estates to meet: And they finding it their Duty to prevent all unlawful Meetings, which may tend to the Prejudice of His Majesty's Service, or may again involve His Majesty's Subjects into new Troubles, have thought fit, in His Majesty's Name and Authority, to prohibit, and by these Presents do prohibit and discharge all unlawful and unwarrantable Meetings and Conventicles, in any Place within His Majesty's Kingdom of Scotland, without His Majesty's special Authority; and likewise all seditious Petitions and Remonstrances, under what Pretext soever, which may tend to the Disturbance of the Peace of this Kingdom, or alienating or diminishing the Affections of His Majesty's Subjects, from their due Obedience to His Majesty's lawful Authority; and that under all highest Pains. And for that Effect appoints all Sheriffs of Shires, and Magistrates of Burghs, to be careful within their respective Bounds, that no such pernicious and dangerous Meetings be permitted; but that they may be prevented, hindered, made known and discovered to the Committee of Estates: And ordains these Presents to be printed and published. Signed in the Name, and by Warrant of the Committee of Estates.

Proclamation.

GLENCAIRN Chancellor.

I. P. D. Conc.

I shall not stay to make any Observes upon this Proclamation. We need not be critical upon the Narrative and Style; this was a great and sudden Change, and that by People who had been acquainted with, yea active in a quite other Method of speaking and doing than this, which puts all into the King's Hand. Our People seem to be cautious at first, nemo repente fit turpissimus; and they only discharge unlawful and unwarranted Meetings, which all Sides must own should be discharged: But then the Question is, what are these? and all seditious Petitions and Remonstrances are discharged. Indeed the first seems to be understood of all Meetings not called and authorized by the King; but 'tis not Time yet to speak out, till the great Work and excellent Laws made after the 1640. be rescinded; and there is no doubt this Proclamation was very much against the present Laws, in the Sense in which 'tis designed, tho' the double and extensive Phrases, unlawful, and unwarrantable, &c. screened the Members from Attacks.

Remarks.

When the King's Letter to the Presbytery of Edinburgh came down, September 3^d, of which more just now, it rather heightened than slackned the Committee's Procedure against Gentlemen

men and Ministers. The Brethren for the publick Resolutions, made too much of it; and all who favoured the Protest and Remonstrance, were looked upon almost as Rebels and Enemies to the King, and accordingly dealt with by the Committee, who went on to censure, harass, and imprison them.

Provost Graham and Clerk
Spreul, with Mr.
Patrick Gillespie imprisoned.

Upon the 14th of September, by their Order, John Graham Provost of Glasgow, and John Spreul Town-clerk there, were imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth. Both of them had been reckoned Favourers of the Remonstrance, and yet they were pious and excellent Persons. The Committee sent an Order to the Magistrates of Glasgow, to oblige Mr. Patrick Gillespie, Principal of the College, to compear before them; which he did: And September 15. was made Prisoner in the Castle of Edinburgh. From thence he was sent to the Castle of Stirling, and continued in Confinement till the Parliament sat. Mr. Gillespie indeed had fallen in very much with the Usurper, and was in this very much alone, and few or none of the Ministers followed him.

Mr. R. Row,
and Mr. W.
Wiseheart, and
P. Jaffray
confined.

That same Day, the Committee of Estates confined Mr. Robert Row Minister at Abercorn, and Mr. William Wiseheart Minister at Kinneil, to their Chambers at Edinburgh. Both of them were excellent Persons, but suspected to favour the Brethren who were for the Protestation, and had used some Freedom in their Sermons. Upon Thursday, September 20. Mr. Wiseheart, and with him Provost Jaffray Director of Chancellery, were imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth. About the same Time, Mr. James Guthrie was sent from Edinburgh Castle to Stirling, by Order of the Committee; where he continued till the Parliament called for him, in order to his Trial, or near about that Time, when we shall again meet with him.

Mr. J. Guthrie sent to Stirling.

Proclamation
against Lex Rex, and the Causes of God's Wrath.
App. N^o. 5.

September 19. a Proclamation is published against Two known Books: The first writ, and long before printed, by the reverend and learned Mr. Samuel Rutherford, entitled, LEX REX. The other supposed to be drawn up by Mr. James Guthrie, The Causes of God's Wrath. I have insert the Committee's Proclamation about them, App. N^o. 5. We shall meet with a good many Papers of this Nature afterwards. The Committee introduce a Phraseology, pretty much out of Doors for some Time in Scotland, but very much followed in the Period I am upon, how properly. I am not to consider, the King's sacred Greatness Very liberally they determine the Authors of those Books, and the Printers and Dispersers of them, to be rebellious and seditious Persons, "That they contain many Things injurious to the King, and laying the Foundation and Seeds of Rebellion, that they are full of treasonable Matter," with many other hard Words. They call in the Copies, and order them to be delivered to Mr. Robert Dalgleish His Majesty's Solicitor, in less than a Month's Time; and declare, that all and every one who, after the 15th of October, shall have any Copies of them, shall not only be esteemed Enemies to the King, but punished accordingly in their Persons and Estates.

Remarks upon
it.

Such summar Declarations coming so near the Popish Index prohibitorius, and their Inquisition, especially when pointed at Books, which will still be valued, where a Sense of Religion and Liberty prevails, may surprize the Reader; but in a little Time he'll find them turning common. Mr. Sharp now come down, had a particular Quarrel with Mrs. Rutherford and Guthrie, and prosecuted it a little further than this publick Mark upon those two Books. In short, the Principles laid down in the first, never yet disproven, and the plain Facts in the last, were diametrically opposite to the Course now entering on, and therefore they must be prohibited.

Proclamation against Remonstrants.
App. N^o. 6.
Remarks.

The Day following, a more general Thrust is given against all whom the Committee were pleased to name Remonstrants and their Adherents, in their Proclamation, September 20. which I have likewise added, App. N^o. 6. The Paper speaks for it self, without any Commentary. A large Enumeration is made of the Laws and Acts against Leasing-making, and particularly Calumnies against His Majesty's Kingdom of England, and His worthy Subjects there. This pointed at such, who in Preaching or Conversation regretted the Establishment of the Hierarchy and Ceremonies there, contrary to the Covenants. The Laws against all Convocations and Meetings without the King's Command, which, if I mistake not, were rescinded expressly by the Parliaments, approved by King Charles I. and all ratified by the present King, are next set down, with the Declaration of the Parliament, July 1651. that the Remonstrance presented to the Committee of Estates, 1650. against Malignants being employed in Offices, was seditious and treasonable.

Then the Committee having Information, "That those Laws are contravened, by Slanders on His Majesty and Government, unlawful Conventions of the Lieges, owning the Remonstrance, meddling in the Affairs of His Majesty, and His Estate, present and bygone, they discharge the same under the Pains contained in the said Laws, and declare that all who hear any such Leasings, Calumnies, or Slanders, and reveal them not, shall incur the same Punishment with the principal Offender. And that the Lieges being most easily ensnared by seditious and treasonable Courses and Practices, by Ministers in their Sermons, Prayers, Declarations, and private Discourses, they declare, that upon Information given, their Stipends shall be sequestered, and their Persons imprisoned;" as the Proclamation more fully bears.

This

This Procedure opened a Door to make many Offenders for a Word; and no Body against whom the present Managers had a Design, could elcape. Ministers were attacked for their Sermons, and other Discourses; and many Gentlemen, especially such who favour'd the Remonstrance, were brought to Trouble. No small Advantage was brought about to the Courses now entring upon, by this Proclamation. Two Things will offer to the Reader, almost without my Help; the most zealous of the Ministers were laid open to a Prosecution, and others they hoped to overaw into a sinful Silence, in not giving faithful Warning to their Flocks, of the Encroachments making upon our Civil and Sacred Rights. And tho' the Protesters, as they were termed, had the Storm first falling on them, yet good Numbers of the Resolutioners, tho' silent for a little, under Hopes given them of a General Assembly, to set Matters right, and being deceived by the Letter to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, very soon fell under the Pains in this Proclamation: And all, save the Complicers with Prelacy, were sent to the Furnace together. Another View was, to influence and model to the Mind of the Court, the Elections for the ensuing Parliament.

1660.

A great Body of Gentlemen of the best Estates, and greatest Interest in the Nation, who had appeared with the greatest Vigour for the Work of Reformation since the 1637. and had likewise given the greatest Evidences of Concern for the Royal Family, under the Usurpation, several of whom were concerned in the Remonstrance, behoved now to be struck at. Their Interest in Shires was great, they might be troublesome in Parliament, being heartily against arbitrary Power, and from Principle attached to the Constitution of this Church; and now the Managers behoved to be rid of them.

Elections of Parliament-members pre-limited.

Some were cited before the Committee, others were confined; and thus their Influence upon Elections was prevented. And no doubt, Threatnings, and Fear of Danger, in this unsettled Time, prevailed with several to ly by; so that the Elections went pretty smoothly on, according to the Desire of the Managers.

Not having seen any full Account of the Procedure of the Committee, with relation to Gentlemen, and in Prosecution of this severe Proclamation, I can give but some Hints of what they did; and, no doubt, much of their Work was under Ground.

At Edinburgh, as we have heard, Orders came down to seize some of the most active Gentlemen, before the Committee sat down. When the Commission came to seize Sir Archibald Johnstoun of Waristoun, Major-general Morgan was impowered to seize Sir James Stuart Provost of Edinburgh, and Sir John Chiesly of Carfwell. Two Gentlemen of very strict Morals, shining Piety, considerable Influence, and singular for their Loyalty to the King under Oliver's Government. By a Trick, Sir James was trepan'd to convoy Sir John to the Castle of Edinburgh, and there the Major left them both the King's Prisoners; and for many Years they continued either under Bond and Bail, or Confinement, as a Reward for their Concern and Sufferings for the King's Interest, when at its lowest.

Gentlemen attacked by the Committee.

Mr. John Harper, afterwards Sir John, in Lanark-shire, was in September obliged to sign the Bond we shall just now hear of, and to give Bail that he should appear before the Committee or Parliament, to answer what should be charged upon him, under the highest Pains. And September 26th, I find Ker of Greenhead, and Pringle of Greenknow, are committed by the Committee of Estates to the Castle of Edinburgh, for alledged aiding, assisting, and partaking with the Remonstrators and seditious Persons. About this Time, Mr. Pringle of Torwoodlie, as we may afterwards hear, and several others, were brought to no small Trouble.

Mr. Harper.

Greenhead and Greenknow.

Torwoodlie.

Upon the 10th of October, the Committee fugitate Sir Archibald Johnstoun of Waristoun, Colonel Gilbert Ker, Colonel David Barclay, John Hume, Robert Andrew of Little-tarbet, and William Dundas late Supervisor. Their Case was indeed peculiar, they had been named Trustees in Scotland to Oliver Cromwel; and being at London with William Purves, and Mr. Robert Hodge, and pretty much involved in Cromwel's Affairs, were all discharged Court, save Waristoun, who was before this come to Scotland, and ordered to appear before the Parliament, when it sat.

Gentlemen declared fugitives.

Multitudes of other Gentlemen, in many Shires upon the South of Tay, were brought before the Committee of Estates. If they had any tolerable Informations against them, as to their Compliances under the English, or their warm Side to the Remonstrance and Protestation, then the following Bond was offered them, and to several Ministers also, to sign; bearing the Name and Designation of the principal Person bound, and a Cautioner for each, wherein they were obliged,

Bond offered to Gentlemen to subscribe.

‘ That the principal Party, shall not in any Manner of Way, directly or indirectly, plot, contrive, speak, or do any Thing tending, or what may tend to the Hurt, Prejudice, or Derogation of his Majesty's Royal Person, or any of that Royal Family, or of his Highness's Power and Authority; or shall act or do any Thing, directly or indirectly, tending, or that may tend to the Breach or Disturbance of the publick Peace of his Majesty's Dominions; nor shall connive, or concur with whatsoever Person or Persons who shall contrive, or do any such Thing, as is before mentioned: But shall, to the uttermost of their Power, stop and let any such Plot or Doing; and compare personally before the Committee, Subcommittee, or Parliament, upon a lawful Citation. All which he promises to fulfil truly and really. And in case of Failie, he and his Cautioner, conjunctly and severally, oblige themselves to pay an high Fine, by and attour what other Centure, personal or pecuniai, by Law may be imposed upon the principal Party his Transgression. And considering there was a Remonstrance presented to the Committee of Estates, October 22^d, 1650. and thereafter adhered unto by many Gentlemen and others, by a Bill given in to the said Committee in November thereafter; which Remonstrance being by his Majesty and Estates of Parliament convened at Stirling, June 1651. taken into Consideration, his Majesty and Estates, by their Act, June 4th, 1651. declare the said Remonstrance to be scandalous and injurious to his Majesty's Person, prejudicial to his Authority, dishonourable to the Kingdom, and a sowing Division among his Majesty's Subjects. Therefore the said Principal does acknowledge the Justice of the said Act, and obliges himself, that he shall not in any Time coming, directly or indirectly, own, promote, or abet the said Remonstrance, under the highest Pains that may follow upon his Person and Estate.' With a Clause of Registration and Execution, in common Form.

Several take it,
and others are oppressed.

By Threatnings, Imprisonments, and other harsh Methods, not a few were brought to subscribe this Bond, and renounce the Remonstrance; in which the most Part now harassed had no Hand. But this was a good Handle to bear down and bring to Trouble a great many Gentlemen and others, who had been most zealous and forward in the Work of Reformation, and were looked on as most opposite to the Projects now on Foot: And thus the Parliament was also the better modelled for the Work they had to do.

Ministers at this Time brought to Trouble.
Mr. John Dickson.

A good many worthy Ministers were at this Time brought before the Committee of Estates. October 13th, Mr. John Dickson Minister of the Gospel at Rutherglen, appeared before them, and was imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth. Information had been given by Sir James Hamilton of Elisfoun, and some of his Parishioners, of some Expressions he had used in a Sermon, alledged to reflect upon the Government and Committee, and tending to Sedition and Division. This good Man was kept in Prison till the Parliament sat, his Church vacated, and he was brought to much Trouble. We shall afterwards find him Prisoner in the Bass, for near Seven Years; and yet he got through his Troubles, returned to his Charge at Rutherglen, and for several Years after the Revolution, served his Master there, till his Death in a good old Age: While that Family who pursued him, is a good while ago extinct, and their House, as Mr. Dickson very publicly foretold in the Hearing of some yet alive, after it had been a Habitation for Owls, the Foundation-stones of it are digged up. The Inhabitants there cannot but observe, that the Informers, Accusers, and Witnesses against Mr. Dickson, some of them then Magistrates of the Town, are brought so low, that they are sustained by the Charity of the Parish.

Mr. James
Nasmyth.

Mr. James Nasmyth Minister of the Gospel at Hamilton, was likewise sifted before the Committee, for Words alledged to have been spoken by him many Years ago. About the Year 1650. when Lambert was in the Church, it was alledged, he pressed his Hearers 'to imploy their Power for God, and not in Opposition to the Gospel, otherwise they might expect to be brought down by the Judgment of God, as those who went before were.' Mr. Nasmyth this Year was imprisoned for some Time, and for several Months kept from his Charge. Very soon after his Liberation, he was, with many others, turned from their Flocks. We shall meet with him afterwards.

Mr. James
Simpson.

Mr. James Simpson Minister at Airth in Stirling-shire, when, by an Invitation from Ireland, he was going thither, to settle in a Congregation there, was seized at Port-patrick, without any Cause shown him. Mr. Sharp, I know, had a particular Pique at him; they had been at London upon different Views some Years ago: But when once in their Hands, he was sifted before the Committee, and by them cast in Prison, where he continued till the Parliament convened, and they saw Good, without any Trial, to banish this good Man out of the King's Dominions.

Those Prosecutions not for Rebellion.

The Reader cannot but remark, that all those Instances of Severity, as well as many that follow in this Book, before Pentland, yea even to Bothwell-bridge, can never be palliate with the groundless Pretences, that those excellent Persons were punished for Rebellion and Treason. All of them owned the King's Authority; they had standing Law upon their Side, for much of what they were quarrelled about, yea, Laws made by their very Persecutors: A good many of them had suffered much for His Majesty, when in Exile; and this harsh Treatment was all they and Hundreds more had in Return for their stedfast Loyalty, from a Set of People now in Power, many of whom had been deeply involved in Compliance with the Usurper, and in most of those very Things for which those good Persons were now harassed.

Having thus run through the Procedure of the Committee of Estates, to the Middle of October, when they adjourned for some Days, it is high Time to look back a little to the Letter from the King, which Mr. Sharp brought with him to the Presbytery of Edinburgh; which was produced and timed to soften Peoples Spirits, under the Attacks making by the Committee, upon some of the most zealous Promoters of Religion and Reformation.

In the Introduction, we have had a pretty large View of Mr. Sharp's Procedure at London, where Matters were laid so in secret, as the Constitution of this Church was to be overturned, and Mr. Sharp to be at the Head of the new Frame to be erected. That cunning Apostate hastes down to Scotland, and arrived at Edinburgh the last Day of August, and brought with him the King's Letter, directed to Mr. Robert Douglas, to be communicated to the Presbytery of Edinburgh.

Upon Saturday, September 1. some of the Brethren of Edinburgh being convened, Mr. Sharp delivered the Letter to Mr. Robert Douglas, and made Report of his Negotiation; for which the Brethren gave him Thanks, and resolved to convene the Presbytery of Edinburgh, upon Munday, September 3. that from them Copies might be transmitted to other Presbyteries, and a humble Return made to His Majesty.

Accordingly they met, and the Letter was ordered to be communicate to all other Presbyteries, as being of publick Concern; and a Committee was ordered to draw up a Return to the King, and a Letter to the Secretary, both of which I find approved, September 20. The King's Letter to Mr. Douglas hath been more than once printed, and the Reader will, no doubt, expect it here.

CHARLES R.

TRUSTY and well Beloved, We greet you well. By the Letter you sent to Us with this Bearer, Mr. James Sharp, and by the Account he gave of the State of Our Church there, We have received full Information of your Sense of Our Sufferings, and of your constant Affection and Loyalty to Our Person and Authority: And therefore We will detain him here no longer, (of whose good Services We are very sensible) nor will We delay to let you know by him, Our gracious Acceptance of your Address, and how well We are satisfied with your Carriages, and with the Generality of the Ministers of Scotland, in this Time of Trial, whilst some, under specious Pretences, swerved from that Duty and Allegiance they owed to Us. And because such, who by the Countenance of Usurpers, have disturbed the Peace of that Our Church, may also labour to create Jealousies in the Minds of well meaning People; We have thought fit by this to assure you, That, by the Grace of God, We resolve to discountenance Profanity, and all Contemners and Opposers of the Ordinances of the Gospel. We do also resolve to protect and preserve the Government of the Church of Scotland, as it is settled by Law, without Violation; and to countenance, in the due Exercise of their Functions, all such Ministers who shall behave themselves dutifully and peaceably, as becomes Men of their Calling. We will also take Care, that the Authority and Acts of the General Assembly at St. Andrews and Dundee, 1651. be owned and stand in Force, until we shall call another General Assembly, (which we purpose to do, as soon as Our Affairs will permit) and We do intend to send for Mr. Robert Douglas, and some other Ministers, that we may speak with them, in what may further concern the Affairs of that Church. And as We are very well satisfied with your Resolution, not to meddle without your Sphere, so We do expect that Church-judicatories in Scotland, and Ministers there, will keep within the Compass of their Station, meddling only with Matters Ecclesiastick, and promoting Our Authority and Interest with Our Subjects against all Opposers: And that they will take special Notice of such, who, by Preaching, or private Conventicles, or any other Way, transgress the Limits of their Calling, by endeavouring to corrupt the People, or sow Seeds of Disaffection to Us or Our Government. This you shall make known to the several Presbyteries within that Our Kingdom: And as We do give Assurance of Our Favour, and Encouragement to you, and to all honest deserving Ministers there, so We earnestly recommend it to you, that you be earnest in your Prayers, publick and private, to Almighty God, who is Our Rock and Our Deliverer, both for Us, and for Our Government, that We may have fresh and constant Supplies of His Grace, and the right Improvement of all His Mercies and Deliverances, to the Honour of His great Name, and the Peace, Safety, and Benefit of all Our Kingdoms. And so We bid you heartily farewell. Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the 10th of August 1660. and of Our Reign the 12th Year.

King's Letter to the Presbytery of Edinburgh.

By His Majesty's special Command,

Directed, To Our trusty and well beloved, Mr. Robert Douglas Minister of the Gospel in Our City of Edinburgh; to be communicated to the Presbytery of Edinburgh.

LAWDERDALE.

Reflections upon this Letter are in some Measure needless, the After-management makes the Design of it obvious; and the Letter discovers it self to be of Mr. Sharp's Penning: Its Expressions are extremely well calculate to lull all asleep, till Matters were ripe for a thorough Change; a very full Testimony is given to the Loyalty and Affection of the Presbyterian Ministers

Remarks upon it.

nisters of this Church to the King under his Sufferings, which was so glaring, that it could not be hid, and yet the declaring of it was as severe a Reproach as could be, upon the Authors of their Maltreatment.

The Innuendo that follows upon those who swerved from their Duty and Allegiance to the King, is a sensible Proof of the Confidence and Disingenuity of Mr. Sharp, who, tho' he designed this against the Protesters, knew well enough, that not a Minister of the Church of Scotland, as far as I know, no not Mr. Gillespie, had swerved so far from their Allegiance, as to take the Tender, or offered to come in to any Measures Cromwel would lay down; and yet his own Conscience could not but reproach him as guilty of this.

We shall have Occasion afterwards to notice the double-faced Expression, of protesting and preserving the Government of the Church, as it is settled by Law. The Promise of calling a General Assembly was what Mr. Sharp never designed to be performed; Mr. Douglas was never sent for, nor any other Ministers: In short, Mr. Sharp took Care, that none of those Things set down here as Blinds, should ever be done.

The Earl of Middleton's Reflection upon
it.

So that the Earl of Middleton's Reflection upon it, seemeth to have been very just and natural. This Nobleman had not seen the Draught, till the King had agreed to it, and the Matter was over. When he read it, he appeared in some Concern at its Contents, and the Promises in it, as thwarting with what he and Mr. Sharp had concerted. And when he was told, that notwithstanding of any Thing in the Letter, when his Lordship went down to Scotland, he might rescind the Laws now in Force, and then Episcopacy remained the Church-government settled by Law: The Earl replied, "That might be done, but for his Share he did not love that Way, which made His Majesty's first Appearance in Scotland, to be in a "Cheat."

Such was the Charity of Mr. Douglas, and many other worthy Ministers, that they did not suspect a Trick here; and really it was so harsh a Construction, to suppose a Man of Mr. Sharp's Profession to venture upon so publick and gross an Imposition upon the King, as to make his Majesty superscribe such a Letter, and send it down full of such Promises and Expressions, and mean while to be projecting the contrary, that we need scarce wonder the Snare was not observed; and therefore the Letter was extremely hugged, and a Return made to it, agreeable to what might be expected from such, who believed Mr. Sharp and the King to have been in Earnest.

The Presbytery of Edinburgh caused print and spread the King's Letter through the Nation, and found it convenient it should be kept among the publick Records of the Church; and therefore it was delivered by Mr. Douglas to Mr. Andrew Ker Clerk to the General Assembly, to be kept by him, as said is; and the Presbytery agreed to, and signed the following Return to it.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

Presbytery of Edinburgh their Return.

WE your Majesty's faithful Subjects and humble Servants, the Ministers and Elders of the Presbytery of Edinburgh, did receive your Majesty's gracious Letter, upon the 3^d of this Instant, (a Day which we were formerly made to remember with Sorrow) and in Obedience to your royal Command therein contained, have transmitted Copies thereof to all the Presbyteries in this your Majesty's ancient Kingdom, which we hope shall very speedily come to all their Hands. And as we are assured it will be most refreshing to them, so we hold it our Duty, by this our humble Address, to signify to your Majesty, how much it hath revived our Spirits, and excited us to bless the Lord our God, who hath put and continued such a Purpose in your Royal Heart, to preserve and protect the Government of this Church without Violation. We have been made to grone under the Tyranny of Usurpers, who did let loose Swarms of Errors and Confusions, to invade the comely Order of this poor Church, (tho' we bless God, without that Success that was expected and desired by them:) Now we are made to say, This is our God, we have waited for him; when we see your Sacred Majesty, by a supreme and stupendious Hand of Providence, settled upon your Throne, and do find the warm Beams of Royal Authority reaching even to us, in countenancing Church-order, whereby any Disturbances that are among us, may, by the Blessing of the Almighty, come to a good Issue. We are unwilling to interrupt your Majesty in your weighty Affairs, seeing by your Majesty's Secretary, we may represent our humble Desires in Reference to this Church, (and we bless the Lord, who hath directed your Majesty to make Choice of such a faithful and able Person for that weighty Employment, and one who is so well acquainted with the Affairs of this Church:) But we trust that your Majesty will pardon, that at this Time we could not forbear this immediate Address, whereby we might express our Loyalty and Fidelity to your Majesty, our Joy in the Lord for your happy Restitution, and how much we, and all good People here, are comforted in the Expressions of your Majesty's Moderation, your Abhorrence of Profanity, and your tender Favour to faithful Ministers, and the Ordinances of the Gospel administered by them, and particularly to the Church-government settled among us, in the Enjoyment whereof this Church hath been so happy. And tho' some may be ready to traduce this Government,

vernment, because in the late Times of Confusion and Usurpation, (wherein Men made it their Interest to break us) the Church-judicatories have not been able to prevent all Disorders, (as no Church-government, when so discountenanced and born down, can effectually and universally reach its End in a National Church;) yet now your Majesty proving so tender a nursing Father, we trust it shall appear, that those Judicatories are Ordinances of Jesus Christ, which will most effectually bear down Error, Profanity and Schisms, as formerly they have been blessed for that Effect. And as heretofore they have given Proof of their Loyalty and Fidelity to your Majesty, in a great Trial of Afflictions; it may certainly be expected, that they will still acquit themselves so in their Stations, as may witness that the Ministers of Christ are taught of him, to pay all Duty to Authority; and that the Principles of our Church-government lead them to be loyal. And for our Parts, it is our constant Resolution, by the Grace of God, to behave our selves as becometh Messengers and Servants of the Prince of Peace, and to pray, that the Lord may preserve and bless your Majesty, and lead you forth in his right Hand in the Exercise of your Royal Government, for the Good and Comfort of all your Dominions, and the Lovers of Truth and Peace therein, as is the Duty of Joynntly with this, another Letter was sent to the Earl of Lawderdale then Secretary of State, which deserves its own Room in this History, and so it follows.

Right Honourable,

AMONG other the Lord's great Favours to this long distracted Church and Kingdom, we cannot forbear thankfully to acknowledge his Providence, who hath put it in his Majesty's Heart, to make Choice of your Lordship for that weighty Employment, wherein you may have Opportunity to imploy those Talents, wherewith the supreme Dispenser of all Gifts hath endued you, in his Majesty's and your Country's Service; and may also be in a Condition to see to the Safety and Welfare of our Mother-Church, in the Interests whereof you have been pleased so much to concern your self, as hath been made known to us by your Letters to some of our Number, to our exceeding Satisfaction and Refreshment. This doth encourage us, to put your Lordship to the Trouble of presenting the inclosed Address to his Majesty, wherein we do humbly express our Sense of his Majesty's Gracious Letter direct to us, which we had purposed only to signify to your Lordship, that you might have acquainted his Majesty therewith; but that it lay so much upon our Hearts for this once, to witness by our immediate Address, how much we are refreshed by that Mercy. We will not doubt of your Lordship's Pardon for this Trouble, and do presume to beg for the Continuance of your Favour to this poor Church, that, as Occasion shall offer, you will be pleased to represent to his Majesty, what may be found necessary for the promoting of the Kingdom of Jesus Christ among us. And since your Lordship's Goodness hath prompted you to offer your Assistance in what may concern the Church, and the honest Ministers thereof, we know you will not take it ill, if from Time to Time we presume to acquaint you with our Desires, in Reference to those Concernments, as knowing that the Service is the Lord's, and that your Reward is in Heaven, through Jesus Christ, to whose rich Grace we do heartily recommend your Lordship, and are in him, Further Proceedings of the Committee of Estates.

Lex Rex, and the Causes of God's Wrath burnt.

Proclamation for holding a Parliament.

King's Proclamation, concerning Subjects Carriage during the late Troubles.

We shall find afterwards, the Synod of Lothian made a Return to the King's Letter in November: But before I come to that, let me take in the Rest of the Procedure of the Committee of Estates.

Upon the 16th of October, the Committee of Estates published a Proclamation, laying on a Month's Cets, for the paying of the Commissioner's Charges, who was to represent his Majesty in Parliament; another for raising three Months Cets, to pay and disband the Soldiers yet in Scotland; and a third, for searching for, and apprehending the Lord Waristoun, with a Reward of Five thousand Merks to any who should bring him in. Whatever the Necessity might be to have Money at this Time, not a few questioned the Power of this Committee to impose Taxes upon the Subjects, and to act contrary to several standing Laws unrepealed; and they alledged several Clauses of their Proclamations were direct Infringements of the Laws made since the Reformation.

After they had published those Proclamations, they adjourned till the 1st of November. During this Recess, October 17th, the Books formerly mentioned, LEX REX, and the Causes of God's Wrath, were burnt at Edinburgh, by the Hand of the Hangman; no doubt, by Order of the Committee, tho' I do not observe any Clause for this, in the Proclamation. It was much easier to burn those Books, than to answer the Reasonings and Facts in them.

November 1st; a Proclamation was published with much Solemnity, for holding a Parliament at Edinburgh, upon the 12th of December: The Tenor whereof was,

CHARLES by the Grace of God, &c. Greeting. The Confusions and Troubles, by which Our good Subjects of this Our ancient Kingdom of Scotland, have those many Years been deprived of that Peace and Happiness they might justly have expected in the Administration of Our Royal Government among them, being now, by the special Blessing of Almighty God, happily removed; We have thought fit to let you know, that We still retain the same Tenderness, and good Affection towards you: And as We will cheerfully interpose Our Authority in what may be for your Good and Welfare, and for securing the just Privileges and Liberties of Our People; so We do expect from them those dutiful Returns of Obedience, and Subjection to Our Person and Authority, which are suitable to their Obligations, and the Duty of loyal Subjects. And conceiving, that a Parliament, in its right Constitution, will at this Time be a ready Mean for establishing a firm Peace to Our People, and for settling all Religious and Civil, publick and private Interests; We have therefore thought fit to call a Meeting of Our Estates of Parliament, to be kept at Edinburgh, December 12. next to come. Our Will is heretofore, &c. In common Form usual in those Cases, that Shires and Burghs choose their Members according to Law.

Whitehall, October 10.

LAWDERDALE.

A. Primrose, Clerk-register.

The same Day another Proclamation was published, which deserves a Room here. The Title of it is,

The King's Majesty's Proclamation, concerning the Carriage of His Subjects during the late Troubles.

CHARLES, &c. We being now, by the special Blessing of God Almighty, returned to the Exercise of Our Royal Power, and Government of Our Kingdoms; and being desirous to improve this Mercy to the best Advantage of Our People, have thought fit to call a Meeting of Our Estates of Parliament of this Our ancient Kingdom of Scotland, as a ready Mean, after so long Troubles, for settling a firm and lasting Peace, in confirming the just Liberties of Our Subjects, for vindicating Our Honour, and asserting Our ancient Royal Prerogative, by which alone the Liberties of Our People can be preserved. And as We do therein rely upon the Loyalty, Prudence and Care of Our Parliament; so We do absolutely leave and commit to them, the trying and judging of the Carriage of Our Subjects, during those Troubles: Concerning which, We will from henceforth receive Information and Address only from Our Parliament, or Committee of Estates, to whom in the mean Time We have recommended the preparing and ordering of that Affair, and to whom alone, any of Our People that are interested, may freely, and can only make their Applications: And which We have hereby thought fit to make known to all Our publick Ministers and Subjects, whom it doth concern, and who may thereby find, that We have given an undoubted Evidence of Our Affection to, and Confidence in Our People, by making themselves Judges of what may concern both Our and their own Interests. And hereby We do further assure them, that Our own Honour, and the Honour of that Our ancient Kingdom, being vindicate, and the ancient Prerogative of the Crown being asserted, We will grant such a full and free Pardon, and Act of Indemnity, as shall witness there is nothing We are more desirous of, than that Our People may be blessed with Abundance of Happiness, Peace and Plenty under Our Government. And We do hereby command you Our Heralds, Pursebants, and Messengers at Arms, to pass and make Publication thereof at the Market-cross of Edinburgh, and other Places needful, and in Our Name and Authority, to command, charge, and inhibit all and sundry Our Subjects in Scotland, that none of them presume to go out of the Country, without Licence of the Committee of Estates, under Pain of being esteemed and pursued as Contemners of Our Authority. Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the 12th, Day of October, in the 12th, Year of Our Reign, 1660. By His Majesty's Command,

LAWDERDALE.

This

This Proclamation is most plausibly drawn; and the greatest Concern seems to appear for the Good of the People, and the maintaining their Privileges and Liberty. But then, by the Paper it self, we are put in Mind, that 'tis only such Liberty, as is consistent with the Prerogative; and indeed 'tis the first Time I have observed such an Expression, "The King's Prerogative, by which alone, the Liberties of the People can be preserved." The King's Prerogative under the ancient Restrictions of it in Scotland, was helpful to preserve Liberty; but that ever, especially in the illimited Sense here, it was the alone Way to preserve Liberty, is what I cannot persuade my self of. In a Word, we may perceive, that the Managers were willing to have all absolutely in their Hand, and preclude all Access to the King, that they might have the entire Disposal of Persons, and their Estates: In order to which, every Body is prohibite to leave the Kingdom without Permission; and the King's Indemnity was suspended for a long Time, till they had made their Market, by the Act of Fines, which, we shall hear, brought little to the Pocket of the first Projectors of it, tho' afterwards the Fines were severely exacted, to the Oppression of the Country, and the raising the first open Disturbance of the Peace.

1660.
Observes on it.

Little more remarkable offers this Year. September 13th, the King's Brother, the Duke of Glocester, died; and the English Parliament, after they had done every Thing the Court desired, were adjourned; and December 29th they were dissolved. In September, the English Forces left Scotland, having been here since September 1650. and kept this Kingdom under Subjection for Ten Years. At this Time came on the Election of Magistrates for the Royal Burghs; and such were generally chosen, who fell in with the Measures of the Court. Robert Murray Merchant in Edinburgh, knighted November 1st following, was Provost of Edinburgh, John Campbel elder, was chosen Provost of Glasgow, John Walkinshaw, James Barns, and John Ker Bailies; and generally speaking, all who had been active in the Work of Reformation, during the former Period, were now turned out of all Trust.

Duke of Glocester dies.
English Parliament dissolved.
English Forces removed.

The 5th Day of November was kept this Year with great Solemnity; and we shall afterwards find Laws made for the perpetual Observation of it. In the Beginning of November, the Synod of Lothian met at Edinburgh, and sent up an Address to the King by way of Return to his Letter above inserted, a Copy of which I have not seen: But by an original Letter from Mr. Dickson and Mr. Hutcheson to the Earl of Lawderdale, writ November 10th, I find them acquainting his Lordship, "That their Synod had convened that Week, and he "was shortly to receive their humble Return to his Majesty from the Moderator, wherein "they have given a full Return to every Part of his Majesty's gracious Letter." They send him a Copy of the Act of the Synod, concerning those in their Bounds who have been engaged in Schismatical Courses; a Copy of which I have not seen. They add, "We indeed "believe, that the Way of Clemency and Moderation towards the Crowd of those who have "been misled, and who shall renounce their Course, (as some in our Synod are already doing) "will in the Issue prove most for the Good of his Majesty's Affairs; and, we doubt not, "will be most acceptable to him." They close their Letter with some Remarks upon a Draught of a Proclamation, for calling a General Assembly, communicate to them privately by Mr. William Sharp, and offer "some Alterations fit to be made, to dis- "cover his Majesty's Moderation to such as have made wrong Steps." Whether the King, and the Nobility now at the Helm, really designed to call a General Assembly, or if this was another Blind of Mr. James Sharp, to keep off Applications for an Assembly, which would have ruined his ambitious Designs, I know not: But nothing was done effectually in it, and the Alterations craved, are mostly Softnings in relation to the Antirevolutioners, upon whom, it would seem, the Plan of the Proclamation was very hard. They would have the Expression, turbulent and fanatick Spirits, changed, and the Phrase, employing of Power for removing rotten Members, run thus, But likewise the Power wherewith God hath trusted him, to prevent the further endangering the Safety, Peace, Union, and Order of the Church. Instead of the Restrictions mentioned in the Draught, to prevent the Election of some pointed at, they propose this general Clause, Requiring those, who by the Acts and Constitutions of this Church, are allowed to sit in Assemblies, to convene in an Assembly at the Time appointed. And they very earnestly desire the prohibitory Clause, of Persons so and so qualified in the Draught, their not sitting in any Judicatory, till they have renounced, &c. may be reconsidered: And they observe, "That whatever may be the Case as to General Assemblies, where Members "are elected out of inferior Judicatories, yet in this Church, so long as Ministers are not de- "posed or suspended, they are certainly Members of Sessions, Presbyteries, and Synods, as "being a Privilege flowing immediately from the Office of the Ministry, without any super- "venient Commission."

Their Remarks upon a Proclamation for calling a General Assembly.

Another Letter I have before me, written by the same Persons, November 13. to the Earl of Middleton, which is merely taken up in Expressions of their Concern for his Lordship, and their Expectations of Kindness from him to the Church, and the Interests of the Gospel, and Judicatories of Christ, which his Majesty hath resolved to countenance, protect and preserve without Violation; and containing nothing of publick Concern, I say no more of it.

question. But, upon what Views I shall not say, the Sheriff was pardoned, and got a Remission.

Toward the Beginning of December, the Marquis of Argyle was brought down to Edinburgh, the Account of which will fall in afterwards. December 10. our Scots Parliament is adjourned till January 1st, because Matters were not fully concerted at London, as to Church-government and other Heads. The Funerals of King Charles I. January 29. and the Coronation of the King designed to be February 12. and some other important Matters at London, took the King so up, that our Scots Affairs behoved to be delayed.

Ship with the Registers of the Nation lost.

Upon the 18th of December, the Ship which had on board the Registers and Records of the Kingdom of Scotland, which had been taken up to London by Cromwel, as a Badge of our Subjection, and were now sent down in a Ship of Kirkaldy, unhappily perished at Sea, to the great Loss of the Nation: There Eighty five Hogsheads of Papers, and many original Records were lost; and it was unaccountable such a Treasure should have been sent down by Sea, and an unlucky Thing, not to say Omen, to Scotland.

Middleton's Arrival Dec. 31.
Character.

The Earl of Middleton came down to Holy-rood-house upon the last Day of this Year, Commissioner to this new Parliament, and was met upon his Way with great Solemnity. The King allowed him Nine hundred Merks per Day for his Table. From a Volunteer he was raised to a Major, and for his close Adherence to the King in his Troubles, he made him first Lord Fettercairn, and then Earl of Middleton, and now High Commissioner to the Parliament. He continued in Favour, till he began to engross the Fines and Places of Trust and Power, to himself and his Friends; and then the Earl of Lawderdale got him turned out, and managed all for many Years in Scotland.

Preparations for the meeting of Parliament.

Before this, Matters had been prepared, and all was in Readiness. The Two Eastmost Kirks of St. Giles were turned into one, and the King's Seat put up, and Lofts made for the Conveniency of the Commissioner and Members. The Crown and Sceptre, preserved by the Earl Marshall in the late Troubles, were brought to Edinburgh, and it was resolved to ride the Parliament upon the First Day of the new Year.

CHAP. II.

Of the State and Sufferings of Presbyterians, during the Year 1661.

1661.

Have not seen any distinct Account of the overturning of our Reformation-establishment by Presbyterian Government in this Church of Scotland, and the vast Changes made at this Time in Religious and Civil Affairs: Therefore I have ventured to give the larger Account of this great Turn, and drawn it from a good many original Papers and authentick Accounts, which will let us in to the Springs of it.

General View of the Subject Matter of this Chapter.

The Parliament convened the First Day of this Year, and laid the Foundations for all that afterward follows upon Presbyterians, till the Lord turned back their Captivity as Streams in the South, at the happy and glorious Revolution, 1688. and so I have given the fuller Accounts of what they did. Besides the general Attacks made by them upon our Laws and Constitution, a good many worthy Ministers were brought to very much Trouble and Hazard, as well as some Gentlemen and others.

This remarkable Year will likewise bring me to the Martyrdom of our Three first Worthies in this Church; the truly great and noble Marquis of Argyle, the reverend and learned Mr. James Guthrie, and the excellent Lord Waristoun: The last tho' forfeited this Year, yet his Warfare not being accomplished till some Time after, I shall delay the Accounts of him to their own Place, 1663.

There were some Efforts made by the Ministers of the Church of Scotland for the preserving of our valuable Constitution; and tho' one would have wished they had made a greater Stand than they could now in their unhappy Circumstances; yet really more was done by them, than is generally known, tho' without any Success.

When the Parliament was up, the Privy Council is erected, and they had the Execution of the Laws made, put in their Hands; and we shall find them beginning the Work of Persecution upon Noblemen, Ministers and others, this Year, and going on with it for about Twenty four Years, with less or more Severity, as answered the Managers Aims; of which I shall essay as distinct an Account from their Registers and Records, as I can gather up.

By Order from the King, towards the End of the Year, Prelacy is erected, and the Judicatories of the Church, which had met under former Prelacy, are upon the Matter stopped in their Meetings, and our Bishops consecrate in England. These, with some other incidental Things, will furnish Matter for Seven or Eight Sections upon this Chapter.

S E C T. I.

Of the Laws and Actings of the First Session of Parliament, in as far as they concern the Church, with some obvious Remarks.

THIS first Parliament after the Restoration, beginning with this Year, and by their Actings paving the Way for all the Sufferings I am to give the Relation of; it will be proper I begin this Chapter with some Account of their Procedure, from the printed Acts of Parliament, the Registers of that high Court, and other Narratives come to my Hand. We shall find this Parliament making a general Attack upon the Constitution of this National Church; and that deserves our Consideration before the Sufferings of particular Persons, Noblemen, Ministers and others.

Our first Martyrs and Sufferers were attacked for Things done agreeable to standing Law; and therefore the first Step of our Managers was to open a Door for a more justifiable, at least legal Prosecution of honest People, who stood up for Religion, Liberty and Property: So they resolved Piece by Piece to remove the Hedges which were about all those, and bring in a new Set of Laws, which deserve the most serious Reflection of the Reader, who would understand the true State of the Sufferings of the Church of Scotland, during this whole Period I am describing.

The Author pretends to no further Knowledge of our Laws, than what the bare Reading of the Acts of Parliament, with a little Reflection upon them, affords him. He wishes that some Person versed in our Scots Statutes, and the Laws of other Kingdoms, would bestow some Thoughts upon the Laws of this black Period: However the Reader is like to have this Benefit, that all the Observations and Remarks offered, will be plain and easy, and the native Product of a general View of our Records.

When once I have made some general Remarks upon the Disposition and Circumstances of this first Parliament, I shall go on to offer a few obvious Observations upon the Acts and Procedure of this first Session, in as far as they relate to Religion, and the Sufferings of this Church.

That the Reader may have some Idea of the Temper and Genius of this Parliament, I shall take the Liberty, with all Truth and Freedom, to give a short Account of a few Matters of Fact, abundantly notour in the Time I am writing of, but now perhaps not so much known.

And there is the greater Room for Plainness and Freedom here, since I abstract from Names and Persons, that, as soon as the Yoke of Oppression was off the Scots Nation, and they restored to a Liberty of thinking and acting, the whole Acts I shall have Occasion to mention, in as far as they struck at the Constitution of this Presbyterian Church, were most seasonably and unanimously rescinded and annulled, Parl. William and Mary, 1690. the very first Act of which Parliament, than which Scotland never had a more just Representation, April 25. abrogates the Act of Supremacy in the most extensive Manner; and the Supremacy was one of the great Springs of the iniquitous Procedure of this Period. Again, the 5th Act, June 7. 1690. ratifying the Confession of Faith, a Step of Reformation never before attained to in Scotland, whereby the Scriptural and pure Doctrine of this Church, is embodied with our Civil Liberties, and settling Presbyterian Government, does rescind and calls a great Number of other iniquitous Acts in this Interval. I might add Act 17. of the same Session, rescinding Fines and Forfeitures, and Act 27. rescinding the Laws for Conformity, with many others.

Wherefore, since our Representatives judged those Acts unworthy of any further Respect, I hope I may be allowed to say, they were Iniquity established by a Law; and, in the Entry of this Work, regret that ever such Laws had a Being, especially when they were so rigorously execute, and a Door opened by other Methods, for Stretches far beyond the Letter of those very Laws. And here indeed, as I take it, lies the main Spring and Stress of that absurd and groundless Clamour raised by the Episcopal Party, of their being persecuted since the Revolution, in that those unchristian and wicked Laws, upon which their Establishment stood, were then rescinded; for a Restraint put upon them from persecuting others, is to those Complainers a Persecution.

The Acts of it rescinded at the Revolution.

1661.

Character of the Members, which vindicates the Act of Classes in some Measure.

The greatest Part of the Makers of the Laws I am entering on, were of such a personal Character, as did no Way recommend their Acts; it was blacker than I am willing to transmit to Posterity. If there were any Stretches made in the former Period, to hold out Malig-nants and Anticovenanters, by the Act of Classes and Levies, they are in Part vindicated by the Door now opened to the greatest Wickednesses and grossest Immoralities in too many of the Courtiers. Indeed at this Time, a dreadful Deluge of Iniquity, and Sins before unknown in Scotland since Popery was turned out, brake forth; and Atheism and Profaneness now growing common, paved the Way for slavish Principles in Civil Things, and Persecution in Matters of Conscience.

Middleton no
unfit Commis-si-oner.

The Commissioner, the Earl of Middleton, his fierce and violent Temper, agreeable enough to a Camp, and his Education, made him no improper Instrument to overaw Scotland, and bring us down from any Sense of Liberty and Privilege, unto a pliant Submission to arbitrary Designs, absolute Supremacy and Prerogative. And this was the more easily accomplished, that this Nation, now for Ten Years, had been under the Feet of the English Army, and very much inured to Subjection.

His Character.

A short Account and Character of this Nobleman, to whom the King entrusted the chief Management of Affairs at this Juncture, mayn't perhaps be unacceptable to the Reader. He was a Gentleman in the North of Scotland, who made his first Appearance under the Earl of Montrose, against the Gordons, who set up against the Covenanters, and he had a considerable Share in defeating them at the Bridge of Dee. In the Years 1644 and 1645. he took Service in the Army of the Parliament of England, against the King, when Montrose changed Hands; and his Men ravaged the Country, and among other Cruelties killed Middleton's Father in cold Blood, sitting in his own House. He was called Home from England, and was with General Lesly when Montrose was defeat at Philiphaugh.

He was Major General under Duke Hamilton, and engaged with a Handful of Country-men at Mauchlin-muir, in the Shire of Air, where he was in some Hazard. He and his Party came upon a Company of Country People, on a Munday after a Communion, who had not the least Thought of fighting, and were unprovided for it. Mr. Thomas Wylie Minister of Mauchlin, under whose Hand I have an Account of that Action, and some other Ministers travelled 'twixt the People and Middleton, and got his Promise to permit the People to dis-miss peaceably: Which when they were doing, his Men fell upon the People, and with some Slaughter scattered them, and kept the Muir. When he came to Mauchlin, the Ministers quarrelled his Breach of Promise and Capitulation; and he put it off, with alledging, that some of the People had provoked his Men with harsh Speeches.

We shall afterward hear of his Plot to draw the King from the Committee of Estates to the North; for which he was excommunicate, and Mr. James Guthrie pronounced the Sentence. In a little Time he professed his Repentance with many Tears, and was relaxed. With the King he went into Worcester, where he was taken and imprisoned in the Tower. When he got out, after many Difficulties in England, he went over to the King, and was by him sent to Scotland to head the Highlanders, who were on the King's Side. This misgiving, he went back to his Master, and at the Restoration was honoured with the highest Post in Scotland.

Our Nobility and Gentry not what once they were.

Our Nobility and Gentry were remarkably changed to the worse: It was but few of such, who had been active in the former Years, were now alive, and those few were marked out for Ruin. A young Generation had sprung up under the English Government, educate under Penury and Oppression; their Estates were under Burden, and many of them had little other Prospect of mending their Fortunes, but by the King's Favour, and so were ready to act that Part he was best pleased with.

Many of them disliked the Strictness of Presbytery.

Several of the most leading Managers, and Members of Parliament, had taken up a Dislike at the Strictness of Presbyterian Discipline. Middleton had not forgot his Excommunication, or the Pronouncer of it; and others had been disgusted at their being obliged to satisfy for their Lewdness and Scandals, and upon this Turn, they were willing to enjoy a little more Latitude.

The Indemnity for Scotland
delayed.

Add to this, that when the King was pleased to grant a most ample Indemnity to his Subjects in England and Ireland, for their Failures in the late Times, his Grace did not come so low as his ancient Kingdom. Most Part of Scotsmen, save the Ministers, who received a very ungenerous Reward, had been some way or other involved with the English under the Usurpation; and now were chargeable with Treason, and their Lives and Estates at the Mercy, I say not of the King, but of his hungry Courtiers, who laid their Measures, so as an Indemnity for Scotland was put off, till they got their Schemes of Oppression and Revenge formed. Thus the Hopes of Time-servers, who had their Fortunes to mend, and the Fears of many, who perhaps, if left to their own Choice, would have inclined to preserve our Reformation and Liberty, were improven to carry on the Designs now on Foot.

When the Proclamation, October 12th, formerly noticed, was published, calling the Parliament, and devolving upon their Judgment the Behaviour of all under the late Troubles, and discharging all Petitions and Applications to his Majesty; this was soon understood to be no

Act

Act of Indemnity; but the plain Language was, that every one who would not follow Court-measures, quit their Principles, calmly subject to arbitrary Government in Church and State, and vote and act as the Managers would have them, might expect to be treated as Rebels. Indeed it required a greater Measure of the old Scots Spirit, and more Fixedness in Principles than many had, to stand out against so heavy an Argument.

1661.

Moreover, great Pains was taken upon the Elections to this Parliament; Matters every where in Shires and Burghs were so carefully managed, that for the most Part, Persons entirely at the Devotion of the Court, were chosen: In some Places where others were chosen, Letters were writ by the Courtiers, under some Pretext or other, for a Second Choice. Thus in the Shire of Air, where a Gentleman of one of the First Families of the Shire, but a firm Presbyterian by Principle, was elected; a near Relation of his own, a Courtier, prevailed to get him altered. And some of the most zealous Gentlemen in the former Times, were viis & modis brought under Process, and some of them cited before the Parliament, that there might be no Trouble from them as Members. The Act of the Committee of Estates above, App. N^o. 6. pointed this Way; and the double-faced Expressions in the Letter to Mr. Douglas, were designed to make all go on as smooth as might be.

Pains taken upon Elections.

After all those previous Steps, to dispose for the great Things in Hand, the Parliament convened January 1. 1661. just that Day 12. Months, upon which Monk marched up to London, and that Day 10. Years, whereupon the King was crowned at Scone. The Members rode from the Abbey to the House in great State; the Earl of Crawford bore the Crown, the Earl of Sutherland the Sceptre, and the Earl of Mar the Sword. Duke Hamilton and the Marquis of Montrose rode behind the Commissioner, covered.

Riding of this Parliament, January 1.

When they had taken their Seats in the Parliament-house, a very good Sermon was preached to them by Mr. Robert Douglas, from 2^d Chron. 19. 6. Take Heed what you do, for you judge not for Man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the Judgment. After calling of the Rolls, the Earl of Glencairn was chosen Preses, and the Commissioner had a Speech, recommending Peace and Unity. When those Forms were over, the Commissioner had most of the Nobility at Dinner with him, where he was served in great State: He sat at a Table by himself, and the Earl of Athole gave him the Cup upon his Knee, after he had tasted it, in a Cover, before he delivered it.

Mr. Douglas preaches.

January 4th they entred upon Business. I have in mine Eye a very distinct Account of their Procedure every Day, in Manuscript, unto the Middle of April, from which I may afterwards give some Hints of their Actings; but here I shall confine my self very much to the known publick Acts made in Opposition to that Work, which had been carried on from the 1638. to the Usurpation, and give the Reader as short a View, as the Variety of Matter will permit, of their Procedure, in the vast Change made by them in this Church and Kingdom.

They enter upon Business.

It is very evident, the Design on Foot, in this Parliament, was to make the King absolute, and the Laws henceforth only a publick Signification of the Sovereign's Pleasure, who after this, is to be above Law, and uncontrollable Lord of his Subjects Property, Purse and Conscience; and to overturn what had been formerly established in Favours of Religion and Liberty.

Their great Design:

This unhappy Project was helped forward, at least not a little encouraged, by the fulsome Sermons preached by too many before them. The Preachers were not now appointed by the Assembly or Commission, who used formerly to sit in Time of Parliament; the Managers must be their own Carvers; the King's Advocate's Letter was the Appointment Ministers had to preach, and he was not wanting in pitching on very fit Tools for their Purpose, who preached smooth Things. Some of their Sermons yet remain in Print, as Blots upon their Reputation: And tho' Mr. Douglas, and some few other worthy Men were employed now and then, for Form's sake, and they preached Christ, and plain Duty; yet it was not so with many of their Preachers. Their ordinary Themes were, the wickedness of Rebellion; and in their Application, they explained this to be the late Work of Reformation, and the Covenants, even before the Parliament had declared against those; the Sinfulness of defensive Arms, whereby they libelled most Part of their Hearers, and cast a Slur upon the constant Practice of this Nation; the Extensiveness of the King's Power; passive Obedience, and such like. Those flaming Sermons of theirs, bring upon the Preachers of them a great Share of all the After-guilt of this Period, and paved their own Way to Preferment.

Which was promoted by the fulsome Sermons preached before them.

Those corrupt Ministers, who had sided themselves with the publick Resolutioners, and now were carefully serving the Courtiers, very much heightned the lamentable Breaches betwixt the Resolutioners and Protesters, who were both against the Defection now entring upon: This miserable Rent, artfully managed by designing Men, so weakned the honest Ministry of the Church, and split the People, who were for our former excellent Constitution, that no such seasonable and regular Application was made for preventing the Change, as was wished for; tho' somewhat was done, as we shall hear.

Those Preachers heightned the Rent in the Church.

Thus every Thing concurred, in the Lord's holy and righteous Providence, for helping forward a dark and black Cloud upon this Church and Kingdom, which began with the Acts I am now to give a particular Detail of, if once I had further observed,

That

1661.

The Parliament acted so, as to make some question the Validity of their Actings.

That this Parliament, when they sat down, so constituted themselves, and acted in such a Manner, as made their Acts and Laws, in the Opinion of severals, questionable as to their Validity and Legality. It is plain they run cross to standing Law, before they gave themselves the Trouble of any Repeal. The Reader will find, that by Act 5th. Parl. 2. Charles I. where his Majesty was present, "Every Member of succeeding Parliaments is to take, and subscribe the National Covenant, and give an Oath of Parliament relative thereunto." This was not now done, as every Body knows.

Yea, it was expressly provided by our last Scots Parliament, where his Majesty was present, 1651. "That in all succeeding Parliaments, every Member, before they entered upon Business, should sign and subscribe the Covenant; and without this, the Constitution of the Parliament, and all they do, is declared void and null." The Acts of this Parliament were not printed, and I have not seen a Copy of the Act: But, from Persons yet alive, and Papers written at this Time, I am assured such an Act was made.

Not to say any Thing of the Reasonableness or Necessity of making such Restrictions, 'tis certain, those were now unrepealed Laws, and the last relative to the very Constitution of Parliament, made by the King, and many of themselves; and consequently they sat down, and went on in a Method directly contrary to the uncontroverted Statute Law. And tho' those, with many other excellent Laws, made in the former Period, were rescinded; it remained doubtful with the Persons who objected against the Validity of this Parliament, how far they could do so, unless, by express Instructions from their Constituents, they had begun with altering the Constitution. But this Point I must leave to the Gentlemen of the long Robe, skilled in our Laws and the Nature of Parliamentary Power.

Burdens gradually brought upon the Subjects by them.

Having laid down those general Observations, I come to take a more particular View of the Acts of this Session of Parliament; and by a narrow Consideration of them, and the Order in which they are made, a great Deal of Art and Cunning will appear; in gradually bringing upon Members of Parliament, and Subjects, the heavy Burdens they were under before the 1638. and not a little of the serpentine Subtlety of Mr. Sharp, who came lately from England with ample Directions concerted with the High-fliers there, to bring this Church back to its deformed State, about 23 Years ago.

App. No. 7.

The first printed Act is concerning the President, and Oath of Parliament. See App. No. 7. The civil Part of it, their making the Chancellor, or any for the Time, nominate by the King, President, I do not meddle with; every Thing now must be done antipodes to the Practice of the Covenanters, be it never so reasonable in it self: And it does not appear unreasonable, that a Judicatory, such as this, choose their own Mouth. But waving this, let me consider a little the Oath inserted in this Act; the Form of which is,

Oath of Allegiance and Parliament.

I for Testification of my faithful Obedience to my most gracious and redoubted Sovereign Charles King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, do affirm, testify and declare, by this my solemn Oath, that I acknowledge my said Sovereign, only supreme Governor of this Kingdom, over all Persons, and in all Causes; and that no foreign Prince, Power or State, nor Person Civil or Ecclesiastick, hath any Jurisdiction, Power or Superiority over the same: And therefore I utterly renounce and forsake all foreign Jurisdictions, Powers, and Authorities; and shall at my utmost Power defend, assist and maintain his Majesty's Jurisdiction foresaid, against all deadly, and never decline his Majesty's Power or Jurisdiction, as I shall answer to God.

Members of Parliament were to add, And I shall faithfully give my Advice and Vote in every Thing that shall be propounded in Parliament, as I shall answer to God.

Observations upon this Oath.

Many Particulars may be noticed as to this Oath. In the Title of the Act, it is termed an Oath of Parliament; in the Body of the Act, 'tis called an Oath of Allegiance. There are here two very different Oaths; and it was not without a Cause why it was huddled over in Parliament, under the Notion of an Oath of Parliament, that Persons upon whom the first Part was to be imposed, might not too soon spy out the Design upon them. Yet they must have been very heedless, who did not observe, that this Oath, in both its Views, was calculate to shuffle out our former Establishment, and the Covenants, and in its Nature everfive of them.

This new coined Oath might be compared with the English Oath of Supremacy, which no doubt was its Model; every Thing now being to be brought as near the English Pattern as possible. It appeared to many to have in it the most choking Clause of the Supremacy; indeed in so many Words, it does not formally assert the King's Power in Ecclesiastical Matters, as the other does; but its general and extensive Clause, in all Causes and over all Persons, takes it in, and appears even somewhat wider than the English Phrases themselves.

It seems evident, that this Scots Oath of Allegiance and Parliament, and really of Supremacy, is ambiguous in its Expressions. The Terms of it are artfully enough formed, so as to bear a double Face. Presbyterians cheerfully allow the Sovereign a civil and sanctional Power in in Ecclesiastical Matters and Causes, as well as a supreme Power over all Persons. And there was some Shadow of Ground for understanding the Oath in this safe and favourable Sense at this Time, when the Commissioner and Chancellor declared again and again in Face of Parliament, that they intended not to give his Majesty any Ecclesiastical, but only a civil supreme Power. Yet in a little, when Ministers offered to take the Oath in this Sense, they were not allowed. And it would seem those Declarations were made from the Throne, upon other Views than appeared; for when the Earl of Cassils, and Laird of Kilburny demanded those Declarations might be insert in the Registers, it was peremptorily refused. This demonstrates the Ambiguity of the Phrases.

In themselves, and by reason of this Ambiguity, several Phrases in the Oath were at best dark. To say nothing of the others, that Expression, I renounce all foreign Jurisdictions, and shall maintain his Majesty's Authority foresaid, without Explication, may reach further than foreign Prince, Power or Person, since foreign, as it stands here, seems to include all Jurisdiction and Power, except the King's as Supreme: And thus it would be an absolute Renunciation of all Ecclesiastick Judicatories. So it proved in the Issue, and the whole Church-power came to be lodged in the Bishop, as deriving it from the King. I know this Clause relates, in its ordinary Sense, to Popery, and in so far was safe; but it might, yea actually was further extended, and consequently was dark.

In short, a good many reckoned the last Clause of this Oath simply unlawful. Supreme Governor, in the first Part here, seems explained by the King's Power and Jurisdiction, and the Swearer obliged never to decline it. This they thought a Step beyond the English Supremacy it self; by that, the King is allowed a limited Power in Ecclesiastical Matters, but by our Scots Oath, the Swearer seems bound down to Submission to all the Instances of the Exercise of that Power; so that in no Case the King must be declined, even tho' he should take upon him the Power of Excommunication, for Instance. How far this last Clause was call in to prelimit Members in the Processes to be before them, I do not say; but the declining the King's Jurisdiction, was no small Article against Mr. James Guthrie.

Several other Remarks might be made upon this Oath, if I had not already said so much on it. By the Act 114. James VI. Parl. 12. 1592. now in Force, and unrepealed, the Jurisdiction of the Church is ratified and confirmed, and the Allegiance sworn in this Oath, hath no Respect, yea is contrary to the due Limitation there contained. Again, every Body knew the Design of the Court at present, to establish a Royal Supremacy, and put the King in the Place of the Pope, which, by the Way, increased the Darknes and Ambiguity of the Phrases formerly noticed. To be short, this Oath came to be the Shibboleth of the State, and in a little it was extended to all Subjects of any Influence. And after the Members of Parliament were involved in it, and by Credit bound to defend and promote it, it became at first Matter of much Dispute and Strife, and afterwards an Occasion of Suffering. In the Year 1669. when Matters were ripe, it came to be explained, cleared, and imposed in its true and extensive Meaning; and its Sense was made plain, large and terrible, and an End put to the Debates about its Meaning.

This Oath, tho' thus involved, as we have heard, was stuck at by very few in the Parliament. The Earls of Cassils and Melvil, and the Laird of Kilburny refused it; whether there were any more, I have not heard: So well disposed were the Members to go in with every Thing that came about.

Having thus inaugurate the King a supreme civil Pope, if not some more, by Steps they proceed, in the following Acts, to assert, explain, and extend the Royal Prerogative. At this Time the Parliament's darling Design and beloved Work seems to have been, the Enlargement of his Majesty's Power, without any great Regard to Religion, Liberty, or Property; and they begin with civil Offices.

And, By their 2^d Act, declare it to be His Majesty's Prerogative, to choose Officers of State, Counsellors, and Lords of Session, as may be seen in the printed Acts; and they scrow up this Branch of the Prerogative to a jus divinum: Perhaps this is the first Time that ever the Nomination of Servants and Counsellors is derived from Heaven. In the rescissory Part of this Act, they run pretty high, and pronounce the contrary Laws and Practices, and Acts since the 1637. to have been undutiful and disloyal, tho' the King himself was present at some of them.

Remarks on their 2d Act.

In their 3^d Act, as may be seen in the printed Acts, they assert the King's Prerogative to be, "The calling, holding, proroguing or dissolving all Parliaments, Conventions or Meetings of Estates; and that all Meetings, without his special Warrant, are void and null." In the Preamble, out of their great Loyalty, they declare the Happiness of the People depends upon the Maintenance of the Prerogative. The Presbyterians for many Years felt how much their Happiness depended upon this, in the Parliament's Sense, by Bonds, Imprisonments, Hanging, Heading, and Murders in the Field and High-ways, without any Sentence. It is added, They make this Law out of Conscience, and from its Obligations. Upon how good Grounds they assert this, most of them have answered ere this Time at an higher Tribunal. An odd enough Sanction is annexed to this, That no Subject question or impugn any Thing in this Act, or do any Thing contrary thereto, under the Pains of Treason: Which seems to involve all the Members of Parliament in a wretched Necessity, to vote many of the following Acts when proposed, as they would not be guilty of Treason; and 'tis abundantly plain, that Piece by Piece they prelimited themselves, and gave up the Freedom of their Acting in a parliamentary Capacity.

Upon their 4th Act.

By their 4th Act, they go on, and statute, That no Convocations, Leagues, or Bonds be made without the Sovereign, and declare against all such, made without his Consent; and tacitely insinuate, that the Work of Reformation since the 1638. confirmed by the King and his Father, had well nigh ruined both King and Subjects; and cast a new Tash upon all that was done in that Period by his Majesty and many of themselves, as being done on Pretext of preserving the King's Person, Religion, and Liberty. They declare this Gloss was false and disloyal, and rescind all done, or to be done, without the King's Consent: By which undoubtedly our glorious Revolution must come in as black Treason.

Upon their 5th Act.

Further, by their 5th Act, they clothe their King with the sole Power of making Peace and War, without any great Necessity from the Matter they are upon, or Connection with the Subject. In the Preamble, they assert, That the King holds his Crown from God alone; and statute and declare, "That the raising of Subjects in Arms, is and was the Sovereign's undoubted Right; and that it shall be high Treason for any Subjects, upon any Pretext whatsoever, to rise in Arms without the King's Allowance." It was well they made not this Law to look back, as several of their Acts did, else the Commissioner, and the greatest Part of them, had been pronounced Traitors.

Upon their 6th Act.

One would think, by this Time, the Parliament were near to the plucking up the Covenant by the Root, and so they were; but an unnecessary Step must be taken for the better securing their Project, and that is, by Act 6th, to declare the Convention of Estates 1643. who entered into the solemn League and Covenant with the Parliament of England, void and null. That Convention was not called by a King, and therefore all they did must be a Nullity; and all Acts approving that Meeting, are rescinded, even the Ratification by the Parliament, where the King was present. This seems to be a very needless Act, since the Convention was on the Matter rescinded in their 3^d and 4th Acts; but they must make their Game sure, tho' it be by doing the same Things twice or thrice over. Probably the Managers were afraid to attack the Covenant directly, till once they tried the Pulse of the Members, who generally had sworn it, and secured themselves by this Essay; and if this had misgiven, they would have fallen upon it another Way: But all runs smooth, and the Courtiers were in no Hazard.

Their 7th Act.

Having thus made their Approaches, with all Caution and Safety, to the Fortrefs of the Covenants, 'tis sapp'd and overturned by their 7th Act; which, because it was Occasion of great Suffering afterward, and every Body who reads this History, mayn't have our Acts of Parliament by him, I have insert App. N^o. 8. and take the Liberty to make some Observes upon it.

App. N^o. 8th.

Remarks upon it.

That even after all this previous Caution, they do not declare directly that the Covenant was Treason, for the Nation was not yet ripe for this; nor totally rescind the Obligation of it; but only, as the Title of the Act bears, make a Declaration concerning it, and discharge the renewing of it, without the King's Consent, which was not to be looked for. So sacred and beloved were the Covenants in Scotland, that it was not fit as yet to venture further.

And even in this Declaration, the Narrative of the Act, and ratio legis, is not drawn from any ill Thing in the Covenant, but the Law is founded upon their own new made Statutes; all which are sufficiently called and overturned, by the King's own Consent to the Covenant, and his swearing of it. They themselves coin the Premises, and then form the Conclusion, as best serves their Purposes.

Indeed, in a very general and dubious Manner, they make an Innuendo, "That divers Things occurred in the late Troubles, in making and pursuing of Leagues and Bonds, that may be Occasion of Jealousies between his Majesty's Dominions." How tender do they appear of naming the Covenant! Those Occasions of Jealousie might arise from many other Bonds, and the Pursuance of them, besides the Covenants; and I could instance some of them.

However, upon this Supposition, they declare, "That there is no Obligation, by Covenant or other Treaties, upon Scotland, to endeavour by Arms a Reformation in England." It is not asserted in the Covenant, that in all Cases Scotland was obliged by Arms to reform England; to be sure, at this Juncture, there was no Hazard this Way. There follows a very unjust Reflection upon the Covenanters, "or to meddle with the publick Government, or Administration of that Kingdom." This the Covenanters never took upon them to do, save when pressed thereto by the English themselves.

The Declaration is again repeted, That there is no Obligation upon Scotsmen to meddle with the Religion of England by Arms, which is now termed a seditionous Way. It must be owned, that Arms in many Cases are none of the best Ways to propagate a Reformation in Religion and Church-government: But 'tis certain the Scots were invited to England to assist that that Nation in their own Self-defence against Popery, and Prelates halting fast back to it; which quite alters the Case, and yet is by many overlooked in this Matter.

In a Word, by this Act, all the Subjects are "discharged to require the renewing of the Covenant, or any other Oath, or to swear it, without the King's Consent." Whether this Clause precludes Application to the Government in a regular Way, for renewing those solemn Vows against Popery and Prelacy, I do not know; neither what is included in the other publick Oaths here spoken of; they may relate to the Oath of Canonical Obedience, for any Thing I know, since the Prohibition is abundantly wide. Thus far is plain, that the renewing of the Covenant it self is not simply discharged, tho' I must own there was little Prospect of getting the Condition here required to this, His Majesty's Consent.

Thus, more softly than one would have expected, the Attempt is made upon the solemn League and Covenant. Their preparatory Acts made it the Deed of an unlawful Convocation; and they would have it believed, that whatever Excellency might be in the Matter of it, yet it was no binding Law obliging Scotland, being made a non habente potestatem. By those Blinds, they huddled over the Matter, so as some were cheated into the Thoughts they might safely renounce the Covenant as a Law, and stand by it as a private Oath. With those Colours and Distinctions, this Act was voted pretty smoothly to the Courtiers Wish: Yet some of all the States dissented; but the most Part, who were against this Act, withdrew, and went out of the House, fearing a publick judicial Vote might render their Compliances under the Usurpation unpardonable. I find there was one plain honest Man, George Gordon Bailiff of Burntisland, whose Vote in all the preparatory Steps, and this Act, was, He could do nothing against his lawful Oath and Covenant. Him the Managers were pleased to overlook.

In the 8th Act, the Parliament give in to the old, and yet continued Method, of covering their Designs against Presbyterians, with a pretended Zeal against Popery; and under this View, frame a very good Act against Priests and Jesuits: But the Narrative of it was complained of, as injurious to Truth, and every Body's Experience; that Disobedience to lawful Authority, covered with specious Pretences, i. e. in their Meaning, The Work of Reformation, and the Covenants, had been the Occasion of the Increase of Priests and Jesuits, needs no Refutation. The next Clause, that Priests and Jesuits abounded more at present, than in the Time of the King's Father or Grandfather, is what I very much doubt of. They were indeed too numerous at present, but they behaved to be many more in King James's Time: And what Sholes of them were in King Charles I. his Reign, the Reader will see from the Account of the Popish Government in Scotland at that Time, writ by Mr. John Abernethy a Popish Priest; which, because it is in the Hands of very few, was never printed, and deserves the Consideration of all true Protestants, I have added App. N^o. 9.

Their 8th Act

App. N^o. 9.

Their 9th Act, approving the Engagement 1648. and rescinding the Actings of Parliaments and Committees which ensued thereupon, contains many Perversions of Matters of Fact, and Reflections upon the Marquis of Argyle, and the Ministers who were opposite to the Engagement. Those last are represented as a few seditious Ministers, when 'tis notour that the far greatest Number of the Ministers of this Church, were heartily against the Engagement, as it was then stated by the Party who set up for it. I shall not here enter upon any Detail of this Affair, any Body who writes the History of that Period, will find Matter enough from the very publick Papers and Records, the Acts of General Assemblies, Committees of Estates, Commissions of Assemblies, and not a little in the Defences of the Marquis of Argyle, to set the Matters of Fact here, and in other Acts of this Parliament so much misrepresented, in a just and quite other Light. The rescissory Part of this Act was already made upon the Matter, in the preceeding Acts, and the Ratification of what they now make void by the King himself in full Parliament, is no Hindrance to our Levellers in this razing Work.

Their 9th Act

I shall likewise leave their 10th Act, against the Declaration of the Kingdom of Scotland, January 16. 1647. to the Remarks of such who shall give the History of the former Period; and I am perswaded they will be easily able to take off the Aspersions cast upon such, whom the Managers are pleased to term a few seditious Persons, who had then screwed themselves into the Government.

Their 10th Act

When by the preceeding Steps they have paved their Road, they come by the 11th Act to require what turned about to be Matter of sore Suffering afterwards, the Oath of Allegiance, and the subscribing an Instrument assertory of the Royal Prerogative. Such was their Spite at the Covenant, that tho' more than once they had already declared, it had no Authority as a Law; yet by this Act they must cut off the dead Man's Head, and, in as far as lay in their Power, enervate the Obligation of the Matter of it. By another Act, in a following Session of this Parliament, the Matter of it is declared unlawful, and they order it to be renounced; at length, in Queensberry's Parliament, 24 Years after this, it is declared to be high Treason for any to adhere to it.

Their 11th Act

This 11th Act being remarkable, and a Sort of Abbreviate of all they had done, I have inserted it, App. N^o. 10. The Oath of Allegiance, or rather Supremacy, I have considered, upon the first Act, and only now add, that when this present Act was a framing, some Ministers in Edinburgh offered to some of the Managers, an Amendment only of one Word, instead of supreme Governor, that it should run supreme civil Governor, which would have gone far to have removed the Scruples of many: But no Alteration would be heard; the Members of Parliament had taken the Oath, and every Body who would not follow their Example, was reckoned dissatisfied.

The Oath was now imposed upon all in civil Offices; they knew what they had in View shortly to do as to Ministers: But lest they should presume upon an Exemption, a general Clause is added, requiring this Oath from all upon whom the privy Council, or any having Orders from them, should impose it; and so it reached most Part of the Subjects in a little Time. The Acknowledgment of the King's Prerogative, required as a Test of Loyalty, and Condition of enjoying of any publick Trust, is so remarkable, as it deserves a Room in the Body of this History, and follows.

the Royal Prerogative,

‘FORASMUCH as the Estates of Parliament of this Kingdom, by their several Acts of the 11th and 21st of January last, have, from the Sense of their humble Duty, and in Recognizance of his Majesty's just Right, declared, That it is an inherent Privilege of the Crown, and an undoubted Part of the Royal Prerogative of the Kings of this Kingdom, to have the sole Choice and Appointment of the Officers of Estate, privy Counsellors, and Lords of Session; That the Power of calling, holding, and dissolving of Parliaments, and all Conventions and Meetings of the Estates, doth solely reside in the King's Majesty, his Heirs and Successors; and that, as no Parliament can be lawfully kept, without the special Warrant or Presence of the King's Majesty, or his Commissioner, so no Acts nor Statutes to be passed in any Parliament, can be binding on the People, or have the Authority and Force of Laws, without the special Approbation of his Majesty, or his Commissioner, interponed thereto, at the making thereof: That the Power of Arms, making of Peace and War, and making of Treaties with foreign Princes and States, or at Home by Subjects among themselves, doth properly reside in the King's Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, and is their undoubted Right, and theirs alone; and that it is high Treason in the Subjects of this Kingdom, or any Number of them, upon whatsoever Ground, to rise or continue in Arms, to maintain any Forts, Garrisons, or Strengths, to make Peace or War, or to make any Treaties or Leagues with Foreigners, or among themselves, without his Majesty's Authority first interponed thereto: That it is unlawful for Subjects of whatsoever Quality or Function, to convocate, convene, or assemble themselves, to treat, consult, or determine in any Matters of State, Civil or Ecclesiastick, (except in the ordinary Judgments) or to make Leagues or Bonds upon whatsoever Colour or Pretence, without his Majesty's special Consent and Approbation had thereto: That the League and Covenant, and all Treaties following thereupon, and Acts or Deeds that do or may relate thereunto, are not obligatory, nor do infer any Obligation upon this Kingdom, or the Subjects thereof, to meddle or interpose by Arms, or any seditious Way, in any Thing, concerning the Religion and Government of the Churches in England and Ireland, or in what may concern his Majesty's Government there: And that none of his Majesty's Subjects should presume upon any Pretext of any Authority whatsoever, to require the renewing or swearing of the said League and Covenant, or of any other Covenants, or publick Oaths concerning the Government of the Church or Kingdom; and that none offer to renew or swear the same, without his Majesty's special Warrant and Approbation, &c.

‘I do, conform to the Acts of Parliament aforesaid, declare, That I do with all humble Duty, acknowledge his Majesty's Royal Prerogative, Right and Power, in all the Particulars, and in the Manner aforesaid; and that I do heartily give my Consent thereto, by those Presents, subscribed by me at —

the

This Instrument, assertory of the King's Prerogative, which all Persons, as above, were to subscribe, comprehends all they had declared in their foregoing Acts; and by it, the Signers consented to the King's absolute Power, owned the Unlawfulness of resisting the vilest Tyrant, and materially renounced that Work of Reformation in Scotland, begun at our Secession from Popery, and revived and carried on in the Year 1638. approved once and again by the King and Parliament; and, which is more, signally owned of God. This Declaration with the Oath of Allegiance, became the trying Badges of Loyalty; and whenever any suspect Person was sited before the Council, or other Courts, or Magistrates, those Two were offered him: If he swallowed them, he was dismissed; if he refused, this was turned to a Libel, and no Mercy for him.

In considering the former Acts, Remarks have been made upon most Part of the Clauses of this Declaration, and I shall not repete them. In short, by the general imposing of it, the Courtiers endeavoured to make the Prince absolute, cramp Religion, and alter both the Frame and Principles of the Civil and Ecclesiastick Government here. This Declaration must be subscribed, which, as to Truth and Perswasion, is much the same with its being sworn,

under the Penalty of being reputed disloyal and disaffected; and the Refusal of it made a Person incapable of all publick Trust.

1661.

And yet not a few Assertions are in it, far above the Capacities of many upon whom it was imposed; so that they could not make this Declaration with Knowledge, and in Truth: Thus it became a plain Stumbling-block, an Occasion of sinning, and a Snare to the Consciences of many; and the Sufferings to be narrated, which followed upon the Refusal of this Declaration, and the former Oath, are purely upon Conscience and Principle, and can never be alledged to be for Rebellion; unless every Thing that runs cross to the Methods of a corrupt and imposing Time, must be so named. I hope the Reader will remark it, that till the Rising at Pentland, which was the native Consequent of this and other Impositions, little other Reason was pretended or given for the Cruelties exercised upon Multitudes, save their refusing this involved, ambiguous, complex, and unreasonable Oath and Subscription.

The three following Acts are purely Civil, and about the granting of Money to the King. But in the 15th Act, they come at one Dalh, to rid themselves of all the Parliaments since the Year 1633. At first they talked only of rescinding the Parliament 1649. because the Engagement had then been disapproved: But quickly their Design took Air, to raze all; and after by their former Acts, the King had got in his Hands all that was lately called the Liberties of the Kingdom, and Privileges of Parliament, it is now boldly enough resolved upon, to rescind all done in Parliament since the Year 1633. and to remove the civil Sanction given to the General Assembly at Glasgow, and those which followed; and to abolish all Laws made in Favour of our Church-government and Covenants.

rescission.

When this Motion was first made, it appeared so choking, that it was laid aside, or rather delayed for some Months; but when all the former Acts had gone glibly through, the Managers hoping nothing would be stuck at, come briskly to overturn all that had been a building since the Year 1638. and they cast and rescind all that was done in former Times by King and Parliament, with the greatest Solemnity and Unanimity; and at one Stroke, to take away the greatest human Securities which could be given to a Church or Nation. From their former Success, the Compilers of those Acts grow in Boldness.

In the Narrative of the Act, they call all done these Twenty three Years, "Troubles upon the specious, but common Pretext of REFORMATION, the common Cloke of all "Rebellions," and declare his Majesty holds the Crown immediately from God Almighty alone; a Proposition which will not hold of any Monarch ever upon the Earth, unless it be Moses King in Jesurun, and a few more under the Old Testament. Tho' in this Act they grant, the Acts now rescinding were agreed to by King and Parliament, yet, in order to bury the Covenants under Reproach, they add, That the Covenanters did most unworthily engage to subvert his Majesty's Government, and the publick Peace of the Kingdom of England; which is notoriously contrary to the very Letter of the Covenants. Many other Things are asserted here as Matters of Fact, which might easily be disproved; but this would lead me too far into the History of former Times.

it.

Upon those Perversions of Matter of Fact, and wrong Reasonings, they rescind all the Parliaments from the 1640. to 1648. inclusive: A Friend may go with a Foe, and therefore in this good Company, they rescind the Act 1648. approving the Engagement, which by their own 9th Act they had just now ratified; at least, that favourite Act is not excepted, and therefore, it would seem, is included in the strong and general rescissory Terms. To smooth a little so harsh a Treatment of our Constitution, attained with so great Pains, and so much valued lately, an Indemnity is promised; and yet much more was to be done, before that Favour was granted to Scotland, and it was a long Time before it was published. It had not been unusual to rescind particular Acts of former Parliaments; but I find few Instances before this, of voiding and casting Parliaments by the Lump and Whole-sale: None must now be spared, the Parliament 1641. wherein King Charles I. was personally present, nor that 1648. where their beloved Engagement was approved; neither does that at Perth, 1651. where his Majesty himself was present, escape by this Procedure.

When thus the Guards, Outworks and Bulwarks of the Church are demolished, they come next to blow up her Government it self by their 16th Act, concerning Religion and Church-government. This being one chief Foundation of Twenty seven Years melancholy Work in Scotland, I have added it App. N^o. 11. In it, as in the Whole of the present Procedure, the Reader cannot but observe their singular Ingratitude, and ungenerous Treatment of Ministers, and other Presbyterians, to whom the King owed his Restoration so much, and who had so firmly stood by his Interests under the Usurpation.

and Church-government.
App. N^o. 11.

What the Miracles in this, and other Acts, so much talked of in the King's Restoration, were, I am yet to learn. A gracious Promise follows, to maintain the Doctrine and Worship established in the King's Father and Grandfather's Time; which is a glorious Commentary upon the King's Letter to the Presbytery of Edinburgh. By this a Door is opened to bring in Books and Bishops, at least the Articles of Perth. How well the Exercises of Religion, publick and private, were encouraged, will appear by the subsequent Acts of Parliament and Council, and their rigorous Execution.

The Government of the Church is promised to be secured, as the King finds most consistent with Scripture, Monarchy and Peace; and in the mean Time, Synods, Presbyteries and Sessions are allowed for a few Weeks; and yet, as we shall find, Synods are violently abridged in their Liberty, and interrupted. Thus in as dark and insensible a Manner as might be, Presbytery is abolished, Prelacy brought in, and the Government of the Church is left ambulatory, and to be settled, as the King sees good, without an Act of Parliament; and dying Presbyterian Government was scarce permitted to live out this Year.

The Commissioner's Reason for publishing this Act.

I have it from one who lived at this Time, and was no Stranger to Court-measures, that before the passing of this Act, the Commissioner advised the Matter with a few of his close Friends, the Register, Sir John Fletcher, Sir George Mackenzie of Tarbet, and Urquhart of Cromarty, a Cousin of Sir George's, who had lately counterfeited the Protester, and sometime after this, ended miserably; whether he should pass this Act, which he knew to be the King's darling Design, or delay it a while, and go to London first to acquaint the King, how much he had done for his Service, and receive the Beginnings of his Reward. Sir Archibald Primrose advised him to bring in Bishops surely, but slowly; for if he were soon through his Work, he might come the sooner to lose his Power. The Commissioner answered, "The Parliament was now at his Beck, and he loved to serve his Matter genteelly, and do his Business at one Stroke." This Resolution was applauded, as noble and generous, by the rest of his Confidants: So the Matter was agreed on in private, and carried stitch-through in publick, as it stands in the Act. However afterwards, the first appeared to be the best Advice; for in a little Time Middleton and his Confidants were out of all Office in Scotland, the planting of Bishops here, being like the building Jericho of old.

Act 17th for keeping May 29th.

Remarks upon it.

Since by the former Act Prelates are materially brought in, and Bishops could never stand alone in Scotland; the Parliament's next Work is to support them, when the King shall please to name them, with Holy-days and Patrons. Accordingly their 17th Act is for keeping the 29th Day of May, as a religious Anniversary; it follows, App. N^o. 12. It was evidently framed to be a Snare unto Ministers; and their refusing Obedience to it, was one of the first Grounds of their Sufferings, in a little Time.

Upon reading the Narrative, one will be ready to think the Parliament have forgot their Design, and are framing the Causes of a Fast, instead of an Act for a Thanksgiving; and it was much that any, who retained any Respect for the former Work of Reformation, had Freedom to keep the Day upon such an Introduction. The statutory Part will be yet more surprising: They ordain, "the 29th Day of May to be for ever set apart as an holy Day unto the Lord, and to be employed in Prayer, Preaching, Thanksgiving and Praises to God. All servile Work is discharged, and the remaining Part of the Day is to be spent in lawful Divertisements, suitable to so solemn an Occasion." What a Pity was it, that a Book of Sports was not framed for Scotland upon this Occasion, as was in England in the King's Father and Grandfather's Time, a Period set up now so much for a Rule?

It was certainly unreasonable to set this, or any other Day apart for ever as a holy Day to the Lord, according to their own Principles; and even the Favourers of Holy-days must own it. One may suppose it possible, that upon a 29th Day of May, a Prince, fully as good and pious as King Charles I. might come to be beheaded by another Cromwel, and a sectarian Faction; and then ask those Gentlemen, Whether it could be for ever kept as a holy Day of Praise and Thanksgiving to the Lord? And as the Institution of this, or any other Day, to be a holy Day for ever, is what is really beyond the Power of Creatures, who know not what may fall out, so the following Clause is a Banter upon what is sacred with themselves. First, The Day is set apart for ever to be kept holy to the Lord, and then Divertisements are appointed for the spending the Day, after publick Worship is over: And if their own Practices, who were Managers, may be allowed to be a just Commentar upon their lawful Divertisements, we shall soon see what they were, horrid Impieties, Revelling, Drinking, and Excess of Riot; and I doubt not but this prostituting of what they professed to believe as sacred, and holy Time, was an Inlet to that fearful Wickedness, Debauching of Consciences, and Corruption in Morals, which became so common at this Time.

The Reader must guess, whether there were any Fears in the House, that by those preceding Acts, a Door might be opened to Profaneness. But as if there had been a Connection 'twixt keeping the 29th of May, and prostituting the Sabbath of the Lord, their 18th Act is for the due Observation of the Sabbath, and the 19th against Swearing, and excessive Drinking; both of them very good Acts, and not unnecessary after the 17th, and those which went before: But the Practice of many of the Law-givers, in Cursing, Swearing, and Sabbath-breaking, was a lamentable Directory to the Lièges, how to keep their Laws, and the grossest and most shameless Contempt that ever Law-makers put on their own Infant Laws.

Their 36th Act about Patrons.

Further, to secure their design'd Model of Church-government now coming in, they reintroduce the unreasonable and antichristian Burden of Patrons and Presentations, upon this Church. That heavy Grievance had been happily removed by an Act of Parliament,

March

March 9th, 1649. This reasonable Statute not being in every Body's Hands, I have added it, App. N^o. 13. It did not satisfy our Managers to have this Act rescinded in the general, with many other excellent Statutes made in that Period; and therefore by their 36th Act, App. N^o. 14. they particularly take it away, and directly establish Patrons, and Presentation of Ministers by them, as what they knew had been still a dead Weight upon, and really inconsistent with the Presbyterian Establishment. And that in time coming they might have a Ministry every Way obsequious to their Impositions, made and to be made, the Act ordains all who shall be presented, to take the Oath of Allegiance, or Supremacy, before set down, and that under very severe Penalties, both upon the Presenter, and Person presented, in case this be neglected: So very soon they got not only the Civil Government, but the Ministry modelled to their Wish.

1661.
App. N^o. 13.
App. N^o. 14.

A great many other Acts were made by this Parliament, which I pass, as not immediately relating to the History I am writing, and some of them very good ones, as that against Cursing, and beating of Parents, that against Blasphemy, and one against clandestine Marriages. Their 52^d Act is a pretty singular one, appointing all vacant Stipends at present, and for Seven Years to come, to be given to Ministers and others, their Wives and Bairns, who had been Loyal in the late Times, i. e. against Presbytery, and the Work of Reformation, and had suffered for their Adherence to the King's Interests. By this Clause, a good many of the Protesters might have pleaded a Share. Their last Act was by some termed, an Act for paying their own Debts without Money, and alledged to be neither just nor generous; but by others it was reckoned both equitable and good Policy, after so general and great Calamities. Thus the Reader hath some View of the Acts of this Parliament, as far as they concern the Constitution of this Church, and our Civil Liberty.

Some other Acts made this Session.

Before I leave this Parliament, I shall, from the Minutes I spoke of before, give some further Account of their Procedure, in a few Hints, which could not offer themselves from the Acts, as they stand in Print. What concerns the Processes against the Marquis of Argyll, Lord Waristoun, Mr. Guthrie, Mr. Gillespie, and some others, will come in upon the following Sections, where I am to give Accounts of them by themselves.

Some further Account of their Procedure.

January 4th, when they entered upon Business, the Oath of Allegiance was taken by all Members present, save the Earl of Cassils, who had Time given him to advise. If the former Account hold, that the Earl of Melvil, and Laird of Kilburny did not qualify, as I have said from Papers writ at this Time, it seems they have not been present; and I find that the Earl of Cassils is overlooked, till January 11th, where the Manuscript, from which I am giving those Accounts, takes Notice, 'That the Earl deserted the House, not being satisfied to take the Oath agreed to by the Parliament.' And April 11th, the Earl of Cassils being called to the House this Day, was desired to take the Oath of Allegiance. He moved by himself, and several of his Friends, that he might be remitted to the King, to satisfy his Majesty thereanent. But in regard this Desire was contrary to an Order of Parliament, and that he had got many Delays formerly for advising the said Oath, his Desire was refused, and the Certification of the Parliament passed against him, declaring him incapable of the publick Trust intended by the King upon him. The Earl was a stiff Royalist under the Usurpation, and the King was very sensible of his Services, and he had considerable Offers made, and yet quit all, to keep a good Conscience towards God; and all the Favour he sought, in return to the Hardships he had undergone for his Loyalty, was a Permission to keep a Presbyterian Minister as his Chaplain in his Family, after they were turned out of their Churches. This the Bishops grudged him, yet he was overlooked in it.

Oath of Allegiance refused by the Earl of Cassils.

I find this Parliament had different Ministers every Day almost, who prayed in the House with them; and unless it be some of the Ministers of Edinburgh, there is scarce another employed to pray, but such who conformed to Prelacy; so well did the Employers know the Characters of the corrupt Part of the Ministry. A good many, who were afterwards Bishops, were employed to preach before them, and we heard the Nature of their Sermons.

Ministers employed to pray and preach.

By those written Minutes of Parliament, I observe, that most Part of their Meetings were in the Afternoon, tho' the Day was but short: Whether several Members were better in Case for Business, by that Time of the Day, I determine not; but I knew a Peer of the first Rank, who had been present in most of the Parliaments during this Period, when Commissioner to one of the Sessions after the Revolution, used to declare himself with some Warmth against Afternoon Sederunts of Parliament, from what he had observed in this, and the next Reign.

Their Meetings frequently in the Afternoon.

All of the Acts of a publick Nature, were formed by the Lords of Articles, and presented from them to the Parliament, where many of them passed without any great Reasoning; sometimes Five or Six Acts of very great Consequence would be voted in an Afternoon's Sederunt. Whether they were debated before the Lords of the Articles, I know not: But I suppose any little Struggle that was made, was there; for the Parliament met but very seldom, once or twice in a Week, or so. This Manner of Parliamentary Procedure was declared against at the Revolution, and no more used.

The Lords of Articles.

Upon the 8th of January, the Commissioner proposed this Matter to the House, and moved that the Parliament might fall to their Business, in the ancient Road, by the Lords of the Articles, without devolving their whole Power upon them, which he declared was not his Meaning.

Meaning. The Matter was not a little agitate in the House; at length, "It was resolved, that 12 Noblemen, 12 Barons, and 12 Burgeses, with the Officers of State, shall be in the Place of the Lords of Articles; and that other 12 of each of those Estates, should be a Committee for Trade and hearing of Bills. Those were authorized in their several Meetings, to hear all Matters presented to them, to receive Probation of what they found relevant, and report to the Parliament twice a Week: But the full Power is declared to be reserved to the Parliament, to debate and determine all Matters, notwithstanding of those Meetings, which are declared to be preparatory.

The several Estates having withdrawn themselves, brought in the following List for the Lords of the Articles, which was agreed to.

To those, with the Officers of State, the Nation owes the forming and framing of the Acts formerly mentioned. The Committee for Trade and Bills, I need not insert, since it was mostly private Business came before them: The Processes indeed against the Marquis of Argyll and others, began at them; and the Lord Cochran was their President.

January 16th, The Act discharging all Meetings, Convocations, Leagues and Bonds, without the Concurrence of the King, was, after much Debate, carried, with a Declaration that it looked only forward.

Proclamation
ordaining
many to leave
Edinburgh.

A Proclamation by the Commissioner and Parliament, was this Day agreed to, Ordaining all Persons, who have not actual Residence in Edinburgh, and are not obliged to attend the Parliament, who had any Hand in the Remonstrance, or in contriving of, or assenting to the Ends thereof, or in that wicked Book called The Causes of God's Wrath, to depart the Town in 48 hours, and not to return, or remain within ten Miles thereof, under Pain of Treason; except those who are already cited to appear for the Crimes abovementioned. This was proclaimed at the Cross.

Commissioner's
Declaration about the National Covenant.

January 22^d, The Act agreed upon by the Lords of the Articles, disannulling the Convention of Estates 1643. was passed, after very much Debate. The Commissioner declared, "He had no Order from his Master to encroach upon our National Covenant, or upon the Consciences of the People: But as to Leagues with other Nations, he conceived they could not now subsist with the Laws of this Kingdom." About Ten Members dissented.

Great Debates on the Act Rescissory.

When the Act Rescissory was brought in by the Lords of the Articles to the House, February 7th, very long Reasonings ensued, and it could not be got through that Night. To Morrow, it was again tossed. The Earl of Lowdon had a long and elegant Speech, vindicating himself from the Aspersions in the Narrative of that Act, and setting the Affairs in that Period in a just Light; but it had no Weight: That Act behoved to be passed, and at length, with a great Struggle, it was carried.

Commission
for visiting the Colleges of Aberdeen.

Upon the 22^d of February, the Parliament grant a Commission to visit the Colleges of Aberdeen, and for removing of such of the Masters, as had intruded themselves unwarrantably, and reponing those who, without just Cause, were put from their Offices.

Act discharging Persons to come from Ireland without Passes.

That same Day, an Act was agreed upon, for discharging the frequent coming of Persons of all Sorts from Ireland to this Kingdom, to the Disturbance of the Peace of the State and Church; and appointing, that none be admitted who bring not Passes, bearing their peaceable Deportment to the Government there established, from the Lord Chief Justices, Privy Council, or Mayors of Towns where they reside, under the Pain of Imprisonment of their Persons: And that until they procure such Passes, they are to appear before the Privy Council at Edinburgh, and give Surety for their peaceable Deportment. This Act is ordered to be published at Glasgow, Air, Wigtoun, and Kirkcudbright. I know no Reason of this extraordinary Prohibition, unless it was to prevent the retiring of the Scots Presbyterians in the North of Ireland, to their native Country, now when they are beginning to feel the Fury of the Prelates there.

February 27th, the Commissioner presented a Letter directed from his Majesty to the Parliament, approving all their former Proceedings, and declaring that he is ready to give a general Remission to all Scotsmen, (except such as the Parliament shall except) for their bygone Actings, against his Royal Father, or him. Which was read with great Joy, and ordered to be recorded as a glorious Testimony of the King's Favour; and the Commissioner is desired to return the humble Acknowledgments and Thanks of the House.

The Reader may have some View of the Procedure of this First Session of Parliament, from those Hints; and for as arbitrary as a good many of the Acts now passed will evidently appear, yet much heavier are a coming in the After-parliaments. However, by those, one of the best formed Civil Establishments, and a most glorious Ecclesiastical Settlement, according to the Rules of Christ in his Word, were overturned; and a Foundation laid for the bringing in of Prelacy into the Church, and arbitrary Government to the State: This vast Change in Scotland, was not brought about without some Testimony given against it; which may be the Subject of

Of the Efforts made by Presbyterian Ministers, for the Preservation of the Church, during the Sitting of the Parliament; with some Account of the violent Treatment of Synods, April and May, this Year 1661.

ALTHOUGH the miserable Rents in the Church, the Caution and Cunning of the Parliament's Procedure, the fair Professions made of a deep Concern for those they called the honest Ministers, and at length open Force and Violence upon the Judicatories of the Church, with some other Causes, hindered what ought to have been done at such a critical Juncture; yet several Essays were made by Ministers, to give such a Testimony as their present ill Circumstances would permit: And because what was then done, is very little known, I shall give the larger Account of it from well vouched Narratives, and some original Papers in my Hands.

Hindrances of such a Testimony as might have been now expected.

We have already heard, that Mr. Robert Douglas, in his Sermon before the Parliament, dealt fairly with the Members at the opening of the Session. He was among the eldest Ministers of the Church, and of the greatest Gravity and Account; and having plainly warned them to do nothing against the Work of Reformation in this Church, his Freedom was not pleasing to the Court, and neither he, nor almost any hearty Presbyterians, were ever afterwards employed, especially after Mr. Wood and Mr. John Smith, had, in a little Time there-after, laid their Duty freely before them. Time-servers and Sycophants were afterwards employed, such as Mr. Hugh Blair at Glasgow, Mr. Paterfon, and others, whose Sermons were carefully printed, and speak for them to this Day.

Some plainly preach against the Change in this Church, before the Parliament.

Up and down the Country, many Ministers warned their People fully and faithfully of the Evils coming in, and the Dangers the Church of Scotland was in Hazard of, notwithstanding of the severe Act, we have seen, was published against Ministers Freedom in Preaching, by the Committee of Estates. Mr. M^r Ward at Glasgow, used very much Plainness this Way, and was staged before the Parliament therefore, as we shall hear.

Up and down the Country.

Mr. M^r Ward.

Mr. William Guthrie, Minister at Finnick, in the Shire of Air, used the greatest of Freedom and Sincerity in his Sermons at this Time. I am too nearly concerned in this great Man, to say much about him, and therefore choose to give this in the Words of a worthy Minister, his Contemporary, in his Character of him. 'In his Doctrine Mr. William Guthrie was as full and free, as any Man in Scotland had ever been; which together with the Excellency of his Preaching-gift, did so recommend him to the Affections of People, that they turned the Corn-field of his Glebe to a little Town, every one building a House for his Family upon it, that they might live under the Drop of his Ordinances and Ministry.' Indeed the Lord gave him an Opportunity to bear a longer Testimony against the Defections of this Time, than most of his Brethren; till at length the Malice of the Archbishop of Glasgow turned him out in the 1664. as we may hear.

Mr. William Guthrie.

A good many Ministers kept Congregational Fasts; and that was all almost they could do, since now there was scarce any Opportunities of Presbyterial or Synodical Appointments of this Nature: And in some Places where there were disaffected Persons to delate them, Ministers suffered not a little for this Practice, and the Plainness of their Doctrine.

Congregational Fasts kept.

Somewhat likewise was endeavoured in Judicatories. The Ministers in and about Edinburgh, had the greatest Opportunities of observing, and the earliest Views of what was a doing, tho' the Managers in Parliament did their Business as secretly and speedily, as might be; and really, much of the razing Work was over, before the Ministers at any Distance from from the Parliament, had distinct Accounts: Therefore I choose to insert here the Copy of an original Paper, I have under Mr. Andrew Ker Clerk to the Church, his Attestation, formed at this Time, as a Narrative of the Essays of the Ministers who lay nearest the Parliament, and might be supposed to have the greatest Weight with the Members at this Juncture, for the Benefit of the Church. The Title is,

Proceedings of some Brethren, 1661.

Proceedings of the Ministers
of Edinburgh,
during this Parliament.

AFTER the Parliament was convened, January 1661. some Acts having passed, which occasioned great Fears of some Purposes to overturn, or weaken our Discipline, and the Work of Reformation; therefore Brethren of divers of the next Presbyteries, finding it inconvenient to appear in any publick Way, contented themselves to correspond by some few, with some of the Brethren of Edinburgh, who were using all fair Means for preventing the Evils feared.

After frequent Conference of those Brethren of Edinburgh, with the Earl of Middleton, his Majesty's Commissioner, and the Earl of Glencairn Chancellor, about Matters then in Agitation, they being surprized with the passing of some Acts, did present the Lord Commissioner's Grace with the following Overtures; humbly also desiring, that for Security as to the future, there might pass a general Ratification of the former Acts for Religion in Doctrine and Government.

A few Overtures humbly offered for the Good of His Majesty's Affairs, and settling the Minds of good People, whose only Aim and Desire is, that under the Shadow of His Majesty's Government, they may enjoy the Ordinances of Christ, as they are established in Purity and Power.

Overtures presented to the Commissioner.

I. AS to the Oath tendred to all the Members of Parliament, it is humbly offered, that seeing those of the Lieges who were in Use to take that Oath before, and may have it again tendred to them, will want that Opportunity of his Majesty's High Commissioner, and a Parliament sitting, to give the Interpretation thereof, as was done to the Members of Parliament; therefore an Interpretation thereof may be passed by Act of Parliament. There is no honest Man, but will acknowledge the King's Majesty Supreme Governor, not only in Matters Civil, but even in Ecclesiastical, as to that Power formally Civil, competent to the Christian Magistrate about Ecclesiastical Affairs; and if it be declared by Act of Parliament, that the Sense thereof is none other than what is asserted in the Parliament 1592. explaining the Act 1584. or in the late Confession of Faith, Chap. 23. (which is believed to be the Parliament's Sense) it will remove Fears and Stumblings as to that Particular.

Declaration sought about the Sense of the Oath.

That the solemn Covenants be not made void.

II. Whereas Acts have passed relative to the Constitution and Legality of some Meetings in this Kingdom, in the Time of the late Troubles, wherein private Subjects do not find themselves concerned to pry into the Grounds and Reasons of those Proceedings; yet seeing the People may readily apprehend, that thereby the solemn League and Covenant (entred into at that Time) is annulled, which cannot but be a Cause of great Perplexity unto them, considering how they stand engaged in an Oath of God, concerning a lawful Thing, to which they were drawn by the Representatives of the Kingdom: Therefore it is humbly offered, whether it will not much refresh the Minds of People, and revive their perplexed Spirits, if the Parliament be pleased to declare their Mind, that they intend not to annul or make void the Obligation of the Oath of God, under which the People ly?

An ratifying
the Confession of Faith
sought.

III. It is humbly conceived, that an Act of Parliament approving and ratifying the Confession of Faith, and Catechisms, and the Directory for Worship, approved by the Assemblies of this Kirk, and the Discipline, Government, and Liberties of this Kirk, and Acts for suppressing Popery and Profanity, would remove the Fears of sober and honest People, and (it is trusted) will be acceptable to his Majesty, and exceedingly satisfy all his good Subjects.

Those Overtures his Grace and the Lord Chancellor promised to communicate to his Majesty, and thereafter to give an Answer to them; and for further Security, desired the Brethren to draw an Act of Ratification, as they would have it; and it should be considered: Which was accordingly done, and given to the Lord Commissioner, the Tenor whereof follows.

Ratifi-

Ratification of former Acts of Parliament, concerning Religion, Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government. 1661.

SEEING it is a Mercy never to be forgotten, that the Lord God, in his infinite Goodness, hath been pleased wonderfully and unexpectedly, to bring about the Restitution of his Majesty to his Throne, and the Deliverance of this distressed Kingdom from all that Bondage and Misery it was lately under, both as to Spirituals and Temporals, by the Violence and prevailing of Usurpers, and to make so universal a Restauration, as is to be seen this Day: And His Majesty, in Thankfulness to God for so great Mercies, being desirous to employ that Royal Power and Authority, which by Divine Providence he now enjoyeth, for the Service and Glory of God, and for countenancing, maintaining, and promoting the Gospel of his Son Jesus Christ; Therefore His Majesty, with Consent of the Estates of Parliament now convened, doth confirm and ratify the true Religion, professed, received, and practised within this Kingdom, in Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government, established by General Assemblies, approved and ratified by Acts of Parliaments, particularly those following, viz. Act 3. Parl. 1. James VI. Anno 1567. and Act 99. Parl. 7. James VI. in 1581. and Act 114. Parl. 12. James VI. in 1592. and Acts 4, 5, 6. Parl. 2. of His Majesty's Royal Father of glorious Memory, 1640. ratified in Act 6. of the Parliament held by His Majesty's said Royal Father, in his own Person, 1641. Which Acts, together with all other Acts of Parliaments made for establishing, maintaining, protecting and preserving the said true Religion, in Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government, professed, received, approved and practised in this Church; and for restraining and suppressing in this Church and Kingdom, all Impiety, Vice, Profaneness, and whatsoever is contrary to Truth and Godliness; His Majesty, with Consent foresaid, doth approve, ratify and renew, in all the Heads and Articles thereof: Ordaining the said Acts to be in full Force, Strength and Ob- servance, according to the whole Tenor thereof; and declares that no Acts of this present Parliament, are or shall be held prejudicial to the Liberty, Profession, Exercise, Establish- ment and entire Preservation of the said true Religion, Doctrine, Worship, Discipline and Government within this Church and Kingdom, or any ways derogatory to the Authority and Strength of the abovesaid Acts of Parliament, approving and ratifying the same.

Act of Ratifi- cation of for- mer Acts, in favour of the Church, for- med by the Ministers at the Commis- sioner's Desire.

To this was added this brief Memorial. 'If the Parliament 1649. be abrogate, and the Acts thereof made void and null, it is humbly desired, that those Acts following, which were passed in that Year, may be renewed in this Parliament, and by their Authority en- acted.'

Acts of Parlia- ment desired to be renewed.

SESSION III.

19 Act, for punishing Incest.

It hath been remarked, that the Parliament, after they had overturned our Constitution by their principal Acts above narrated, came in to Two or Three of these Acts desired; but the Act of Ratification drawn at the Commissioner's Desire, and Renovation of the rest, were neglected; and the Ministers were kept in Hopes, and got fair Words, till Matters were past Hope. Indeed Things were very cunningly managed, and the Act Rescissory was cast into several Shapes, and given out to be a quite other Thing, than afterwards it appeared to be, that Ministers Appearances against it might be prevented: And by those Blinds, and Promi-

Some of those renewed, but the Act of Ra- tification ne- glected.

In its Room the Act Rescis- sory tabled.

1661. ses to advise with his Majesty about the above mentioned reasonable Proposals, Matters were kept very smooth, until the Day the Rescissory Act was tabled in Parliament.

Ministers Efforts against it, with their Supplication to the Parliament.

App. N^o. 14. B.

By a Narrative under a Minister's Hand, at that Time in Edinburgh, I find, that as soon as the Nature of the Act Rescissory came to be known, the Presbytery of Edinburgh met, and framed a Supplication to the Commissioner and Parliament, 'craving that a new Act might be made, for establishing of Religion and Church-government, since they were informed the Parliament were about to rescind the Civil Sanction and Statutes in Force, for the Exercise thereof.' The Ministers were kept so much in the dark, as to the Nature of the Rescission projected, that they were necessitate thus to hold in Generals, and to desire new Laws to be made, when the old Hedge was to be removed. I have insert App. N^o. 14. B. a Copy of a Supplication from the Presbytery of Edinburgh to the Parliament at this Time, which I take to be that spoken of above.

This Supplication was sent to the Commissioner, by Three of their Number they reckoned might be most acceptable, Mrs. John Smith, Robert Lawrie and Peter Blair. Partly by Promises, and by Threatnings, the Commissioner prevailed with them, not to give in their Supplication that Day; and presently the Parliament met, and in Haste enough passed the Rescissory Act, from which a good many Members dissented.

When the Ministers found themselves thus circumvened, to Morrow Mr. David Dickson and some others were sent by the Presbytery to the Commissioner, to insist in this Affair. They were received very roughly, and Middleton told them, They were mistaken if they thought to terrify him with Papers, he was now Coward. Mr. Dickson replied, He well knew his Grace was no Coward, since the Bridge of Dee. This was an Engagement, June 19. 1638. when Middleton appeared very gallantly against the King's Forces, for the Covenanters. To this no Answer was given, but Frowns.

The Ministers knowing there had been so many Dissenters in Parliament, from Yesterday's Vote, insisted much to have their Supplication tabled, and read in publick, and put the Commissioner in Mind of the Resolutions he had come under, when he was under the Prospect of Death, and some sharp Exercise of Mind, at St. Andrews, 1645. to serve the Lord and his Interests. It seems he was then in Danger from an iliack Passion. At this he turned petted, and said, What do you talk to me of a Fit of the Cholick? and would by no Means allow their Supplication, and Draught of an Act for Ratification, to come in, and be read in Parliament. After this, the Presbytery sent their Supplication to the King, but it was not regarded. This Account leads me back again, to insert what follows in the Paper I am inserting; The Proceedings of some Brethren, 1661.

'After the Act Rescissory was passed, there was given in to the Clerk-register a List of some Acts of general and publick Concernment to the Church, of new to be enacted; but few of them were taken Notice of.

Ministers send the State of their Affairs to the King.

'Thereafter the Brethren hearing more of Purposes to alter the Government established in this Kirk, and that there had been some Motion among the Lords of the Articles, for repealing the Act of Parliament 1640. ratifying the same, and for calling for the Kirk-registers; it was thought convenient, that, if it were possible, the whole State of the Business were humbly represented to his Majesty. To which Effect, there was first sent to his Secretary the Earl of Lawderdale the Letter following, and thereafter by another Occasion in March, an Information.' Follows

LETTER to the Earl of Lawderdale.

My Lord,

Their Letter to the Earl of Lawderdale.

'IT hath been the Study of honest Men here, to carry so peaceably and modestly, as might avoid all Offence, and therefore they have not at all appeared publickly in Matters of their very near Concernment, but have contented themselves with some Overtures, given in to some in private, which we find have come to your Lordship's Hands; yet they are not without Fears that Religion may suffer very much Prejudice at this Time, there being already some Motions for repealing the Act 1640. establishing Presbyterian Government, and abolishing Episcopacy: The publick Registers of the Church being called for to be perused by the Clerk of Register, or his Majesty's Advocate, (before an Assembly be called, to redress by themselves what Disorders have been during the Heat of Troubles) of purpose, as would appear, to render the Government hateful, upon the Account of some Actings in Times of Distraction and Animosity; if not also to render the Body of honest Men (who have been in those Judicatories) obnoxious; so that there will be no Difference betwixt those who have stood in the Gap, for many Years of sore Trouble, and others.'

'Those Things lying so sad upon the Spirits, not of a few only, but of all honest Men, who have Occasion to know of them, as they cannot see how that Course contributes to the Good of his Majesty's Affairs, more than to their particular Satisfaction in Conscience, and in Pursuance thereof are using all prudent and fit Means to prevent those feared Dangers, by dealing with those who have Power; so we could not omit to acquaint your Lordship also with it, that by your prudent and effectual Moving, somewhat may come from thence, to stop that Course; lest otherwise it overspread, and not only involve them in Hazard, who expected no such Thing, (yea, are perswaded of his Majesty's Royal Inclination to the contrary) but will bring Prejudice to that which is more dear to them than any their particular and personal Concernments, and provoke Him to Displeasure, who is a dreadful Party.

As to what concerns his Majesty's honest Mens Sufferings, and their serious Endeavours, by all Duties proper to them in their Stations, for his Restitution, and their cordial Rejoycing in the bringing about of so long desired a Mercy, and their Care to walk modestly when they are under so many Fears, may, we hope, speak their Loyalty. And as your Lordship may perceive, by the Overture given in, they are most clear in asserting his Majesty's supreme Power in all Civil Causes, and that the Power formally Civil about Ecclesiastical Affairs, which is competent to any Christian Magistrate, doth duly belong to him, and shall be cheerfully submitted unto, and acknowledged by every one of them. And what hath passed in the Times of Trouble, which hath been offensive, if a General Assembly be called, and allowed Freedom, (which is humbly and earnestly desired that it may be done with the first) they will be careful so to recognise those Proceedings (the Religion established being always preserved) as may satisfy his Majesty, and take away all Cause of Offence. And we think it will be more for his Majesty's Honour, that an Assembly do it by themselves, (which is the real Purpose of all honest Men) than that others do it for them in a more violent Way. Tho' probably the Appearing of some few Ministers now, of whom little hath been heard before, and the Silence and Modesty of others, may give Ground to apprehend, that the Change of our established Government may be brought about, without Difficulty or Stop; yet your Lordship may be assured, that honest Men, fixed in their Principles concerning Religion, and sensible of the Obligations that are upon their Consciences, cannot but bear Testimony against such a Current of Defection, as would involve us in the Hazard of the Divine Displeasure. And tho' they have studied to walk modestly (and their resting upon his Majesty's gracious Letter, assuring them of no Violation of the Government, did much satisfy and secure them) yet to our Knowledge, many Presbyteries are ready to bear Witness by Supplication against the Change of Government, if it be attempted.

Your Lordship's Zeal for the Good of his Majesty's Affairs, your Love to your Mother-Church, and the Ordinances of Christ in her, and your tender Respects to many honest Men who will suffer much, if not prevented, do perswade us, that you will interpose with his Majesty for some speedy Prevention of feared Evils, by preventing any Prejudice to the established Government, and making effectual the Desires propounded in the Overtures, and the Draught of an Act sent afterward; by calling a General Assembly, according to the Animadversions humbly offered to your Lordship upon the Declaration concerning it; by causing forbear to meddle with the Registers of the Kirk, till the General Assembly in the first Instance take some Course to set Things in Order, and by preserving honest Men from Inconveniencies, who mind no other Thing, but to get Liberty to serve God according to his Will, and their Engagements, under his Majesty's Authority. Our Confidence that your Lordship doth seriously mind this so needful a Work, makes us spare to use any Motives. The little Advantage it will afford to any lawful Interest, (and we are sure the Grief it will be to your Lordship) to see honest and peaceable Men, and a Work of God in their Hands, crushed, will be of Weight to perswade you to endeavour to prevent it. And we not only hope, but are confident, that when it shall be considered, how much it will advance his Majesty's Affairs, that Things be thus settled, to the Satisfaction and Comfort of all good Men; it will be accounted special good Service to his Majesty, to promote so good a Design. We are, &c.

INFORMATION, March 1661.

AFTER our manifold Distractions, and grievous Afflictions under the heavy Yoke of usurping Oppressors, it pleased the Lord in his free and undeserved Goodness, to look upon our low Condition, and to visit us with a gracious Deliverance, by the wonderful and unexampled Restitution of our dear and dread Sovereign, the King's Majesty, unto the Throne of his Three Kingdoms, which was to us a Resurrection from the dead, and a commanding of dry Bones to return unto Life again. This Miracle of Mercy the Lord accompanied with a refreshing Shower upon his Inheritance here, by moving the Royal Heart of his gracious Majesty, to make known to the Presbyteries of this National Kirk, his fixed Purpose to preserve inviolable the Government of the Kirk here settled by Law; whereby the Hearts of all honest Ministers were exceedingly encouraged to lay out themselves, unto the utmost of their Power, in their Stations, for advancing his Majesty's Interest in the Information sent up March this Year, to Court.

‘ Affections of his People, which they were careful in the darkeſt Times to hold up in their Peoples Hearts.’

‘ This Assurance from ſo Royal a Hand, whoſe Heart was inured to Conſtancy through all his unheard of Hardſhips, made all the Lovers of the eſtabliſhed Order of this Kirk rejoyce in the Lord, and magnify his Name for ſo rich a Mercy, and promiſe unto themſelves Security from any Trouble that might flow from the Change of our Kirk-constitution, which is dearer to them than all their other Enjoyments: And tho’ they be ſomewhat ſtartled by the rumoured Noiſe of a deſigned Change, and yet more by ſome Hints at the Removal of the Law of the Land, that eſtabliſheth the ſame; yet they cannot ſuffer it to enter into their Hearts, that his Maſteſty hath any Knowledge of, or giveth any Allowance to any Change at all in the Matters of our Doctrines, Worſhip, Diſcipline and Government.’

‘ Our ſingle-hearted Confidence upon that his Maſteſty’s gracious Declaration, and our Tenderneſs to do any Thing that might favour of the leaſt Degree of diſtruſting the ſame, hath prevailed with honeſt Miniſters to keep Silence, and not to make a Noiſe by publick Addreſſes and Supplications unto the high and honourable Court of Parliament, and to content our ſelves with preſenting private Informations to my Lord Commiſſioner his Grace: Yet we would not have this to be interpreted as any Diffidence of the Cauſe, or as tho’ we were willing to recede from the eſtabliſhed Government of this Kirk, or were afraid to own the ſame in an orderly Way.’

‘ It is the earneſt Deſire of all honeſt Miniſters, that after the Parliament, there may be a General Aſſembly called, according to the ſettled Order of this Kirk, wherein, they are confident, there will be an effectual Courſe taken for remedying all the Evils, and removing all the unſound Principles, and irregular Practices, which they know, and do acknowledge to have crept in during the late Troubles and Diſtractions. They are no leſs confident, that his Maſteſty ſhall receive thereby all Satisfaction in their hearty and cheerful attributing to his Maſteſty all that any Chriſtian Prince can require in Reaſon of dutiful Subjects, referring only to them the eſtabliſhed Doctrines, Worſhip, Diſcipline and Government.’

‘ If there happen to be a Change made in the ſettled Government, (which the God of Heaven forbid, and we are loth to allow our ſelves the Apprehenſion thereof, upon the Account before mentioned) there is none likelier to taſte ſo ſoon of Trouble and Vexation thereby, as ſome faithful Miniſters, who have been Sufferers upon the King’s Intereſt, and have been active Inſtruments in keeping it up in the Hearts of People, in the darkeſt Time of its Eclipse, and were the main, if not the only Men, that moſt withſtood the Practices and Principles of ſuch as oppoſed the ſame: Therefore ’tis confidently expected, that his Maſteſty will be graciously pleaſed, ſpeedily to interpoſe himſelf, and forbid any Change of Kirk-government, ſince he hath been well pleaſed to give Hopes of a free General Aſſembly, wherein all Diſorders may be redreſſed, and his Maſteſty may receive all deſirable Satisfaction of this Kirk’s hearty Affection to his Royal Intereſt and Authority.’

‘ It hath been the Lot of faithful Miniſters in all Times, to be miſrepreſented unto Authority, and to be wronged by Miſinformation, under which we our ſelves have laboured ere now, and therefore may fear that we are not now altogether free of the ſame, ſo long as we abide conſtant for the Government of this Kirk, which is our firm Reſolution in the Strength of the Lord: But it is our Comfort againſt this, that his Maſteſty’s Princely Diſpoſition will not permit any ſuch Informations to take Impreſſion upon his Royal Heart, before he take due Trial what Truth is in them, and acquaint thoſe that are concerned, that they may clear themſelves.’

‘ It is poſſible, Reports may be going there, as if the Plurality of Miniſters here, were hankering after Episcopacy, and looking towards it: But we cannot imagine that ſuch Surmiſes will be believed by underſtanding Men, who have any Acquaintance with the State of this Kirk, to which that Corruption of Government, and other Corruptions in Worſhip, whereto it made Way, have been a Burden, whereof they were moſt deſirous to be freed, and which they will never willingly take on again, being now free from it, and engaged to the contrary, by the Oath of God: Yet leſt it ſhould take with any, we know and hear but of a very few, who have appeared to have a Look towards that Side, and thoſe ſuch as were not of great Reputation in this Kirk; and whatever they had, it is much diminished in the Opinion of all that look indifferently on Things, upon the very Account of their warping off toward that Way; and they are looked upon as Men ready to ſhift their Sails, that they may be before the Wind, whatſoever Way they conceive it is likely to blow. And we can further aſſuredly affirm, that the Generality of the Presbyteries of this Land, have returned their hearty Satisfaction with his Maſteſty’s Letter, either to his Maſteſty’s Secretary, or to the Presbytery of Edinburgh; and we doubt not but the reſt would have done the like, if their Diſtance had not denied them the Opportunity.’

‘ It may be ſuppoſed by ſome, that it is good Service to his Maſteſty to overturn the Government of this Kirk, from the very Foundations; but we humbly conceive that his Maſteſty will have far other Thoughts of the Matter, not only on the Account of his gracious Declaration to the Presbyteries of this Kirk, but alſo becauſe he doth undoubtedly eſteem that that to be the best Service can be done to him, which doth most engage the Affections of his Subjects unto him, and endear his Government unto them: For which there can be no more efficacious Mean, than that they still enjoy the Gospel of the Son of God, the Purity of Worship, and the Simplicity of Kirk-government, which they do enjoy under the refreshing Shadow of their lawful Sovereign, and secured to them by his Laws.

There want not strenuous Endeavours of some, to rake into all the Proceedings of our Kirk, in the Times of Heat and Animositities, thereby to render the Government hateful, notwithstanding that the Judicatories of the Kirk, have by their Practices, those Ten Years bygone, witnessed, that whatever was done or declared in Times of Confusion, yet they were so far from judging those to be their Principles, that upon a right Understanding betwixt his Majesty and his People, they were careful to rectify those Things, and so to act for his Majesty, and their Country's Service, as might witness their honest Intentions and Desires, even in the Heat of Debates. And when for this their Fidelity and Honesty, they have been all this While traduced by some among our selves, as making Defection from their Principles, and they by their Apologies and Vindications have cleared their own Integrity; it is hoped his Majesty will not allow those Things to be back-traced, at least till he hear them speak for themselves, and their Mother-kirk: And they are hopeful to wipe off all Aspersions and Calumnies that are frequently and unjustly cast upon the Kirk and honest Men.

I am apt to think this Information, and the Papers I have been inserting, are of the Reverend Mr. Douglas's drawing; and they favour much of his Prudence and Solidity. The Reader will perceive those Proposals are made, and such Considerations and Arguments used, as probably would have Weight at this Juncture, and with the Persons he is dealing with; and this is all the Length they could go in their immediate Applications to the Government, considering present Circumstances. And had not the Managers been resolved to please the High-fliers in England, to follow Mr. Sharp's ambitious Designs, and carry through their Project over all Reason, Gratitude and Justice, they could not have stood out against such plain and home Dealing. Thus the Reader hath some View of the Efforts of the Ministers of Edinburgh at this Juncture, with Persons mostly engaged.

By the Time the Synods met in April and May, the Parliament were far through their Work; now the Keys were changed, and every reflecting Person began to suspect the House was to be rifled; and so in all the Corners of the Church, Ministers endeavoured to do somewhat, and great was the Opposition they met with; which brings me to give some Account of what was done by Synods at this Juncture, and their violent Treatment, as far as Narratives have come to my Hand.

Procedure of
and May.

The Synod of Glasgow and Air convened April 2^d, and when they came to consider the present State of the Church, they generally agreed, it was their Duty, in this Time of the Churches Danger, to supplicate the Parliament; and accordingly a Committee was named to form an Address and Supplication for a new Security to Religion and this Church, when the old Fences were fast removing. And Mr. William Guthrie read from the Committee, a Draught of an Address, which was generally satisfying to the Members; but the Generality were over-ruled: Some worthy Men of the Resolutioners, but especially such as were gaping after a Bishoprick, vehemently opposed the Supplication, and threatened to dissent; such as Mr. James Hamilton Minister at Cambusnethan, afterward Bishop of Galloway, Mr. Robert Wallace at Barnwell, afterward Bishop of the Isles, and the Correspondent from the Synod of Lothian, Mr. James Ramsay, first Dean of Hamilton, and afterward Bishop of Dumblain. These Gentlemen did not so much oppose the Draught read, or Petitioning in the general, as the Seasonableness of supplicating in the present Circumstances; and urged the Synod's Adjourning to a short and new Diet. They alledged the West of Scotland was jealous, and ill looked on by many in Power; that they did not as yet know the Practice of other Synods, and so it would be much better to delay for a short Time, till they saw what other Synods did. Such as were for supplicating, could have easily outvoted them; yet considering that without Harmony and Unanimity, their Address would lose much of its Weight, they yielded to the Adjournment of the Synod for a Month.

Glasgow and Air.

Their Supplication to the Parliament delayed.

Mean while, as a present Exoneration of their Consciences, they agreed unanimously upon the following Declaration, and none were more forward in it, than the Members just now named, who in a few Months became Prelates.

Their present
Declaration,
April 4th.

Declaration of the Synod of Glasgow concerning the present Government of the Church of Scotland, April 4th, 1661.

WHEREAS there is a Scandal, as if some Ministers in this Church, had made, or were intending to make Defection from the Government of the Church of Scotland, to Prelatical Episcopacy; Therefore the whole Synod, and every Member thereof, do willingly declare, that they are fixed in the Doctrine, Discipline, Worship, and Church-government, by Sessions, Presbyteries, Synods, and General Assemblies, as it is now professed and practifed within this Church; and that they are resolved, by the Grace of God, so to remain. And because divers of the Members are absent, therefore the Synod recommends it to the several Presbyteries to require the same of them.

To this all the Members present personally assented. The Distinction of Prelatical Episcopacy, and the omitting of the Obligation of the Covenants, grieved many; and when this last was urged, Mr. James Hamilton threatened not to concur. Thus the Desire of Unanimity among themselves, made it pass pro tanto, and the Synod adjourned unto the Second Tuesday of May.

They meet again in May, and are raised by the Commissioner.

At which Time the Ministers came to Glasgow. But when they were about to convene in the Synod-house, they were discharged, in a Proclamation from the Cross, by Orders from his Majesty's Commissioner, to meet, as being an adjourned Meeting, and not warranted by Law. Providence is just and righteous, in depriving of Opportunities of doing Good, when Duty is not fallen into in its Season. However the Ministers in Town convened in Mr. Ralph Roger's House there, to consider what was fit now to be done; and after some Deliberation they drew up, and commissioned Three of their Number to go to Edinburgh, with the following Supplication and Representation,

To his Grace His Majesty's High Commissioner,

Humbly Sheweth,

Supplication of the Members to the Commissioner.

THAT whereas your Grace, for Reasons best known to your self, hath been pleased to interdict this adjourned Meeting of our Synod of Glasgow and Air, as illegal and unwarrantable by the Laws of this Kingdom; we judged it our Duty, to testify the due Respect we ow to the supreme Magistrate, whom the Lord in his good Providence hath set over us, to forbear, in Obedience to your Grace His Majesty's High Commissioner, your Inhibition, the constituting our selves into a Synod; yet lest we should be found wanting in the Discharge of the Duty we ow to our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ, who hath given Power to the Ministers of the Gospel, to meet in their respective Judicatories, as the Edification of the Congregations committed to their Oversight, doth necessarily require and call for; we also find it incumbent upon us, a considerable Number of us, the Members of this Synod of Glasgow and Air, having come to meet in a Synod, and being now occasionally in Providence cast together, to signify to your Grace, that as we are hopeful, whatever may be your Grace's Apprehensions of the Inconveniency of our meeting at this Time, it is not the Intent of your Grace's Proclamation, to declare that our Synod can at no Time warrantably meet, whatever be the Necessity of the Church within our Bounds, but twice in the Year: So we do humbly, and with all due Respect and Reverence to our Sovereign, the King's Majesty, and your Grace his high Commissioner, seriously testify, that our forbearing to meet in a Synod at this Time, in Obedience to your Grace's Prohibition, doth not import our yielding that the provincial Assemblies of this Church have no provincial Power to meet, when the Edification of the Church doth call for it, even oftner than twice a Year. All which, we have desired our Reverend Brethren, Mr. Patrik Colvil, Moderator in our Synod at the last Meeting thereof, Mr. Hugh Blair Minister at Glasgow, and Mr. James Stirling Minister at Paisly, humbly to represent to your Grace; which we persuade our selves will not only not be offensive to your Grace, but will be constructed a Piece of necessarily called for Exoneration of Ministers of the Gospel, who desire to be found faithful.

Accordingly those Three Persons went to Edinburgh, and presented the Ministers Petition and Representation to the Commissioner; but had no Return. And there were no more Synods of Presbyterian Ministers in Glasgow, till September 1687.

Synod of Fife.

The provincial Synod of Fife met likewise, in the Beginning of April, at St. Andrews; and the Hazard of the Church being very evident, they unanimously resolved to petition the Parliament for a new Act, ratifying Religion, and the Privileges of the Church. The Draught agreed upon follows.

To his Grace His Majesty's High Commissioner, and the High and Honourable Court of Parliament, the humble Petition of the Synod of Fife, convened at St. Andrews, April, 1661.

Their Supplication to the Parliament in April.

THAT whereas the honourable Court of Parliament hath judged the Parliaments, (thought to have been such) held in the Years 1639 and 1640. to be null, and of no Authority in themselves, and by this Means, all Acts ratifying the reformed Religion, as it is now received, professed and practised in this Kirk and Kingdom, in all the Parts and Heads thereof, viz. Doctrine, Worship, Church-government, and Discipline, and rescinding all Acts of preceeding Parliaments, contrary to some Parts of the Reformed Religion, particularly some Matters of the Worship of God, and Government of the Church, as all other Acts therein therein made, are become void, and of no Force; so those Acts of former Parliaments, by those Acts now made void, are ipso facto revived and restored to the Authority of standing Laws. And albeit it be not competent to us, and is very far from our Thoughts to judge of the Validity, or Invalidity of any Parliament, or Acts of Parliament, this being a Thing properly belonging to His Majesty, and the high Court of Parliament; yet being, by clear convincing Light, perswaded in our Consciences, that the Reformed Religion, in all the Parts of it, Doctrine, Worship, Government, and Discipline, received, professed, and practised at present within this Kirk and Kingdom, is grounded upon, and warranted by the Word of God revealed in the holy Scripture; and knowing how great a Mercy and Blessing it is to the Church of Christ, that true Religion, in the Profession and Practice thereof, be ratified, confirmed and established by the Authority and Laws of the Magistrate, who is the nursing Father of the Church, and Protector of Religion; and that there be no Laws of his standing against the true Religion, in any Part thereof: Wherefore we find ourselves bound, as the Servants of Christ, with all loyal and humble Submission of Heart to his sacred Majesty's Authority, and his High and Honourable Court of Parliament, to supplicate and beg, for the Lord's sake, that your Grace his Majesty's high Commissioner, and this high Court of Parliament, may be pleased to enact now a Law, ratifying, confirming, and establishing the Reformed Religion, at present received, professed, and practised in this Kirk and Kingdom, in Doctrine, Worship, Government, and Discipline, which will not be unacceptable to our dread Sovereign, the King's Majesty, as we are hopeful, having had by his Majesty's Letter to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, a Declaration of his gracious Resolution concerning this Matter. It will be a refreshing Mercy to the People of God in this Kingdom, and procure from them abundant Praises unto God, and Prayers for Blessings from Heaven upon your Lordship, and will exceedingly enlarge the Hearts of us who are Ministers of Christ, to teach, instruct, and exhort the People of God within our Charge, to all Loyalty and Obedience to his Majesty, all Submissiveness and Subjection to his Government, and Obedience to all having Authority from him; which also we are resolved to exhort them to, and to practise our selves, by the Lord's Grace, however it shall be with us, and whatsoever Exercise it shall please the Lord to put us to.

Joynly with this Supplication, the Synod designed a Warning and Admonition to the People under their Charge; wherein, after a full Declaration of their Loyalty to the King, and their Abhorrence of the English Usurpation, they shew their Resolution of standing by the Doctrine, Worship, Government and Discipline of the Church, declare against Prelacy, and admonish their People to be constant in God's Way, and to be much in Repentance. They were not permitted fully to finish this Paper; but the Draught of it, as it came from the Committee, to which, no doubt, the Synod would have agreed, with very little Alteration, I have insert App. No. 15. because it is pretty long.

Their designed Warning:

Before the Synod had formally voted the Supplication, and finished the Warning, they were interrupted by the Earl of Rothes, in the King's Name. Him the Commissioner had appointed Inspector, Visitor, or Commissioner, I do not know what Name to give to this new and Erastian Usurpation, to watch over the Actings of that Synod; and he came in, while they were in the Midst of their Business, and commanded Silence in the King's Name, and required them to insist no more upon what was before them, and immediately to depart. Obedience was given, and they dismissed themselves presently. The Case was new, they were perfectly surprized, and in Confusion; but it was Matter of Regret to many of them afterwards, that they had not protested against so plain an Invasion of the Liberties of Christ's House.

App. No. 15.

But are raised by the Earl of Rothes.

The Synod being thus violently raised, the Presbyteries at their first Meeting did approve of what they got not finished in Synod; and all of them, in a very solemn Manner, did record, and declare their Adherence to the Principles of this Church, in their several Presbytery-books. I have only seen an Extract of the Declaration to this Purpose, by the Presbytery of Cowpar; probably they were all much of a Piece, and so I insert it here.

All their Presbyteries approve of the Supplication and Warning.

At Cowpar, April 18. 1661.

THE Brethren of this Presbytery, after serious Consideration of a grievous Scandal, raised upon the Ministers of Scotland, as if they were falling from their Stedfastness in the reformed Religion, and inclinable to desire, endeavour, or embrace the Introducing again of the renounced, abjured Prelatical Government, with its unwarrantable Attendants, have thought it our Duty to express our Sense and Judgment thereof, in Sincerity of Heart, as becomes the Servants of God, and in his Presence: And accordingly all and every one of the Brethren, severally, and with one Consent, profess, as in the Sight of God, that we are thoroughly perswaded, and fully satisfied in our Consciences, by the clear Light of the Scriptures of God, touching the Divine Truth of the Reformed Religion, as it is at present, and hath been for divers Years, received, professed, and practised in the Church of Scotland, Declaration of the Presbytery of Cowpar.

1661. *land, in Doctrine, Worship, Government, and Discipline; and that we are convinced in our Consciences, that Prelacy of any one, with Majority of Power and Jurisdiction over Presbyteries and Churches, under the Name of constant Moderator, or any other Name or Notion whatsoever, hath no Warrant from Jesus Christ in his written Word, to be received in his Church: And we do from our Hearts the more abhor and detest any Motion or Purpose of apostatizing to that Way; not only because of many sinful Errors in Doctrine, and corrupt Practices in Worship, which formerly did, with and by the foresaid Prelacy, creep into this Church; but also because of the sacred and indispensable Ties of the Oath of God thereunto, under which we are before the Lord. And further, we all declare, that we are not a little encouraged and strengthened in this our Duty, and comfortably born up against the Fear of sinister Designs, in Prejudice of the present Government of the Church, by that refreshing Declaration of our Sovereign, the King's Majesty, in his Letter directed to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, and by them to be communicate to the rest of the Presbyteries of this Church, dated at Whitehall, August 10. 1660. of his Royal Resolution, "to protect and preserve the Government of the Church of Scotland, as it was then established by Law, without Violation, and to countenance, in the due Exercise of their Functions, all such Ministers who shall behave themselves dutifully and peaceably;" which also we purpose, in the Lord's Strength, carefully to endeavour. All which the Brethren presented unanimously consented unto, and ordained to be recorded in the Presbytry-register, *ad futuram rei memoriam.

Remarks upon
the Inspectors, at this Time sent to raise Synods.

In other Parts of the Church Ministers were not idle, when their All was at the Stake; but generally they were interrupted by those whom the Managers named for Commissioners and Inspectors; and it would seem some such were directed to every suspected Synod; an Office never before used, and I hope shall never more be tried. Upon the North Side of Tay, they had no great Fears of publick Appearances against their Procedure; but on the South of it, they had their Spies in most Synods, clothed with, I don't know, whose or what Authority. I can find no Act of Parliament constituting them, nor any Commission from the King; yea, from the forecited Account of the Proceedings of Parliament, I find, March 28. 'There was likewise presented and agreed unto, a Paper, bearing, that Ministers shall have Power to exerce their Ministerial Functions in Provincial Assemblies, Presbyteries and Sessions, during the King's Pleasure.' And I cannot guess how they came to be set up, unless it was by the paramount Power of the Commissioner, exerting his Privilege in his Commission, by Mr. Sharp's Importunity, to do whatever the King might do, if present.

Synod of Dumfries raised.

At Dumfries, the Synod was upon the same Design with that of Fife, and had agreed to an Act, censuring all Ministers who complied with Prelacy, by Deposition; but they were interrupted, and summarily dissolved by Queensberry and Hartfield, pretending Orders from the Commissioner. I find it remarked, that they were both miserably drunk, when they came in to their Work.

Synod of Galloway.

App. N^o. 15.
N^o. 2.

The Synod of Galloway met this same Month, and were drawing up a Petition to the Parliament, against Episcopacy, and for the Preservation of the Liberties of this Church; and under all regular Governments, Subjects are allowed humbly to supplicate; the Copy of which is added, App. N^o. 15. N^o. 2. But when at this, the Earl of Galloway came in, and in the King's Name dissolved their Meeting. The Moderator of the Synod, Mr. John Park, Author of the excellent Essay upon Patronages, modestly and yet very pointedly protested against the Encroachment made upon the Judicatory, and took Instruments in the Hand of their Clerk, to which all the Members adhered. Mr. Park protested against what was done, as an Injury to a Court of Jesus Christ, and incompetent to the Civil Magistrate. And the Ministers would not remove till he had prayed, and regularly concluded their Meeting.

Synod of Lothian hardly used.

In the Synod of Lothian, Things were carried with a very high Hand by our Statesmen; they were immediately under their Eye, and were treated most insolently. They were not suffered so much as to speak of any Testimony, yea, were forced to do what was very much contrary to the Inclinations of many. Some Members of the Synod, fully ripe for a Change, and ready to fall in with the Managers Designs, proposed that the Synod should begin at censuring and sentencing the Brethren who had been for the Protestation, even tho' it had been agreed among the Resolutioners and Protesters in the Year 1658. that none of either Side should be questioned in their Judicatories for their different Practices.

Proposal to censure Protesters.

Opposed by Mr. Douglas,
Dickson, and others.

This unaccountable Proposal, Mr. Robert Douglas, Mr. David Dickson, and many others of the best Note in the Synod, endeavoured to wave, and probably would soon have warded off, had not the Two Commissioners appointed for this Synod, the Earl of Callendar, and Sir Archibald Stirling of Carden, come in, no doubt by Concert with the corrupted Members, just when they were reasoning this Matter, and required the Moderator to purge the Synod of Rebels, meaning Ministers of the protesting Judgment: Yea, they threatened plainly, that if this was not presently fallen in with, they would dissolve them, and stage them before

fore other Judges. The Synod were so far forced in with the Proposal, that they suspended Mr. Alexander Livingstone Minister at Biggar, Mr. John Greg Minister at Skirling, Mr. Archibald Porteous and Mr. James Donaldson, Ministers in Biggar Presbytery, and Mr. Gilbert Hall Minister at Kirklistoun; all of them Ministers of great Piety, and some of them Persons of great Ability in the Church. I find that at this Synod, Mr. William Weir Minister at Linlithgow, and Mr. William Creighton Minister at Bathgate, were likewise removed from their Charges, upon Application of some malignant and dissatisfied Persons in their Parishes. After this sad Work, the Commissioners proposed some Overtures in Favour of Prelacy, which the Plurality of the Synod very briskly opposed, and thereupon were dissolved in the King's Name, and obliged to dismiss without Prayer.

1661.
The Synod forced to proceed against their Brethren,

And yet are raised.

There seems to have been at this Time a formed Design to bear down such Ministers as had not been for the publick Resolutions: And therefore in the Northern Synods I find some harsh Dealing with the few there of those Sentiments. One Instance may suffice, and 'tis of that extraordinary Person we shall meet with frequently afterward, Mr. Thomas Hog Minister at Kiltearn in the Synod of Ross. The Date is not sent me by the Reverend Minister who gives me the Information which he hath from Mr. Hog himself and Mr. Frazer after mentioned; but the Fact it self leads us to this Synod in the Beginning of this Year.

Mr. Thomas Hog of Kiltearn proteſteth before the Synod of Ross, and deposed.

Mr. Murdoch Mackenzie was Moderator of this Synod of Ross, and now gaping after the Bishoprick of Murray, though he had shown a particular Liking to the Covenants, and sworn them, some say Ten, others Fourteen Times. Mr. Hog was one from whom the greatest Opposition to Prelacy was expected, and therefore a Talk must be put on him at this Synod; and he, not being to be reached in any Point of Practice, must be staged for his Opinion, and that upon the Protestation.

When Mr. Hog appeared before the Synod, the Moderator interrogate him what he thought of the Protestation, and the Assemblies of St. Andrews, Dundee, &c? He modestly replied, That living at a great Distance from the Places where those Things were agitate, he never meddled much in that Matter. And being further asked, if he thought the Protestation a just and reasonable Deed? Mr. Hog declined to give an Answer, knowing what Improvement was designed to be made of it, and therefore he would neither own nor disown it judicially.

Mr. Hog being removed, the Moderator had a Discourse to the Synod, to this Effect, That the Brother they had before them, was known to be a great Man: Notwithstanding, the King having espoused the Defence of those Assemblies against which the Protestation was given in, it behoved them to go on in their Work. Therefore Mr. Hog was called in, and required judicially to disown and disclaim the Protestation.

This he refused to do, and thereupon the Synod passed a Sentence deposing him from the Ministry. Mr. Hog, in giving Account of this my Informer tells me, observed, the Sentence was pronounced with a peculiar Air of Veneration, and looked rather like their consecrating him to an higher Office, than a Deposition; and that the Moderator, in a Kind of consolatory Discourse after the Sentence, spoke very near Nonsense. Among other Things he was pleased to remind Mr. Hog, that our Lord Jesus Christ had suffered great Wrong from the Scribes and Pharisees.

At that same Synodical Meeting, a Motion was made for deposing Mr. James Frazer of Liny from his Office as Ruling Elder, for the very same Reasons on which they proceeded against Mr. Hog: But the Moderator opposed the Proposal, and expressed his Regard to him, as a honourable Gentleman, and not so far engaged in that Way as some others; therefore he moved that they might suspend Mr. Frazer from officiating for some Time, and appoint some Brethren to confer with him, for reclaiming him from his Mistakes. A Brother rose up and professed himself against that Proposal, for this Reason, That he was more afraid the Gentleman would draw to his Side those who should converse with him, than he would entertain Hopes of their prevailing on him. What the Issue was, my Informer does not remember.

A Motion at that Time to depose the Laird of Liny, a ruling Elder.

This is but a short Swatch of the unprecedented Force, Violence, and heavy Oppression of Ministers, in their Ministerial and Judicative Capacity; the Parallel of which, I doubt, if it can be given, as to any of the Reformed Churches, or in any well ordered Government; especially when Laws authorizing their Meeting, were yet standing, and they had the King's promised Protection. I might name many other Aggravations of this surprising Procedure, but the naked Narrative of Facts sufficiently exposeth it.

From these the Reader will have some View of the Oppression, I might say, Overturning of our Church-establishment, the Essays used, and Testimonies given against this melancholy Change, and the Attacks made upon Church-judicatories, while the Parliament sat. Those I thought good to give some Account of, before the Sufferings of particular Persons, which I now come to.

S E C T. III.

Of the Sufferings and Martyrdom of the Noble Marquis of Argyle, May 27. 1661.

M. of Argyle deserves the first Room among the Sufferers this Year.

IN giving the Narrative of the Hardships particular Persons underwent this Year, we shall find many attacked in their Name and Reputation, others in their Liberty, and others in their Estates and Lives. I shall begin with the last: And the excellent Marquis of Argyle deserves the first Room, and after him, the Reverend Mr. James Guthrie; each of whose Sufferings will fill a Section by themselves.

His Case printed.

The Case of the Marquis of Argyle, containing his Indictment for high Treason, with his large Answers, having been several Times printed, the less needs be said here concerning this great Man. 'Tis Pity the Whole of this eminent Person's Management, Speeches, and Petitions to the Lords of Articles, and the Parliament, cannot now be recovered; some of them I have before me, under his Lordship's own Hand, and Copies of others. From those, and other Memoirs of this Period, I shall essay as short and distinct an Account of this noble Peer, his Treatment and Trial, with what followed upon it, as I can.

He goes to Court, where he arrived July
8. 1660.

When the King came Home last Year, the Marquis was very much solicited to go to Court, and some say, he had Assurances of Welcome. No doubt he was inclinable to wait upon a Prince, upon whose Head he had set the Crown. Indeed several of his best Friends were against his going up to Court, till Matters were come to some Settlement; and particularly Mr. Robert Douglas used many Arguments to dissuade him: He was forewarned of a Change in his Majesty's Affections towards him, and acquainted, that he wanted not Enemies at London, who had taken Pains to raise Calumnies upon his Person and Conduct. All those prevailed with him to delay his Journey for some Time: At length, he resolved to vindicate himself; and knowing he was able, upon his Access to the King, soon to remove whatever Dull, a Set of People, for their own base Ends, had raised against him, he took Journey, and arrived at London, July 8. and with a Confidence flowing from the Testimony of a good Conscience, entred Whitehall, to salute his Majesty.

That same Day sent to the Tower.

I am told that his Enemies had so prepossessed the King against him, that even while upon his Road to London, Orders were given to seize him, and carry him back Prisoner to Scotland: If so, he escaped the Messengers, and got safe to Court. But as soon as the King was told he was come to Whitehall, he ordered Sir William Fleming to go and carry him straight to the Tower of London. The Marquis urged much to be allowed to see the King, but our Scots Managers took Care to prevent that; and he was hurried away in the greatest Haste possible.

Causes of his Confinement.

In the Tower he continued under close Confinement, until he was sent down to Scotland. The Springs of such surprising Treatment of this great Man, are either a Secret, or not very fit to be propaled. This much may be said, He was the Head of the Covenanters in Scotland, and had been singularly active in the Work of Reformation there; and of any almost who had engaged in that Work, he stuck fastest by it, when most of the Nation quit it very much. He had kept his Power and Influence in Scotland under the various Turns of Affairs, and stood when many of his Rivals fell: And this Attack upon him was a Stroke at the Root of all that had been done in Scotland from the 1638. to the Usurpation.

It is not improbable, besides the Emulation of our Scots Noblemen about Court, and the peculiar Spite of the High-fliers in England, against the Marquis, for his known Principles in Church-government, and eminent Appearances for Civil Liberty, that General Monk, and others about the King, knowing his great Abilities and Experience, and how much the King once valued him, might be afraid of his soon coming to have such Interest with his Majesty, and making such Discoveries of Affairs, as were not agreeable to their present Circumstances and Projects.

What holy Freedom the Marquis had used in reproving some Vices, and what Promises had been made him, which were not now to be performed, I shall not say: But some of those, if not all, concurred to begin and help forward this violent Storm now come upon him.

Very unjustly treated, there.

While in the Tower, he made Application for Liberty to have the Affidavits and Declarations of several Persons in England, taken upon some Matters of Fact, when he was concerned in the publick Administration, before the Usurpation; but this Piece of Justice was flatly refused him.

Sent down to Scots 3. and arrives at Leith
Dec. 20.

From the Tower he was, toward the Beginning of December, sent down to Scotland in a Man of War, to abide his Trial before the Parliament. Sir John Swintoun came down Prisoner with him, and they had a severe Storm in their Passage, in which the Ship before mentioned, with the Records of the Kingdom, was lost. December 20. they landed at Leith, and next Day, Swintoun being a Quaker, and excommunicate, was carried up the Street of Edinburgh, burgh discovered, and guarded by the Town-officers; and the Marquis walked up the Street covered, 'twixt two of the Bailies of Edinburgh, to the Castle, where he continued till his Trial came on. 1661.

By the Minutes of Parliament formerly mentioned, I find, January 18. the Lord Cochran President of the Committee for Bills, reported to the Parliament, that a Supplication was presented to them by the Laird of Lawmont, craving Warrant to a Messenger to cite the Marquis of Argyle, and some others, to appear before the Parliament, to answer to the Crimes contained in the Bill. Some Opposition was made to this; but it was carried, by a vast Plurality, to grant Warrant. This Gentleman was hounded out by the Managers, to bring in this Charge of Severities against the Marquis; from which he vindicates himself in his printed Defences.

When thus cited, upon the first of February he gives in Two Petitions to the Parliament, the one craving Advocates to be allowed him, and the other that the Day of his Appearance might be delayed. After much Debate in the House, both were referred to the Lords of Articles, where the Managers were sure to carry their Point, as they pleased. What their Answer was I have not seen: But February 5th, I find it represented to the House, that the Lawyers given in List by the Marquis being heard before the Articles, did prevail to be excused; and a new Petition, with a new List, being presented, the Parliament granted the Desire of it, leaving Room for the Advocates to plead their Excuses before the Articles.

All this looks like a Trick, to deprive him of the Benefit of Advocates, in a Cause which so nearly concerned him; or at least, so to protract the Time, that there should be very little Room for drawing of Answers. The Names of his Advocates were, Judge Ker, Mr. Andrew Birnie, Mr. Robert Birnie, Mr. afterward Sir George Mackenzie of Rosehaugh, Mr. afterward Sir John Cunningham, and Mr. George Norvel. The Day of his Appearance was ordered to be February 13th; and till then, terrible Stories were buzzed about of the Marquis's horrid Barbarities used against the Gentlemen of the Name of Lawmont, McCoul of Lorn, the Laird of Appine, the Gentlemen of Clandonald, and others, from which there lies a full Vindication, in his printed Defences. But this was necessary, to prepare Members of Parliament, and the Nation, for the barbarous Tragedy that was now shortly to be acted.

Upon the 13th of February, the Marquis was brought down from the Castle in a Coach, with Three of the Magistrates of Edinburgh, attended with the Town-guards, and presented at the Bar, where Sir John Fletcher the King's Advocate accused him, in common Form, of high Treason, and presenting an Indictment, craved it might be read. The Marquis humbly craved, that he might have Liberty to speak before the reading of his Dittay, promising that he should not say any Thing to the Matter therein contained. When the Advocate opposed this with Violence, the Marquis was removed, and after some Debate, the House refused his reasonable Desire, and ordered his Dittay to be read.

When my Lord was called in, and this intimate to him, he moved that a Bill he had by his Advocates given in to the Lords of the Articles, might be now read in the Parliament; the Desire of it was, a Precognition, with many Reasons why this ought to be granted. The Lords of Articles would not transmit this Bill to the Parliament, and the Marquis had no other Method left him, but to move the Reading of the Petition in the House; this was likewise peremptorily refused. This Petition, not being printed in the common Copies of his Case, and giving considerable Light to this Trial, I have added App. No. 16.

Being over-ruled thus in every Thing, the Indictment was read. The Reader hath it in his printed Case, and I would most willingly insert it in the Appendix, were it not very large, and the Answers to it necessarily much larger, so that this Volume would swell exceedingly, were they added. I shall only then point at the Heads thereof, as briefly as I can, that the Reader may have some View of the unaccountable Injustice of this Procedure. In the general, it may be noticed, that this Libel was more Months in forming, than the Marquis had Days allowed him to frame his Answers to it.

Besides ordinary Form, the Indictment consisted of 14 Articles, wherein a Heap of Slander, Perversion of Matters of Fact, and Misrepresentations are gathered up against this good and great Man; all which he abundantly takes off in his Answers. He is indicted,

That he rose in Arms in Opposition to the King's good Subjects, the Anticovenanters, and said to Mr. John Stuart, "That it was the Opinion of many Divines, that Kings in some Cases might be deposed." That he marched with armed Men against the House of Airlie, and burned the same. That in the Year 1640. he laid Siege to his Majesty's Castle of Dumbarton, and forced it to render to him. That he called, or caused to be called the Convention of Estates 1643. and entered into the Solemn League and Covenant with England, levied Subsidies from the Subjects, raised an Army, and fought against his Majesty's Forces. That in the Year 1645. he burned the House of Menstrie. That in 1646. he or those under his Command, besieged and took in the House of Towart and Escoge, and killed a great many Gentlemen. That he marched to Kintire, and killed 300 Men of the Name of McDonald and McCoul, in cold Blood, and transported 200 Men to the uninhabited Isle of Jura, where they perished by Famine. That he went up to London, and agreed with a Committee there, 1661. to deliver up the King to the English Army at Newcastle, upon the Payment of 200000 lib. pretended to be due for the Arrears of the Army, treasonably raised 1643. That 1648. he protested in Parliament against the Engagement for relieving His Majesty, and convoked an Army to oppose the Engagers, met with Oliver Cromwel Commander of the English Army, and consented to a Letter writ to him October 6. 1648. and to the Instructions given to Sir John Chiesly to the Parliament of England, and in May following signed a Warrant for a Proclamation, declaring the Lords Ogilvie and Rae, the Marquis of Huntley, John now Earl of Middleton, their Wives and Families, to be out of the Protection of the Kingdom. That he clogged his Majesty's Invitation to his Kingdom of Scotland 1649. with many unjust Limitations, and consented to the Murder of the Marquis of Montrose, to obstruct his Majesty's Resolution of coming to his Kingdom; that he corresponded with Cromwel, without His Majesty's Knowledge; that he contrived and consented to the Act of the West-kirk, August 13. 1650. and the Declaration following thereupon. That in the Years 1653 and 1654. he abetted and joyned with, or furnished Arms to the Usurper's Forces in the Highlands, against the Earls of Glencairn and Middleton, and gave Remissions to such as had been in the King's Service. That he received a Precept from the Usurper of 12000 Pounds Sterling, and did consent to the Proclamation of Richard Cromwel; accepted a Commission from the Shire of Aberdeen, and sat and voiced in his pretended Parliament. That he rebuked the Ministers in Argyle, for praying for the King. That he positively gave his Advice to Cromwel and Ireton in a Conference 1648. that they could not be safe till the King's Life were taken away, at least did know and conceal that horrible Design.

His Speech
after reading of his Indictment.

After reading the Indictment, the Marquis was allowed to speak, and discoursed at considerable Length to the Parliament. This extemporary Speech was taken from his Mouth in short Hand, and is insert in his printed Case; and the Reader will find it full of close Reasoning, and strong Sense. 'After he had declared his Joy at the Restoration, and his Trust in the King's Goodness, and the Justice of his Judges, he says, with Paul in another Case, The Things alledged against him cannot be proven: But this he confesses, that in the Way allowed by solemn Oaths and Covenants, he served his God, his King and Country. He complains he had neither a Hearing, nor Pen, Ink, or Paper allowed him, until this heavy Charge was given. He notices in Sir Walter Rawleigh's Words, that Dogs bark at such as they know not, and accompany one another in those Clamours: And tho' he owns he wanted not Failings common to all engaged in publick Business in such a Time, yet he blesses God, he is able to make the Falshood of every Article of his Charge appear. That he had done nothing with a wicked Mind; but with many others had the Misfortune to do several Things, the unforeseen Events of which proved bad.'

After this he comes to obviate the principal Calumnies in his Indictment. 'As to the King's Murder, he declares, that if he had been accessory to the Counsel or Knowledge of it, he deserved no Favour; but he was the first Mover of the Oath in Parliament 1649. to vindicate the Members, and discover the Villany. And in a Latter-will made 1656. he entirely made it appear he was free of that execrable Crime, the original Copy whereof was ready to be produced. That he never saw, or had the least Correspondence with Cromwel, till sent by the Committee of Estates, 1648. to stop his March to Scotland; and that he declined corresponding with the Sectarian Army, which he offers instantly to make appear.'

'He next asserts his Regard to the late Duke of Hamilton, and owns that he declined to compliment Cromwel in his Behalf; which if he had done, would have been an Article of his Indictment. He declares he used his utmost Endeavours to preserve the Marquis of Huntley, and that he never had any Thing out of his Estate, but what was absolutely necessary for his own Relief, and that he was of very great Use to that Family. As to the Marquis of Montrose's Death, he appeals to many of the Members Knowledge, that he positively refused to meddle, either in the Matter or Manner of it; and declares that in the 1645. the Marquis and himself had agreed upon a Treaty, which would have prevented much Hurt afterwards, and it was none of their Faults Matters were not then compromised.'

'As to his Dealings with the English after Worcester, he offers to prove he laid out himself with his Vassals to oppose the English; and a strong Force being sent into Argyle Shire, and he under Sickness, he was made Prisoner, and at all Hazards refused in the least to joyn with them. This he shews would have been contrary to his Interest, as well as Duty; and evidences, That all along he did oppose a Common-wealth. He complains that the Advocate had dealt very ungenerously and unfairly, in forming his Libel; and as to other Things, refers to his Defences.'

When the Marquis had ended, the Advocate subdolously endeavoured to bring him to speak upon some Heads, which he declined, and referred to his Defences; and yet when he came in, after he had been removed, while the House were fixing the Time of his next Appearance, he spoke to what the Advocate had cast up, as to his Opposition to the Engagers at Stirling 1648. and made it appear, that he was attacked by Sir George Monro, several of his Friends killed, and he himself hardly escaped.

The Lawyers for the Marquis took a Protest, ' That what should escape them in Pleading, either by Word or Writ, for the Life, Honour, and Estate of their Client, might not there- after be obtruded to them as treasonable; ' and took Instruments. When the Pannel and his Advocates were removed, the King's Advocate, in order to intimidate and frighten the Marquis's Lawyers, got the Parliament to refuse to record their Instrument: Yet common Rules obliged the House to permit them to speak as freely as is usual in such Cases.

The Parliament fixed the 26th of February, for the Day of the Defender his giving in Defences in Writ. A very short Diet indeed, for replying to a Charge which contained so many Particulars, and related to Persons and Times at such a Distance, and an Indictment contrived in so general and captious Terms; all which is better represented in the printed Defences, than I can pretend to do. When this was signified upon the Party's being called in, the Marquis with his Advocates craved again, that his Bill for a Precognition might be read, and granted by the House. To which the Chancellor replied, ' That it had been formerly refused at the Articles, and that it would not be granted.' Thus we see, whatever the Commissioner pretended, in pressing the Nomination of the Lords of Articles, they were an illegal and unreasonable Bar to the Affairs of the Kingdom, their coming under the Cognizance of the Parliament, and so most justly complained of in our Claim of Right, and happily taken away at the Revolution.

His Defences ordered to be given in at a very short Day.

By a Petition the Marquis applied the Parliament, February 26th, That he might have a further Time to form his Defences, because his Advocates were Strangers to the Process, till put into their Hands; and the Matter of his Indictment was of such Extent: And they granted him until the 5th of March; which Day, I find him before the Lords of Articles, desiring the Continuation of his Affair, till the Meeting of Parliament to Morrow. This short Delay was not allowed him; but by two or three Votes he was peremptorily appointed to produce his Defences; whereupon he had a most pathetic Speech, and when he ended it, gave in a very moving Supplication, remitting himself to the King's Mercy, and beseeching the Parliament may intercede for him.

His Speech before the Lords of Articles, March 5th.

This Speech is printed in his Case, and he acquaints them, ' That this Trial nearly concerns him, and is a Preparative to the whole Nation, themselves, and Posterity; and wishes them to take Heed what they do; for they judge not for Men, but the Lord, who is with them in Judgment. He observes, there are many of them young Men, who, except by Report, know not what was done since the 1638. and are ignorant of the Grounds of the Procedure of this Church and Kingdom, in that Time: Therefore he desires their Charity, till the Circumstances be heard and weighed, and proposes several important Maxims to their Consideration.

Abstract of it.

' That Circumstances changing sometimes, make what is lawful appear unlawful. That when an invading Usurper is in Possession, making former Laws Crimes, the Safety of the People is certainly the supreme Law. That Necessity has no Law. That inter arma silent leges. That of two Evils, the least is to be chosen. That no Man's Intention must be judged by the Event of the Action, there being a vast Difference 'twixt the Condition of a Work, and the Intention of the Worker. That it cannot be esteemed Virtue, to abstain from Vice, but where 'tis in our Power to commit the Vice, and we have a Temptation.'

Unto those Maxims he subjoins the following Considerations. ' That Subjects Actions are to be differently considered, when their lawful Prince is in the Exercise of his Authority, and when there is no King in Israel; yea, even when the Sovereign is in the Nation, and when forced to leave his People under the Power of a foreign Sword. That Subjects Actions are likewise mightily altered, when an Usurper is submitted unto by the Representatives of a Nation, and for some Years in Possession of the Government. That Submission to an usurping Invader, in this Case, when after assisting the lawful Magistrate to their Power, they are made Prisoners, and can do no better, softens the Case yet more, especially when they continue Prisoners upon Demand, and are particularly noticed and persecuted for their Affection to their Sovereign. That a great Difference is to be made between a Thing done ad lucrum captandum, and that done only ad damnum evitandum. That all Princes have favourably considered such, as in such Circumstances voluntarily cast themselves upon their Clemency. That his Majesty's natural Clemency, evidenced to all his English Subjects, cannot but be displayed to his Subjects in Scotland, who suffered, even by them whom he pardons, for their Affection to his Majesty.'

' Upon the whole, knowing his Majesty's good Nature, and his declared Inclinations in his Speech to the English Parliament, " conjuring them to abolish all Notes of Discord, Separations and Differences of Parties, and to lay aside all Animosities, and past Provocations; " he hopes their Lordships will concur in following so worthy a Pattern; and for this end he humbly presents his Submission to them.'

Accordingly the Marquis gave in a signed Supplication and Submission, which I have insert here.

To my Lord Commissioner his Grace, and High Court of Parliament.

His Supplication presented that same Day.

FORASMUCH as I Archibald Marquis of Argyle, am accused of Treason, at the Instance of his Majesty's Advocate, before the high Court of Parliament; and being altogether unwilling to appear any way in Opposition to his Sacred Majesty, considering also that this is the first Parliament called by his Majesty, after his happy Return to his Kingdoms and Government, for healing and repairing the Distempers and Breaches made by the late long Troubles; I have therefore resolved that their Consultations and Debates about the great Affairs and Concernments of his Majesty and this Kingdom, shall have no Interruption upon Occasion of a Process against me.

I will not represent the Fatality and Contagion of those Times, wherein I, with many others in those three Kingdoms, have been involved, which have produced many sad Effects and Consequences, far contrary to our Intentions: Nor will I insist upon the Defence of our Actings in this Kingdom, before the prevailing of the late Usurpers; which (if examined according to the strictest Interpretation, and severest Censure of Law) may be esteemed a Trepass of his Majesty's Royal Commands, and a Transgression of the Law: But notwithstanding thereof, are by his Majesty's Clemency covered with the Vail of Oblivion, by divers Acts of Parliament, and others to that Purpose, for the Safety and Security of his Majesty's Subjects: And that my Actings since, and my Compliance with so prevalent a Power (which had wholly subdued this, and all his Majesty's other Dominions, and was universally acknowledged) may be looked upon as Acts of mere Necessity, which hath no Law. And 'tis known, that during that Time, I had no Favour from those Usurpers; it was inconsistent with, and repugnant to my Interest, and cannot be thought (unless I had been demented and void of Reason) that I should have had Freedom or Affection to be for them, who being conspired Enemies to Monarchy, could never be expected to tolerate Nobility.

And whereas that most horrid and abominable Crime of taking away the precious Life of the late King, of ever glorious Memory, is most maliciously and falsely charged upon me; if I had the least Accession to that most vile and hainous Crime, I would esteem my self most unworthy to live, and that all highest Punishments should be inflicted upon me: But my Witness is in Heaven, and my Record on High, that no wicked Thing, or disloyal Thought, ever entered into my Heart.

But choosing to shun all Debates, rather than to use any Words or Arguments to reason with his Majesty, Whom, tho' I were righteous, yet I would not answer, but make Supplication; And therefore (without any Excuse or Vindication) I do in all Humility throw my self down at his Majesty's Feet, and (before his Majesty's Commissioner, and the Honourable Estates of Parliament) do submit, and betake my self to his Majesty's Mercy. And tho' it be the great Unhappiness of these Times (the Distempers and Failings of these Kingdoms being so epidemick and universal) that his Majesty should have so much Occasion and Subject of his Royal Clemency; yet 'tis our great Happiness, and his Majesty's high Honour, that he hath expressed and given so ample Testimony thereof, even to those who did invade his Majesty, and this Nation, for no other Cause, than their faithful and loyal Adherence to his Majesty, and his just Royal Interests; which rendreth his Majesty's Goodness incomparable, and without Parallel; and giveth me Confidence, that his Grace, His Majesty's Commissioner, and the honourable Parliament, of their own Goodness, and in Imitation of so great and excellent a Pattern, will compassionate my Condition.

And seeing it is a special Part of his Majesty's Sovereignty and Royal Prerogative, to dispense with the Severity of the Laws; and that 'tis a Part of the just Liberty of the Subjects, that (in Cases of great Extremity and Danger) they may have Recourse to his Majesty, as to a Sanctuary and Refuge; it is in all Humility supplicated, that the Lord Commissioner's Grace, and the honourable Parliament, would be pleased favourably to represent my Case to his Majesty; and that the Door of the Royal Mercy and Bounty, which is so large and patent to many, may not be shut upon one, whose Ancestors for many Ages (without the least Stain) have had the Honour (by many signal Proofs of their Loyalty) to be reputed serviceable to his Majesty's Royal Progenitors, in Defence of the Crown, and this his ancient Kingdom. And if his Majesty shall deign to hold out the golden Sceptre of his Clemency, as an indelible Character of his Majesty's Royal Favour, it will lay a perpetual Obligation of all possible Gratitude upon me, and my Posterity, and will ever engage and devote us entirely to his Majesty's Service: And the Intercession of this honourable Parliament in my Behalf to his gracious Majesty, will be a real Evidence of their Moderation, and they shall certainly be called a healing Parliament; and God, whose Mercy is above all his Works, shall have the Honour and Glory which is due to his great Name, when Mercy triumphs over Justice.

Next Day, March 6th, the Marquis being brought before the Parliament, it was reported from the Articles, that he had been before them, and offered a Submission to his Majesty, with a Desire the Parliament might transmit it to the King. Whereupon, after long Reasoning, and much much Debate, the Question was put, If the Submission was satisfactory, or not? It carried in the Negative. When the Marquis was called in, he spoke as follows.

* Condescend.

His Speech in Parliament thereupon.

‘ May it please your Grace and Lordships, My Lord Chancellor, and this honourable Assembly, to consider his Majesty’s Proclamation to Scotland, October 12th 1660. compared with his gracious Declarations and Speeches in England, manifesting to his People his Inclination to Clemency, and commanding, requiring and conjuring them, to put away all Notes of Discord and Separation, and to lay aside all former Animosities, and the Memory of by-past Provocations, and to return to Unity among themselves under his Majesty’s Government; for he never intended to except any from the Benefit of his Bounty and Clemency, but the immediate Murderers of his Royal Father.’

‘ I desire therefore your Lordships to observe, as all other Subjects do, the two Conditions only in his Majesty’s Declaration. 1st, The Vindication of his Majesty’s Honour, and that of his ancient Kingdom. And 2^{dly}, The asserting of his ancient Royal Prerogative. Those Two being done, he promiseth a full and free Pardon, and Act of Indemnity to all his Subjects in Scotland.’

‘ I confess, my Lords, it is all Subjects Duty to concur in those; and this Offer of my Submission is all I can contribute to it at this Time. It is his Majesty’s Royal Honour, not to question what himself and his Royal Father hath done to his Subjects by their former Acts, especially such Persons who have done and suffered so much for him; and it cannot be misconstrued in me, not to desire to dispute the same, but to fly to that Privilege of the Subjects in their Distress, his Majesty’s Clemency and Mercy, whereby I may have Share of the Benefit of his Majesty’s Prerogative, which, as his Royal Father saith, ‘ is best known and exercised, rather by remitting, than exercising the Rigour of the Laws; than which there is nothing worse: And Solomon, the wisest of Kings, saith, Mercy and Truth preserve the King, and his Throne is upholden by Mercy.’ The same Way the Two most righteous Kings (being of God’s own choosing) practised, to wit, David and Saul: David, after a most horrid and unnatural Rebellion; and Saul, towards the Sons of Belial, (which is, wicked Men) who refused to admit him for their King.’

‘ So I humbly desire a larger Time to consider what I can do more to give your Lordships Satisfaction; that I may have your Lordships Concurrence, that the Door of his Majesty’s Mercy may not be shut upon me alone, of all the Subjects in his Majesty’s Dominions; for a dead Flie will spoil a Box of precious Ointment.’

This affecting Discourse had no Influence at all; and the Chancellor, without so much as removing my Lord, and before he had fully ended what he had to say, gave him for Answer, That the Parliament commanded him next Day to give in his Defences to the Lords of Articles.

The Parliament order him to give in his Defences.

Accordingly, March 7th, being called before the Articles, to give in his Defences, he told them, ‘ He had seen their Lordships Order, That he might forbear his coming, if he would produce his Defences: Therefore he acquainted their Lordships, That if he had them in Readiness, he would neither have troubled them, nor himself; but having a Petition ready to desire a Delay, he thought it his Duty to come and propose it himself, hoping their Lordships would consider, that his presenting his Defences, either wanting somewhat, or blotted, so as they could not be well read, was a very great Prejudice to him, and a Delay of a few Days was no Prejudice at all to any Thing my Lord Advocate could say: And therefore he hoped their Lordships would not refuse him some competent Time to get them ready.’

His Speech to the Lords of Articles, March 7th.

When my Lord was removed, and, after some Debate, called in again, the Chancellor told him, in Name of the Committee, That he was ordained to give in his Defences before Munday, April 9. at Ten of the Clock, to my Lord Advocate; otherwise the Lords would take the whole Business before them, without any Regard to what he had to say.

The Advocate added, That the Marquis must give in his whole Defences. To which his Lordship answered, That was a new Form, to give in peremptory Defences before the discussing of Relevancies. Sir John Gilmore rose up, and said, He was commanded to inform his Lordship, That there was a Difference twixt a Process in Writ, and the ordinary Way before the Session or Justiciary. The Marquis answered, He was very ill yoked with so able Men; but he behoved to tell them, he had once the Honour to sit as Chief Justice in this City, and he knew the Process before them was in Writ, and yet the Relevancies were always first answered, before any peremptory Defences were proposed, since Relevancies are most to be considered in Criminals. Both of them urged, that it was his Lordship’s Interest to give in his Defences as strongly as he could, otherwise the Advocate might refer the whole Business to the Judge, and make no other Answer. My Lord replied, He would follow the Advice of his Lawyers, and hoped any Order of their Lordships at present, was without Prejudice to his offering more Defences afterwards, since he was so narrowed in Time, and commanded to give what was ready.

1661.

He added, That if their Lordships and the Parliament had been pleased to grant his Desire of a Precognition, which, as he humbly conceived, was agreeable both to Law and Practice, and his Majesty's Proclamation, which he acquiesced in, it could not but have been the readiest Way for trying his Carriage during the late Troubles; whereas now he must of Necessity in the Process (which he hopeth will not be refused) crave a Way for an Exculpation in many Particulars; for he both was, and is resolved to deal very ingenuously as to Matters of Fact. And if that had been first tried, which he was most desirous of, both from the Committee and the Parliament, he is hopeful there would not remain so much Prejudice against him, in most Part of Things of greatest Concernment in the Libel. For his own Particular, he desired nothing but the Truth to have Place. They might do with his Person as they pleased, for by the Course of Nature he could not expect a long Time to live, and he should not think his Life ill bestowed, to be sacrificed for all that had been done in those Nations, if that were all.

The Lords, in nothing moved by any Thing of this Nature, told him, If his Defences came not in against Munday, they would take the whole Business before them, without any Regard to what he should afterwards say.

The Marquis gives in his Defences.

His Defences, for any Thing I can learn, were given in the Day named. They are printed in his Case, and in them, at great Length, the Marquis's Management is vindicated from all the Fallhoods, Calumnies, and Misrepresentations maliciously cast upon him; and they contain one of the best Accounts of the Transactions of those Times pointed at in his Libel, that I know of. Being Thirteen Sheets of small Print, I cannot take upon me to give an Abstract of them: But the most considerable Perversions of Fact in the Indictment being already taken off, by what I have above inserted from the Marquis's Discourses, little more needs be added; yet, for the setting this Affair in its due Light, and as the best Abstract I can give of the large Defences, I shall here insert a Paper, drawn up by a very sufficient Person at this Time, which contains the Substance of what is more fully cleared in the Defences, which I must still refer the Reader to.

INFORMATION for my Lord Argyle, against the Dittay given in against him by the King's Advocate.

Information for my Lord Argyle, against his Dittay.

THE Deeds alledged done, either before his Majesty left Scotland, 1651. or since, are either Deeds of publick Concernment, or private, relating to private Persons.

As for the Publick, he never acted without the Approbation of Parliament, and General Assemblies, which were ratified by his Majesty's Royal Father, and his Majesty who now reigns. And as for Things relating to particular Persons, he never had any Accession to any Thing, but what is warranted by Acts of Parliament, approved by his Majesty, and his Royal Predecessors.

As for Actings, after his Majesty left Scotland, 1651. the Marquis was still a Prisoner upon Demand, and did never capitulate till August 1652. being surpris'd in his House, lying sick, and that long after the Deputies had taken the Tender, and gone to London, and others in Arms had capitulated, and the whole Kingdom were living peaceably, under the Power and Government of the Usurper.

The first Deed is a Speech 1640. at the Ford of Lyon, in Athole, where 'tis affirmed, that he said, It was the Opinion both of Divines and Lawyers, that a King might be deposed for Desertion, Vendition, or Invasion; and said to Mr. John Stuart, That he understood Latin; from whence, Treason against the King, and the Murder of the said Mr. John is inferred. This is plainly against Law, for Speeches against the King, by Scots Law, go not above the Pain of Death. 2^{do}, 'Tis not relevant to infer any Crime, tho' those Words had been spoken in the abstract Terms related, no more than any should speak the Tenet of the Sorbonne or Canon Law, upon the Pope's Power. 3^{do}, To infer the Murder of the said Mr. John is absurd, seeing the said Mr. John was, upon his own Confession and Witnesses Depositions, condemned, having slandered not only my Lord Argyle, but the whole Committee of Estates. 4^{to}, This Deed is 1640. and the Act of Oblivion 1641.

The 2^d Deed is the * slighting the House of Airlie, and burning of Forthbar in Glenyla. 'Tis answered, those Houses were kept out in Opposition to the Committee of Estates, and so might be slighted and destroyed; which is clear by Acts of Parliament yet in Force, Act 4th, Parl. 3^d. King Charles, June 24th, 1644. and 35th Act, 2^d Parl. King Charles. By which 'tis expressly acknowledged, that holding out of Houses against the Estates, is a Crime. And by Act 35th, Parl. Anno 1640. the same is made a Crime. 2^{do}, Oppones the Act of Oblivion, 1641. 3^{do}, The said Service is ratified and approved in Parliament, 1641. Rege presente, unprinted Acts, Numb. 70. bearing Ratification, Exoneration, and Approbation, in favours of the Marquis of Argyle.

The 3^d Deed is, the taking the Castle of Dumbarton. It is answered, this was done by Order of the Committee of Estates; and the Act of Oblivion was after this. As to the

* taking

‘taking of Cannon; there were only two of them gifted to the Marquis by the late Duke of Lennox, then lying there.’ 1661.

‘As to the Calling of a Convention of Estates, and going into England with an Army. It is answered, This was done by the Conservators of the Peace, secret Council, and Commissioners of common Burdens, appointed by the King’s Majesty for governing the Country, and ratified in Parliament since; and the General Assembly went along in all the Steps. 2^{do}, It was allowed by the King, in his Agreement at Breda, and by his Act of Oblivion 1651. at St. Johnstoun and Stirling.’

‘As to the Burning of Menstrie by his Command. It is answered, 1^{mo}, He denies any Command. 2^{do}, Whereas it bears by Men under his Command, there is no Law to make that Treason, nor is it relevant or reasonable, for noxa caput sequitur, & delicta suos tenent authores. 3^{mo}, ’Tis remitted by the Act of Oblivion 1651. 4th, General Bailie had the Command, whose Service in that Expedition, is approven in the Parliament 1646. and tho’ he had done this, he had Commission from the Parliament 1644.’

‘As to the taking of Towart and Escoje, and murdering a Number of Men after Capitulation. ’Tis answered, The Marquis was not in the Country, but in England in the Time of the said Deeds. To the murdering of 200 Men, after the taking of Dunavertie, ’tis answered, That David Lesly had the Command there, and what was done, was by a Council of War, and Lesly’s Service was approven by the Parliament 1648. And whereas the said Article bears, That my Lord Argyle caused take 200 Persons from Ila to Jura, where they perished: This is false against him; for he knew nothing of it, nor ever heard of it, till he received his Dittay. But the Truth is, That David Lesly was with his Army in Ila, against old Coil McGillespick, who held out a Fort there, called Dunivaige; and by the continuing of his Army there, the Isle was spoiled of Meat: But Coil being taken, and the Fort surrendered, David Lesly came home with his Army, and the Army left the Pestilence in the Country. And shortly after the Removal of the Army, the Captain of Clauronald, with Angus McDonald, Son to old Coil, came and destroyed all that was left in the Isle, whereupon the Sickness being among the Inhabitants, and all their Food destroyed, it was a joynt Resolution of the Gentlemen in that Isle, belonging to the Laird of Caddel, that those People should go, some to Ireland, some to Argyle, some to Jura, for their Safety, and Meat, of which there was Abundance in Jura, and if they wanted, it might be had in Lorn and Argyle. But this is a most false and base Aspersion on the Marquis, who was neither there at that Time, or had the least Accession to it. The Gentlemen of Ila can clear this.’

‘To the giving up of the King at Newcastle. ’Tis answered, It was a Parliament Deed, which cannot come upon him; for by Law divine and human, a Voice in Parliament is still free, and cannot be censured. Likeas by Act of Parliament 1641. Rege presente, Members of Parliament are sworn to give a true Judgment to their Light: But the Truth in Fact is, that my Lord Argyle was not in Scotland, when the King’s Majesty came to the Scots Army at Newark; and the King’s Majesty had emitted his Declaration to both Houses of Parliament in England, declaring his Resolution to settle Matters, by Advice of his Parliaments. Neither ever did the Marquis meddle in that Business, but in the Parliament 1647.’

‘As to the Protest in Parliament 1648. calling in the Settarian Army, writing to Cromwel, that none of those who engaged should be put in Places of Trust, and emitting a Proclamation against certain Families. ’Tis answered, That there was no Protestation, but a Declaration before the Vote, that the General Assembly ought to be consulted anent the Engagement, and that the Articles of the large Treaty might be kept by previous Dealing by all fair Means for Peace; and that if all fair Dealing were refused, that there might be a due Warning. As for the Letter, no Answer can be given, till the Letter be seen; and tho’ there were a Letter in the Terms libelled, yet it is an Act of the Committee; and as Matters went, the Army being lost at Preston, and the Enemy lying on the Border, if they had demanded the Strengths of the Kingdom, and Pledges, or any Thing harder, it would scarce have been refused, the Scots Army being lost, and a strong one lying on the Border. Besides, he never saw Cromwel till 1648. and he was called in by the Committee; and the Marquis did what he could to stop his Career. As to the alledged Proclamations, nothing can be said till they be produced, and indeed they were neither proclaimed, neither did any Thing follow upon them.’

‘To the clogging of his Majesty’s Proclamation, murdering Montrose, corresponding with Cromwel, and his Accession to the Act of the West-kirk, and Declaration. It is answered, That it was the Act of the Parliament then sitting, by which the first Allegation was done, and the King acknowledged any Thing of that Kind done, good Service, by admitting the Marquis to Places of Trust afterwards, accepting the Crown from him, and granting a general Oblivion. As to Montrose; he had no Accession to his Death, or the Manner of it, but endeavoured to have him brought off, to prevent Effusion of Blood 1645. as Colonel James Hay can yet witness. His corresponding with Cromwel is scandalously false, and one Hamilton, who was hang’d at Stirling, and had said this, declared at his Death, that Report to be a false Calumny. As to the Act of the West-kirk; the Marquis was at no Committee of

' the Kirk, after his Majesty's happy Arrival, until they came to Perth, nor did he know of the same: But when the Word came to Dumfermling, where the King was, his Advice was, to obviate the same, that the King should draw a Declaration, and go as great a length as he might safely do; but for all the World would not advise the King to sign the said Declaration against his Mind, seeing it did reflect, as his Majesty thought, against his Majesty's Father, and was against his Majesty's Conscience, and desires the Duke of Buckingham and the Earl of Dumfermling's Depositions may be taken herein, and his sacred Majesty consulted anent the Verity hereof.

11.

' To the Opposition to Glencairn and Middleton, when appearing for the King, and his joyning with the English, at least giving them Counsel. It is answered, That their Commission was never intimate to him, either by Letter or Message; that he sent an Express to Middleton to have a Conference with him, but received no Answer; that indeed the Defender did express his Dislike with their Enterprize, as a Business which could not frame, and that it had been Wisdom to have stayed all Moving till the Event of the Dutch War had been seen, or that the Kings of Spain and France should agree, or the English Army divide among themselves: But the rising in the Hills made the English stick faster together. As to joyning the English in their Expedition to the Hills; he denies any joyning with them, to oppose the Scots Forces: But he being a Prisoner, and required to be with them, durst not refuse; and denies any Kind of Acting, either by Counsel or Deed. The selling of the Cannon out of the Castle of Dumbarton to Dean; 'tis false that they were taken out of Dumbarton: But Dean being informed of the Cannon, told he would either have them at a Price, or take them. As for taking Pay from the Usurper for a Foot-company; the Practice of all the Highlands in Scotland is, in Troubles for Safety of their Country-goods from Robbers and * Limmers, to keep a Watch, which the Sheriffdom of Argyle could not do, by Reason of the Payment of their Cesses, and other great Burdens and Vastations sustained of late by them; and therefore General Monk allowed Payment for 100 Soldiers to keep the Country, as said is; and because they did not oppose the Forces in the Hills, the General discharged Payment. The keeping of Watch was the Practice of all the Highlands during the last Troubles, and was practised during the Usurper's Power, in Perth, Inverness, Merns, Aberdeen, Stirling, and Dumbarton; and all got Allowance, less or more.

* Succeed.

' As to the assisting at Richard Cromwel's Proclamation, his receiving a Precept of 12000 lib. Sterling, and sitting in the Parliament of England. 'Tis answered, He was not at all at Richard's Proclamation, but by Command indeed he was at Oliver's, but not at Dumbarton. Being in Edinburgh Monk's Prisoner, he was commanded to come to the English Council, and assist at the Proclamation, and could not refuse, without being made a Prey in Life and Fortune. No Law can make this a Crime, far less Treason; and it cannot be instructed from any History, that a People overcome by an Enemy, and commanded to do outward Deeds of Subjection, were questioned by their lawful Prince, when he hath pardoned the Invader, or that the Subject should be prosecuted, for doing what he, being a Prisoner, could not refuse, without hazarding Life and Fortune. The 12000 Pounds is falsely adduced. The Parliament of Scotland gave the Marquis in Payment of just Debts half of the Excise on Wine and strong Waters for a Time: He having, by his Capitulation, his Fortune safe, procured a Warrant that he might have a yearly Duty forth of the said Excise, but never received a Sixpence of it. And this can no more be censured, than the whole Kingdom's taking their just Debts one from another, during the Usurpation. As for his sitting in the Parliament of England, after so long an Usurpation; no Case or Precedent can be shown in any Age in this Country, whereby this was made a Crime, far less Treason. The Cases adduced in the Proposition, relate only to peaceable Times, the righteous King being in Power.

' To his forbidding to pray for the King, and the rest of the alledged Speeches. 'Tis answered, They are false and calumnious. His Parish-minister and Chaplain did always pray for the King in the Time libelled, and that in Face of the English. The Story of what he said at London, is basely false, and he desires Gentlemen, without Distinction, with whom he conversed, may be asked. And the Passage alledged in Masterton's House, 'tis false, and craves Depositions may be taken, by which it will appear, that he has been of a contrary Judgment.

' The last Head, it is basely false, and opposes thereto the Marquis's Oath given in Parliament 1649. and leaves it to all to judge how unlikely and improbable it is, that he would speak any thing contrary to the Oath that he had sworn.'

From this Information, some tolerable View may be had of the Marquis his Defences against the calumnious Libel given in. Those and the Reasonings before the Lords, took up all the Time the Parliament had to spare to this Matter, for some Weeks.

April 5th, I find the Parliament pass a Certification, that the Marquis of Argyle shall have Liberty to propound no more in his Defence after Munday next. Accordingly Tuesday, April 9th, he is brought before the Parliament, where he had a very pointed and pretty long Speech, Speech, wherein he goes through the different Periods, from the 1633. to the Restoration, and vindicates his Conduct; and earnestly desires his Supplication and Submission to his Majesty, may be considered, and recommended to the King. This Speech not being in Print, I have annexed, App. No. 17.

1661.

App. No. 17.

He is urged to give in Duplies.

When his Bill was read, and he removed, the Chancellor gave him for Answer, when called in again, That the Parliament, after considering the Relevancy and Probation, would take his Bill to their Consideration, and urged him presently to give in his Duplies. The Marquis pressed for a short Delay, that he might read over his Duplies, since he and his Lawyers were so straitned in Time, that he had not got some Sheets of them read over, and there might be Treason in them, for any thing he knew; and he asked but till next Day to look over his own Papers: But this was refused; which made him complain that this was hard Measure, and such Haste was never made in a Parliament of Scotland. When he gave them in, the Advocate took them up to advise, as he said, whether he should give in Triplies or not. I have not seen a Copy of the Marquis his Duplies, if they differ from his Answers in Print, or of the Advocates Answers, if there were any; but I suppose we have the Substance of both already.

After the Advocate had considered the Duplies, upon the 16th of April, the Marquis is again before the Parliament, and his Process was read over in the House. Upon the Reading of it, he had a very handsom and affecting Speech, wherein at considerable Length, he removes the Reproaches cast upon him, and touches at some Things not in his Papers, and concludes with renewing his Desire, That his Supplication and Submission may yet be recommended to the King's Majesty. This Speech tending to clear several Matters of Fact, and not hitherto, that I know of, published, I have added, App. No. 18.

April 16th, his Process was read over. His Speech on this Occasion.

App. No. 18.

Whatever the Marquis or his Lawyers could say, had little Weight with the Members of Parliament; most of them already were resolved what to do. The House had many Messages to hasten this Process to an End; tho' by what is above, it appears they lost no Time: But the misgiving of many of their designed Probations against this good Man, embarrassed them mightily for some Time.

I have it from a very good Hand, That upwards of thirty different Libels were formed against him, for alledged Injuries, Oppressions, and the like; and all of them came to Nothing, when they began to prove them, as Lies use to do. And after they had accomplished their most diligent Search, they were forced to betake themselves to his innocent, because necessary, Compliance with the English, after every Shire and Burgh in Scotland had made their Submission to their Conquerors.

Many designed Probations against the Marquis took

Thus, as the Sacrifice under the Law was washen before it was offered, those Attempts were so many Absolutions of the Marquis, in every Body's Eye but his Pursuers; the more his Enemies dived into his Conduct, the more innocent he was like to appear; and severals of the Members of Parliament were like to cool in this Process, especially after they heard his clear and evident Defences in the Matter of the King's Murder, and his Pursuers began to fear Hazard in a Vote of the House.

Therefore the Parliament was cunningly enough brought in to send a Letter to the King, wherein the Whole of their past Procedure was owned, and no Room left for them to go back; and Glencairn and Roths go Post to Court with it. This Letter was signed by almost all the Members, and the Pretext was, That some Misinformations had been given at London of their Procedure; and that their Actings might be the better cleared, the Parliament desire Mr. James Sharp, late Minister of Craik, and now Divinity-professor at St. Andrews, may go up in Company with them as one of the Churchmen best acquaint with his Majesty. The Event shewed the Mytery of this. The two Statesmen were to push the Marquis's Business, regulate the Act of Fines, and other Matters, and Mr. Sharp was to joyn the Highfliers in England, and take off any Impressions left by the Representation made by the Ministers of Edinburgh, of which before, and model Matters as to the Church. They set out for London, April 29th.

The Parliament send up a Letter to the King, with Glencairn, Roths, and Mr. James Sharp.

A little before this, the Marquis's Son, Lord Neil Campbell, had gone up to Court, and represented his Father's Defences, with all the Advantage he could; and had done this, as was then said, not without some considerable Influence upon a good many there.

In the Beginning of May, Witnesses were examined against the Marquis. I have not seen their Examination and Depositions, and can only set down the List of Witnesses given in to him, with Diets of their Examination. May 3^d, anent my Lord's being in Arms with the English, and exchanging Prisoners with the Scots, William Duke of Hamilton, John Earl of Athole, James Lord Forester, Sir Norman McCleod, John McNaughtan, John Semple younger of Fulwood, Gavin Walkinshaw of that ilk, Walter Watson Provost of Dumbar-ton, John Cunningham Bailie there, John White Trumpeter, Alexander Ramsay Servant to the Earl of Glencairn, John Carswell one of his Majesty's Life-guard, Hugh McDougal in Lorn, Duncan McCulloch there, Halbert Glaidstains in Edinburgh, Commissary Beans at Leith.

May 7th, anent my Lord's joining in Arms with the English, 'Donald McClean of Borlas, Major David Ramsay, Captain James Thomson in Leith Citadel, Daniel Oneil there, Jonathan Moisty there, James Savel there, Robert Darkems, James Hersky, John Moisty there.' And for proving the Words spoken in Parliament, 1649. 'John Lord Kircudbright, James Lord Cowpar, Robert Lord Burleigh, John Cor slate Provost of Kircudbright, William Grierson of Bargatton.

May 8th, anent his joyning in Arms, 'Henry Oneil of the Life-guard, Archibald McClean, Servant to the Tutor of McClean, Angus McClaughson Son to the Captain of Inchconnel, Donald McClean of Calzeach, John Campbell of Dunstaffnish, Mr. James McClean of Kilmaloag.' Words spoken at London, and James Masterton's House in Edinburgh. 'George Earl of Linlithgow, Earls of Callendar, Hume, and Aboyn, Sir James Fowles of Collingtown.' There were a great many other Witnesses, but I have not seen either their Names or Declarations, and the Reader will find the plain Facts, as indeed they were, in the Marquis's Defences.

Frequent Messages from Court to hasten his Trial.

He is sentenced May 25.

How these, who went up to Court, managed Matters there, I shall not say; but from their Arrival, to the Day of the Parliament's Sentence, the Parliament had, almost every Day, renewed Messages to haste through his Trial.

Those were obeyed as much as might be. Accordingly upon Saturday, May 25th, he was brought to the Bar, and received his Sentence in Face of Parliament, 'That he was found guilty of High Treason, and adjudged to be execute to the Death as a Traitor, his Head to be severed from his Body at the Cross of Edinburgh, upon Munday the 27th Instant, and affixed in the same Place where the Marquis of Montrose's Head was formerly, and his Arms torn before the Parliament, and at the Cross.' And from the Bar he was sent to the common Prison of Edinburgh.

His Carriage when he received his Sentence.

That Day the Parliament was extremely thin, and all withdrew, but such who were determined entirely to follow the Course of the Times. When he was brought to the Bar to receive his Sentence, he put the Parliament in Mind of the Practice of Theodosius the Emperor, who enacted, That the Sentence of Death should not be execute till Thirty Days after it was passed; and added, I crave but Ten, that the King may be acquainted with it. This was refused, and he was told, That now he behoved to receive the Parliament's Sentence upon his Knees; he immediately kneeled, and said, I will, in all Humility.

The Sentence being pronounced, he offered to speak; but the Trumpets sounding, he stopped till they ended, and then said, 'I had the Honour to set the Crown upon the King's Head, (and indeed the Marquis brought him to the Crown) and now he fastens me to a better Crown than his own.' And directing himself to the Commissioner and Parliament, he said, 'You have the Indemnity of an earthly King among your Hands, and have denied me a Share in that, but you cannot hinder me from the Indemnity of the King of Kings, and shortly you must be before his Tribunal, I pray he mete not out such Measure to you, as you have done to me, when you are called to account for all your Actings, and this among the rest.'

Observations upon this Sentence.

Without Doors it was said, the Marquis of Argyle had done nothing, but what was necessary by the natural Law of Self-preservation, and just, since Conquest and Consent make a good Title in the Conqueror; and April 2^d, 1652. all Scotland had in a very solemn Manner consented to Oliver's Government at Dalkeith, and his solitary Resistance could never have restored the King. And tho' the Marquis had not been the last Man who stood out, but had done as all the rest of the Nation did, and submitted to the Usurper, it was observed, that not a Man in England or Ireland had suffered merely for owning Cromwel, tho' there he was a Rebel, and in Scotland a Conqueror.

It was further asked, Where was the Justice to punish one Man for a guilty Nation? Or, the Mercy to forgive many, and not take in so good and great a Man with others? And every Body saw that the Marquis was sentenced by his socii criminis, his Complices, as he himself told Sir John Fletcher in the House, and those who were in the Transgression, if it must be made one, long before he was in it. But who can stand before Envy, Revenge, and Jealousy! The Tree of Prelacy and arbitrary Measures behoved to be foked when a Planting with the noble Blood of this excellent Patriot, stanch Presbyterian, and vigorous Asserter of Scotland's Liberty: And much bitter and bloody Fruit did it bear in the following Twenty six Years, as will appear in the Sequel of this History.

The Sentence against this noble Person was, not only, in the Eyes of Onlookers, iniquous and unrighteous in it self, but really contrary to their own new made Law, and an Act made by this very Parliament, no longer since than March 30. Act 15. Parl. 1. Sess. 1. Charles II. where in express Terms, 'His Majesty, by Advice of the Estates of Parliament, grants his Indemnity and full Assurance to all Persons that acted in, and by Virtue of the said pretended Parliaments, (viz. those from 1640 to 1650.) and other Meetings flowing from them, to be unquestioned in their Lives and Fortunes, for any Deed or Deeds done by them in their said Usurpation.'

By a Proclamation, June 10. this Year, concerning Ecclesiastical Affairs, to be added afterwards, App. N^o. 24. I find the foresaid Date of this Act, and the King approves it. And 'tis very plain the Marquis's Indictment and Sentence runs upon Deeds done in those Parliaments, and during that alledged Usurpation in them, save what relates to his joyning with the English, as to which enough has been set down for his Vindication: So that I cannot but be of Opinion, that the Parliament, in condemning the Marquis for these Deeds, contradict themselves. There is indeed a Reservation in the Act, as to such as shall be excepted in the general Indemnity to be passed by his Majesty, and such who were guilty of the King's Murder: But that Exception only concerned the Persons who afterwards were fined, and neither that nor the other concern the Marquis. Thus in this Sentence the Parliament must be reckoned Felo's de se.

As through the Whole of his Trial, this noble Person gave the brightest Example of Meekness and Patience, when most unaccountably abused by the King's Advocate and others; so he received his Sentence with that Composure which became so innocent a Man, and excellent Christian; and would by no Means depart from the honourable Testimony for Religion and Liberty he was engaged in. When his Case was beyond all Hope in his Friends Eyes, and no Prospect of any Justice appeared, some gallant Gentlemen undertook to bring him out of the Castle, partly by Force, and partly by a Stratagem. The Project was so far gone into, that I am told, the Marquis was once in a complete Disguise; but on a sudden he alter'd his Mind, thanked his Friends, and told them, He would not disown the good Cause he had so publickly espoused, and threw aside his borrowed Habit, and resolv'd to suffer the utmost.

The Marquis's Composure and Patience. He refuses to come out of the Castle by a Stratagem.

When after the Sentence he entred the Tolbooth, his excellent Lady was waiting for him there. Upon seeing her, he said, They have given me till Munday to be with you, my Dear, therefore let us make for it. She embracing him, wept bitterly, and said, The Lord will require it, the Lord will require it. The Bailie who accompanied his Lordship, tho' no great Friend to him, was deeply affected, yea none in the Room could refrain from Tears. The Marquis himself was perfectly compos'd, and said, 'Forbear, forbear, truly I pity them, they know not what they are doing, they may shut me in where they please, but they cannot shut out God from me: For my Part I am as content to be here as in the Castle, and as content in the Castle as in the Tower of London, and as content there as when at Liberty; and I hope to be as content upon the Scaffold as any of them all.' He added, That he remembered a Scripture cited to him by an honest Minister lately in the Castle, and endeavoured to put it in Practice, When Ziklag was taken and burnt, and the People spoke of stoning David, he encouraged himself in the Lord.

What passed when he entred the Tolbooth.

This Account, and much of what follows, I have under a worthy Minister's Hand, who was present with the Marquis, and took Notes of what he spoke at the Time.

All his short Time till Munday, the Marquis spent with the greatest Serenity and Cheerfulness, and in the proper Exercises of a dying Christian. He said to some Ministers allowed to be with him in the Prison, 'That shortly they would envy him who was got before them, and added, Mind that I tell it you, my Skill fails me, if you who are Ministers will not either suffer much, or sin much; for though you go along with those Men in Part, if you do it not in all Things, you are but where you were, and so must suffer; and if you go not at all with them, you shall but suffer.'

His Carriage in Prison.

During his Life the Marquis was reckoned rather timorous than bold to any Excess; and in Prison he said, He was naturally inclined to Fear in his Temper, but desired those about him to observe, as he could not but do, That the Lord had heard his Prayers, and removed all Fear from him. Indeed his Friends Work was to restrain and qualify his fervent Longings after his Dissolution, and not to support him under the near Views of it. At his own Desire his Lady took her Leave of him upon the Sabbath-night. Mr. Robert Douglas, and Mr. George Hutcheson preached to him in the Tolbooth on the Lord's Day, and his dear and much valued Friend Mr. David Dickson, and others, prayed with him at Night, and I have been told, Mr. Dickson was his Bedfellow the last Night he had in Time.

Upon Munday, when very much thronged in subscribing Papers, making Conveyances, and with other necessary Things relating to his Business and Estate, of a sudden, about Seven of the Clock in the Morning, when in the midst of Company, he was so overpowered with the sensible Effusion of the Joy of the Holy Ghost, that he could not contain, but brake out in the greatest Affection and Rapture, and said, 'I thought to have concealed the Lord's Goodness, but it will not do, I am now ordering my Affairs, and God is sealing my Charter to a better Inheritance, and just now saying to me, Son, be of good Cheer, thy Sins are forgiven thee.'

He meets with a singular Manifestation of God's Kindness Munday Morning.

Such Expressions I know will be reckoned the Effects of Enthusiasm, and reproached under the Name of Cant, and I doubt not but it will be construed Weakness in me to regard or relate them in so degenerate an Age as we are fallen into: But I have this Passage confirmed by so many and indubitable Hands, some of them alive when I write this, that I cannot only assert it for Truth, but likewise record a remarkable Harmony 'twixt this and the Writings and Prayers of many, before, and at that very Moment, on the Marquis's Behalf.

Letter from a Minister to the Marquis after his Sentence.

And if any mock at such Instances of the divine Condescension, I wish their Bands be not made strong; he who is ignorant is like to be so still.

Either upon Munday or some other Time after his Sentence, the Marquis received the following Letter from a Minister, who with others was much concerned for the Lord's Presence with him: It was sweet to this godly Martyr, and contains some Things in it, which clear up the Marquis's Circumstances, and I reckon it will not be unacceptable to the serious Reader, being short but substantial.

My Lord,

I hope by this Time you know that God sendeth no Man a Warfare upon his own Charges; the Report of your seasonable and suitable Support, and of what the Lord doth to your Soul, with your rising Integrity before the World, as it was clear to others before, so it doth much comfort us over many Things, so that we can speak with the Adversary in the Gate. We reckon it was a Mercy to the Cause, (if I may speak so) and to many Friends of it, that God has brought your Lordship upon the Stage: He hath vindicated his reproached Work in spite of Reproach, so that it will be advantageous for the Nation; neither do I doubt but it was a singular Mercy to your self, and shall be a Relief to your oppressed Name, which this Day is visibly come above Water. If you had been in Favour with the greatest of Men, and had the World smiling upon you, I much question if it had been so well with your Soul and Conscience, and if you had had that Room in gracious Hearts, which I can confidently say you have. We enjoy the sweet Fruits of what you now sweat for; and your Lordship may reckon your Labours and Sufferings sold at a good Rate, when you consider how many Souls have been refreshed these Twenty three Years bygone; the Reward of which we wish may now quickly return to your Bosom: So are many wishing this Day who never saw your Face, to whom your Name and Chain are favoury. Be of good Courage, and God shall strengthen your Heart, and be your Guide even unto Death. O Death! where is thy Sting? Thou art now a smiling Bridge to eternal Serenity, where no Inbreaking, no Sin shall be, but sweet Breathings of the Holy Ghost, and Songs of Victory; no dreadful Sentence, where the Accuser of the Brethren has no Place: A little Bit of Time might have sent you thither with less Credit, and not capable of so large a Crown; for great is the Reward of some there! My Lord, keep the kindly Sense of your Failings upon your Heart, that Christ may be as precious to you as to the Beggar that never was honoured to suffer for him. The Lord Jehovah be your Shield and exceeding great Reward; to him we commit you, and do submit; and we hope he shall give a good Account of all we have in Dependence before him. I am, &c.

The Marquis's
Letter to the King that Day
he died.

This same Day, a little before his going out to the Place of Execution, the Marquis wrote and subscribed a Letter to the King, which, I persuade my self, the curious Reader will desire to have inserted here, and it is as follows.

Most Sacred Sovereign,

I doubt not but your Majesty hath an Account given you from others, of the Issue of that strange Process and Indictment laid against me, before this can come to your Royal Hands; of which if I had been guilty according to the Charge, I should have esteemed my self unworthy to breathe upon the Earth, much less would I have presumed to make any Application to your Majesty: But of all those great Crimes which have been charged upon me, there hath nothing been proven, except a Compliance with the prevalent usurping Rebels, after they had subdued all your Majesty's Dominions; whereby I was forced, with many others, to submit unto their unlawful Power and Government, which was an epidemick Disease, and Fault of the Time.

What Measure soever I have met with, and whatever Malice or Calumny hath been cast upon me, yet it is my inexpressible Joy and Comfort under all these Sufferings, that I am found free, and acquit of any Accession to that execrable Murder committed against the Life of your Royal Father, which (as I desire a comfortable Appearance before the Judge both of the Quick and the Dead) my Soul did ever abominate; for Death, with the inward Peace of my Innocency, is much more acceptable to me, than Life it self, with the least Stain of Treachery.

And now I am confident that your Majesty's Displeasure will be satisfied, and you will suffer my Failings to be expiate with my Life, which with all Humility and Submission I have yielded up; and in this small Period that remains of my Life, no earthly Thing shall be more cordially desired by me, than your Happiness; and that your Majesty and your Successors to all Generations, may sway the Sceptre of these Nations, and that they may be a blessed People under your Government.

And now hoping that the humble Supplication of your Majesty's dying Subject, may find some Place within the large Extent of your princely Goodness and Clemency, I have taken the Boldness to cast the desolate Condition of my poor Wife and Family upon your Royal Favour,

‘Favour; for whatever may be your Majesty’s Displeasure against my self, these, I hope, have not done any Thing to procure your Majesty’s Indignation. And since that Family have had the Honour to be faithful Subjects, and serviceable to your Royal Progenitors, I humbly beg my Faults may not extinguish the lasting Merit and Memory of those who have given so many signal Proofs of constant Loyalty for many Generations. Orphans and Widows, by special Prerogative and Command from God, are put under your Protection and Defence, that you suffer them not to be wronged: They will ow their Preservation so entirely to your Majesty’s Bounty and Favour, that your Countenance, and nothing else that’s human, can be a Shield against their Ruin.’

‘I shall add no more, only being addebted to severals of your Majesty’s good Subjects, and your Royal Justice being the Source and Fountain of all Equity, whereby all your People are preserved in their just Rights and Interests, I humbly beg, that none of them may suffer for my Fault, but that you would allow them Satisfaction and Payment of what is justly owing unto them, of those Sums and Debts which are truly resting to my Son and me. And as it is my serious and last Desire to my Children and Posterity, next to their Duty to Almighty God, that they may be faithful and serviceable to your Majesty; so, were I to enjoy this frail Life any longer, I would endeavour, before all the World, to evidence my self to be

May 27th, 1661.

Your Majesty’s most humble, devoted,
and obedient Subject, and Servant,

ARGYLE.

The Marquis had a sweet Time, as to his Soul, when he was in the Tolbooth, and this increased still, the nearer he was to his End. As he had slept most calmly and pleasantly his last Night, so in the Intervals of his necessary Business, he had much spiritual Conversation with Mr. Hutcheson and other Ministers upon Munday before Dinner. He dined with his Friends precisely at Twelve of the Clock, with the utmost Cheerfulness: And after he had retired some Time alone, when he opened the Door, Mr. Hutcheson said, ‘What Cheer, My Lord?’ He answered, Good Cheer, Sir, The Lord hath again confirmed, and said to me from Heaven, Son, be of good Cheer, thy Sins are forgiven thee; and he gushed out in Abundance of Tears of Joy, so that he drew back to the Window and wept there; from that he came to the Fire, and made as if he would stir it a little to cover his Concern, but all would not do, his Tears ran down his Face; so coming to Mr. Hutcheson, he said in a perfect Rapture, I think his Kindness overcomes me, but God is good to me, that he lets not out too much of it here, for he knows I could not bear it: Get me my Cloke, and let us go.

What passed before he went out to the Scaffold.

Then they told him the Clock was kept back since One, till the Bailies should come. He answered, They are far in the Wrong; and presently kneeled down and prayed before all present, in a most sweet and heavenly Manner, to the Ravishment of all there. As he ended Prayer, the Bailie sent up Notice to him to come down. Upon which he called for a Glass of Wine, and asked a Blessing upon it standing, and continuing in the same Frame; and said, Now let us go, and GOD go with us.

After he had taken his Leave of such in the Room, as were not to go to the Scaffold with him, when going towards the Door, he said, ‘I could die like a Roman, but choose rather to die as a Christian. Come away, Gentlemen, he that goes first goes cleanliest.’ When going down, he called Mr. James Guthrie to him, and embracing him in the most endearing Way, took his Farewel of him. Mr. Guthrie at Parting address’d the Marquis thus, ‘My Lord, God hath been with you, he is with you, and God will be with you; and such is my Respect for your Lordship, that if I were not under the Sentence of Death my self, I could cheerfully die for your Lordship.’ So they parted for a very short Season, in two or three Days to meet in a better Place.

The Marquis was accompanied to the Scaffold by divers Noblemen and Gentlemen; he was, and all with him, in Black, had his Cloke and Hat on as he went down the Street. He mounted the Scaffold with the greatest Serenity and Gravity, as one going to his Father’s House, saluted all who were on it: And then Mr. Hutcheson prayed; and next the Marquis delivered his Speech, which hath been many times printed, but deserves a Room in this Collection; and so ’tis added, App. No. 19.

What passed upon the Scaffold.

After this pertinent, pathetick, seasonable and affecting Speech, Mr. James Hamilton prayed. After him, my Lord prayed most sweetly himself; then he took his Leave of all his Friends on the Scaffold. He gave first to the Executioner a Napkin, and some Money in it. To his Sons in Law * Cathness and Ker, his Silver Watch and some other Things in his Pocket. He gave to Lowdon his silver Penner, to Lothian a double Ducate; and bowed round, and then threw off his Coat. When going to the Maiden, Mr. Hutcheson said, My Lord, hold now your Grip * licker. He answered, Mr. Hutcheson, you know what I said to you in the Chamber, I am not afraid to be surpris’d with Fear. The Laird of Skelmorlie took him by the Hand when near the Maiden, and found him most composed. His last Words before his Kneeling are added to his Speech.

App. No. 19.

* Cathness.

1661.

He kneeled down most cheerfully, and after he had prayed a little, he gave the Signal, which was the lifting up of his Hand, and the Instrument called the Maiden struck off his Head, which was affixed upon the West End of the Tolbooth, as a Monument of the Parliament's Injustice, and the Land's Misery. His Body was received by his Friends, and put into a Coffin, and carried away with a good many Attendants, through Linlithgow and Falkirk, to Glasgow, and thence with a numerous Company to Kilpatrick, where it was put in a Boat, and carried to Dennue, and buried in Kilmunn Church.

Remarks on
Mr. Eachard's
Account of the Marquis of Argyle.

It is scarce worth while here to take Notice of the ill-natured Account Mr. Archdeacon Eachard gives of the Marquis's Trial and Death in his History, Vol. III. p. 63. He is pleased to bespatter the Marquis's Defences, with the Character of long and subtle. How they could have been any shorter, and yet go through so great a Heap of Scandal, as lies charged against him in his tedious Indictment, I cannot see. Where the Subtilty of his Defences lies, needs to be explained, since in every Point that noble Person is most plain and home in his Answers, and insists upon evident Facts and Reasonings. This Writer seems to have glanced over the Marquis's Case, to pick out some of his Expressions, in order to expose him; had he duly pondered what he advances in his Defences, Petitions and Speeches in Print, and inclined to represent this great Man fairly, we should have had quite another State of this Affair than Mr. Eachard gives, from detached Sentences here and there culled out. How unjust will it appear to any unprejudiced Person to land the whole Stress of the Marquis's Defences upon the Indemnity 1641. when, if he had considered his Defences, he might have observed a Multitude of other Things after that Time advanced? He ought in Justice to have condescended upon the treasonable Actings, not fairly accounted for in the Defences, proven against him, and brought Proofs of the aggravating Expressions he talks of, had he acted the Part of an impartial Historian. Of a Piece with all this are the lame and unfair Hints from the Marquis's last Speech, which Mr. Archdeacon concludes with an idle Story, one at first Sight may observe to be childish and evidently false, That the Marquistore his written Speech into six Parts, and gave it to six of his Friends. No Body of Sense can give Credit to so foolish a Representation. Where Mr. Eachard has raked it up I cannot imagine, unless it be from some of the scandalous Diurnals writ about this Time. Undoubtedly such an Account as he has patched up of this great Man, must very much weaken his Reputation as an Historian in Scots Affairs.

However Mr. Archdeacon, in his Appendix to the Three Volumes of his History, printed after I had wrote what is above, does the Marquis's Memory the Justice, as to insert the following Letter or Declaration, written by the Hand of King Charles II. and signed with his Seal manual, communicated to him by his Grace the present Duke of Argyle.

King's Declaration in favours of the Marquis, September 24th, 1650.

Having taken into my Consideration the faithful Endeavours of the Marquis of Argyle, for restoring me to my just Rights, and the happy settling of my Dominions, I am desirous to let the World see, how sensible I am of his real Respect to me, by some particular Marks of my Favour to him, by which they may see the Trust and Confidence which I repose in him: And particularly I do promise, that I will make him Duke of Argyle, and Knight of the Garter, and one of the Gentlemen of my Bed-chamber; and this to be performed when he shall think it fit. And I do farther promise him, to hearken to his Counsels ————— (worn out) ————— when ever it shall please God to restore me to my just Rights in England, I shall see him paid the Forty thousand Pounds Sterling which is due to him. All which I do promise to make good upon the Word of a King.

St. Johnstown,
Septemb. 24. 1650.

CHARLES R.

His Character.

I have given the Narrative of this Protomartyr for Religion, since the Reformation from Popery, at greater Length than at once I designed, having the fullest Assurance of these Facts, and my Accounts of them from unquestionable Vouchers; and 'tis Pity they should not be known. His Character I dare not adventure to draw: Enemies themselves must allow the Marquis to have been a Person of extraordinary Piety, remarkable Wisdom and Prudence, great Gravity and Authority, and singular Usefulness. Tho' he had been much reproached, his Trial and Death did abundantly vindicate him. And as he was the great Promoter and Support of the covenanted Work of Reformation during his Life, and steadfast in witnessing to it at his Death, so it was much buried with him in the Grave for many Years.

Dead Warrant not signed against him, consequently his Death Murder.

After the Revolution, when the most accurate Search was made into the Procedure against the Marquis, I am well assured, that tho' indeed his Sentence was passed in Parliament, yet there was no Warrant given or signed for his Execution, commonly called the Dead Warrant, so great a Hastle were the Managers of this bloody Design in: And as his Sentence was against many former Laws and Statutes in Scotland, as well as against their Laws just now made; so the Execution was directly illegal and without Warrant, and consequently a non habente potestatem. And this excellent Person's Death, by the very Letter of our Scots Law, is Murder: So insatiate in their Thirst after Blood have some People been.

But I shall have done with this, when once I have observed, that so utterly unaccountable was this Procedure against the Marquis, that Sir George Mackenzie, who, among the last Things he did while in this World, wrote a Vindication of the Government in Scotland during King Charles's Reign; tho' he was every Way the ablest Advocate ever that Party had, yet is so far from adventuring to justify the Conduct against this noble Person, that he does not so much as name the Marquis or his Process. And tho' he was one of the Lawyers allowed to my Lord Argyle, this would not have hindred him afterwards to have advanced what would have softned that Matter, if he had had any thing to produce upon this Subject. Must not then the Party own that his Vindication, whereof they boast so much, is lame? But indeed that is not its worst Fault; I am well assured I shall, ere I have done, prove it false, as well as lame.

In short, upon searching the Parliament-registers, I find there is not one Word of this great Man's Process or Sentence in them: Tho' those took up a good many Sederunts, there is nothing in Record, when many Things of far less Import are there, as to the Marquis, Mr. James Guthrie, or the Lord Waristoun's Trial. Tho' Reasons of this may be easily guessed, indeed it was for the Reputation of this Parliament, that so foul Steps and black Processes should not be in their Books.

Sir George Mackenzie himself does not vindicate what was done against the Marquis.

The Marquis's, Mr. Guthrie's, and Lord Waristoun's Processes left out in the Parliament-records.

Of the Sufferings and Martyrdom of the Reverend Mr. James Guthrie Minister of the Gospel at Stirling, June 1. 1661.

SOME Account of the Beginnings of the Trouble this excellent and singular Person met with last Year, is already given in the first Chapter, where we left him in Prison at Stirling; and there he was, and at Dundee, till by Order of Parliament he came in Prisoner to Edinburgh. From first to last he was near Ten Months close Prisoner.

Mr. James Guthrie was Son to the Laird of Guthrie, a very ancient and honourable Family. He had taught Philosophy in the University of St. Andrews, where for a good many Years he gave abundant Proof that he was an excellent Philosopher, and exact Scholar. His Temper was very stayed and composed, he would reason upon the most critical Points with great Solidity, and when every one about him was warm, his Temper was never ruffled. At any Time, when indecent Heat or Wrangling happened to fall in in Reasoning, it was his ordinary to say, 'Enough of this, let us go to some other Subject, we are warm, and can dispute no longer with Advantage.' Perhaps he had the greatest Mixture of fervent Zeal and sweet Calmness in his Temper, as any Man in his Time.

Mr. Guthrie's Parentage and Temper.

I am well assured he was educate in Opposition to Presbyterian Government; perhaps it was this made the Writer of the Diurnal, no Friend of his, say, about the Time of his Trial, 'That if Mr. James Guthrie had continued fixed to his first Principles, he had been a Star of the first Magnitude in Scotland.' When he came to judge for himself, Mr. Guthrie happily departed from his first Principles, and upon Examination of the Way he had been educated in, left it, and was indeed a Star of the first Magnitude.

Episcopal in his Education.

He was, I am told, highly Prelatical in his Judgment when he came at first to St. Andrews; but by Conversation with Mr. Samuel Rutherford and others, and especially through his joining with the Weekly Societies there, for Prayer and Conference, he was entirely brought off from that Way.

Leaves those Sentiments.

Even while at that University he wanted not some Fore-notice of his After-sufferings for the Cause of Reformation, now heartily espoused by him. And the Year before the King's Return, when Minister at Stirling, he had very plain, and some Way publick Warnings of what afterward befel him: Those were carefully observed by him, and closely reflected upon. But I am not writing the History of this great Man's Life, otherwise I might narrate a good many very remarkable Providences concerning him, and say much as to many Steps of his Carriage, from his Entry into the Holy Office of the Ministry, untill this Time: Therefore I shall only take Notice of two pretty singular Passages which may help us a little into the Spring's Original, and Occasion of his Sufferings.

Had Warnings of his After-sufferings.

The Occasions of his present Persecution.

When the Commission of the General Assembly at Perth, came into the publick Resolutions we have heard of, December 14. 1650. Mr. Guthrie and Mr. David Bennet were Ministers of Stirling, and jointly with the rest of that Presbytery wrote a Letter to the Commission at their next Meeting, shewing their Dissatisfaction with the Resolutions; which was done likewise by many other Presbyteries. But it seems the two Ministers of Stirling went some further, and preached against the publick Resolutions, as involving the Land in a Conjunction with the malignant Party.

Mrs. Guthrie and Bennet write for to Perth, on that Account.

In February 1651. by a Letter to Mrs. Guthrie and Bennet, the Chancellor ordered them to repair to Perth, and answer before the King and Committee of Estates for their Letter to the Commission, and their Doctrine. The Two Ministers sent an Answer to his Lordship, excusing their not coming to Perth that Week, and promising to come the next. The curious Reader will desire probably to see it, and it follows.

Right Honourable,

Their Letter to the Chancellor.

WE did this Afternoon receive from the King's Majesty, and Committee of Estates, a Letter desiring and requiring us to repair to Perth, against the 19th of this Instant, for the Effect therein specified; and albeit the Diet assigned to us be very short, yet should we have striven to keep that Day, if one of us had not been under so great Weakness of Body at this Time, as that he hath come little abroad in the Congregation where we serve, these Ten Days past: Therefore we intreat so much Favour of your Lordship, as to signify to the King's Majesty, and the Committee of Estates, that it is not from any Disrespect to their Letter, or from any Purpose to disobey their Commands, that we did not immediately, upon the Receipt of their Advertisement, hasten to wait upon whatsoever they had to signify to us, but merely upon the Ground we have already represented unto your Lordship; and you will be pleased withal to shew them, that if the Lord shall please to give any probable Measure of Strength to him who hath been infirm those Days past, that both of us shall attend at Perth towards the End of this Week; or if he shall not be able to travel, that the other of us shall come with the Mind of both. We commend your Lordship to God, and continue,

Your affectionate Servants,

Mr. JAMES GUTHRIE.
Mr. DAVID BENNET.

Accordingly, February 22^d, I find the Ministers of Stirling appearing at Perth, where they give in the following Paper signed, to the Committee, which, with what followed upon it, being much insisted upon in Mr. Guthrie's Trial, I shall here insert.

PROTESTATION of the Ministers of Stirling, February 22^d, 1651.

Their Protestation given into the Committee of Estates,
Perth, February
22^d, 1651.

WHEREAS the King's Majesty and your Lordships have been pleased, upon a Narrative relating to our Doctrine and Ministerial Duties, to desire and require us to repair to this Place against the 19th of this Instant, that, after hearing of us, such a Course might be taken as shall be found most necessary for the Good and Safety of the Place where we serve in the Ministry: Therefore conceiving the Judicatories of the Church to be the only proper Judges of our Doctrine, and Carriage in those Things that concern our Ministerial Calling, as we do, from the Respect we ow to the King's Majesty and your Lordships Authority, compear before you, being desirous to hear what is to be said to us, and ready to answer thereunto; so we humbly protest, that it is with Preservation of the Liberties and Privileges of the Church of Scotland, and of the Servants of Jesus Christ, in those Things that do relate to their Doctrine, and the Duties of their Ministerial Function. And tho' we be most willing in all Things to render a Reason to those who ask us of our Faith; and in a more special Way to the King's Majesty, and your Lordships, a Reason of our writing to the Commission of the General Assembly, a Letter containing the Grounds of our Stumbling at the present Resolutions of Kirk and State, in order to a Levy, and of our preaching against these Resolutions, as involving a Conjunction with the malignant Party in the Land, which we hold to be contrary to the Word of God, and the Solemn League and Covenant, and to our solemn Vows and Engagements, and to the constant Tenor of the Declarations, Warnings, Remonstrances, Causes of Humiliations, and Resolutions of this Kirk these Years past, and to be destructive to the Covenant and Cause of God, and scandalous and offensive to the godly, and an high provoking of the Eyes of the Lord's Glory, and of our protesting against and appealing from the Desire and Charge of the Commission of the General Assembly in this Particular, and of our persisting to preach the same Doctrine still; yet that our compearing before the King's Majesty and your Lordships, doth not at all import any Acknowledgment in us, that his Majesty and your Lordships are the proper Judges of those Things. And this our Protestation we make, not from any Disrespect to the King's Majesty or your Lordships Authority, nor from any Purpose to decline or disobey the same in any Thing Civil, but from the tender Regard which we have and ow unto the Liberties and Privileges of the Church of Jesus Christ, which both the King's Majesty, and your Lordships, and we are in so solemn Way bound to maintain and preserve inviolable. We do acknowledge the King's Majesty and your Lordships are the lawful Civil Power and Authority in the Land, to

to whom we ow, and shall be most willing and ready to yield Obedience in all Things, which the King and your Lordships shall command, according to the Will of God; or if in any Thing his or your Commands to us shall fall out to be contrary to that Rule, we shall patiently, in the Lord's Strength, submit our selves to any Civil Censure and Punishment inflicted upon us because of our denying Obedience to the same.'

Perth, February 22^d, 1651.

What passed in the Committee, upon their giving in this Paper, I have seen no particular Accounts of, and only from the Ministers following Paper observe, that by a Second Letter the Matter was delayed for some Days, and put off till the King's Return from Aberdeen; and in the mean Time the Two Ministers were confined to Perth and Dundee, whereupon they offered a Second Paper, February 28th, which was read, and the Tenor of it follows.

The Matter delayed, and the Ministers confined.

Ministers of Stirling their second Protestation.

WHEREAS the King's Majesty and your Lordships have been pleased, upon a Narrative relating to our Doctrine and Ministerial Duties, to desire and require us to repair to this Place, against a certain Day contained in your Letter, viz. the 19th of February; in answer whereunto we excused our selves, that we could not so precisely come hither, because of bodily Indisposition of the one of us, known to be of Verity, promising withal to wait on his Majesty and your Lordships so soon as the Lord shall remove the Necessity of our Delay; and in case of the not Removal thereof, the other should come towards the End of that Week, with the Mind of both: And we accordingly appearing before your Lordships, did shew how willing we were to hear what was to be said unto us, and to answer thereunto, as is contained in our Protestation and Declaration, formerly given in to your Lordships thereanent: Yet, nevertheless in the Interval of Time betwixt his Majesty's and your Lordships Receipt and Reading of our humble Excuse, and Appearance before your Lordships, it hath pleased his Majesty and the Committee of Estates, not only to require us to come again to this Place, which upon the first Letter we have been careful to do with all possible Diligence; but also to ordain that we should stay here, or at Dundee, till his Majesty's Return from Aberdeen, that, in a full Meeting of the Committee, such Course might be taken as might be found most conducing for the Safety of that Place where we serve in the Ministry, as his Majesty and your Lordships Second Letter, of the Date February 20th, 1651. bears. Which Letter, albeit it came not to our Hands before the Time of our appearing before your Lordships, and was then delivered and communicated to us; yet in Relation thereunto, we have likewise offered to your Lordships, Assurance that we should return hither against his Majesty's coming back from Aberdeen; until which Time his Majesty and your Lordships Letter did continue and delay the Business; as also was declared by your Lordships at our Appearance before you: Notwithstanding whereof your Lordships have not been pleased to accept of any such Assurance, nor to allow us your Liberty to repair to our Charges till that Time. And albeit this seems strange to us, especially in a Matter of our Ministerial Function, and yet in Dependence, between the Church-judicatories and us, undecided; nevertheless, that we even should not so much as seem in any wise to irritate, yea, that Offence be not in any wise taken by any, especially by the Civil Magistrate, do resolve, for preventing of Mistakes, and testifying our Respect to Civil Authority, to endeavour to satisfy such an Appointment so far as we can, without Prejudice to our Conscience, and the Liberties of our Ministry, and the solemn Bonds and Obligations that ly upon us to preach the Gospel in the Stations where God set us, adhering always to our former Declaration and Protestation. Likeas, we do now protest, that we do not hereby acknowledge his Majesty and your Lordships to be competent Judges to Prebyterial Acts and Letters, or our Ministerial Function, or Preaching, or any Part thereof, which are the Subject Matter of your Lordships Letter, Requisition and Ordinance; because that they are Ecclesiastical, and belong to Ecclesiastical Assemblies, as the only proper Judges thereof; and because neither the Presbytery of Stirling, who are the proper Authors of the foresaid Letter, which is the first Ground of the foresaid Requisition and Ordinance, nor have we been convened therefore before any Ecclesiastick Judicatory, neither were ever convened or convicted for Breach of any Ecclesiastical Act in the Premises; and so there has proceeded no antecedent Sentence of the said Judicatories, finding that we have violated any Act of the Church, in preaching against the present Way of Levy, or that we have ill or unwarrantably appealed from the Commission of the General Assembly their Desire and Charge to us in that Particular. And also we humbly protest, that there be reserved to us all Remedy competent of the Law, against the Injury we suffer by being thus convened and confined by a Civil Judicatory, and having your Liberty refused to us to return to our Charges, notwithstanding of Assurance offered to attend at the Time to which our Business is continued; seeing this Procedure is ‘ contrary, not only to Divine Law, the Word of God, the Covenant, and solemn Engagements unto the Acts of our Church; but also to the Acts of Parliament, and Laws of this Kingdom, and established Rights, Privileges, and Liberties of the Judicatories of the Kirk. And upon Supposal that his Majesty and your Lordships were competent Judges of these Things, which we do not acknowledge, but protest against, for the Reasons contained in this and our former Protestation, and for many other Reasons of that Kind; yet the Hearing of Parties before Judgment passed upon them, being a Part of that native Liberty that is due to all Men, who do not by their wilful Absence from, and Contempt of the Judicatory, forfeit the same, as being founded on the Light of Nature, common Equity, and Reason, and agreeable to the Word of God, and Laws of all Nations; and the King’s Majesty and your Lordships having, in your first Letter to us, propounded that Method of proceeding with us: Notwithstanding thereof, and our undertaking to compare in competent Time, his Majesty and your Lordships have, without hearing us, past such a Judgment in Reference to us; therefore we also protest against such Method of Procedure, as being contrary to that Liberty which is due to us, and which we may justly challenge as Subjects, and which his Majesty and your Lordships are bound by the Light of Nature, Law of God, the Covenant, and Laws of the Land, to maintain and preserve inviolable. And albeit we do not resolve, upon any light Consideration, to depart from this Place, or from Dundee, where his Majesty and your Lordships have commanded us to stay till his Majesty’s Return from Aberdeen, but for preventing of Mistakes, and testifying our Respects to Civil Authority, to endeavour, as we have already declared, to satisfy such an Appointment, so far as we can, without Prejudice to our Consciences, the Liberty of our Ministry, and the solemn Bonds and Obligations upon us to preach the Gospel in the Stations wherein God hath set us: Yet do we protest, that our Staying here, or at Dundee, may not be esteemed or interpreted an Acknowledgment of the Ordinance in Reference to our Stay; but that notwithstanding thereof, it is still free for us to make Use of all these Privileges and Liberties which are due to us as Ministers of Jesus Christ, in as free a Way in Time coming, as we might have done before our comparing before your Lordships, or having any such Ordinance intimate to us.’

28. 1651.

JAMES GUTHRIE.

DAVID BENNET.

The two Ministers are soon dismissed.

Mr. Guthrie’s Loyalty.

Those Protestations are so fully spoken to, and the Arguments the Authors of them had in their Defence, set down in Mr. Guthrie’s first Speech before the Parliament, afterwards to be insert, that I shall say nothing of them here. I can give no further Account of the Procedure of the Committee of Estates in this Affair, save that the King and they thought fit to dismiss the two Ministers, and to go no further on in this Matter. Yet now Ten Years after, this is trumped up, and made a principal Article of Mr. Guthrie’s Indictment, after he had suffered not a little for his Loyalty to the King. I have it from good Hands, that Mr. Guthrie defended the King’s Right in a publick Debate with Hugh Peters, Oliver’s Chaplain, and from the Pulpit he asserted the King’s Title, in the Hearing of the English Officers: But now all this must be forgot, and give way to a personal Pique Middleton had against him; which brings me

Another Spring of his Prosecution.

The King’s Project of joining the Malignants in the North, headed by Middleton.

To the other Passage relative to Mr. Guthrie, which I promised, and it lets us in to the real Spring of the hard Measure this excellent Man met with.

By improving of an Affront the King met with in the Year 1650. some Malignants, as then they were termed, prevailed so to heighten his Majesty’s Fears of evil Designs against him by some about him, that a Correspondence with the Malignants, Papists, and such who were disaffected to the Covenant in the North, was set on Foot. Matters were brought in a little Time to such a Pass, as a considerable Number of Noblemen, Gentlemen, and others, were to rise and form themselves into an Army, under Middleton’s Command; and the King was to cast himself to their Arms and Management. Accordingly the King, upon a sudden, with a few in his Company, as if he had been going to the Hunting, left his fastest Friends, cross’d Tay, and came into Angus, where he was to have met with those People. The Circumstances of this Story are to be had in the Historians of that Time.

It is disappointed.

But the King soon found himself disappointed, and came back to the Committee of Estates, where indeed his Strength and Safety lay. Mean while several, who had been upon the Plot of engaging his Majesty to go and head the North, fearing Punishment, got together under Middleton’s Command. General Lesly marched against them, and the King wrote to them most earnestly to lay down their Arms, and the Committee of Estates send an Indemnity to such as should submit.

The Commission of the General Assembly excommunicate Middleton, and Mr. Guthrie intimates the Sentence.

While the State are thus dealing with them, the Commission of the Assembly were not wanting to shew their Zeal for the King, against such who ventured to disturb the publick Peace. And it is said, Mr. James Guthrie there proposed summar Excommunication, as a Censure Middleton deserved, and as what he took to be a reasonable Testimony from the Church

Church at this Juncture. This highest Sentence was carried in the Commission by a Plurality of Votes, and Mr. Guthrie is appointed the very next Sabbath, and accordingly did pronounce that Censure upon Middleton in the Church of Stirling.

When the Committee of Estates had agreed, not without some Debate, to an Indemnity to Middleton, and had Hope to get Matters some way compromised in the North, there was One sent express to Stirling, with Accounts how Things stood, and a Letter desiring Mr. Guthrie to forbear the Intimation of the Commission's Sentence. I am told, this Letter came to Mr. Guthrie, just when going into the Pulpit, and he did not open it till the Work was over; and tho' he had opened it, it may be doubted, if he would have ventured to delay the Execution of the Sentence of the Commission, which he was obliged to pronounce, and could not cut and carve in, upon a private Missive to himself. Thus the Sentence was inflicted, and it was believed Middleton never forgot nor forgave what Mr. Guthrie did that Day; tho' I find the Commission of the Church, January 3^d, 1651. at their next Meeting, did relax Middleton from that Censure, and laid it upon a far better Man, Colonel Strachan. However after this, Middleton conceived such Prejudice against Mr. Guthrie, as abundantly discovered it self in his Trial before the Session of Parliament.

Notwithstanding he was privately desired not to pronounce Sentence.

So, January or February 1661. Mr. Guthrie was brought to Edinburgh, and had his Indictment given him by the King's Advocate for High Treason. 'Tis Pity we have not this Case in Print, as well as that of his Fellow-martyr the Marquis. I have not seen his Indictment at large, nor the Answers formed by his Lawyers; among whom Sir John Nisbet was one: Had we those, I doubt not but the Iniquity and Injustice of his severe Sentence would fully appear. To retrieve the Want of those, I shall put together what Hints I have met with as to his Trial, and give his own excellent Speeches before the Parliament, hitherto not published for what I know; and from those the State of his Process will pretty clearly appear.

Mr. Guthrie brought in to Edinburgh, and receives his Indictment February this Year.

February 20th, he was first before the Parliament. The Chancellor told him he was called before them, to answer to the Charge of High Treason, a Copy whereof he had received; and the Lord Advocate proposed his Indictment might be read, which the House went into. The Heads of his Dittay were,

Appears before the Parliament February 20th.

' His contriving, consenting to, and exhibiting before the Committee of Estates, the Paper called, The Western Remonstrance. His contriving, writing and publishing that abominable Pamphlet called, The Causes of GOD's Wrath. His contriving, writing and subscribing to the Paper called, The humble Petition, of the 23^d of August last, when he was apprehended. His convocating of the King's Lieges at several Times, without Warrant or Authority, to the Disturbance of the Peace of the State and of the Church. His declaring His Majesty, by his Appeal and Protestation, incapable to be Judge over him, which he presented at Perth: And some treasonable Expressions he was alledged to have uttered in a Meeting 1650 or 1651.'

His Indictment being read, he had an excellent Speech to the Parliament. It is considerably long; but containing the best and almost the only Account I can give of his Case, I have chosen rather to put it here than in the Appendix.

My Lord Chancellor,

' I Being indicted at the Instance of Sir John Fletcher, His Majesty's Advocate, for His Majesty's Interest, upon Things alledged to be seditious and treasonable, I humbly desire, and from your Equity expect, that my Lord Commissioner his Grace will patiently and without Interruption hear me, as to a few Things which I have to say for my self, in Answer to that Indictment: And that I may proceed therein distinctly, following the Order of the Indictment it self, I shall speak first a Word to the Laws that are mentioned and acted, whereby I am to be judged; then to the Things whereof I am accused concerning those Laws.'

His Speech at Reading of his Indictment.

' I am glad that the Law of GOD is named in the first Place; it being indeed the supreme Law, not only of Religion, but also of Righteousness, to which all other Laws ought to be squared and subordinate; and there being an Act of the 1st Parl. King James VI. whereby all Clauses of Laws or Acts of Parliament, repugnant to the Word of GOD, are repealed, an Act most worthy of a Christian King and Kingdom, I hope your Lordships, in all your Proceedings, will give most Respect to this, that I may be judged by the Law of God especially, and by other Laws in Subordination thereunto.'

Observations upon the Laws cited against him.

' As to those Laws and Acts of Parliament, mentioned in the Indictment, concerning his Majesty's Royal Prerogative, and declining his Majesty's Judgment and Authority, and keeping of Conventions; I hope it will not be denied that they are to be understood according to the Sense and Meaning that is given thereof by posterior Acts of Parliament, it being a Maxim in Law, no less true than equitable, That when there is any seeming or real Contradiction betwixt Laws, Posteriora derogant prioribus; otherwise Laws, instead of being Preservatives to States and Commonwealths, might prove Nets to entangle the Lives, Reputations and Estates of the Subjects: And it must also be granted, that Laws and Acts of Parliament are to be understood and expounded by our solemn publick Vows and Covenants,

1661.

'contracted with GOD by His Majesty and Subjects, which are not only declared by the Laws of the Land, to have the Strength of Acts of Parliament, but both by the Law of GOD, and common Law, and Light of all the Nations in the World, are more binding and indispenfable than any Municipal Law and Statute whatsoever.'

'As to those Acts of Parliament that are cited against scandalous, slanderous, and untrue Speeches, to the Disdain, Contempt, and Reproach of his Majesty's Authority; I think I need not say, that none, much less his Majesty's Commissioner, and this honourable Court of Parliament, does understand them of Truths pronounced in Sobriety, by those who have a lawful Call thereunto; and that those Acts which speak against the meddling in the Affairs of his Majesty and State, are not to be understood of such Meddling as Men are bound unto by Virtue of their Calling, and wherein they do not transgress the Bounds of it.'

Upon the Facts wherewith he is charged.

'The next Thing I shall speak to, are the Particulars wherewith I am charged, concerning which I shall give your Lordships a true and ingenuous Account of my Accession thereunto, knowing that I stand in the Sight of him who sits in the Assembly of the Gods. Next, I shall be bold to offer to your Lordships some Defences for vindicating my Carriage from the Breach of his Majesty's Laws, and exempting me from the Punishment appointed thereby.'

'As to the Matters of Fact I am charged with in the Indictment, I am first charged in general, of being culpable of sundry seditious and treasonable Remonstrances, Declarations, Positions, Instructions, Letters, Preachings, Declamations. To which I say, That generalia non pungunt, they can have no Strength in the inferring of a Crime or Guilt, except in so far as they are instanced in Particulars; but are like to those universalia which have no Foundation in re, mere Chimera's or Notions.'

His Adherence to the King's Interest:

'Only one Thing there is in that general Charge, that I cannot, and ought not to pass, to wit, That I have seditiously and traiterously purposed the eradicating and subverting of the fundamental Government of this His Majesty's ancient Kingdom, at least the enervating, or violating, or impairing of his Authority, &c. Concerning which I am bold to say, It is an unjust Charge; there was never any such Purpose or Design in my Heart: And since I am thus charged, I may without Vanity, or Breach of the Law of Sobriety, affirm, That as I had never any Compliance with the Counsels or Designs of the late usurping Powers, against his Majesty's Royal Father, or Himself, or against his Kingdom, or the ancient Government thereof, or of the Kingdoms of England or Ireland; so was there no Part of their ungodly or unjust Actings, but I did, in my Station and Calling, bear open and publick Testimony against the same, both by Word and Writ; which is a Thing better known and manifest than that I can be liable to Suspicion therein, many of these Testimonies being given before many, and many of them being extant to the World, and such as will be extant to Posterity.'

And Sufferings
therefore under the Usurpation.

'My Lord, albeit it does become me to adore God in the Holiness and Wisdom of his Dispensations, yet I can hardly refrain from expressing some Grief of Spirit, that my House and Family should not only be so many Months together cessed by a Number of English Soldiers, and my self kept from the Pulpit for preaching and speaking against the Tender, and incorporating this Nation in one Commonwealth with England; and that I should thereafter, in Time of Oliver Cromwel his usurping the Government to himself under the Name of Protector, being delated by some, and challenged by sundry of his Counsel in this Nation, for a Paper published by me, wherein he was declared to be an Usurper, and his Government to be Usurpation; that I should have been threatned to have been sent to the Court for writing a Paper against Oliver Cromwel his usurping the Crown of these Kingdoms; that I should have been threatned with Banishment for concurring in offering a large Testimony against the Evil of the Times, to Richard Cromwel his Council, immediately after his usurping the Government; I say, My Lord, it grieves me, that, notwithstanding of all those Things, I should now stand indicted before your Lordships, as intending the eradicating and subverting of the ancient Civil Government of this Nation, and being subservient to that Usurper in his Designs. The God of Heaven knows that I am free of this Charge; and I do defie all the World, allowing me Justice and fair Proceeding, which I hope your Lordships will, to make out the same against me.'

Of his Share in the Remonstrance.

'The first Particular wherewith I am charged in the Indictment, is, That I did compile and draw up a Paper, commonly called, The Remonstrance, and presented it, or caused it to be presented to his Majesty and Committee of Estates, October 22. 1650. To which I answer, by denying that Part of the Indictment. I never did compile or contrive that Remonstrance, nor did I present it, or cause it to be presented to the Committee of Estates; then, or at any other Time. I indeed being a Member of the Commission of the General Assembly, when they gave their Judgment upon it, did dissent from the Sentence which they passed upon it, which cannot be reckoned any culpable Accession thereunto, every Man being free, without Hazard or Punishment, and bound in Conscience, as before God, to give his Judgment freely in the Judicatory whereof he is a Member. If it be alledged that I did after-words abet the same in the Book of The Causes of God's Wrath, in the 6th Book, in the 9th Article thereof, by asserting the rejecting of the Discovery of the Guiltiness contained therein to have been a Sin. It is answered, 1st, That it was no more than the asserting of my former Dissent. 2^{dly}, That it was no more upon the Matter, than was acknowledged and asserted by the whole Commission of the General Assembly, when they passed Sentence upon it; in which Sentence it is acknowledged, that it did contain many sad Truths which yet were not received, nor any effectual Remedy endeavoured for the helping the Evils represented thereby. 3^{dly}, It cannot be accounted culpable in a Minister of the Gospel, who is thereunto bound by Virtue of his Calling, to assert the rejecting of the Discovery of Guiltiness to be a Sin.

1661.

The next Particular I am charged with, is the Book of The Causes of God's Wrath, especially the Fifth and Sixth Articles thereof, which are Particulars, I believe, upon the Looking thereof, will not be found to contain any just Matter of Accusation, much less Matter of Sedition and Treason; there being nothing mentioned therein, but the Discovery of the Sin of Covetousness, and Abuse of the publick Faith of the Land in borrowing Money. But because I did apprehend it was the 5th or 6th Step of the 9th Article was intended by my Lord Advocate, I humbly profess to your Lordships and this honourable Court of Parliament, that I am very unwillingly drawn forth to speak of those Things, and shall only say, 1. That, the God of Heaven is Witness, my Accession thereunto did not flow from any Disrespect unto, or Dissatisfaction with his Majesty's Person or Government, much less from any malicious Purpose to render him odious to the World or to his Subjects, or to give Advantage to his Enemies and the Enemies of these Kingdoms, or from any Purpose in any Thing to be subservient to the Designs or Actings of the late usurping Powers; but merely and singly from a constraining Power of Conscience, to be found faithful, as a Minister of the Gospel, in the discovering of Sin and Guiltiness, that it being taken with, and repented of, Wrath might be taken away from the House of the King, and from these Kingdoms. Your Lordship knows what Charge is laid upon the Ministers of the Gospel to give faithful Warning to all Sorts of Persons, and how they expose their own Souls to the Hazard of eternal Damnation, and the Guilt of the Blood of those with whom they have to do, if they do not this; and you do also know that the Prophets and Apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ himself, did faithfully warn all Men, tho' it was their Lot, because of the same, to be reckoned Traitors and seditious Persons, and to suffer as evil Doers on the Account thereof. Next, My Lord, I wish it may be seriously pondred, that nothing is asserted in these Causes as Matter of Sin and Duty, but what hath been the common received Doctrine of the Church of Scotland, as may appear from the Records of the Work of Reformation from Popery, from the National Covenant, and Solemn League and Covenant, and the publick Declarations and Acts of this Church and Kingdom, concerning the necessary Security of Religion; the Truth of which Doctrine is confirmed from the Word of God, and Divine Reason, in those publick Papers themselves; and as to Matters of Fact, they are no other than are mentioned in the solemn publick Causes of Humiliation condescended upon, and kept by the whole Church joyntly, and his Majesty and Family, with the Commission of the General Assembly, and Committee of Estates, before his Coronation at Perth. As to the 6th Step, there is nothing therein mentioned but what is Truth; all the Particulars therein mentioned, even the Remonstrance itself, containing some Discovery of known and undeniable Sins and Guiltiness, the rejecting whereof behoved to be a Sin, and therefore the asserting of it cannot be Sedition and Treason.

Of his Hand in
The Causes of God's Wrath.

The Third Particular wherewith I am charged, is the Supplication at Edinburgh, August 23^d, to which I acknowledge my Accession, but deny it to be treasonable or seditious; because, besides the former Vindication of my former Carriage and Actings from the Compliances with the late usurping Powers, and a humble Profession of the Subjection, Loyalty, and Obedience which I ow to his Majesty, of my Resolutions to render the same unto him as the supreme and rightful Magistrate over these Kingdoms, and some serious Prayers and Supplications for his Majesty, it doth contain nothing but a humble Petition concerning those Things, to which his Majesty, and all the Subjects of this Kingdom, are engaged by the solemn and indispensable Oath of the Covenant, with a sober and serious Representation of the Danger that threatens Religion, and of those Things that are destructive unto the Duties contained in those Articles of the Covenant; and being established by Law, and confirmed by the publick Oath of God, which is more than a Law, a humble Petition and Representation, concerning those Things, cannot be accounted Sedition, or treasonable. The Indictment is pleased to say, That I charged his Majesty with Dissimulation and Perjury; but there is no such Thing in the Supplication, which doth only put him in Remembrance of holding fast the Oaths of the Covenant.

His Share in the Supplication,
August 1660.

As to what is alledged against the Lawfulness of our Meeting; It was Presbyterially resolved that I should keep that Meeting; and suppose that had not been, yet that Meeting cannot fall within those Acts of Parliament that strike against unlawful Conventions; because every Meeting for Business, in it self lawful, is agreeable to the Word of God and Laws of the

Lawfulness of their Meeting at that Time.

1661.

the Land, and when kept without Tumult and Multitude, such as that was, needs no particular Warrant from Authority; as may be instructed from several other Meetings up and down the Land every Day, for several Sorts of Business. Are there not some Meetings kept by Persons of all Sorts in all the Parts of the Country, in Reference to Application to Judicatories, and the supreme Magistrate, for Civil Interest and Right? and if so, how much more may Ministers meet for the supplicating his Majesty for the Interests and Rights of Jesus Christ, keeping themselves for the Matter of their Supplication within the Bounds of the Covenant, and of those Things which are established by Law? Yea, such Meetings are clearly exempted from the Breach of those Acts of Parliament by a posterior Act of Parliament, viz. Act 29. Parl. 2. Charles I.

Of his declining the King's Authority.

As to the last Particular of the Indictment, to wit, my declining of his Majesty's Authority; I acknowledge I did decline the Civil Magistrate as a competent Judge of Ministers Doctrine in the first Instance. His Authority in all Things Civil, I do with all my Heart acknowledge, and that according to the Confession of Faith in this Church; and that the Conservation and Purgation of Religion belongs to him as Civil Magistrate, and that Ecclesiastical Persons are not exempted from Obedience to Civil Authority and the Commands thereof, nor from Punishment in case of their Transgression: But that the declining of the Civil Magistrate his being Judge of Ministers Doctrine in the first Instance, may appear not Treason and Sedition, but lawful and warrantable, I do humbly offer.

1. Its Warrantableness evinced.

1. That such Declinatures are agreeable to the Rule of God's Word, and to the Confession of Faith, and Doctrine of this Church, confirmed and ratified in Parliament by many several Acts, and therefore have the Strength both of Divine and human Laws. That they are agreeable to God's Word is evident from this, that the Scriptures do clearly hold forth that Christ hath a visible Kingdom which he exercises in or over his visible Members by his spiritual Officers, which is wholly distinct from the Civil Power and Government of the World, and not depending upon, or subordinate to those Governments and the Acts thereof. John 18. 36, 37. Matth. 16. 19. John 20. 23. That they are agreeable to the Confession of Faith and Doctrine of this Church is evident, because those do acknowledge no Head over the visible Church of Christ but himself, nor any Judgment or Power in or over his Church, but that which he hath committed to the spiritual Office-bearers thereof under himself: And therefore it hath been the ordinary Practice of this Kirk, in such Cases, to use such Declinatures, since the Time of the Reformation from Popery; as may appear from many clear, undeniable and approved Instances, extant in the Acts of the General Assembly, and Records of this Church, particularly those of Mr. David Black, 1596. which was owned and subscribed by 3 or 400 Ministers, besides sundry others which are well known. And I believe, My Lord, this is not only the Doctrine of the Church of Scotland, but of many sound Protestant Divines who give unto Cesar the Things that are Cesar's, and to God the Things that are God's.

2. Such Declinatures are agreeable to, and founded upon the National Covenant, and Solemn League and Covenant, by which the King's Majesty himself, and all the Subjects of this Kingdom, are bound to maintain the Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government of this Church, with solemn Vows and publick Oaths of God; which hath always in all Kingdoms, States, and Republicks, been accounted more sacred and binding than any Municipal Law or Statute whatsoever; and being posterior to the Act of Parliament 1584. do necessarily include a repealing of it.

Upon these Grounds it is that I gave in, and do assert that Declinature for vindicating the Crown, Dignity, and Royal Prerogative of Jesus Christ, who is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords; but with all due Respect to his Majesty, his Greatness and Authority.

Remarks upon the Act of Parliament 1584.

As to that Act of Parliament 1584. it was made in a Time wherein the settled Government of this Church by Presbyteries and Synods was wholly overturned, and their Actings utterly discharged, and the Depositions of Ministers, and Things properly Spiritual and Ecclesiastical, put into the Hand of the Civil Magistrate. Further I do assert, That that Act, in so far as concerns Decliners, hath, since the making thereof, been often repealed and rescinded, and stands repealed and rescinded now at the down sitting of this Parliament.

It was reversed and annulled by a posterior Act, 1592. viz. 1 Act, 12 Parl. James VI. in the last Section of which it is expressly declared, 'That that Act, 1584. shall no ways be prejudicial, nor derogate any Thing from the Privilege God hath given the Spiritual Officers in the Church, concerning Heads of Religion, Matters of Heresy, Collation, or Deposition of Ministers, or any such like essential Censure, especially grounded upon, and having Warrant from the Word of God.' But so it is, that the Freedom and Independence of the Spiritual Office-bearers of the Church of God, in Things Ecclesiastick that concern their Calling, is a special Privilege, and a special Head of Religion; and that the free Discovery of the Sins of all Persons, by Ministers, in their Doctrine from the Word of God, is an essential Censure, grounded upon, and having Warrant from the Word of God.

And

‘ And accordingly King James VI. Anno 1585. considering the great Offence given and taken by that Act 1584. did, for removing thereof, send a Declaration penned and signed with his own Hand, to the Commissioners of the Kirk of Scotland at Linlithgow, December 7. which, he saith, shall be as good and valid as any Act of Parliament whatsoever; in which Declaration he hath these Words. ‘ I for my Part shall never, neither ought my Posterity ever summon or apprehend any Pastor or Teacher, for Matters of Doctrine, Religion, Salvation, Heresy, or true Interpretation of the Scripture : But according to my first Act, which occasions the Liberty of the Preaching the Word, Administration of the Sacrament, I avow the same to be a Matter merely Ecclesiastical, and altogether inexpedient to my Calling; and therefore shall not, nor ever ought they, I mean my Posterity, claim any Power or Jurisdiction in the foresaids.’

1661.
King's Declaration,
7. 1585.

‘ It is also to be considered, That that Act 1584. is also repealed by the 4th Act, Parl. 2. Charles I. which reckons it among the Evils that had fore troubled the Peace of Kirk and Kingdom, that the Power of the Keys and Kirk-censures was given to Persons merely Civil; and therefore doth provide, that for Preservation of Religion, and preventing of such Evils in Time coming, General Assemblies rightly constitute, as the proper and competent Judge of all Matters Ecclesiastical, hereafter be kept yearly, and oftner pro re nata, as Occasion and Necessity shall require.’

‘ The same Act 1584. is also repealed by the 6th Act, Parl. 2. Charles I. called the Act Rescissory, which expressly provides and declares, ‘ That the sole and only Power of Jurisdiction within this Church, stands in the Church of God, as it is now reformed, and in the General, Provincial, and Presbyterial Assemblies, with Kirk-sessions established by that Act of Parliament, June 1592.’ Which Act is expressly revived and renewed in the whole Heads, Points and Articles thereof, in the foresaid Act Rescissory, and is appointed to stand in full Strength, as a perpetual Law in all Times coming, notwithstanding of whatsoever Acts and Statutes made in contrar thereof, in Whole or in Part, which the Estates, by that Act Rescissory, casses and annuls all and whatsoever Acts of Parliament, Laws, or Constitutions, in so far as they derogate, and are prejudicial to the Nature, Jurisdiction, Discipline, and Privileges of this Kirk.’

‘ By all which it is evident, that not only that Act 1584. but also the 1 Act, Parl. 18. James VI. and the 3 Act, Parl. 1. Charles I. which ratify and establish the Royal Prerogative over all Estates, Persons, and Causes within this Kingdom, is declared to be of no Force, in so far as the same may be extended, to make the supreme Magistrate the competent and proper Judge of Matters Spiritual and Ecclesiastical.’

‘ It is to be observed further, That it hath been lawful, and in continual Practice, that his Majesty's secret Council hath been declined in sundry Causes, and the Cause drawn to the ordinary and competent Judge; as Matters Civil to the Lords of Session, Matters Criminal to the Chief Justice, Matters of Divorce to the Commissaries; yea, the meanest Regality in the Country hath Power to decline the supreme Judicatory.’

Declinatures frequently used.

‘ As to what is alledged in the Close of the Indictment, of protesting for Remeed of Law against his Majesty, the Protestation was but an Appendix and Consequent of the other, made only in Reference thereunto; and a Protestation against any particular Act for Remeedy, according to his Majesty's Law, cannot be Treason against his Majesty, there being no Act of Parliament declaring it to be so; and it being not Authority in it self that is protested against, but only a particular Act of the Authority, against which Protestations in many Cases are ordinary. Lastly, It is to be observed, that this Declinature was buried in Silence by his Majesty, and Committee of Estates, after the ingiving thereof, and Mr. Guthrie sent Home without ever challenging him for the same, and permitted to exercise his Ministry in Stirling.’

Of his Protest for Remeed of Law.

‘ Those few Things, My Lord, I thought fit at present to say in Vindication and Defence of my own Innocence, notwithstanding of any Thing contained in the Indictment now read against me. The Sum of what I have said I comprise in these Two; 1st, That I did never purpose or intend to speak or act any Thing disloyal, seditious, or treasonable against his Majesty's Person, Authority or Government, God is my Witness, and that what I have spoken, written or acted in any of those Things wherewith I am charged, hath been merely and singly from a Principle of Conscience, that according to the weak Measure of Light given me of God, I might do my Duty in my Station and Calling as a Minister of the Gospel. Next, because Conscience barely taken is not a sufficient Plea, tho' it may extenuate, yet cannot wholly excuse, I do assert, that I have founded my Speeches, and Writings, and Actings, in those Matters, on the Word of God, and on the Doctrine, Confessions of Faith, and Laws of this Church and Kingdom, upon the National Covenant of Scotland, and the Solemn League and Covenant 'twixt the Three Kingdoms of Scotland, England and Ireland: If those Foundations fall, I must fall with them; but if these sustain and stand in Judgment, as I hope they will, I cannot acknowledge my self, neither I hope will his Majesty's Commissioner, and the Honourable Court of Parliament, judge me guilty of Sedition and Treason, notwithstanding of any Thing contained in the Indictment.’

Sum of what he hath said.

He is appointed to bring in his Defences the 29th Instant.

Two Instances of Ministers declining Civil Judicatories in Point of Doctrine and ministerial Actings.

App. No. 20. One by Mrs. Dickon and Douglas, 1655.

App. N^o. 21. The other by Mr. James Hamilton.

This pointed and pathetic Speech wanted not some Influence upon the House; but his Death was designed, and the Process behaved to go on. When he was ordered to remove, he humbly craved that some Time might be given him to consult and advise with his Lawyers. This was granted, and he allowed till the 29th to give in his peremptory Defences.

I shall only further take Notice, that the Article in his Indictment with most Shadow of Reason intitled upon, was, His declining the King's Authority to judge in Matters of Doctrine prima instantia, and the Protestation and Declinature he gave in upon this, above set down. This we have already seen he fully takes off, as what was reasonable in it self, and every Way legal, and according to the common Practice of that Time. To clear this Matter of Fact, I have cast it in App. N^o. 20. a Protestation and Declinature August 22^d 1655. with the Summons whereupon it was given in to the Sheriff principal of Midlothian, by the Ministers of Edinburgh, when called before that Civil Court, for their praying for the King contrary to the Order given by the Usurpers. And the Reader will find it comes close up to Mr. Guthrie's Declinature, and is signed by Mr. David Dickson and Mr. Robert Douglas. And App. N^o. 21. the Reader will find Mr. James Hamilton Minister at Edinburgh his Declinature at the same time: From which 'tis plain, that as Mr. Guthrie takes Notice, 'There were many Instances of this Procedure at that time well known.' And great Numbers, as well as he, might have been staged upon this Score of declining Civil Courts, as Judges of Doctrine and ministerial Actings. Indeed those Declinatures in the Reasoning and very Phrases, agree so much with Mr. Guthrie's, that one would think they had his in their Eye, when they formed theirs.

Mr. Guthrie's great Abilities acknowledged by his Lawyers.

I have it from very good Hands, that when Mr. Guthrie met with his Lawyers to form his Defences, he very much surprised them by his Exactness in our Scots Law, and suggested several Things to be added, which had escaped his Advocates. Sir John Nisbet expressed himself upon this Head to those I have it from, to this Purpose. 'If it had been in the reasoning Part, or in Consequences from Scripture and Divinity, I would have wondred the less he had given us some Help; but even in the Matter of our own Profession, our Statutes and Acts of Parliament, he pointed several Things which had escaped us.' I am likewise told, that the Day before his first appearing in Parliament, he sent a Copy of his Speech just now inserted, to Sir John and the rest of his Lawyers, at least of the Reasoning and Law-part of it, and they could mend nothing in it.

The giving in his Defences, and the Advocate's considering of them, took up some Weeks, until the 11th of April, when I find him again before the Parliament, and his Process is read over the first Time. Whereupon he had a most moving Speech, which likewise deserves a Room here.

Mr. Guthrie's SPEECH in Parliament, immediately after the Reading of his Process, April 11th, 1661.

My Lord Chancellor,

His Speech after reading his Process in Parliament, Apr 11.

I Did, at my first Appearance before His Majesty's Commissioner, and this Honourable Court of Parliament, give an Account of my Accession to the Particulars contained in the Indictment, and of the Grounds and Reasons thereof; I have now done it more fully in my Defences and Duplies to the Replies given by my Lord Advocate; in all which I have dealt ingenuously and without shifting, holding it the Duty of a Christian, especially of a Minister of the Gospel, in the Matter of his Duty and Calling, so to do. I have now only to add these few Words.

'I hope, I have made it sufficiently to appear, that what I have spoken, written or acted in this Matter, was from no malicious, or sinister End or Intention against His Majesty's Person or Government, but from a Principle of true Piety towards God, and true Loyalty towards His Majesty: As I have demonstrated those from the Tenor of my Carriage and Actings, so have I herein Confidence towards God, and, in the Perswasion of the Integrity of my Soul in this Particular, may, with a good Conscience, not only make this Declaration before your Lordships, but also hazard to step into Eternity.'

'Next, My Lord, I hope I have made it appear, that besides the Conformity my Accession to these Things hath with the Word of God, so they have a Foundation in the National Covenant, and in the Solemn League and Covenant, the Obligation whereof I dare not but profess to own as binding and standing on those Kingdoms; and that they are agreeable to the Actings of publick Authority before the English their invading of this Nation, to the Cansons of the Church, Laws of the Kingdom, and the publick declared Judgment both of Church and State before those Times. And, my Lord, if this will not plead an Oblivion and Indemnity for me, but that, notwithstanding of all this, I shall be judged a seditionous Person and Traitor, not only shall the whole Church and Kingdom of Scotland be involved in the Guilt of Sedition and Treason, and few or none have any Security for their Lives, Honours and Estates, further than the King's Mercy doth give, but also a very dangerous Foundation

‘ dation shall be laid in Time to come, for Men of differing Judgments, upon every emerging Revolution, to prosecute the worsted Party unto Death, notwithstanding they have the publick Authority, and the Laws then standing, to plead in Defence of their Actings.’

‘ I know, My Lord, it lieth on the Spirits of some as a Prejudice against me, that I am supposed to have been a chief Instrument and Ringleader in those Declarations, Laws, Canons, and publick Actings of the Kirk and Kingdom, which I do now plead in my own Defence. I shall not say that this hath any Rise from any, who, to lighten their own Burden, would increase mine, holding that unworthy of any Man of an ingenuous Spirit, and most unworthy of a Christian. As I charge no Man in particular with Accession to any of those Things, so, as for myself, I do for the Truth's Sake ingenuously acknowledge, that throughout the whole Course of my Life, I have studied to be serious, and not to deal with a slack Hand in what I did look upon as my Duty; and yet, my Lord, lest I should attribute to myself what is not due to me, I must, for staining of Pride and vain Glory, say, I was not honoured to be of those who laid the Foundation in this Kirk and Kingdom. I am not ashamed to give Glory to God, in acknowledging that until the Year 1638. I was treading other Steps, and the Lord did then graciously recover me out of the Snare of Prelacy, Ceremonies, and the Service Book, and a little thereafter put me into the Ministry. Yet I never judge my self worthy to be accounted a Ringleader in any of these Superstructures of that blessed Work, there being a great many elder for Years, and more eminent for Piety, Parts, Prudence, Faithfulness and Zeal, whom I did reverence and give Precedency to in those things.’

‘ It may also, My Lord, haply be, and a little I have been informed of it, that besides any Thing contained in the Indictment, there be some other Things that bear Weight upon the Spirits of some of the Members of this House, from some Reports that have passed of my Carriage towards his Majesty's Royal Father, towards himself and some others. As to those Things, my Lord, if there be any Thing of that Kind, I do most humbly and seriously beg, and I think I may most justly expect, both in order to Justice, and to the Peace of their own Consciences, that seeing they have no Proof of it, but at least have taken it upon Information, that they would altogether lay it aside, and lay no Weight upon it; or else, before they give Judgment of me, they would let me know of it, and allow me a fair Hearing upon it; and if I cannot vindicate my self, let me bear the Weight of it.’

‘ In the next Place, My Lord, knowing that it is wondred at by not a few of the Members of this Parliament, that I should stand to my own Justification in those Things whereof I am challenged, and that this is looked upon as a Piece of peremptory and wilful Humour, which if I pleased I might easily lay aside: My Lord, I humbly beg so much Charity of all that hear me, as to think that I have not so far left the Exercise of all Conscience towards God, and of all Reason towards my self and my dearest Relations in the World, as upon Deliberation to hazard, if not cast away both my Life and Soul at once. God knows, it is not my Humour, but Conscience that sticks with me; and could I lay it aside, and not sin against God, and dissemble with Men, by professing or confessing what I think not, I should not stand in the Defence of one of those Things for the Minute of an Hour: But, my Lord, having, with Prayer and Supplications to the God of Truth, searched the Word of God, and consulted the Judgment and Practice of the Reformed Churches, especially our own since the Reformation from Popery, and the Writings of many sound and orthodox Divines, and having frequently conversed with the godly Ministry, and praying People of this Nation, and tried the Pulse of their Spirits anent the National Covenant, and Solemn League and Covenant, the Particulars contained in them, and the Superstructures that have been builded upon them, and anent Sin and Duty, and the Power of the Civil Magistrate in Matters Ecclesiastical; I find my Practice and Profession anent these, agreeable to all those, and therefore cannot reckon my Light for Humour and Delusion, but must hold it fast, till better Guides be given me to follow.’

‘ My Lord, in the last Place I shall humbly beg, that, having brought so pregnant and clear Evidence from the Word of God, so much Divine Reason and human Laws, and so much of the common Practice of Kirk and Kingdom in my own Defence, and being already cast out of my Ministry, out from my Dwelling and Maintenance, my self and Family put to live on the Charity of others, having now suffered Eight Months Imprisonment, your Lordships would put no further Burden upon me. I shall conclude with the Words of the Prophet Jeremiah, ‘Behold, I am in your Hands, saith he, do to me what seemeth good to you: I know for certain that the Lord hath commanded me to speak all those Things, and that if you put me to Death, you shall bring innocent Blood on your self, and upon the Inhabitants of this City.’

‘ My Lord, my Conscience I cannot submit, but this old crazy Body and mortal Flesh I do submit, to do with it whatsoever you will, whether by Death, or Banishment, or Imprisonment, or any Thing else; only I beseech you to ponder well what Profit there is in my Blood: It is not the extinguishing me or many others, that will extinguish the Covenant and Work of Reformation since the Year 1638. My Blood, Bondage, or Banishment will contri-

‘bute more for the Propagation of those Things, than my Life or Liberty could do, tho’ I should live many Years. I wish to my Lord Commissioner his Grace, and to all your Lordships, the Spirit of Judgment, Wisdom, and Understanding, and the Fear of the Lord, that you may judge righteous Judgment, in which you may have Glory, the King Honour and Happiness, and your selves Peace in the Day of your Accounts.’

The Influence
this Speech had upon Members,

‘This singular and most affecting Speech had very little Weight in the House, by what might have been expected from the native Eloquence, close Dealing with their Reason and Consciences, and the full Removal of all that could be even insinuate against this holy Man, contained in it; yet it had Influence upon a good many of the Members, who retired after he had ended, and declared one to another at their coming out of the House, They would have nothing to do with the Blood of this righteous Man. I could name Noblemen, and no Presbyterians either, who, after hearing Mr. Guthrie till he ended, not only came out themselves, but prevailed with some of their Friends to go with them, from the strong Convictions raised in them of his Innocency, by this melting Speech; than which I have seen little in our modern Martyrologies, that comes so fully up to the Apologies of the primitive Martyrs and Confessors, for themselves and the Cause they suffered for.

His Indictment
found relevant, but his Sentence not pronounced till
May 28.

But his Judges were determined to go on, and in a very little Time, that same Dict, tho’ in a thin House, the Relevancy of the Indictment was sustained, and he found liable to incur the Pains and Penalties in the Acts of Parliament, specified in the several Articles of his Dictay. I do not find the Day of his Execution named till the 28th of May, when the Parliament, after the Marquis of Argyle’s Execution, ordain ‘Mr. James Guthrie and William Giffan or Govan to be hanged at the Cross of Edinburgh, Saturday, June 1st, and the Head of the First to be affixed on the nether Bow, his Estate to be confiscate, and his Arms torn, and the Head of the Second upon the West Port in the City of Edinburgh.’

Offers made to
Mr. Guthrie,

It was resolved that this excellent Minister should fall a Sacrifice to private personal Pique, as the Marquis of Argyle was said to be to a more exalted Revenge. I am told the Managers had no small Debates what his Sentence should be. Mr. Guthrie was dealt with by some from some of them to retract what he had done and written, and to joyn in with the present Measures; and he was even offered a Bishoprick. The other Side were in no Hazard in making the Experiment, for they might be assured of his Firmness in his Principles. A Bishoprick was a very small Temptation to him, and the Commissioner improved his Inflexibleness, and insisted to have his Life taken, to be a Terror to others, and that they might have the less Opposition in erecting of Prelacy.

Grounds of his Sentence.

Thus a Sentence of Death was passed upon him, for his Accession to the Causes of God’s Wrath, his writing the Petition last Year, and the Protestations above mentioned; Matters done a good many Years ago, and when done, not at all insisted on by the King himself, and every way agreeable to the Word of God, and Principles and Practice of this and other Churches, and the Laws of the Kingdom.

Mr. Guthrie’s Indictment, Defences, and Criminal Process, App.
Nº. 21. B. C. D.

Since the Writing of what is above, I have lately had Access to all the original Papers relative to Mr. Guthrie’s Process, yet remaining at Edinburgh among the Warrants in the Parliament-house, and have, for the Reader’s Satisfaction, added in the Appendix Mr. Guthrie’s Indictment, his Defences, and the Minutes of the Criminal Process. The Advocate’s Replies, and Mr. Guthrie’s Duplies are likewise before me, but they are so large that I have not insert them, since, as far as I can judge, the State of this Process is fully and at Length enough contained in the Indictment and Defences: They stand, App. Nº. 21. B. C. D.

His Composure
when his Sentence was extending,

One who attended Mr. Guthrie in the Prison, and during the Whole of his Trial, tells me, That Day he received his Sentence, he was removed from the Bar to the Outer-house, and in a Hurry of Soldiers, Pursevants, Servants, and such like, until the Clerk wrote his Sentence, and he well enough knew the House were debating about the Disposál of his Body; yet this extraordinary Person, as afterwards he owned, never felt more of the sensible Presence of God, sweet Intimations of Peace, and real Manifestations of the Divine Love and Favour, than at this very Time, when in that outward Confusion: And when called in, received his Sentence with the greatest Composure and Cheerfulness.

The Iniquity of this Sentence appears fully from Mr. Guthrie’s own Speeches already inserted, and is very well discovered by a Fellow-sufferer of his at this Time, tho’ not unto Blood, The Author of the Apologetical Narration, in his Fifth Section. Mr. Guthrie was undoubtedly one of the most eminent of the Ministers of the Church at this Time, and of the Protesting Way; and all of that Set were now hated and persecuted to satisfy Mr. Sharp’s malicious and ambitious Designs. He had likewise been a steady Opposer of the malignant Party, and Prelacy now fast hastening in, and a vigorous Enemy to scandalous Ministers; and the Commissioner could never forgive his excommunicating him.

The King not satisfied with his Condemnation.

The King himself was so sensible of his good Services to him, and his Interest when at its lowest, and the Severity of this Sentence, that when he got Notice of it, he asked with some Warmth, And what have you done with Mr. Patrick Gillespie? It was answered, That Mr. Gillespie had so many Friends in the House his Life could not be taken. Well, said the King, if I had known you would have spared Mr. Gillespie, I would have spared Mr. Guthrie. And indeed there was Reason for it, as to one who had been so firm and zealous an Asserter of his Majesty's Title and Interest, and had suffered so much for his continued Opposition to, and disowning of the English Usurpation.

After the Sentence, and a little before his Death, Mr. Guthrie received the following Letter from a dear Friend of his, if I am not mistaken, a very eminent Minister, which as it was supporting to him, so it shews the Sense, that not only the Writer of it, but many others had of the present Procedure of the Managers, and of the dark Cloud coming upon this Church.

Dear Sir,

I Am now past Hopes of seeing your Face any more in the Flesh; to tell you the Wrestlings of my poor Soul on your Behalf were not worth your Time, but that Affection constraineth me to say, I am both in Bonds and in the Body with you, and will travail till you be delivered, and I may well do it, for it draweth near, and you may lift up your Head, when ours as yet must hang down. God hath provided a Sacrifice for himself, not an Isaac, but your self. That eminent Peer of the Land, highly honoured of the Lord, and your self, are the first Fruits, and the first Blood in this Kind after an Hundred Years Interruption and Indulgence: Who may or shall follow, God knoweth; every one cannot receive this Dignity, save they to whom it is given. The buried Cause of Christ shall live in your Death, and what all your Contendings for it while you were alive could not do, your Blood shall do when you are gone. The Lord seemeth now to be about to set and fix his Standard for a while in the Blood and Sufferings of his Servants and People, it may be, of all Ranks and Sorts of Persons within the Land, ere all be done: And whether many or few, or none at all, (which is not likely) shall be added unto you, I believe to it shall be the Gathering of his People; and then I am sure your Sufferings are well rewarded, and not only yours, but all the Blood that shall be shed, well bestowed in the gathering of his scattered People. The Healing and Reparation of all their Breaches shall begin at your Ashes, who in your Days have been esteemed a Man of Strife and Contention. God hath much to do for you and yours, when you are gone; but alas! I fear a dark and woful Day on these Nations, ere these Things be. As for my self, I have been kept off from publick Appearance hitherto; I know no more than some in my Name have communicate to you. Whereto or wherein any Forbearance I have, shall resolve, God knoweth; I can say in the Apostles Words, not unapplicable in this Case; I think, if my Heart deceive me not, to will and to resolve is present with me in my best Times, but how to perform I find not; which makes me oft-times to doubt of the very Truth of my Resoluteness, yet he knoweth that I desire to be sincere before him; and whatever may become of me, it is the present Impression and Perswasion of my Heart, that whoever they be that through their shrinking shall put a Stain upon the Cause of your Suffering now to be sealed with your Blood, shall have and draw upon themselves a Guilt of a double Dye.

Letter to Mr. Guthrie after his Sentence.

Dear Sir, forgive me for such a Trouble at such a Nick; but it is the last Expression of my Affection which can reach you, to whom my Soul hath been ever knit since my first Acquaintance with you: I shall say no more, but that I cannot pass the mentioning of that Scripture which hath been often in my Mind concerning you, and which I remember you once told me was born in upon your Mind, amidst some of these former Conflicts you have been essayed with before it came to this. You know the Place; "I have made thee this Day a defended City and a brazen Wall, &c. and they shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee, for I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the Lord." I confess I would have fain drawn forth the Performance of that Promise to a longer Life to you, and more Work therein; but God hath performed it well, you have had very great and undeniable Performances of it already, and now the best is at Hand. Within a little it shall be said, They have got the Foil, and you the Victory; and no Wonder, for he is still with you to deliver you.

Now that the Lord may send down upon your Soul liberal Showers of Divine Influences, and his plentiful Rain to confirm you against all Weariness; that the Tongue of the learned may be given to you for your last Words, and that all the communicable Blessings of the Cross of Christ may run over yours, till that Word be made out in your Sufferings, "Except a Corn of Wheat fall into the Ground and die, it abideth alone, but if it die, it bringeth forth much Fruit." The Words following, John, 12. 25. &c. are well worth your reading. God can, and I trust will make you that Corn of Wheat, that the Brethren in the Lord may wax bold through resisting unto Blood; and that the Lord may recompense your Work, and a full Reward be given you of the Lord God of Israel, under whose Wings you trust. These are the Requests and Supplications of his Soul to the Lord for you, who earnestly desires your Blessing and best Wishes to be left behind you in his Behalf. Even so come Lord Jesus, he saith, I come quickly. Amen, amen.

Twixt Mr. Guthrie's Sentence and the Execution of it, he was in a perfect Composure and Serenity of Spirit, and wrote a great many excellent Letters to his Friends and Acquaintances, ces, which, could they be recovered, might be of great Use. In this Interval he had not a few Prophetical Expressions, some of which I have well attested, but I shall not insert them here. I wish this great Man's Life were published by some good Hand.

The Day he was execute, June 1st, upon some Reports spread most groundlessly, That he was to buy his Life at the Expence of retracting some Things he had formerly said, owned and done; Mr. Guthrie wrote, and before the underwritten Witnesses subscribed the following Declaration.

‘THESE are to declare, that I do own The Causes of God's Wrath, the Supplication at Edinburgh, August last, and any Accession I had to the Remonstrance; and if any do think, or have reported that I was willing to recede from any of these, they have wronged me, as never having any Ground from me so to think, or so to report. This I attest under my Hand, at Edinburgh, about Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon, before these Witnesses,

His Cheerful-

at his Execution, June 1.

That Day he dined with his Friends in the greatest Cheerfulness. After Dinner he called for a little Cheese, which he had been dissuaded from eating for some Time, as not good for the Gravel he was troubled with, and yet had a great Liking to it; and said, I hope I am now beyond the Hazard of the Gravel. When he had been in secret some Time, he came forth in the greatest Serenity and Composure, and was carried down under a Guard from the Tolbooth to the Cross of Edinburgh, where a Scaffold was erected, and there the Sentence was executed in all its Branches. He gave to his Friends a Copy of what he designed for his Speech, if he should be allowed to deliver it on the Scaffold, subscribed and sealed, to be delivered to his Son, and, he being a Child, to be kept for him till he came to Years. The Copy of it is in Nephtali, and hath been many Times printed, yet I add it in this Collection, App. No. 22.

App. No. 22.

Captain William Govan executed at the same Time.

We have seen that the Parliament ordered William Govan, in some Papers I find him termed Captain Govan, to be hang'd with Mr. James Guthrie. There were different Accounts of the Reason why the Parliament sentenced him: In his own Speech he says, It was for laying down his Arms at Hamilton, as all the Company did, and takes Notice, that he carried up Montrose's Standard through the Streets of Edinburgh. It was alledged he was present upon the Scaffold when King Charles was beheaded, but, to the Conviction of all, he proved himself alibi. The Commissioner had no Orders from Court about him, and many were of Opinion he was cast in among so good Company as the Marquis and Mr. Guthrie, both executed this Week, that so unknown an Attendant might obscure and cloud, if possible, such remarkable and eminent Sufferers.

His Case from his last Speech.

App. No. 23.

He was reckoned a pious good Man, and had been a Soldier under Colonel Strachan. His Speech is the largest and best Account I can give of him; and therefore I have insert it, App. No. 23. After he had ended it, he took off a Ring from his Finger and gave to a Friend of his upon the Scaffold, desiring him to take it to his Wife, and tell her, “He died in humble Confidence, and found the Cross of Christ sweet.” He said, “Christ had done all for him, and it was by him alone he was justified; and being desired to look up to that Christ, he answered, He looketh down and smileth upon me.” Then cheerfully mounting up some Steps of the Ladder to the Cord, he said, ‘Dear Friends, pledge this Cup of Suffering before you sin, as I have now done; for Sin and Suffering have been presented to me, and I have chosen the suffering Part.’ Then the Cord being about his Neck, he said, ‘Now I am near my last, and I desire to reflect on no Man, I would only acquaint you of one Thing, The Commissioner and I went out to the Fields together for one Cause, I have now the Cord about my Neck, and he is promoted to be his Majesty's Commissioner, yet for 1000 Worlds I would not change Lots with him, Praise and Glory be to Christ for ever.’ After he had prayed again a little, and given the Sign, he was turned over.

Drops of Blood confidently said to have fallen on the Commissioner's Coach.

It was very confidently asserted at this Time, that some Weeks after Mr. Guthrie's Head had been set up on the Nether Bow-port in Edinburgh, the Commissioner's Coach coming down that Way, several Drops of Blood fell from the Head upon the Coach, which all their Art and Diligence could not wipe off. I have it very confidently affirmed, that Physicians were called and enquired, if any natural Cause could be assigned for the Blood's dropping so long after the Head was put up, and especially for its not washing out of the Leather; and they could give none. This odd Incident beginning to be talked of, and all other Methods being tried, at length the Leather was removed, and a new Cover put on: This was much sooner done than the wiping off the Guilt of this great and good Man's Blood from the Shedders of it, and this poor Nation.

Sir George Mackenzie himself does not vindicate the Treatment of Mr. Guthrie.

The above Report I shall say no more of. It was generally spoken of at the Time, and is yet firmly believed by many; at this Distance I cannot fully vouch it as certain, perhaps it may be thought too miraculous for this Age we are now in: But this I will affirm, That Mr. Guthrie's Blood was of so crying a Nature, that even Sir George Mackenzie was sensible, that all his Rhetorick, tho' he was a great Master in that Art, had not been sufficient to drown it; for which Cause he very wisely past it over in Silence. This is another Instance of the Lameness of his Vindication. 1661.

S E C T. V.

Of the Sufferings of Mr. Alexander Moncrief, Mr. Robert M'vaird, and some other Ministers, not unto Death; as likewise of several Gentlemen, during this Session of Parliament, 1661.

THE Sufferings to be narrated in the After-books of this History, were alledged to be for Crimes and Misdemeanors contrary to the then Laws: But 'tis plain the Things alledged against the Two Martyrs we have been hearing of, were evidently according to standing Law and Equity, our Constitution and Statutes, overturned by this Parliament, and those which followed.

The Persecution of the Sufferers at this Time, is for Things done according to standing Law:

After the Reader hath had the vouched Narrative of the Managers Proceedings against the Two first Worthies in Scotland's Wrethlings and Battles, he cannot but stand amazed at the Impudence of some Episcopal Writers, who assert, That no Presbyterians, in the Reign of King Charles II. suffered for their Principles, and upon Matters of Conscience. Tho' it should be pretended, that my Lord Argyle and Waristoun suffered for their Compliances with the English, after they had conquered the Nation, and this be made Treason against all Sense and Reason, yet what can be said of Mr. Guthrie, whom the King himself vindicates, and all the World knew had opposed Cromwel, and several other Ministers and Gentlemen in this Session, and the After-part of this Book?

And really for Matters of Conscience.

To those then I come forward, and shall give some Account of a good many Ministers and Gentlemen, who, during the Meeting of Parliament, suffered very much, tho', by the good Providence of God, their Lives were spared for a Season. I begin with the Ministers.

I have little more to record of the Ten Ministers who were seized with Mr. Guthrie, than what has been pointed at upon the former Chapter. Their Paper, designed for a Testimony, was, when sent to Court, entertained with Threatnings and Ridicule. This, with the restless Endeavours of the Managers at Edinburgh, in this Hour and Power of Darkeness, prevailed so far, that One or Two concerned in it, fainted, and, after some verbal Acknowledgments, of which I have not heard the Tenor, got off, and were permitted to retire to their Houses.

Of the other Ministers seized with Mr. Guthrie.

None, I have heard of, was dealt more severely with by this Session of Parliament, than Mr. James Simpson Minister at Airth, of whom some Account hath been given upon the first Chapter. He was a Person of singular Piety, considerable Learning, and a most affectionate and melting Preacher. I am told he came a great Length in writing a critical and very exact Commentary upon the whole Bible, which was once in his Friends Hands; but now, with many other valuable Remains of this excellent Sufferer, it is lost.

Mr. James Simpson Minister at Airth.

Mr. Simpson was not at the Meeting in Edinburgh, August last, though I find he is charged with this in his Indictment, which, with his Answers, falling much in with Mr. Guthrie's Process above insert, I do not insert here.

Towards the Beginning of June, after he had been accused in Parliament by the King's Advocate, of seditious Practices, and the Copy of a Libel sent him to answer in Prison; such was the Justice of this Period, that the Parliament, without allowing him to be heard, or, as far as I can find, so much as once sitting him before them, banished him the King's Dominions; which some questioned whether a Scots Parliament could do. He was cast in with Mr. M'vaird, and underwent the same Fate, both of them dying in Holland.

Banished without a public Hearing.

The Reverend Mr. Alexander Moncrief, Minister of the Gospel at Scoonie in Fife, was another of those Ministers, and was indeed very hardly dealt with. I shall give a distinct Account of this singularly pious and useful Minister, from some Hints I have from very good Hands, and the Parliament-records: His Papers were burnt some Time before his Death, and his Contemporaries much gone; and 'tis to be regretted so lame an Account can be given of this Man of God. I shall put all I have to say of this good Man in this Place; and indeed much of it concerns this Period.

Mr. Alexander Moncrief Minister at Scoonie.

During the Usurpation, Mr. Alexander Moncrief was persecuted by the English for his Loyalty to the King, and his constant praying for him. His House was many Times searched and rifled by the English, and he obliged to hide. Upon the Sabbath he had Spies set upon him, and was closely watched where he went after Preaching. Frequently he was hotly pursued pursued; and one Time a Party of Horse came after him when fleeing, and by a special Providence, tho' attacked once and again by them, by his own Fortitude and Resolution he got clear of them, and escaped at that Time. Thereafter in a neighbouring Congregation he was seized, and imprisoned some Time, merely for praying for the King.

Being shortly after liberate, he was pitched upon, as a Person of great Courage and Boldness, to present the Protestation and Petition against the Toleration, and other Encroachments upon the Church and State, October 1658. sign'd by himself and several other Ministers of Fife, to General Monk. This he did with the greatest Firmness, and it exposed him further to the Extremities of that Time.

All the Return he had to those Sufferings for his Loyalty, was, as we heard, August 23^d last, to be seized when petitioning according to Law. For any Thing I can find, he continued under Confinement till July 12th this Year; and every Body, and he himself expected he should never have been liberate till he came to a Scaffold.

Much about the Time with Mr. James Guthrie, he had his Indictment and Charge sent him, which I have not seen, but find it run upon his having a Share in the Remonstrance, and in forming the Causes of God's Wrath; and he refused to retract any Thing in them. He was several Times brought before the Parliament, and his Prosecution for his Life was so hot, that the Earl of Athole and others in Parliament, particularly interested and concerned in Mr. Moncrief and his Wife, being importuned by her to appear for him in Parliament, dealt with her to endeavour to prevail with him to recede from some of his Principles, otherwise, they told her, it was impossible to save his Life. This excellent Woman answered, 'That they all knew she was happy in a good Husband, that she had great Affection to him, and many Children; yet she knew him to be so stedfast to his Principles where his Conscience was concerned, that no Body needed deal with him upon that Head; for her Part, before she would contribute any Thing that would break his Peace with his Master, she would rather choose to receive his Head at the Cross.'

About this Time likewise, two Ladies of the first Quality were pleased to concern themselves so far in Mr. Moncrief, as to provide a handsom Compliment in Plate (which was not unusual at this Time) and send it to the Advocate's Lady. Afterwards they went and visited her, and addressed her in his Behalf, but were told, It was impossible to save his Life; and the Compliment was returned.

Yet Providence so over-ruled this Matter, that Mr. Moncrief being much respected, and his Hardships almost universally regretted upon Account of his eminent Piety, Integrity, and Uprightness, severals of all Ranks and different Perswasions, and unknown to him, did zealously, and without any Application, interpose for him; so that the Spirits of some of his hottest and most violent Persecutors, who had resolved upon his Death, began to soften and become more friendly. His Process lingered till, after a tedious Imprisonment, he fell sick, and obtain'd the Favour of Confinement to a Chamber in Edinburgh.

By the Records of Parliament, I find they passed the following Sentence upon him, July 12th. 'The King's Majesty and Estates of Parliament, having considered the Report of the Lords of Articles anent the Process against Mr. Alexander Moncrief Minister of Scoonie, and his own Carriage before them, in owning his Accession to the Remonstrance and Causes of God's Wrath, do accordingly declare the said Mr. Alexander to be for ever incapable of exercising any publick Trust, Civil or Ecclesiastick, and also discharge him of all publick Trust, Civil or Ecclesiastick within this Kingdom, until, in the next Session of Parliament, further Order be taken concerning him, and discharge him in the mean Time to go to the said Parish.'

And to give the Reader all I have of this worthy Person together. After this Sentence, when living peaceably some Eight or Nine Miles from his Parish, People began to resort to him, and hear him preach in his own Family; whereupon, under a most severe Storm in the Middle of Winter, by virtue of an Act we shall afterwards meet with, he was charged to remove from his House, and required to live Twenty Miles from his Charge, and Seven or Eight Miles from a Bishop's Seat or Royal Burgh, and was with his Family forced from his House, and obliged to wander in that great Storm. And when he had transported his Furniture to a Place at a competent Distance, even there he got a Second Charge to remove to a further Distance, till he was obliged to transport his Family to a remote Place in the Highlands, where his good God, who had all along countenanced and supported him wonderfully in his Troubles, honoured him to be instrumental in the Conversion of many.

Thereafter, the Persecution somewhat abating, he brought his Family to Perth for the Education of his Children, where he continued preaching the Gospel; a few at first, but afterwards a great many attended his Ministry. Being informed against, we may easily guess by whom, a Party of the Horse-Guards were sent to apprehend him, but he escaped, tho' his House was narrowly and rudely searched: This forced him from his Family, and he was obliged to lurk a good While.

At length he came in with his Family to Edinburgh, where he preached the Gospel many Years in private, under a Series of Trouble and Persecution. He was intercommuned, as we shall hear, and his House and many other Places in and about the City narrowly searched for him.

him, yet he was always marvellously hid. Many Instances might be given when he went to the Country. Many Times Parties of the Guards were sent in Quest of him, and sometimes he would meet them in his Return, and pass through them unknown. When he was lodged in a remote Part of the Suburbs of Edinburgh, a Captain with a Party of the regular Troops, searched every House and Chamber of the Clofs, save the House where he lodged, into which they never entred, tho' the Door was open.

At another Time when he was lurking in a private Family without the Wall of Edinburgh, a Party was sent to apprehend him; providentially he had gone out to walk near by the House where he was: The Party observing him, and by his Gravity suspecting him a Minister, one of them said, That may be the Man we are seeking: Nay, said another, he would not be walking there; thus they entred into the House and searched it narrowly for him. Again, when advertised that the Soldiers were coming to search for him in his own House, he lingred till another Minister came in to him, and said, Sir, you must surely have a Protection from Heaven, that you are so secure here, when the Town is in a Disorder, and a general Search to be made; and immediately he went off. In a little Mr. Moncrief went out, and he was not well down Stairs, when the Guard came up and searched his House. He took a little Turn in the Street, and came back to his House again, just as the Guards went off.

Those and many other Preservations he could not but remark. But the Persecution still continuing, and turning hotter, he was obliged to dismiss, and scatter his Family for some Time. He was solicited, when in those Circumstances, to leave the Kingdom, and had an ample Call to Londonderry in Ireland; yet he always declined to leave his native Country, and in his pleasant Way used to say, "He would suffer where he had sinned, and essay to keep Possession of his Master's House, till he should come again." He had a sore Sickness about the Beginning of June 1680. I have in mine Eye a large Collection of heavenly Expressions he then had, too long to be here inserted.

Is invited to Londonderry, but continues in Scotland till his Death, June 1688.

Mr. Moncrief's Memory is yet savoury to many; and there are several alive who can bear Witness that God was with him and in him of a Truth. He left many Seals of his Ministry in Fife, and was a most faithful and painful Minister. His Sufferings are a little hinted at in The fulfilling of the Scriptures, p. 343. But such was his Self-denial, that tho' he be not named nor his Persecutors, as long as he lived he would not suffer that Book to be in his Family. He lived till Harvest 1688. and so may be said indeed to have kept Possession of his Master's House till he came back; as he frequently used to express his own Hopes under this dark Period of Sufferings. He was mighty in Prayer, and a singular Prevailer; and I have some remarkable and strange Returns of his Prayers well vouched before me, not so needful to be insert here. I wish his worthy Son, at present a reverend and useful Minister in this Church, could be prevailed with to give us the Life of this holy Person.

I find Mr. Robert Trail, Mr. John Stirling, and some other of the Ministers who were seized August last, toward the Beginning of March this Year before the Lords of the Articles; where it is observed by one who appears no great Friend of theirs, that they had very handsome Speeches in their own Vindication. None of them I have heard of were brought before the Parliament, save Mr. Trail, a Copy of whose Speech to the Parliament deserves a Room here, being all I have to give the Reader of this worthy Person, and from it he may easily gather both his Indictment and Defences; and it follows.

Mr. Robert Trail, Mr. John Stirling, and others, before the Lords of Articles, in March.

My Lord,

I Do rejoyce to see my Lord Commissioner his Grace, your Lordships, and this honourable Company upon this Bench, and shall, in the Beginning, humbly beg, that I may be allowed so to answer my Libel as becomes a Minister of the Gospel, and as one who desires to remember that I have an higher Judge to answer, even one who is higher than the Kings of the Earth, before whose Tribunal all of us must ere long be sited, there to be judged, and receive according to what we have done in the Body, whether good or evil. Knowing therefore the Terror of the LORD, and the certain and speedy coming of that Day, I dare not use Flatteries to Men, nor Dissimulation, but speak the Truth in Sincerity and Singleness of Heart, as before him who tries and searches the Reins.

Mr. Trail's Speech before the Parliament.

My whole Libel drives at this, To prove me guilty of High Treason, as having been disloyal to my King, and his Authority and Government, grievous Crimes, and Iniquity to be indeed punished by the Judges, if it could be proven against me, and would contradict the Doctrine which I have at that Time preached before many Witnesses, yea in the Face of unjust Usurpers, for which I was challenged, when I was preaching to my own People, in hearing of some of their Commanders upon my ordinary Text, which therefore I would not * balk. *John 16. 2. The Time shall come, when they who kill you, shall think they do * Alas!* God Service: But I bless the LORD I came fair off in that Debate, without any Advantage to them, or Shame to my self, or the Word I preached.

I did often, both in private and publick, witness and declare against that base and treasonable Tender, when it was pressed upon the Land. I have always laboured, and do still, even to keep in Mind that Divine Precept given by a great King, even Solomon; Fear God and 1661.

'the King, and follow not them that are given to Changes: And of a greater than Solomon, Give unto Cesar the Things that are Cesar's, and to God the Things that are God's. I willingly subscribe to that which is in the Imperial Law, where it is said to be a great Sacrilege, eripere Casari quod ejus est; how much more must it be the greater Sacrilege, eripere Christo quod ejus est?'

'In answering the Particulars of my Libel, I cannot altogether keep Silence as to the many bitter and injurious Words, wherewith it is stuffed, as that I have laid aside all Loyalty to my Prince, all natural Affection to my Country and Countrymen, and all Respect to Law: Those of your Lordships who know me, will allow me more Charity than to think me such an one; and such as know me not, I hope, will suspend their Judgment till they know me: Yea, I durst appeal to my Lord Advocate's own Conscience, if he thinks me to be such a Man. But I have not so learned Christ, yea, I have learned of him not to render Evil for Evil, or Railing for Railing, but contrariwise, Blessing; and therefore I do from my Heart pray for the honoured Drawer up of the Libel, as I would do for my self, that the LORD would bless him with his best Blessings, and would give him to find Mercy in the Day of the Lord Jesus.'

'The Particulars of my Libel are Four, and I shall answer to them shortly and ingenuously as they ly there.'

'The first is, That Remonstrance which was presented to the Committee of Estates at the End of the Year 1650. Whatever be said against that Paper in my Libel, or whatever be said for it by the Presenters and Compilers of it, I shall need say nothing of it at present, but that I was neither at the contriving or presenting of it. It is well known that I was then in the Castle of Edinburgh, besieged there by the unjust Invaders of this Land; and what my Carriage was there in exhorting and encouraging that Garison to be faithful to the great Trust committed to them, having the chief Strength of the Land in their Custody, and the Registers embarked with them; what, I say, my Carriage was there, my Brethren who were there with me, Mrs. Hamilton, Smith, and Garvan can testify. I did resolve to lay down my Life in the Defence of that Place for his Majesty, and my Country's Service, if the Lord should please to call me to it; yea, I did run a very great Hazard by a dangerous Wound which I received; and shall I be no otherwise rewarded than by having such a Libel drawn up against me! Which, I may say, hath been more sad to read and think upon, than all the Pain and Danger I was at that Time under; yet I hope your Lordships, especially my Lord Commissioner, know better how to reward Soldiers who have hazarded Life in their Service.'

'The 2^d Point of my Libel is, The Book of the Causes of God's Wrath, which, I grant, is more ticklish to answer, and therefore I shall speak the more warily to it. I do not deny that I was present at that Meeting, when those Things were spoken of and confessed, when some Brethren did meet to mourn before the LORD, who hid his Face from us, and whose Hand had gone forth against us with much Wrath and sore Judgments, and had brought Kirk and State under the Feet of proud Usurpers: I believe your Lordships will judge it no Treason, at such Times, for Ministers of the Gospel, who, by virtue of their Office, are called to be among the wise Men, to whom the Mouth of the LORD hath spoken, to declare wherefore the Land does mourn; for these, I say, to meet for Prayer, and confessing their own Sins, and of their Rulers, according to the commanded Practice of the Servants of GOD in former Times, in the like Case. Neither can it be accounted Treason in such a Case to seek the LORD's Face, and to enquire into the provoking and procuring Causes of so much Wrath as had come upon us. I am perswaded there are many Things in that Book which none here will deny to be the uncontroverted Guilt of this Land, such as Atheism and Ignorance in many, despising of the Lord Jesus Christ offered in the Gospel, Neglect of the Exercises of Religion and Godliness in Families, greater and smaller; those have been great Sins in the Land, yea, continue to be so, and receive a great Aggravation from the great and wonderful Deliverance which the LORD hath wrought for us, as if we had been delivered to continue in all those Abominations; and when the LORD hath bound up and strengthened our Arm, we rebel against him.'

'But I know it is not those Things I am challenged for, neither is it the Two Articles cited in the Libel, but the 5th and 6th Step of Defection under the 9th Article, to which I shall answer.'

'The first of them, 'The closing a Treaty with the King, after he had given such Evidence of his Disaffection and Enmity to the Work of GOD,' as it is in the Book.' To this I say Two Things, 1st, That I never did deny his Majesty's just Right and Title to the Government of these Kingdoms, and did always acknowledge him the only righteous Heir of those Crowns; and I do now from my Heart bless the LORD, who hath in so wonderful and peaceable a Way brought him to the full Possession of them, purposing to live in all true and due Loyalty under his Government, and praying, that he who is set over Men, may be just, ruling in the Fear of God, that his Reign may be long and prosperous, and a Blessing

Blessing to these Lands, that when he shall have fulfilled his Days, and laid by his earthly Crown, he may receive a greater and better, which fadeth not away, but is eternal in the Heavens. But in the 2^d Place, I cannot deny, unless I should lie against my own Conscience, that I was at that Time convinced, there was not Care enough to get him brought off from his Prejudices against the Work of Reformation, and from some contrary Principles which he had drunk in from his tender Years, that so when he came to be invested with the Royal Power, he might improve the same the more for the LORD, and for his Work in his Dominions, according to the Oath to be taken by the King who shall reign in Scotland; the which Oath his Majesty did take at the Coronation at Scone. Neither is my Meaning in that Article, as if his Majesty, not giving full Satisfaction to the just Desires of Church and State, should never have been invested into his Power, but that more Care should have been taken, previously thereunto, to have brought him to a cordial Owning of the Work of God in these Lands, which, as I believe, would have been acceptable Service to GOD, and much conducing to the Peace and Happiness of his Majesty in his Dominions. In a Word, my Meaning in that Article is, That Security for Religion, and the Work of Reformation, should be endeavoured in the first Place, that so we, according to our LORD's Direction, seeking first the Kingdom of Heaven, and the Righteousness thereof, other Things may succeed the better with us.

The next Article is, concerning taking of Malignants into the Army and Judicatories, as 'tis set down in the Causes of God's Wrath. To this I say, There is nothing allerted there, but what is clearly consonant to the Word of GOD, and to the received Doctrine of this Church according to the Word, as may be seen in the many Declarations, Remonstrances, Warnings, and Causes of Fasts, emitted and printed by the supreme Judicatories of this Church: For if it be a commanded Duty to put into Places of Trust and Power, Men fearing God, Men of Truth, and hating Covetousness; then must the Neglect of that be a Sin, and so a Cause of Wrath.

The 3^d Point of my Libel is, That Supplication which was drawn up and subscribed by some few Ministers here at Edinburgh, in August last, for which we were imprisoned by the honourable Committee of Estates, and upon which I am cited this Day to answer before your Lordships. That Petition is misrepresented in the Libel, as if I had therein been injurious to his Majesty; whereas, I can say, I had not in that the least Thought of Disloyalty against his Majesty, but on the contrary I did most willingly and cheerfully subscribe that Supplication, as a Testimony of my Loyalty to my King, and of my ardent Desire to have Wrath holden off his Throne and Dominions, by a humble Minding him of the sacred Ties of the Covenant which he had taken on, and by earnestly supplicating him, that he would walk according to those, both in his Court and Family, and in the Government of his Kingdoms; and I do desire, in the LORD's Strength, and through his Grace, to adhere to that Supplication as long as I live, as a real Evidence of my Loyalty, and as a Testimony to those blessed Covenants, which are now so much spoken against.

The last Point of my Libel is, The imperfect Scroll of a Letter and Instructions, which were found with us at our Meeting. Tho' I might say I need not own these, they never being fully written out, or once read among us, yet I will ingenuously acknowledge, they were intended to have been sent to some of our Brethren in another Part of the Country, for procuring their Subscription to our Petition, and for advising anent a Way for Charges to be furnished for sending of it up to his Majesty, by one of our Number. But the Honourable Committee did soon free us of that Trouble, and of those Charges, by sending it up their own Way, and by putting us to another Sort of Trouble, and other Charges, by Seven Months Imprisonment. I may confidently say, there was not the least Thought of stirring up any to rise in Arms, yea, we would have accounted such a Thought not only Disloyalty, but Dementation and Madness.

Now, My Lord, having shortly and ingenuously answered my long Libel, I must in all Humility beg Leave to intreat your Lordships, that you would seriously consider what ye do with poor Ministers, who have been so long kept, not only from their Liberty of preaching the Gospel, but of hearing it, that so many Congregations are laid desolate for so long a Time, and many poor Souls have put up their Regrets on their Death-bed for their being deprived of a Word of Comfort from their Ministers in the Hour of their greatest Need. The LORD give you Wisdom in all Things, and pour out upon you the Spirit of your high and weighty Employment, of Understanding, and of the Fear of the LORD; that your Government may be blessed for this Land and Kirk; that you may live long and happily; that your Memory may be sweet and fragrant when you are gone; that you may leave your Name for a Blessing to the LORD's People; that your Houses and Families may stand long, and flourish to the Years of many Generations; that you have solid Peace and Heart-joy in the Hour of the breaking of your Heart-strings, when pale Death will sit on your Eyelids, and when Man must go to his long Home, and the Mourners go about the Streets; for what Man is he that liveth and shall not see Death? or can he deliver himself from the Power of the Grave? No assuredly, for even those to whom he saith, Ye are Gods, must die as Men,

Men, seeing it is appointed for all Men once to die, and after Death is the Judgment, and after Judgment endless Eternity. Let me therefore exhort your Lordships in the Words of a great King, a great Warrior also, and a holy Prophet, Be wise, and be ye instructed, ye Judges of the Earth, serve the Lord with Fear, and rejoyce before him with Trembling: Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the Way; when his Wrath is kindled but for a little, then blessed will all those, and those only be, who put their Trust in him. Now the Lord give you in this your Day to consider the Things that belong to your eternal Peace, and to remember your latter End, that it may be well with you, World without End.'

Letter from him while in Prison, June 13.

From the seven Months Imprisonment Mr. Trail speaks of, we may guess this Speech was delivered towards the End of March. I find this good Man with the Rest, continuing in Prison June 13th, when in an original Letter of his to Mr. Thomas Wylie Minister at Kirkcudbright, I find him giving this Account. 'I need not write to you how Matters go here, this I must say, your imprisoned and confined Brethren are kindly dealt with by our kind Lord, for whose Cause and Interest we suffer; and if any of us be straitned, it is not in him, for we have large Allowance from him, could we take it. We know it fares the better with us, that you and such as you mind us at the Throne. We are waiting from Day to Day what Men will do with us; we are expecting Banishment at the best, but our Sentence must proceed from the Lord; and whatsoever it be, it shall be good as from him, and whithersoever he shall fend us, he will be with us, and shall let us know that the Earth is his, and the Fulness thereof.' This was the resigned Christian Temper of those Worthies.

Mr. John Murray
at Methven
his Process.

I have before me the original Summons of high Treason, against Mr. John Murray Minister at Methven, who was at the Meeting in Edinburgh August last, with his Answers to the Charge contained in the Summons. By the first I find, that a general Form has been used in the Citations given to all these Ministers, and, mutatis mutandis, it falls in with Mr. Guthrie's Indictment; therefore I do not swell this Work with it, nor with Mr. Murray's Answers, which agree with Mr. Guthrie's and Mr. Trail's, save that Mr. Murray was neither at the framing the Remonstrance, or Causes of God's Wrath. What Issue the Parliament came to as to Mr. Murray, I know not; it would seem he was turned over with others to the Council.

We shall find, that the Parliament some Way remitted those imprisoned and confined Ministers to the Council; and from their Registers this Year, I shall be in case to give some further Hints about them. The two Ministers of Edinburgh were soon turned out, and all the Rest of their Brethren there save one, who was termed the Nest-egg.

James Kirke of Sunday-well, his Sufferings.

This is all come to my Hand, as to the Sufferings of those worthy and excellent Persons, who were in the Meeting August last; unless it be those of James Kirke of Sunday-well, which I shall likewise give a Hint of in this Place. This religious and zealous Gentleman was detained Prisoner near Four Months after he was seized: Thereafter he was not forgot in the Act of Fines, and paid 600 Merks of Fines, and 300 by way of Cess to the Soldiers who uplifted it. In a little Time after, one Paterfson, by an Order from the Council, got his Bond for a considerable Sum, which afterward he compounded for 200 Merks. In the Year 1666. for mere not Hearing, he was fined by Sir James Turner in 500 Merks, and paid 300 to him, after Eight Soldiers had continued in his House a long Time. Before the rising at Pentland, because of his Nonconformity, he was so oppressed with Parties of Horse and Foot Soldiers every Day, that he was obliged to dismiss his Family in the Month of October, and leave his House and all he had in it, to be disposed of as they saw good. And after Pentland, upon Alledgance that he had been there, though it could never be proven, he was obliged to leave the Kingdom for Three Years. And when he returned, he was put to a prodigious Charge by a Process of Forfeiture, raised against him by the Lord Lyon, which continued till his Death. He was succeeded in his Estate by James McClelland, whom we shall afterwards meet with under very grievous Sufferings.

Mr. Patrick
Gillespie.

The next Minister I name is Mr. Patrick Gillespie, first Minister in the Town, and then Principal of the College of Glasgow. His Works speak for him, and evidence him a Person of great Learning, Solidity, and Piety, particularly what Remains we have of his excellent Treatises upon the Covenants of Grace and Redemption; and 'tis Pity we want the Three other Parts upon those Subjects, which he wrote and finished for the Press.

His Compliance with Cromwell.

By some he was said to be a Person of a considerable Height of Spirit, and was blamed by many for his Compliances with the Usurper, and there is no doubt he was the Minister in Scotland who had the greatest Sway with the English when they ruled here, yea, almost the only Presbyterian Minister that was in with them. This laid him open to many heavy Reflections, and we need not wonder he was attacked by the Managers at this Time, when so many who had stood firm to the King's Interest, were so ungenerously treated: Besides, he was on the protesting Side, and had no small Share in the Western Remonstrance, and probably it fared the worse with all the Ministers of that Judgment, because of the Reproaches cast on him, and the Compliances made by him.

Brought before the Parliament
March 6.

The King had a particular Design against him for his open Dealings with the Usurpers, and we have heard, it was with some Difficulty the Managers were excused for sparing him. We left left him last Year imprisoned in Stirling Castle, and he was brought in to Edinburgh, and March 6th staged before the Parliament, where his Indictment was read: I have not seen a full Copy of it, but find the following Abstract in the Papers of this Time. 1661.

That he contrived, compiled, consented to, and subscribed the Paper called The Western Remonstrance, which he also produced in several Judicatories, when it was declared treasonable, and condemned by the Parliament or Committee of Estates. That he consented to, or approved that abominable Pamphlet called The Causes of God's Wrath, containing many treasonable wicked Lies and Expressions against the King and his Royal Father, and which by the late Committee of Estates was appointed to be burnt by the Hand of the Hangman. That he kept constant Correspondence with Cromwel the Usurper. That at Westminster, and in and about London, he preached in his Presence seditious Sermons; that he prayed for him as supreme Magistrate; that for his so doing he received from him several Gifts, and great Sums of Money.

Heads of his Indictment.

After his Indictment was read, he had a long and pertinent Speech, which I have not seen, but am told that therein he gave his Sense of The Western Remonstrance, and of The Causes of God's Wrath: And as to his receiving Money from Cromwel, he confessed it; but said, he never put a Farthing in his own Pocket; that he fought it and got it for the University, and if that was blame-worthy, he acknowledged his Crime: But it was his Opinion, if he could have drained the Usurper's Coffers for so good an End as the Service of the College, it could have been no Disservice to the King. He ended with a Desire that he might be allowed to give in a Paper containing his Sense of the Remonstrance, and other Things in the late Times. The Parliament ordained him to give in his Defences in Writ, to the Lords of Articles, the 13th Instant; and if he should offer any Paper to them, that they should hear it.

His Speech in answer to it.

No further as to his Process hath come to my Hand. He had Friends in the House, and Favour was shown him; an Aggravation certainly of the Managers Severity against such who had never gone his Lengths. Towards the End of May I find him before the Parliament, confessing Civil Guilt, and asking Pardon of the House, submitting himself to his Majesty's Mercy and Favour; and the Parliament transmitted his Supplication to the King. I have not seen a Copy either of his Sense of the Remonstrance, or this Supplication; but have heard that he renounced the Protestation, and some Expressions in The Causes of God's Wrath, and Lex Rex, and declared his Grief for his Compliance with the English. And his Supplication bears, that, 'He acknowledged he had given Offence to his Majesty by the Remonstrance, and otherwise, which he now was sorry for, and did disclaim, and therefore call himself upon the King's Mercy, and humbly desired the Commissioner his Grace, and the Parliament, to proffer his Petition to his Majesty;' or to this Effect.

It may be made some Acknowledgment before the Parliament.

This was interpreted by the Parliament an Acknowledgment of Guilt; and some Words in his Declaration and Supplication were indeed strained further than he intended: And they interceded for him, and in a little Time he was liberated, and confined to Ormistoun, and Six Miles round it, as we may afterwards hear.

And is liberated

Mr. Gillespie's going this Length was much condemned at this Time, as a Step of great Fainting in a Person of his Forwardness, Zeal, and Activity during the preceding Years. The Beginnings of his yielding, when signified to Mr. Rutherford, were distressing to him on his Death-bed; and Mr. James Guthrie, who lived to see his Paper, said, And hath he suffered so much in vain, if it be in vain? In an original Letter of Mr. McVain's, dated June 5th this Year, he expresses himself thus, 'Mr. Gillespie's Submission in quitting the Remonstrance, with some other Expressions in the Submission, that are strained beyond his Meaning, have sadly stumbled many, and are like to be the minimum quod sic of Satisfaction that shall be accepted from any that follow.'

His Practice condemned by many.

That bright shining Light of this Time Mr. Samuel Rutherford, may very justly come in among the Sufferers, during this Session of Parliament. To be sure he was a Martyr both in his own Resolution, and in Mens Designs and Determination. He is so well known to the learned and pious World, that I need say very little of him. Such who knew him best, were in a Strait whether to admire him most for his sublime Genius in the School, and peculiar Exactness in Matter of Dispute and Controversy, or his familiar Condescensions in the Pulpit, where he was one of the most moving and affectionate Preachers in his Time, or perhaps in any Age of the Church.

Mr. Samuel Rutherford high Character.

He seems even to have outdone himself as well as every Body else, in his admirable, and every Way singular Letters; which, tho' jested upon by profane Wits, because of some familiar Expressions, yet will be owned of all who have any Relish of Piety, to contain such sublime Flights of Devotion, and to be fraughted with such massy Thoughts, as loudly speak a Soul united to Jesus Christ in the closest Embraces, and must needs at once ravish and edify every serious Reader.

His Letters

The Parliament were to have had an Indictment laid before them, against this holy Man, if his Death had not prevented it. After his Book LEX REX had been ordered to be burnt at the Cross of Edinburgh, and the Gate of the New College of St. Andrews, where he was Divinity-professor; in their great Humanity they were pleased, when every Body knew Indictment against him designed.

1661.

Mr. Rutherford to be in a dying Condition, to cause cite him to appear before them at Edinburgh, to answer to a Charge of high Treason. But he had a higher Tribunal to appear before, where his Judge was his Friend.

He dies in March.

Mr. Rutherford died in March this Year, the very Day before the Act Rescissory was passed in the Parliament. This eminent Saint and faithful Servant of Jesus Christ, lamented, when near his End, that he was withheld from bearing Witness to the Work of Reformation since the 1638. and giving his publick Testimony against the evil Courses of the present Time; otherwise he was full of Peace and Joy in believing. I have a Copy before me of what could be gathered up of his dying Words, and the Expressions this great Man had during his Sickness, too large to be insert here.

Mr. Robert
McVaird.

The reverend Mr. Robert McVaird deserves the next Room in this Section. He was Minister of the Gospel at Glasgow, and a Person of great Knowledge, Zeal, Learning, and remarkable ministerial Abilities. This good Man, and fervent affectionate Preacher, in February this Year, when the Designs of the Managers in Parliament began to appear, and that nothing less was resolved upon than the overturning the whole covenanted Work of Reformation, had a Sermon in the Trone-church at Glasgow, upon a Week-day, wherein he gave his Testimony against the Courses now entered upon, which was the Foundation of a severe Prosecution.

Heads of his Sermon, February
this Year.

A Copy of this excellent Sermon lies before me: The Text was, Amos 3. 2. You only have I known of all the Families of the Earth; therefore I will punish you for all your Iniquities. He had preached upon it for some Time upon the Week-days, and in this Discourse goes through the Sins and Iniquities now abounding, which were drawing down the Punishment threatened in the Text, in a most serious, close, and pathetic Manner; and after he has in a fluent Oratory, of which he was peculiarly a Master, run through abounding personal Sins, and those of the City he preached to, he comes to the general and national Sins at present abounding. Some few Hints may not be unacceptable; he begins with national Backsliding from God.

‘Alas, says he, may not God expostulate with us, and say, We are backslidden with a perpetual Backsliding, and what Iniquity have you found in him? We make our selves Transgressors by building the Things we lawfully and laudably destroyed: And if a Word in Sobriety be dropt against such a Course, one presently forfeits his Reputation, and passes for a hot-headed and turbulent Person--- This Leaven hath leavened the whole Lump; we are backslidden in Zeal and Love--- The Glory of a begun Reformation in Manners is eclipsed, and an Inundation of Profanity come in--- Those who once cried, Grace, grace, to the Building, are now crying, Raze, raze it--- Many who once loved to walk abroad in the Garment of Godliness, now persecute it--- The faithful Servants of Christ are become Enemies, because they tell the Truth--- The upright Seekers of God, are the Marks of great Mens Malice--- He that in this general Backsliding departs from Iniquity, makes himself a Prey; and may become so to Councils and Synagogues. May it never be said of faithful Ministers and Christians in Scotland, We have a Law, and by this Law they must die! Backsliding is got up to the very Head, and corrupts the Fountains, and Wickedness goeth forth already from some of the Prophets, through the whole Land. The whole Head is sick, the whole Heart is faint, and many of his Disciples are like to go back--- What would our Fathers, who laid the Foundation of our Reformation, think, if they saw our State? Would they not say, Is this the Church of Scotland? How is thy Gold become dim?--- The Foundations are out of Course, the noble Vine is degenerate to the Plant of a strange Vine--- Is this the Land that joyned in Covenant with the Lord? Are those the Pastors and Rulers that bound themselves so solemnly, and acknowledged their former Breaches?--- How hath the faithful City turned an Harlot! What shall the End of those Things be?--- We are in a forlorn Condition; Sin is become national by Precept and Practice; Sins nationally condemned are become National by Precept, and Evil is called Good, and Good Evil--- We walk willingly after the Commandment, and there is not a Party so much as to offer a Dissent.’

After he has enlarged upon these Things, in Scripture-eloquence, and a most moving Way, he gives a good many pertinent Directions to mourn, consider, repent and return, to wrettle and pray, and pour out their Souls before the Lord; and encourages them to those from this, ‘That God will look upon those Duties, as their Dissent from what is done prejudicial to his Work and Interest, and mark them among the Mourners in Zion.’

The Passage
most observed.

But the Passage most noticed was that, with which he closes the Sermon, after what I have just now set down. ‘As for my own Part, as a poor Member of this Church of Scotland, and an unworthy Minister in it, I do this Day call you, who are the People of God, to witness, That I humbly offer my Dissent to all Acts which are or shall be passed against the Covenants, and Work of Reformation in Scotland: And 2^{dly}, protest, That I am desirous to be free of the Guilt thereof, and pray, That God may put it upon Record in Heaven.’ Thus he ends his Sermon, as my Copy, taken from his Mouth, bears.

He is brought in under a Guard to Edinburgh, and indicted.

The Noise of this Sermon quickly flew abroad, and Mr. McVaird was brought in to Edinburgh under a Guard, and imprisoned: Very soon he had an Indictment given him by the King’s Advocate, for Sedition and treasonable Preaching. I have not seen the Copy of it, but we

we may easily guess its Nature from what I have extracted from the Sermon; and Sir John Fletcher could easily flourish his Pen on such a Subject. He was allowed Lawyers, and his Process was pretty long, and tedious. I know no further of it, than by his own Papers following, and the original Letter above cited, to Mr. Wylie, June 5.

1661.

Where he says, 'I know you have heard of the sad, and yet, in many respects, sweet and comfortable News of stedfast and faithful Mr. Guthrie's Death, Saturday last. Upon Thursday I was called in before the Parliament, and expected to have accompanied him, but the President, my Lord Crawford, shifted it off that Day. I was sent back again to Prison, to be in a Readiness against the next Diet. That Night they adjourned to this Tuesday, when I expected to be called, but was not. It is thought they were expecting Mr. Sharp's Brother with new some Orders, which made them sist. I expect to be called in to Morrow the 6th. Dear Brother, there is no Way for us to stand upon our Feet before such Fury and Force, but by your and our falling upon our Knees, praying with all Manner of Prayer and Supplication, to be strengthened with all Might, according to his glorious Power unto all Long-suffering and Patience with Joyfulness. What will be the Issue of my Process, whether Death or Banishment, I know not; and he can put me in Case to say, I care not. Pray for nothing to us but Stedfastness.' Mr. Gillespie's Submission, &c. as I have already set down above. And then he tells him, he has sent Argyle and Mr. Guthrie's Speeches. And adds, 'Before this come to your Hands, my Business will be at some Close. God may restrain them, but I expect the Sentence of Death. O! for a Heart to give him this Head, I desire not this to be much noised till you hear further, lest my Friends hear of it; only pray for Strength to us to endure to the End. Time will permit me to say no further, save that I am,'

His own Account of this in a Letter.

Your unworthy Brother
in Bonds, R. M.

Accordingly, June 6th, he was brought before the Parliament, where he had a very publick Opportunity to give a Proof of his eminent Parts and solid Judgment. His charming Eloquence was owned even by his Adversaries, and he defended, by Scripture and Reason, his Expressions in his Sermon. I have no more of this great Man's Case than his Speech at the Bar of the House; and therefore I insert it here.

June 6th, he appears before the Parliament.

Mr. Robert M'Vaird, Minister of the East-quarter in Glasgow, his Speech before the Parliament, Thursday, June 6th.

My Lord President,

SINCE it is permitted, that I may speak before my Lord Commissioner his Grace, and this Honourable Court of Parliament, I must in the Entry confess, That I am neither so far below nor above all Passion and Perturbation of Mind, as not to be somewhat troubled, yea sensibly touched, to see and feel my self thus loaded with the Crime, and lashed with the Reproach of a traiterous and seditious Person: But with all I must say this also, That Nil conscire sibi, nulla pallescere culpa, doth exceedingly sweeten the Bitterness of this Lot, and mitigate the Asperity of my present Trouble. It is to me muris aeneus indeed, a brazen Wall and Bulwark against the Storm, Tempest, and Impetuosity of Calumny and Reproach, that herein, according to my weak Measure, I have endeavoured to exercise my self, to have and keep a Conscience void of Offence, as to that particular Guilt wherewith I am charged in my Indictment: This, I say, is sufficient to make me digest those hard and heavy Things, without grieving or grudging, and to guard me against an unprofitable Overplus of cutting and disquieting Anxiety, even when I am so odiously represented to the World; so that my Enemies are not those of mine own House, because not within me.

His Speech that Day.

And now, My Lord, I hope I may, without Vanity or Offence, say, what in Part is known to be no Fiction or Falshood, That my Carriage, since my first Appearance before my Lord Commissioner his Grace, and the honourable Parliament, (whatever else was wanting in it, which were to be wished, as much was, I grant, and yet is) hath, to Conviction, spoke forth so much Ingenuity and Candor, as I may some way suppose my self above the just Suspicion of having chosen the Tongue of the Crafty, or used Deceit or Dissimulation in any Thing about which I was questioned; since I have, with so much Simplicity, and in so much Singleness of Heart, declared, either without Alteration or Addition, what I spoke, notwithstanding I easily foresaw how I might, and probably would be supposed by many to have lost, at least laid aside the greatest Part of my little Reason, while I plainly spoke my Knowledge and Conscience: But, My Lord, it neither was nor is my Desire to covet or court the Reputation of Wise and Prudent, especially of being wise above what is written. I am satisfied to be lookt upon as an ingenuous Man, who dare not venture to unsay or gainsay what, with some Clearness and Conviction of Truth, I have

His Apology for himself.

‘ said, either for Fear of Prejudice and Hurt, or Hope of Favour and Gain; knowing that it is a very cold and vanishing Advantage which is the Price of, and purchased with the Loss of a Man’s Peace with God and himself; nay, What Gain can be in such a Case, when the Gainer himself is lost?’

‘ The Consideration hercof moved me, when challenged for some alledged Notes of a Sermon, readily to condescend upon, and without Reluctancy to give in, for Information in Point of Fact, all these Passages in that Sermon which were hinted at, but misrepresented by the Informer; which Paper I did and do own, according to which I was and am willing to be judged. If it had been a Matter of mere Humour or Indifference, I would, in order to the Satisfaction of any who might have offended at what was said, much more in order to the Satisfaction of my Superiors, whom I honour and obey in the Lord, without any Hesitation, have relinquished and retreated it, tho’ in so doing I had crossed my own Inclination, judging it below a Man and a Christian to adhere to those Things peevishly and petulantly, which he may let go without Shipwrack of a good Conscience; much more unworthy of a Minister of the Gospel, who should not have an Humour of his own, being obliged to become all Things to all Men, in order to the gaining and engaging them to be Christians.’

‘ But, My Lord, I cannot, I dare not dissemble, that having spoken nothing in those, but what I hope will be the Truth of God, when brought to the Touchstone, and such a Truth, as without being guilty of Lese-majesty against God, I durst not conceal while I spoke to the Text. I conceive my self obliged to own and adhere to it; and being persuaded also as to what was said in Hypothesis, I was so far from doing or designing what is charged upon me in the Indictment, that it was the highest Part of Loyalty toward my Prince, the greatest Note of Respect I could put upon my Superiors, the most real and unquestionable Evidence of a true and tender Affection to my Countrymen, and the Congregation over whom the Holy Ghost made me, tho’ most unworthy, an Overseer, to give seasonable Warning of the heavy Judgment which the Sin of Scotland’s Backsliding will bring on, that so we may be instructed at length to search and try our Ways, and turn to the Lord, lest his Soul be separated from us, for Wo will be to us if our Glory depart. No Man will or ought to doubt, whether it be a Minister’s Duty to preach this Doctrine in Season, and out of Season, which yet is never unseasonable, and to avow, That the Backslider in Heart shall be filled with his own Ways, and, if any Man draw back, his Soul shall have no Pleasure in him; and if so, what Evil have I done, or whose Enemy am I become for telling the Truth?’

‘ This, My Lord, being the Sum of what I said, and the Scope of my Discourse, as also of the Paper I gave in to his Grace, and the honourable Lords of Articles, and which, together with my Defences which I have reproduced, I cannot disown or retreat, without making my self a Transgressor, by destroying what I have builded, and building what I have destroyed, and so bring on my self the Guilt and Punishment of Unfaithfulness to my God, my Prince, to the High and Honourable Court of Parliament, to the whole Nation, and Souls committed to my Oversight; which I hope God will not suffer me to do, and whereof I desire to be free in the Day when I must give an Account of my Stewardship. But, My Lord, if these Things should seem hard, or sound harsh to any at first Hearing, which I shall not suppose, then, besides the Tranquillity and Calm in mine own Conscience for the Present, which is the very Rest of the Soul in Motion, and affords a strict inward Peace and Serenity of Mind, in the deepest Distress, and greatest Extremity of outward Trouble; besides this, I say, My Lord, I want not a Confidence, (at least a rational Ground for it) that I shall find more Favour afterward both of God and Men, than if I had flattered with my Lips, and, by daubing with untempered Morter, had essayed to heal the Wound of this Nation slightly.’

‘ This is all, My Lord, I intend by Way of Apology: And as to the Indictment it self, I hope it shall be found, when Things are weighed in an even Balance, that my Advocates have so abundantly, to the Conviction of all, both in Law and Reason, demonstrated the irrelevancy in the Whole, and each Article thereof, that it would be judged a needless Undertaking, and a superfluous Waste of Words, to offer any Addition to what, with so much Evidence and Strength of Reason, is by them adduced to invalidate the same; only I judge it incumbent and necessary for me, as a Minister of the Gospel, to offer a Word for Explanation and Vindication, (not of the Whole, for that were needless) but of what I have said, and do own in the 6th Article, (which yet I do not own as it is libelled) because I hear this is most stuck upon, and stumbled at, and may possibly be most liable to Mistake and Misconstruction: Therefore, in order to the removing of any Thing that may seem to stumble, or give Offence in my Practice, as either rash and irrational, or ridiculous and unwarrantable, I humbly desire it may be considered.’

Remarks on the Nature of a Ministerial Protestation.

‘ That a Ministerial Protestation against, or a Dissent from any Acts or Act which a Minister knows, and is convinced to be contrary to the Word of God, is not a legal Impugnation of that or those Acts, much less of the Authority enacting them, which it doth rather ther presuppose than deny or impugn; but it is a solemn and serious attested Declaration or Witness and Testimony against the Evil and Iniquity of these Things, which, by the Word of God, is a warrantable Practice; and here and at this Time a necessary Duty: And for which Way of protesting, or testifying, or witnessing, a Minister hath the Prophets a Pattern for his Imitation; as is clear, 1 Sam. 8. 9. Howbeit, yet protest solemnly unto them, and shew them the Manner of the King that shall reign over them. Where the Lord, to signify his great Resentment and Dislike at the People's Course and Carriage towards him, commands the Prophet in his Name to protest against their Procedure; Howbeit, yet protest solemnly unto them, (saith he) or, as the Words are rendred on the Margin of our Bible, and spoke to by Interpreters, Notwithstanding, when thou hast solemnly protested against them, &c. Which Reading seems best to agree both with the Scope, and what is said Ver. 19. It is clear also, Jeremiah, 11. 7. when the Lord sums up all his serious Exhortations to obey his Voice, and all his sharp Expostulations for not obeying his Voice, and keeping his Covenant, in this very Term of Protesting earnestly: For I earnestly protested unto your Fathers, in the Day, &c. rising up early, and protesting, saying, Obey my Voice. So that my Protestation, Testimony and Dissent not being without a precedent Practice in the Prophets, and so not without Divine Precept, cannot be called, nor ought to be accounted a Contravention of the Acts libelled in the Indictment; neither can I for this come under the Lath of the Law, unless it be said and asserted, which I know will be denied with Abhorrency and Detestation, That these Acts do discharge, under Pain of Treason, what God the Supreme Law-giver commands his Servants to do under Pain of his Displeasure, as they would not, by their unfaithful Silence, lose their own, and betray the Souls of others. So that take the Word Protesting in the Scripture-sense, for solemn declaring and witnessing against Sin, and for Duty, in which Sense alone I take it, it will not be liable to any just Exception, nor is it quarrellable, there being nothing more frequent in the Word, than such Protesting, Declaring, and Witnessing against Sin, and for Duty.

And it is observable to this Purpose, That the Word in the Original, which is rendred testify against, Deut. 8. 19. & 31. 22. 2 Kings 17. 13. 2 Chron. 24. 19. Nehem. 13. 15--21. Psalms 50. 7. and elsewhere, is the same Word which Jeremiah 11. 7. is rendred to protest, and protest earnestly, and it is so rendred often in the old Translation: Junius and Tremellius expound it confessor. And besides, I hope it will not a little contribute to remove what Matter of Offence is taken at the Manner of my Testimony, because in the Term of Dissenting and Protesting, if it be considered that all the reformed Churches of Christ this Day have their Denomination and Distinction from the Church of Rome, from a solemn publick Protestation against the Decree which was made by Charles V. and the Estates of the Empire, at — Anno — in Prejudice to Religion and Reformation, tho' I do not plead a perfect Parallel 'twixt this and that.

As to the Matter of my Protestation, I hope it will be found no less justifiable than the Manner, which, I humbly conceive, the Word of God doth put beyond Exception. I do not presume to play the Juriconsult, nor do I pretend to any Knowledge in the Formalities and Subtilties of Law, neither am I holden to know them; neither is it a Secret to any seen in the Municipal Law of the Nation, how that nothing is, or ought to be accounted for Treason, which is not a formal, direct, and downright Contravention of some Act of Parliament made thereanent, with this express Certification, That the Contravention thereof shall be Treason. But there is nothing spoken of by me in the 6th Article, which is a direct Contravention of any such Act, there being no Act of Parliament which saith, either in recto or obliquo, (directly or indirectly) That it shall be Treason in a Minister to protest, that is, in the Scripture-sense already given, to testify, declare, and witness against such Acts as are contrary to the Covenant, and prejudicial to the Work of Reformation: Therefore I humbly conceive it cannot be said, that I fall under the Compass of any such Acts, nor am I punishable by them, cum non entis nulla sunt accidentia, non causa nullus effectus.

But, My Lord, besides, my Practice seems neither contrary to Reason nor Religion, and consonant to both, it being commonly taken as a Principle, rather than tossed as a Problem, That wherethere is a jus quaesitum Domino, it is competent, incumbent and necessary for the Servant and Ambassador in the Behalf and Interest of his Lord and Master, to dissent from, and protest against all Acts made to the Prejudice of that Right: But so it is, that there was a Right acquired to the Lord my Master, whose Servant and Ambassador I am, tho' most unworthy, to wit, the Confirmation Civil of those Covenants and Vows made to and with him, for Reformation in this Church, according to his Will revealed in his Word, and the Obligation Civil of the Lieges thereunto by the Interposition of Civil Authority; therefore I humbly conceive, that as a Right cannot, at least ought not to be taken away in Prejudice of a third Party, so far less in Things concerning the Lord and his Interests, the publick Faith of the Kingdom being engaged to God to promote and secure that: So that in this Case, for me to have protested for my Master's Interests, to whom there was a Civil Right made, and to dissent from all Acts prejudicial to the same, will, I hope, be thought to be the ‘Duty of the Man who desires to approve himself to GOD, and who expects in the Day of his Accounts, the Approbation of Well done, good and faithful Servant.’

‘These, My Lord, with many other obvious and weighty Reasons, did at first preponderate with me, and pretended themselves with such Evidence and Conviction of Truth and Duty, that they were in my weak Judgment sufficient enough to persuade and press me to give this Testimony against whatsoever is prejudicial to the Covenant and Work of Reformation: And those, I hope, when weighed in the Balance of the Sanctuary, which is absolutely the evenest One, or in the Scales of rectified Reason, will still be found to have so much Weight in them, as to acquit me of any Guilt, and warranting Adherence to what I have done.’

‘Neither can I conceal this, My Lord, which is the primum and principale Movens, that when I reflect upon, and remember what I have said and sworn to GOD, in the Day when, with an uplifted Hand to the most High, I bound my Soul with the Bond of the Covenant, and engaged solemnly as I should answer to the great GOD the Searcher of Hearts, in that Day when the Secrets of all Hearts shall be disclosed, never to break these Bonds, nor cast away these Cords from me, nor suffer my self directly nor indirectly, neither by Terror nor Persuasion, to be withdrawn from owning the same.’

‘And when withal I have some Clearness in my Conscience, that the Matter of the Covenant is not indifferent, which if it were, yet in regard of the Oath and Vows of God which are upon me, it is no more indifferent to me, but puts a subjective Obligation upon me, never to be shifted or shaken off at Pleasure: The Matter, I say, is not indifferent, but necessary, and so hath an objective Obligation in it, and did morally oblige antecedently to all Oaths taken, and Acts made thereanent, and unalterably also: I cannot conceive it, I say, My Lord, when I think upon the Matter thus, That in Reflection, whether I consider my self as a Christian, who, when swearing to his own Hurt, ought not to change, or in the Capacity of a Minister of the Gospel, and Watchman, whose Office it is to give Warning of Sins and Snares, in order to the preventing of Wrath that follows upon a resolved and deliberate Violation of the sacred Bonds and Engagements to God, or Silence at the Matter in others, when called to declare, testify, and bear Witness against it, and Banishment from the Presence of the Lord, and the Glory of his Power, do never present themselves apart to my Judgment; that ever holding true, He will not hold him guiltless, (however Men may plead innocent, and palliate the Matter) who takes his Name in vain; nay, he holds him for his Enemy, and will handle him so: And therefore I humbly conceive it ought not to stumble, and I hope it will not seem strange to any, that I cannot make Light of so weighty a Matter as a Covenant made with God, for Reformation in his Church, according to his Will revealed in his Word, and Righteousness in the Land, so long as I believe the Obligation to be permanent and perpetual, because of Divine Imposition: Nay, when I lay all temporal Disadvantages, which can only affect the outward Man, that may be supposed to wait upon the keeping of that Covenant, and witnessing for it, in the Balance with the Hazard of incurring present Misery, and future Destruction of breaking thereof, (if it be persisted in) tho’ Loss appears Gain, and the one is Down-weight by so far, that it seems sufficient to anticipate all Deliberation and Consultation, as to what is to be done in my Case, seeing there needs but small Deliberation where there is no Choice. My Lord, if the Cogency of that Obligation on my Conscience had not been such as it is, and if Matters had not stood thus with me, I have not so great a Desire to speak at any Time, but I could have laid my Hand upon my Mouth at that Time when I spoke, and at this Time also, and carried as one not concerned in the present Affairs.’

His two Desires.

I.

‘I have, My Lord, only a Desire or Two to add to what I have said, and so shall shut up all I intend further to say at present. And, First, I humbly beseech my Lord Commissioner his Grace, and this Honourable and High Court of Parliament, that I may not be looked upon as a disloyal Person, either as to my Principles or Practice: I shall without Debate both give and grant, that I was never in case to do his Majesty any Service which deserves to be publicly mentioned; nor could I have shewed my self so void of Discretion, as to have spoken any Thing to that Purpose at this Time, if, being charged with Disloyalty and Treason, the Credit of my Ministry had not imposed the Necessity, and extorted it from me; so that I ought, and do mention it rather for the Vindication of my Function, than for preventing and removing Prejudice against my Person. And therefore I humbly crave Liberty to say, That tho’ I have not been in case to make my Loyalty remarkable by any signal or singular Action, yet I have sufficient Matter to clear me of Disloyalty; and if pure Negatives will not prove it, never having acted, or consented to act any Thing prejudicial to his Majesty, I hope it will be sufficient in a Minister of the Gospel to bring his Loyalty to the Quality and Consistency of a Positive. If in his Station he preached against those who usurped his Majesty’s Right, and prayed, they themselves being present, that GOD would give us Governors of our own: If this, I say, be sufficient, either to prove a Minister loyal, or to clear him of the Stain and Imputation of Disloyalty; then I want not a Cloud of Witnesses who can testify my Integrity in this Matter. And I hope, through the Grace of GOD, never to be tempted, or if tempted, never to yield to such a Temptation, whatever Measure I meet with, to repent or regret that I desired this as a Mercy of the Lord, to these much tossed and long troubled Kingdoms, That he would overturn, overturn, overturn, till he come whose Right it was; and that I rejoiced in the Day when he broke the Yoke of the Oppressors, who kept us captive in our own Land, and made the Foot of Pride who came against us, to slip. Now, my Lord, my Conscience is so clear, that there was neither Iniquity in my Heart, nor Wickedness in my Hands against his Majesty, that I have Confidence to wish, that the Issue and Decision of my Business were put upon this, Whether the Informer's Carriage, (be who he will, in the Place where I live) or mine, during the Prevalency and Usurpation of the Enemy, hath had most Loyalty in it? But I do not suspect him to be of so little Prudence, as to wish to come to this Reckoning.

The next and last Desire which I have at present humbly to propose to my Lord Commissioner his Grace, and the High and Honourable Court of Parliament, before whom I now stand to be judged, and from whom I am holden to expect all Equity and Justice, is, Since your Grace and Honours have heard my Indictment and Defences, and are to proceed towards a Sentence, that there may be some Caution and Tenderneſs as to what shall be determined in this Matter: Nay, I am obliged to hope and expect, that his Grace and the Honourable Parliament, overlooking the Despicableness and Worthlessness of the Person to be judged, who is really below the Indignation of any whom God hath set so high, will carry so in reference to this Cause and Conclusion, as it may appear, that he who is higher than the highest, who regardeth, and will bring all Causes and Sentences under a final Recognition, is regarded and eyed as standing among the Gods in this Decision. But as for me, my Lord, while I wait for the coming forth of my Sentence from his Presence, whose Eyes behold the Things that are equal; I declare, that however I cannot submit my Conscience to Men, yet I humbly, and as becometh, submit my Person. Behold, I am in your Hands, do to me whatsoever seemeth good in your Eyes.

Mr. M'Vaird's former Speech and Defences, he here refers to, I have not seen; but from this, and the strong and pathological Reasonings in it, we may have a tolerable View of his Case; and tho' it had not the Influence might have been expected, yet it had some, and the House delayed coming to an Issue at this Time. He indeed expected a Sentence of Death, which no way damped him; but his Master had more and very considerable Work for him elsewhere. Whether it was from Orders from Court to shed no more Blood, or what was the Reason, I know not, but his Affair was delayed some Time; and upon some Encouragement given him of Success, upon Munday thereafter he gave in the following Supplication.

The Parliament delay coming to an Issue.

To my Lord Commissioner his Grace, and the Honourable and High Court of Parliament, the humble Supplication of Mr. Robert M'Vaird, Minister of the Gospel,

Sheweth,

THAT whereas your Grace, and Honourable Estates of Parliament, out of much Clemency and Tenderneſs towards me, have sisted your Procedure as to final Determination, and forbore to draw forth a Censure, or pronounce a Sentence against me, (which Favour I hope shall not be forgotten so long as I can remember any Thing, and whereof I resolve I shall not cease to be sensible) until my Mind should be further and more fully known, in reference to some Particulars in my Process; I conceive my self obliged, not only in order to my own Preservation, but to his Grace and your Lordships Satisfaction, to declare positively and plainly my Mind in these Things, which my Want of Dexterity in expressing my self, hath made more dark, or liable to Mistake or Misconstruction.

His Supplication to the Parliament.

And whereas I my self have perceived, and am further informed by others, that the main and principal, if not the very Thing in my Indictment, and all along my Defences, and throughout my Discourse, which hath been offended at, is, my making Use of the Words, protest and dissent, as if I had intended thereby a legal Impugnation of the Acts or Authority of Parliament; wherein, tho' I did, in my last Discourse, in Sobriety, and according to my Measure, endeavour at some Length to clear my Meaning, asserting that I did intend a mere Ministerial Testimony, against what I conceived to be Sin; yet that it may appear that I desire not to contend about Words and Formalities, since the Words protest and dissent are forinſick, and for the most Part made Use of as legal Salvo's and Impugnations, (how ever the Word protest be used several Times in Scripture by the Prophets, as a Ministerial Testimony and solemn Declaration against Sin, as I have already hinted and held forth in some particular Instances) I am satisfied to change and pass from the Expressions of protesting and dissenting, and only to use those of Testifying, solemn Declaring, and bearing Witness, by which I still hold the Matter of my Testimony, the great and only Thing first and last intended by me, from which to pass, now especially when the Hazard is great, I assure my self, your Grace and Lordships would not only not allow me, but would count me, in doing so, void of a Principle, and unfaithful.

Why he offer-eth this.

‘ I beg Leave therefore in all Humility to signify to your Grace, and this honourable and high Court, that I am brought to offer this Alteration, not so much, if my Heart deceive me not, for the Fear of Prejudice to my Person, (tho’ being but a weak Man, I am easily reach- ed by such discomposing Passions) as from an earnest Desire to remove out of the Way any the least or remotest Occasion of Stumbling, that there may be the more ready and easy Ac- cess, without Prejudice of Words, to ponder and give Judgment of the Matter; and that likewise, if the Lord shall think fit to call me forth to suffer hard Things on this Account, it may not be said or thought by any, That it was for wilful and peremptory sticking to such Expressions, whereas I might, by using others, without Prejudice to the Matter, and no less significant, have escaped the Danger; and lest withal I should seem to insinuate, which is far from my Thoughts, and would be a rash Judgment, and harsh Censuring of others, that a Minister of the Gospel could not have sufficiently exonerated his own Conscience as to that Matter, without such formal and legal Terms and Expressions.’

‘ I shall presume to add, that if your Grace and the honourable Court of Parliament shall be graciously pleased to shew me Favour, then, as I have designed and desired to carry hitherto as a loyal Subject, abstaining from all Things that might look like a Shadow of Re- flection upon his Majesty’s Person or Government, so I still purpose through Grace to con- tinue, as knowing, that giving to God the Things that are God’s, and to Cesar the Things that are Cesar’s, and the fearing of God, and honouring the King, are inseparably joyned of the Lord together. And however, I do humbly, as becometh, prostrate my Person at your Grace and Honours Feet, to be disposed upon as shall seem good in your Eyes. Your Grace and the honourable Parliament’s Answer is expected by your truly loyal Suppli- cant,’

Mr. Robert M’Vaird.

him, July 5th.

This Supplication was given in, and tho’ one would think, with what went before, it might have softned the Persecuters, yet it had no great Effect. Mr. Sharp and his Friends resolved now to be rid, as much as they could, of the most eminent of the Presbyterian Ministers; and therefore he behoved to be banished, which was the highest they could go to, unless they had taken his Life. And so, July 5th or 6th, I find the Parliament give him for Answer, ‘ That they pass Sentence of Banishment upon the Suppliant, allowing him Six Months to tarry in the Nation, one of which only in Glasgow, with Power to him to receive the fol- lowing Year’s Stipend at Departure.’

He goes to Holland, where he continued
till his Death.

His Master had Work for him elsewhere, and that very considerable Work too; and he submitted to the Sentence, and transported himself and Family to Rotterdam, where, for a while, (after the reverend and worthy Mr. Alexander Petrie) he was employed as Minister of the Scots Congregation at Rotterdam, and edified many. Even thither his Persecuters Rage followed him, as we may afterwards hear; and he with some others were again forced to wander further off from their native Land. This worthy Person died at Rotterdam about Twenty Years after this.

Lameness of Sir George Mac-kenzie’s Vindication.

Thus the Acts of this Parliament were sealed with Blood, and many Tears of People who had their beloved Pastors torn from them, and scattered into strange Lands. The Episcopal Party will oblige us, if they can shew what Part of Sir George Mackenzie’s Vindication ac- counts for the Banishment of Mr. M’Vaird and Mr. Simpson; if they cannot, I hope this will be another Instance of its Lameness, and an Argument of its Falseness too: For, if to be banished from One’s Country, for dissenting from Acts against the covenanted Work of Reformation, was not suffering upon Principle and Persecution for Conscience Sake, pray what can be such? If exhorting People to mourn for the Defection of the Land, be Rebelli- on, then indeed Mr. M’Vaird was guilty; but I hope every Body will allow, that Mourning and Fighting are Two Things, unless preces & lachrymae sunt arma ecclesiae, be judged a re- bellious Maxim.

Attacks upon Synods this last Year illegal.

Besides those Sufferings of Ministers to Blood and Banishment, Bonds and Bondage, I might insist upon other Branches of their Sufferings; but they will come in afterwards when they turn more conspicuous in the following Years. I have already noticed the Attacks made upon Synods during this Session of Parliament, which, as it was a Contrivance of Mr. Sharp’s, so in it self was an high Invasion of the Prerogative of the Redeemer, and the exerting the Erastian Supremacy before it was an Iniquity established by a Law. I shall shut up the Sufferings of Ministers with a Hint at the Persecution of the Tongue, liberally enough bestowed upon them at this Time.

The Calumny of the wiser Presbyterian Ministers being for Prelacy, taken off.

Mr. James Sharp, and the Noblemen who joyned him about the King, under the Patronage of Chancellor Hyde, and the English High-fliers began their Designs of overturning the Go- vernment and Discipline of the Church of Scotland, by buzzing into the King’s Ear that wicked Lie, and scandalous Misrepresentation, That the Generality of the old, wise, and learned Ministers of the Church of Scotland, were for Prelacy, at least a moderate Episcopacy. This I find some of the Ministers, then living, complaining heavily of in their Letters; and Mr. Douglas takes off this Calumny, as we have heard in the Introduction.

I have

I have formerly regreted the unhappy Difference 'twixt the Resolutioners and Protesters. The woful Heats 'twixt them effectually stopped any joynt Application to the King from Presbyterian Ministers, or general Declaration of their Principles and Adherence to Presbyterian Government, save what we heard of at some Length, Section 2^d. This Silence, and these Heats cunning Mr. Sharp did not fail to improve into this gross Untruth, That the Bulk of Scots Ministers were not against Prelacy. Nothing was stuck at by this unhappy Man, now entirely corrupted by Hyde's Party at London, and bribed by and gaping after what in a little now he got, the Archbishoprick of St. Andrews.

1661.

Whereas indeed, excepting a few lax Men in the North, under Mr. Sharp's Conduct, and Promises of Bishopricks, who influenced the Synod of Aberdeen, to send up to Court a flattering Address in favour of Episcopacy; which, by the Way, came afterwards to ly very heavy on the Consciences of some of the best of the Ministers who signed it; there was indeed nothing could be more disagreeable to the whole of the Presbyterian Ministers through the Kingdom: How far soever they differed in some other Things, yet all honest Ministers centred in this.

At great Length I could make this out by particular Instances of Mr. Robert Douglas, Mr. Robert Bailie, Mr. James Wood, Mr. David Dickson, Mr. James Fergusson, and other great Men, publick Resolutioners, with whom the Courtiers dealt in the greatest Earnestness to accept of Bishopricks; but they firmly refused, and used no small Freedom with Mr. Sharp, and the Noblemen in this Matter: Mr. Douglas told the first, That the Curse of God would come to him with his Bishoprick; and the last, particularly the Chancellor, That by putting his Hand to the Ark of God with others, their Families and their own Peace at Death would be ruined.

The greatest Protestation Mr. Sharp put against the late.

This was evidently enough made out in several Instances. Yet for all this plain Dealing, of which afterwards we shall have several Instances, these worthy Men were laid under this hellish Obloquy, and the Scourge of Tongues. And Thomas Sideferf, Son to the Bishop of that Name, the Diurnaller, made it his daily Trade to bespatter the greatest Men of this Time, without the least Provocation or Foundation, such as Mr. David Dickson, Mr. Robert Blair, Mr. George Hutcheson, and many others, to that Pitch of Insolence, that the King was pleased to order that Libeller to be silenced.

The Diurnal by Sideferf stopped by the King.

I promised in this Section to take Notice next of the Trouble and Sufferings several worthy Gentlemen were brought to during this Session of Parliament, and shall be but short upon it, because most of them will come in afterward, in the Progress of this History. We shall just now meet with some Gentlemen haralled before the Council, but 'tis the Processes before the Parliament come in here. All could be objected against most of them, was, the ordinary Compliance with the English, which every Body was necessitate to give. This English Guilt was a good Handle for prosecuting such who had been active in the Work of Reformation, and had Estates, which our indigent Courtiers had their Eye upon, and by the Act of Fines, and otherwise, they reached a good many: Tho' England was indemnified, yet the ancient Kingdom must not enjoy that Favour for some Time.

Gentlemen attacked by the Parliament.

In January, towards the Beginning of this Parliament, I find the Lairds Arkinglaff, and McCondochy, the first a very considerable Family we shall afterward meet with, were forfeited by Parliament. They had been cited to appear, and did not come, not being in Safety as to their Lives, because Friends of the Family of Argyle: For any Thing I know of, nothing further was to be charged on them; and yet they found it not safe to appear. In the unprinted Acts I find a Decreet D. Ham. against Arkinglaffs; but whether it referreth to this, I know not.

Arkinglaff and McCondochy, forfeited.

February 1st, The Summons of, and Indictment against the Lord Waristoun, William Dundas, and John Hume of Kello, were this Day read in Parliament; none of them were present: The first we shall again meet with. Whether they were separately indicted, or a general Charge given against them all, I know not; all I have seen is the following Abstract of the Charge against them; that they have contravened many Acts of Parliament in the following Particulars, and therefore are guilty of Sedition and Treoson. The Particulars are, sent to the King, without Limitations, to come to this Kingdom. Their contriving and assisting in the Murder of the Marquis of Montrose. Their constant Correspondence with Oliver Cromwel in the Year 1649. instanced in several Particulars. Their contriving or assisting to the Act, called The Act of the West-kirk, and the Declaration of the Officers of the Army then made. Their drawing, contriving, or consenting to the Paper called The Western Remonstrance, and the Book called The Causes of God's Wrath. Withdrawing themselves from the King's Service and Army at Stirling, in the Time of his greatest Necessity. The said Waristoun his sitting in Parliament as a Peer in England, contrary to his Oath, and accepting the Office of Clerk-register from the Usurper Oliver Cromwel, and being President of the pretended Committee of Safety, when Richard was laid aside.

By the unprinted Acts of this Session, I find Decrets of Forfeiture are passed against Sir Archibald Johnstoun of Waristoun, and William Dundas of Magdallans, and John Hume of Kello. They did not appear, and consequently had no Answers to the above Articles; and I may safely enough refer the Reader to what hath been said upon most of them, and all of them upon the Matter, in the Marquis of Argyle's Case, and Mr. Guthrie's.

February 22^d, I find the Laird of Swinton also brought before this Parliament. We have seen he was sent down Prisoner with Argyle; being a professed Quaker, his Hat was taken off for him when he came in to the Bar. The Heads of his Indictment were; 'That being a Member of Parliament, he contrived and voted to the Acts made 1648. relative to the King's Delivery; and being a Member of Parliament, contrived and voted to the Murder of the Marquis of Montrose, Lord Huntley, Harry Spotswood, and others, the King's Friends and Servants, and to the displacing of the King's Officers of Estate, and to the Deposition of many who suffered for the King's Cause. That being one of the Officers of the King's Army at Stirling, after the Defeat at Dumbbar, he kept constant Correspondence with the English and Cromwel, and deserted his Trust in the King's Army, by joyning himself with the usurping Party. His going along with Cromwel to Worcester, and there fighting against the King in proper Person, against his Duty and Allegiance. His sitting and voicing in the pretended Parliament of England, for extirpating the King and his Family from their due Right of Government; and exercising those Offices and Places which Cromwel had bestowed on him for that Service.'

When his Indictment was read, he had a very accurate and pointed Speech in his own Vindication, and being interrogate by the Chancellor, If he had any more to say for himself? He answered not positively, but said, He knew not whether he would make Use of any Lawyers or not, seeing he walked not now by his own Will. The Parliament assigned him till the 13th Day of March, to give in peremptory Defences. By the Table of unprinted Acts I find, that the Parliament forfeited him; but the Papists at Court interposed in the Quaker's Behalf, and he had Favour shewn, tho' he had as great a Share in joyning with the Usurper as any in the Kingdom.

After the Revolution Swinton's Son published his Case in Print, wherein it seems pretty evident, that no direct Forfeiture was passed against his Father by this Parliament: But, upon a Paper formed many Years afterwards, Lawderdale possessed the Estate of Swinton until his Death. By the Passages there cited from Swinton's Defences at this Time, it appears that he went with Cromwel to England about the Time of Worcester Engagement, as a Prisoner. However, 'tis undeniable this Gentleman did openly enough joyn in with the Usurper, and had no small Management of our Scots Affairs under him.

I find by some Papers of this Time, that Sir John Chieflly was before the Lords of Articles, March this Year, and 'tis probable received an Indictment, since he was singularly active in the Work of Reformation: But I have not seen the Articles. We shall find him under Confinement after this, for many Years. Several other worthy Gentlemen and Ministers were brought to much Suffering during the After-part of this Year, before the Privy Council, who after this have much of the Persecution I am to describe among their Hands. This brings me to

Of the Establishment and Erection of the Privy Council, their first Meeting July 13th, and Procedure against particular Noblemen, Gentlemen, and Ministers of the Presbyterian Perswasion, this Year 1661.

WE have seen the Civil Government of Scotland last Year in the Hands of the Committee of Estates, and this Year the high Court of Parliament continued sitting till the 12th of July; and the last Day of that Month, their Acts were in great Solemnity proclaimed at the Cross of Edinburgh, and it took from Eleven of the Clock Forenoon, till Six at Night, to publish those of a publick Nature. As soon as the Parliament was up, next Day the Privy Council met, and a vast Power was in their Hands.

Parliament rises July 12. Their Acts proclaimed with Solemnity.

The Council meet July 13.

Members of the Civil Courts at this Time.

In this Kingdom there had been a long Interruption of all our Civil Courts; and it may not be unacceptable to the Reader to give the List of the Members of the different Courts at this Juncture, and the Time of their Meeting; tho' it has no great Relation to the general Subject of this History, it will take up no great Room, and may be of some Use. Some good Time was taken up before Persons could be fallen upon to fill up the total Vacancies; and in the Beginning of April the Lists came down from Court.

April 5th, as many as were in Town of the Lords of the Session took the Oath of Supremacy, and de fidei administratione, before the Parliament; and the Parliament ordered them to sit down June 4th. They were as follows. 'Sir John Gilmor President, Lord Cranstoun, alias Oxenford, Sir Archibald Primrose Clerk-register, Ley, Halkertoun, Collingtoun, Carden, Tarbet, Mr. James Robertoun, Mr. John Scougal, Mr. Robert Nairn of Strathburt, Mr. Robert Burnet elder, Mr. Andrew Aiton of Kinglassie, Mr. James Dalrymple of Stairs, and Sir Robert Murray.' The Extraordinary were Roths, Crawford, Cassils, and Lawderdale. My Lord Cranstoun did not accept, and Mr. David Nevoy was put in his Place; and when my Lord Cassils, upon refusing the Supremacy, was declared incapable of publick Trust, Middleton was put in his Room.

Lords of Session.

June 10th, the Exchequer sat down, and the Lords of that were, William Earl of Glencairn Chancellor, Roths, Marishal Lord Privy-seal, Lawderdale, Middleton, Halkertoun, President of the Session, Clerk-register, Sir John Fletcher Advocate, Sir Robert Murray Justice-clerk, Sir James McGill of Crawstoun, Sir James Lockhart of Ley, Sir William Fleming, Sir John Wachop, Mr. Robert Burnet elder, Mr. James Robertoun, William Scot of Airdrie, with the Treasurer Earl of Crawford, or Treasurer-depute Sir William Bannantyne, one of the Quorum.

Lords of Exchequer.

But the Court which the Sufferers I am to account for, at least for many Years, were mostly before, was the Privy Council; and in the Intervals of Parliaments, they had all the executory Power in their Hand, and assumed little less than a Parliamentary Power. They were indeed a very sovereign Court, and therefore I shall here give the List of them. The Earl of Glencairn Chancellor, Earl of Crawford Treasurer, Earl of Roths President of the Council, Dukes of Lennox and Hamilton, Marquis of Montrose; Earls, Lawderdale Secretary, Errol, Marishal, Mar, Athole, Mortoun, Eglintoun, Cassils, Caithness, Murray, Linlithgow, Hume, Perth, Dumfermling, Wigtoun, Kellie, Roxburgh, Haddingtoun, Tullibardin, Weems, Southesk, Hartfield, (now Annandale) Callender, Tweeddale, Middleton, Dundee, Newburgh; Lords, Sinclair, Halkertoun, Duffus, Sir Archibald Primrose, Sir John Fletcher, Sir William Bannantyne, Sir Robert Murray, Sir John Gilmor of Craigmillar, Sir William Fleming, Laird of Ley, Laird of Blackball, Sir John Wachop of Niddrie Knight, Gibson of Durie, Sir George Kinnaird of Rossie, Alexander Bruce Brother to the Earl of Kincardin, Sir William Scot of Airdrie.

The Privy Council.

List of Scots Counsellors.

The English Counsellors added, were, Chancellor Hyde, Duke of Albemarle, Marquis of Ormond, Earl of Manchester, and the principal Secretary of State for England. Their Quorum is declared to be Nine; the Chancellor or President, or in their Absence, the eldest Counsellor to be one of the Quorum.

English Counsellors.

I come now to give some Account of the Procedure of the Privy Council, from their Registers; and in this Section I shall confine my self to the Hardships and Sufferings particular Persons of all Ranks were brought under by this arbitrary Court, during what is before us of this Year. I shall leave their general Acts, with relation to the Introduction of Prelacy, to the following Section, where I am to essay some Account of this great Turn in this Church.

Procedure of Council against particular Persons this Year.

July 13th, the Council met at Holy-rood-house, and, after the publick Reading of their Commission, with their Powers, all who were present took the Oath of Allegiance, which hath been above insert; and then they took the Oath of Council, a Copy of which the curious Reader will perhaps desire to see; therefore I insert it.

Oath

1661.

Oath of the Privy Counsellors.

Oath of Council.

I Swear to be a true faithful Servant to the King's Majesty, as one of his Privy Council; I shall not know nor understand of any Manner of Thing to be attempted, done or spoken against his Majesty's Person, Crown, or Dignity Royal, but I shall let and withstand the same to the utmost of my Power, and either cause it to be revealed to His Majesty himself, or such of his Privy Council as shall advertise his Highness of the same. I shall, in all Things to be moved, craved, and debated in Council, faithfully and truly declare my Mind and Opinion, according to my Heart and Conscience, and shall keep secret all Matters committed and revealed unto me, or that shall be treated of secretly in Council; and if any of the same Treaties and Counsels shall touch any of the Counsellors, I shall not reveal it unto him, but shall keep the same until such Time, as, by the Consent of his Majesty or the Council, Publication shall be made thereof. And generally, and in all Things, I shall do as a faithful and true Servant and Subject ought to do to His Majesty. So help me GOD, and the Contents of this Book.

Clerk and President.

When all present had taken this Oath, the Commission of Sir Peter Wedderburn, to be Clerk, was read, and he admitted. The Earl of Crawford is President, and the Earl of Callender to preside in his Absence. They have little before them till the Return of the Chancellor and Rothes, who came down on the last of August, with what was concerted at Court about the Change of Church-government, of which afterwards.

Earl of Tweddale proceeded before the Council, for his Vote in Mr. Guthrie's Trial.

In September, they have a very remarkable Process before them, with relation to the Earl of Tweddale. Information had been sent up, it seems, to Court, of his speaking in Favours of Mr. James Guthrie, when his Process was in Dependence before the Parliament; and it seems this was reckoned a high Crime for this Nobleman to speak his Light in his judicative Capacity: Therefore he is ordered to be imprisoned; and the Execution of this arbitrary Step is put in the Hands of the Council, as one of their first Works. This is so odd a Management, and forebods so much Oppression and Severity in this Reign, that I shall venture to say nothing upon it, but give the Progress of it from the original Records.

Upon the 13th of September, the following Letter from the King is read, ordering the Earl of Tweddale to be made a Prisoner.

King's Letter to the Council, Sept. 7.

RIGHT Trusty, &c. Having received Information of some Speeches uttered by the Earl of Tweddale, in the Trial of Mr. James Guthrie attainted and executed, which, as we are informed, did tend much to the Prejudice of Our Authority, We require you to commit the said Earl to the Castle of Edinburgh, there to remain till We have examined the Business, and declare Our further Pleasure; and that he be kept in Durance, but not as close Prisoner. Given at Our Court at Whitehall, September 7th, 1661.

LAWDERDALE.

The Earl imprisoned.

These Orders were immediately executed, and the Earl entred Prisoner in the Castle; And September 17th, he sent the following Petition to the Council.

To the Right Honourable, The Lords of His Majesty's Privy Council, John Earl of Tweddale

Humbly sheweth,

His Supplication to the Council, Sept. 27.

WHEREAS your Lordships have been pleased, upon a Command from his Majesty, to commit me to the Castle, and being exceedingly affected with his Majesty's Displeasure, I desire to express to your Lordships the Grief of my Heart, for whatsoever has been the Occasion of procuring such Resentment from so gracious a Prince, of whose Favour I have so largely shared, and to whose Commands I account a perfect Submission acceptable Service to GOD, and suitable to the Duty of every Subject. How observant of them I have been, and what ready Submission I have given, your Lordships can witness: Being filled with the Sense of my Obligations, and engaged in Duty, to be thus clouded with his Majesty's Displeasure, is a Burden I am unable to bear. May it therefore please your Lordships to give such an Account of mine Actings, as I may be restored to his Majesty's Favour, and to interpose for my Enlargement, that at least my Imprisonment may be changed to a Confinement, at my House at Bothams, in regard of my Wife's Condition, now near the Time of her Delivery.

TWEDDALE.

The Clerk is ordered to have a Draught of a Letter ready against to Morrow. Accordingly, September 18th, a Letter is signed by the Council to the Secretary, the Tenor of which is subjoined. 1661.

My Lord,

AT our last Meeting, which was occasioned by his Majesty's Letter, for committing the Earl of Tweddale Prisoner to the Castle of Edinburgh, we issued Orders for it; which were no sooner intimate to him, but he immediately obeyed, and entred Prisoner. From him we have since received a Petition, which we send inclosed, to be presented by your Lordship to his Majesty; and find our selves obliged to give this Testimony in his Behalf, That, in the late Meeting of Council, when the Matter of Church-government was under Deliberation, he did heartily comply with his Majesty's Commands, and carry himself as a faithful Counsellor, and loyal Subject. When his Majesty's further Pleasure shall be signified as to this Particular, we shall be ready to prosecute the same; and are, My Lord, your Lordships affectionate Friends.

Council's Letter to Lord, Sept. 18.

As in Sederunt.

Matters stood thus till next Council-day, October 1st, when was read the following Letter from the King.

RIGHT Trusty, &c. We received yours of the 7th of this Instant, and have seen the Proclamation you have published, in Obedience to what We recommended by Our Letter of the 14th of August; with which We are so well satisfied, That We thought fit to give you hearty Thanks. We got Notice of the Commitment of the Earl of Tweddale, by Our Order: You shall examine what his Carriage was at the late Vote in Parliament, which condemned Guthrie, and report the same speedily to Us, to the End that We may declare our further Pleasure. And so We bid you heartily Farewel.

King's Letter to Council, Sept. 23. ordering them to examine the Earl's Vote in Parliament.

Whitehall, September 23. 1661.

LAWDERDALE.

Joynly with this, there came a Letter from the Earl of Lawderdale to the Council, whereof the Tenor is;

May it please your Lordships,

IN Obedience to your Lordships Commands, I did Yesterday present the Earl of Tweddale's Petition. After Reading of it, his Majesty was graciously pleased to order the Change of his Prison in the Castle, to a Confinement at his House; and his Majesty hath commanded me to signify his Pleasure to your Lordships, That he be confined to the Boothams, and Three Miles about it, until, upon Report from your Lordships, the King shall declare his further Pleasure. This is all I have in Command, who am, May it please your Lordships, Lawderdale's Letter, Sept. 26. to the Council.

Whitehall, 26 September, 1661.

Your Lordships most humble Servant.

LAWDERDALE.

After the Reading of those Letters, the Council came to the following Resolve, 'Ordered, That in Pursuance of his Majesty's Orders, the Earls of Haddingtoun, Annandale, and Callender, the Lord President of the Session, the Lord Register, Lord Advocate, and Lord Lee, do examine the Earl of Tweddale, in the Castle of Edinburgh, the Morn at Nine of the Clock, anent his Carriage at the late Vote in Parliament, which condemned James Guthrie, and to take his own Declaration under his Hand, upon the several Votes which passed upon that Process whereupon he is to be interrogate, and report the same next Morning.

Council ordain a Committee to examine the Earl.

This was accordingly done, and to Morrow October 2^d, the Lords, appointed to examine the Earl, gave in his Declaration, signed by himself and the Lord President; the Tenor whereof follows.

At the Castle of Edinburgh, October 2. 1661.

THE Earl of Tweddale being interrogate, What his Carriage and Expressions were at the Vote in Parliament, in Mr. Guthrie's Process, dated 12th of April, 1661. and being first interrogate upon the first Member of the Vote, concerning the first Two Articles of Guthrie's Dittay, wherein he was charged with the Remonstrance and Causes of God's Wrath, which were found relevant to bring the Pannel under the Compass of the Acts of Parliament mentioned in the said Vote, made against slanderous Speeches against his Majesty's Person and Authority: The said Earl of Tweddale doth declare, That tho' he was clear in his Judgment, and did exprefs so much, that the first Two Articles brought the Pannel under the Compass of the Law, and that the Law made him liable to the Sentence of Death; yet some Circumstances, as the Distraction and Disorder Men were then under, and the epidemick Distemper of those Times, and the restraining Power of the Law having been of a long Time sadly abated, and upon the Consideration of his Majesty's compassionate Clemency, and Construction of the Failings of those Times, which inclined him to some other Punishment than Death, he conceived and voted that Article not relevant as to Death. As to the 2^d Member, concerning the Petition and Instructions mentioned in the Vote, he declares, That, to the best of his Memory, he had no Discourse thereupon, and doth not remember what was his Vote. As to the 3^d, concerning the Declinature, he declares, That, having heard the Process only once read, and not having heard distinctly the Debate upon that Article, and being the first criminal Process he was ever at, he thought himself unfit to judge in a Particular of so large a Debate upon once Reading, and so could not be clear to give a positive Vote at that Time, and therefore was non liquet.

TWEDDALE.
JO. GILMOR P.

The Earl confined to his House, under the Penalty of 100,000 Merks.

Upon the producing of this, the Council order the Earl, 'To be put to Liberty from his Confinement, and to repair to his House, and confine himself within the same, and Three Miles about, till his Majesty's Pleasure shall be further known; he always finding sufficient Caution, under the Pain of One hundred thousand Merks, to appear, or return to the Castle, whenever his Majesty or the Council shall order the same, and in the mean while keep his Confinement.' And further, October 3^d, they declare, 'That all of their Number who were Members of Parliament, and present when the said Votes passed, as to all the Articles of the Declaration they remember, he went not along with them in the Affirmative which passed in the Parliament.'

Remarks upon this Treatment of the Earl.

That same Day, the Council send a Letter to the King, narrating all the Steps (above) they had taken, with the Declaration. This is all I meet with in the Registers, about this odd Treatment of a Nobleman. Towards the Beginning of May next, the Confinement was taken off, and the Earl was in very much Favour. What were the Springs of this Prosecution, I cannot say: Perhaps it was not so much from any special Design against the Earl, as to fright People afterwards into their Measures, by those terrible Enquiries into Votes and Speeches in Parliament. I have scarce ever met with a Parallel in History. We see this noble Lord's Reasons for what he did, in his own Declaration. His Imprisonment about Three Weeks, for his Vote in Parliament, and the exorbitant Bail demanded of him, are what cannot be defended, and will not endure Reasoning; and I have seen none of the Advocates of this Period, who set up for vindicating this unaccountable Procedure against the Earl of Tweddale.

Council's order to seize Two Ministers come from Ireland.

I come now forward, to hint at some begun Sufferings of Ministers this Year, before the Council. September 17th, 'A Letter is ordered to be writ to the Sheriff of Clydsdale, or his Depute, to apprehend Two Ministers come from Ireland, whose Names the Chancellor is to condescend on; and they are to be convoyed from Sheriff to Sheriff till they come to the Magistrates of Edinburgh.' I know no more about them than is in this Article of the Council-registers: It seems plain they were Two Presbyterian Ministers, who had fled over from the Persecution of the Prelates in Ireland, and probably did not know of the Parliament's Proclamation above narrated, discharging all Scotsmen to come over thence without Passes.

Mr. Robert Blair procecded before the Council.

The reverend Mr. Robert Blair, Minister of the Gospel at St. Andrews, was one whom Mr. Sharp could not bear to be any longer at his Work there, tho' he was under particular Obligations to Mr. Blair; and therefore Matters are so ordered as the Council must attack him, October 1st, this Year. He was a Minister of known Piety, Gravity, Prudence, and great Loyalty to the King; and nothing could be laid to his Charge, save that he was a Presbyterian Minister, and now stood in Mr. Sharp's Way. Thus, upon some Information or other, wherein Mr. Sharp took Care not to be seen, the Council the foresaid Day order the Clerk to write to the Magistrates of St. Andrews, upon the Sight of his Letter, to go to their Minister Mr. Robert Blair, and in Name of the Council to command him to present himself before my Lord Chancellor at Edinburgh, betwixt and the 9th Instant, that by his Lordship he might know the Council's Pleasure.

Examined, Nov. 5.

I find no more about Mr. Blair till November 5th, where the Registers bear, 'Information being given of some Particulars against Mr. Robert Blair, Ordered, that the Earls of Linlithgow, Hume, Haddington, Lord Advocate, and Sir George Kinnaird, examine the said Mr. Robert upon these Particulars, and report to the next Meeting of the Council.' The next Meeting is November 7th, and that Day I find a Blank in the Records of near Half of the Page, and upon the Margin, Act, Mr. Robert Blair. Whether they were ashamed to insert what they went into against so great and good a Man, whom every Body almost had a Regard to, or what was the the Reason, I cannot say. We shall meet with him again next Year, when, in September, the Council declare his Church vacant. 1661.

Last Year we heard of the reverend Mr. William Wiseheart, Minister at Kinneil, his Confinement: And now I find an Application by the Presbytery of Linlithgow, to the Council, November 7th, which is all I know in this Matter, and set it down, with the Council's Answer.

Anent a Supplication presented by Mr. James Ramsay, Mr. Patrick Schaw, and Mr. John Wauch, Commissioners, for themselves, and in Name and Behalf of the remanent Brethren of the Presbytery of Linlithgow, shewing, That whereas the Parish of Kinneil, within the Bounds of the said Presbytery, has long lien destitute of the free Exercise of the Ordinances, except what the Presbytery was able to provide for them, which was but little, having Eight Kirks besides that to provide with Preaching: And this the Presbytery's Burden of the said Parish of Kinneil doth ly upon them, through the Imprisonment and Confinement of Mr. William Wiseheart Minister there, now these 13 Months bypast. The Presbytery did consider of the Condition of the said Kirk, and Minister thereof; and having conferred with himself, have proceeded that Length, that if his Imprisonment and Confinement were taken off, Access will be had for the present Planting of the said Kirk with some other, whom the Patron shall be pleased to name: Desiring therefore that such Courie may be taken, for taking off the Imprisonment and Confinement of the said Mr. William Wiseheart, as may give Access to the Presbytery to proceed in the Plantation of the said Church; as the Petition bears. Whilk being at length read, heard, and considered, the Lords of Council do take off the said Mr. William Wiseheart his Confinement, and declare him to be free thereof, and of his Band of Caution given in by him for that Effect.

What were the particular Occasions of the Favour shown to the two following Ministers, confined August 1660. I have not learned at this Distance: But November 21st, the Council gives Warrant to the Lord Chancellor, to grant Liberty to Mr. John Scot Minister at Oxenam, to exercise the Function of the Ministry within his own Parish, notwithstanding the Restraint put upon him. And December 10th, 'The Council, upon good Considerations, take off the Restraint laid upon Mr. Gilbert Hall Minister at Kirklistoun, discharging him from Preaching; and grant him Warrant to exercise the Ministerial Function as formerly before the Restraint was put on him, he behaving himself peaceably, as becometh a faithful Minister.' Both these were very worthy Ministers, and, it seems, got some Interest made with the Counsellors. This is all I meet with before the Council, as to particular Ministers this Year.

November this Year, I find a great many West-country Gentlemen brought to a vast Deal of Trouble, for their joyning with Colonel Strachan, and going in with the Forces to Niddale, 1650: And a Fine of 2000 Pounds Sterling is laid on the Lairds of Rowallan, Cuninghamhead, Nether Pollock, Earlstoun, Aikenhead, Halraig, and others, who had appeared firm Presbyterians, and active in the Work of Reformation. But this Process not coming to a Close this Year, I shall delay it till I bring it in altogether afterwards. A good many other Gentlemen in other Parts were brought to Trouble this Year, as we may hear when I come to the Detail of their severer Sufferings, in the succeeding Years: And therefore I come now forward to the Proceedings of the Council, as to Church-government, and the Regal Introduction of Episcopacy.

SECT. VII.

Of the Regal Erection of Bishops, with some new Attacks made upon the Judicatories of the Church.

As soon as this pliant Session of Parliament rose, and the Council was constitute to manage all in the Intervals of Parliament, Middleton and the Courtiers haste up to London, where, no Doubt, they were most graciously received. The Subjects of Scotland were now made as obsequious as ever the former Set had been reckoned rebellious.

The Bishops of England in a very particular Manner caressed our Scots Peers, for procuring them another national Church among all the Reformed, to bear them Company in their Prelatical Way.

When their Report is made, and the Plan laid at London, formerly concerted by Mr. Sharp, and the other Two who went up, for modelling this Church a la mode d' Angleterre, Mr. Sharp comes down again, and the Council fall to execute the Orders and Letters sent down from London, and overturn one of the best established Churches since the Reformation, by their Proclamations. Mr. Sharp carries up with him Three of his Brethren, whom he thought good, good, and who were as well as he thirsting after Dominion over their Brethren. Them we have sent down, consecrated, and impowered to make the Rest of their Order. These, with such as they adopted, were the great Authors of all the Troubles which followed for many Years upon the Presbyterians in Scotland. This unscriptural Office imposed by the King, and set up by the Council, is next Year confirmed in Parliament; and the Consequence is the laying desolate many Hundreds of Congregations in one Day, as we shall hear.

General Remarks upon the Election of Prelacy.

The Estates of the Kingdom of Scotland, as soon as they convened after the Revolution, among other Things, declare, 'That Prelacy, and the Superiority of any Office in the Church, above Presbyters, is, and hath been a great and insupportable Grievance to this Nation, and contrary to the Inclinations of the Generality of the People, ever since the Reformation, we having been reformed by Presbyters from Popery.' This being the Sense of the Representatives of this Nation, when at their full Freedom, and really themselves, and under the nearest Views, and most intimate Knowledge of Prelacy that had been rampant for Twenty seven Years, I may well represent the Introduction of Prelates by the King, without the Parliament, who had indeed put a Blank in his Hand, as a great Hardship, and one of the first Branches of the Sufferings of this Church.

Prelates the Fountain of the following Persecution.

It was contrary to the most solemn Establishments, ratified by the King himself, sealed with an Oath, and contrary to the Inclinations of the People. And from this plain Invasion upon the Right of Scotsmen, proceeded much of the bloody Persecution which followed. Indeed the Whole of the Severity, Hardships, and Bloodshed, from this Year until the Revolution, was either actually brought on by the Bishops, procured by them, or done for their Support.

The popular Arguments against Prelacy.

Prelacy was never popular in Scotland, no not in the Days of ancient Ignorance: Our Reformation from Popery, and Reformers were quite upon another Bottom. Abstracting from the Arguments from Antiquity and History, the common People in Scotland used to advance unanswerable Arguments, and Exceptions of a more convincing Nature to them, against Episcopacy. They had observed almost all the Bishops of Scotland to have been either Patrons or Patterns of Profaneness; and these few among them who had any Reputation formerly, as soon as they became Prelates, changed remarkably to the worse; and, as Beza had foretold, in his Letter to Knox, Bishops first brought in Epicurism, and then Atheism; Religion and Piety first withered under their Shadow, and Wickedness grew prodigiously. They used to say, Those Changelings being perjured themselves, like the fallen Angels, they endeavoured to involve as many as they could in their Guilt.

They noticed likewise visible Disasters and Curses falling upon their Persons and Families, yea, upon all such who were active in bringing in Prelates to this Church. They believed firmly, that as the Branch leads to the Root, so Episcopacy brought in Popery; and therefore Bishops, by Scotsmen, generally speaking, were looked upon as the Pope's Harbingers. Upon all those Accounts, founded upon Feeling and Experience, the Body of the People in Scotland were very much against their Reintroduction.

Reasonings pro and con at London, as to the setting up Prelacy in Scotland.

Upon the other Hand, some of our Noblemen were as heartily for them. When our Noblemen and Mr. Sharp were at Court, and had the Church-government in Scotland under their Consideration, the Commissioner and Chancellor were resolute for Bishops, as what would please the King, or at least some People about him, whose Favour they needed. Lawderdale Secretary, Crawford Treasurer, and Duke Hamilton for some Time opposed them. The Secretary with some Warmth urged, That the Introduction of Bishops will evidently lose to the King, the Affections of the best of his Subjects in Scotland; and Bishops would be so far from enlarging the King's Power, that they would prove a Burden upon it. Both which accordingly came to pass.

Issue of those Debates.

Those Debates, I am told, continued some Days, and it was here the Foundation of Discord was laid 'twixt Middleton and Lawderdale, which issued in the Ruin of the First. At length Lawderdale yielded to the Current that was against him, and his Master's alledged Inclinations. A little thereafter, the Chancellor, in a Conversation with Lawderdale, desired him not to mistake his Conduct in that Affair, for indeed he was not for lordly Prelates, such as had been in Scotland formerly, but only for a limited, sober, moderate Episcopacy. The Secretary, it is said, replied, 'My Lord, since you are for Bishops, and must have them, Bishops you shall have, and higher than ever they were in Scotland, and that you will find.' And indeed he felt it more than once in a few Years.

Reasons inducing some of the Courtiers who were for Prelacy.

The Reasons inducing the Courtiers to be so much for Episcopacy, after their Declarations and Engagements against it, were many. They found it necessary to gratify the prevailing Party at this Time in England, who were High-fliers in this Matter; and since the Union of the two Crowns, the prevailing Party in England had a vast Influence upon our Managers in Scotland. It was well known, that Prelates in Scotland had never been Reprovers of great Men, do what they would; their only Sting was against Presbyterians, and they had the Discretion to overlook Courtiers Faults, and were no way so strict as Presbyterians.

The first Article of their Creed was Nonresistance, and their constant Doctrine, That Kings could do no Wrong; ignorantly or wilfully mistaking that Brocard of the Law, as if the Meaning were, That nothing a King does is to be reckoned Wrong; whereas the true Sense of it is, That that jure he can do no Wrong, that is, even the Prerogative does not impower him to do Wrong, nor can excuse him when he hath done it, and much less justify him. They were the best Tools that could be for arbitrary Government; the King was still sure of the Bishops Vote in Parliament in all ordinary Cases: And it was well known they would quickly plant the Church with a Set of Ministers, who would instil Principles of unbounded Loyalty into their People, till they were first made Slaves, and then Beggars. All of them were for the King's absolute illimitable Power, and some for his universal Property, and making him Master of the People's Purse, without the Trouble of calling Parliaments.

When I am giving some Account of the Springs of this dismal Alteration made in the Church of Scotland, I think it proper to insert here the Sentiments of that truly great Man Mr. Robert Douglas, who, for his Prudence, Solidity, and Reach, was equalled by very few in his Time; and he had Occasion to know the inmost Springs of this great Turn, and therefore I'll give the Reader a pretty large Extract from an original Paper of his, entitled, A brief Narration of the coming in of Prelacy to this Kirk, communicated to me by his worthy Son; and that in his own Words. I choolse rather to insert it here than in the Appendix, because it contains several Particulars relating to the History of this Turn, which I might have insert in their own Places before, but thought it better to leave them altogether to this Place.

'By the Mercy of God Prelacy was rejected by our Kirk, yea, all Ranks of Persons, from the highest to the lowest, were solemnly bound to extirpate it, and never to assume it again; all Judicatories Civil and Ecclesiastick were bound, and every Person engaged by Oath; and this Kirk was free of it by the Space of Twenty Two Years and more. We were certain Years indeed under the Tyranny of Usurpers; yet at that Time we had the Liberty of Preaching, and meeting in our Kirk-judicatories without Interruption, save in so far as Interruption was made to the Assembly, occasioned by our own selves, upon Design to have Power in their Hands.'

'During this Time of our Bondage, the whole Nation lying under their Feet, yea, a great many taking the Tender, renouncing the King and his Family, and all the rest under the Power of the Enemy's Sword, our King in a banished Condition, none to act for him, or serve him, only not joyning with the Usurper, yet not able to do any Thing for the King, but to pray, and hold up his Condition to God.'

'It was maliciously asserted, that we left off praying for him: The Truth of this is, the Ministers who all stood for the King and his Government, did never leave off praying for him, till they acquainted him by Letters, and had Advice what to do. The Return of our Letter came, shewing that it was meet to forbear for a Time, that we might be the better in Case to keep up his Interest in the Hearts of his People. After this it was resolved among us to forbear naming him publickly in our Prayers; yet, notwithstanding of that, the Prayers of Ministers were so plain for the King's Interest, that the Usurpers themselves confessed it had been better to suffer us to name him, than pray as we did, for it kept up Affection for him in the Hearts of the People: Yea, we prayed longer for the King by Name, than any did appear to fight for him; all Arms were laid aside, and no visible Opposition in all the Three Kingdoms; and as long as any Party appeared for him in Ireland, we prayed, and named him KING.'

'When all had left the King, we never complied with the Usurper against his Interests, as many did, who nevertheless are counted very loyal, because they can comply with all Times and Changes.'

'Thus Matters continued, till God suffered Divisions to fall in among the chief Captains of the Usurpation, Monk and Lambert. The last brought his Forces towards Newcastle, and Monk marched from Edinburgh to meet him, but was hindred by some Articles offered him by those in Power, which made him retire, having a Purpose to subscribe. At this Time no Man appeared: Divers Noblemen dealt with me to go and speak with Monk, which I did early in the Morning, before his Officers met to agree upon the Articles. By the Blessing of God, Speaking with him succeeded, and he resolved to march, and not return. It is true, I knew he had no great Inclination to bring home the King; but I was perswaded, that if they were divided, it would occasion at last the King's bringing home. Monk went to London, and Lambert's Forces evanished. When he came to London he discovered his Averseness to bring home the King; only the People desired it, and a Letter was writ to him from Scotland, pressing him to fall in with every Body's Desires, which were so earnest, that it was thought a Call from God. The Return to this Letter declared his Averseness from the Thing.'

'At that Time, the best affected in Ireland had sent Letters, requiring us to be stedfast to the King, and promising all Assistance. These I shewed to the Chief in this Land, and wrote another Letter to Monk, requesting him to undertake for the King, and if he did it not, that it would be done to his Hand; but I did not write by whom. Whatever was his Averseness, God over-ruled him and others there, so that, upon some Discontentment General Monk met with, he inclined to be for the King.'

Mr. Robert Douglas's Account of the Springs of the introducing of Prelacy, in his own Words.

State of Matters before the Restoration.

Presbyterian Ministers, under the Usurpation, scarce not to pray for the King, till he allows them.

Their constant Loyalty.

Mr. Douglas deals with Monk in the King's behalf.

Monk goes to London, where Mr. Douglas again writes, to quicken him to bring home the King.

Another Letter to Monk, intimating, if he appeared not for the King, others would.

'The Parliament of England meeting, when Scotland might call neither Parliament nor Meeting, being under the Feet of the Usurpers, some King-men from Scotland did write to that Parliament, before they had resolved to call the King, dealing earnestly for King and Covenant; and a Paper, entituled, The Judgment of sober-minded Men in Scotland, was sent up,' (as hath been noticed in the Introduction; and the Paper is inserted there, App. No. 5.)

'Now all being ready to call in the King, all the Well-wishers to the King and Kirk wished that he might come in upon the Terms of the Covenant; but the English who had a Hand in his coming Home, would have him brought in without Conditions and Limitations, giving out that he would satisfy all his Subjects in their Desires.'

'Our Scotsmen, not being a free Nation at this Time, did not much meddle in any Messages to the King. Mr. Sharp, at this Time at London, is pitched upon, at the Charges of honest Men, to go to the King with Letters from Presbyterian Ministers here; and Monk was writ to, that he might have Liberty and a free Passage to the King. He went, delivered our Letters, and wrote back the King's gracious Reception of our Letters, assuring us of a satisfactory Answer.'

'Upon this we wrote a Letter to our Brethren in London, That we were assured of their Stedfastness, and gave them our Advice then to care for the Presbyterian Interest, when the King came to London; which was delivered by a Person of Quality, Sharp not being returned. From Time to Time he wrote, That we needed not doubt of the King's Favour to our Presbyterian Government.'

'The King was brought Home with Joy, and if his Majesty had kept his Covenant-engagements, he had been the happiest King that ever reigned since the Days of Christ: But this was marred by the Liberty Episcopal Men took, and the Parliament's Inclination to bring in Bishops or Prelates, which saddened the Hearts of many, and Prelatical Government was established in England.'

'Mean while, we wrote Exhortations to our Brethren in England to Stedfastness; and Mr. Sharp wrote to us, that Bishops would be set up in England, but we needed not fear Episcopal Government in Scotland, since the King had given Assurances to the contrary; and he did earnestly intreat, that we would not meddle with England, for it would be provoking, and it were enough to have our own Government settled: But we did not believe, if Episcopal Government were settled in England, we could be free of the Temptation of it now, more than in former Times.'

'The King, to give us Assurance, wrote a Letter to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, which was communicated to other Presbyteries: And the most Part of Presbyteries and Synods made a Return, expressing their Thankfulness for his Majesty's Favour to the established Government of Presbytery. It was said, That Sharp alledged the Letter spoke of the Government settled by Law, which was Episcopal. Indeed this was objected to some of us Ministers of Edinburgh; but it was clearly shewn, that the King's Letter could have no other Meaning than the present Presbyterian Government, because it mentions Good Services done by Presbyterians, and the General Assembly at St. Andrews countenanced by his Majesty's Commissioner, and afterward by himself. And it was told them, To give another Meaning, was an intolerable Reflection upon his Majesty's Honour and Reputation.'

'Besides those Letters from Sharp, giving Assurance of no Change with us, when he came down, he dealt with all not to meddle with the Government in England, seeing our own was made sure.'

'When the Parliament met, Middleton sent for me at his Coming, telling me the King had commanded him to do so. We spoke at large about the Condition of our Kirk; and I told him my Mind freely, If the King would not break the Covenant, nor alter our Government, I could assure him his Majesty would get as much as his Heart could wish, with the Affections and Love of all the People; but many Inconveniencies would follow, if there were a Change of Government; for Prelates never yet proved profitable to Kirk or Commonwealth. He assured me, and I think it was true, he had no Instructions for the Change of the Government, and we were still born in Hand that there would be no Change.'

'In the mean Time Sharp fearing Supplications, dealt earnestly there should be none; but finding himself disappointed, he caused the Commissioner send for some of us. The Commissioner, Chancellor, and some others present, did alledge, That the King's Letter did not bear any Thing of Presbyterian Government settled, but the Government settled by Law, which was Episcopal. The Answer to this was what I told already, That it could have no other Meaning; and most Part of the Church had returned Answer according to that Meaning. Always we were still born in Hand, that there was no Warrant from the King for this Change.'

'And upon this the Presbytery of Edinburgh was dissolved without doing any Thing. Yet in the Afternoon, hearing they were upon a Rescissory Act in the Articles, the Presbytery were convened, and that same Day the Supplication was read, and approved by all present, Ministers and ruling Elders, for keeping the Covenant and Presbyterian Government. This

Edinburgh, and Mr. Peter Blair Minister of the West-Kirk. They went to the Commissioner and delivered it, but he in Wrath rejected it. And after that, the Parliament passed the Act Refectory of all that was in Favours of the Covenant, or Presbyterial Government.
 So here was a Deed wherein a Covenant Kirk-government, solemnly settled in the Land, is solemnly broken; a Covenant taken before God, Men and Angels, broken before God, Men and Angels: This was the Day of the Beginning of our Sorrow, by breaking Covenant, and dissolving Government; and it was known that the King's Consent was given after that Act was passed.

Observe on the Act Refectory.

A little after Bishops were brought in, and Sharp and others sent for to receive new Ordination, that the Presbyterian Stamp might be abolished, and a new Prelatical Stamp taken on. Our Kingdom lately held of Usurpers, now our Kirk must hold of an usurping Kirk.
 Those are the Men, Sharp, Fairfowl, Lightoun, and Hamilton, that betrayed the Liberties of the Kirk of Christ in Scotland.

Bishops are brought in.

Sharp came to me before he went to London, and I told him, The Curse of God would be on him for his treacherous Dealing. And that I may speak my Heart of this Sharp, I profess I did no more suspect him in reference to Prelacy, than I did my self. What tollows I have formerly given in the Introduction, p. 25th, and then Mr. Douglas goes on.

Mr. Douglas's
Declaratory against Mr.
Sharp.

I profess I blame not the King, for he was not well acquainted with our Government; and for any Acquaintance he had, he met with some hasty Dealing: But our Evil proceeded from our selves; some Noblemen thinking to make themselves great by that Way, were very instrumental in the Change, and being wearied of Christ's Yoke, they promised unto themselves Liberty, they themselves becoming Servants of Corruption. They thought they would have more Liberty under that loose Government, than under Presbytery, which put too great a Restraint upon their Vices. And with them were Ministers who loved the World, especially that Sharp, who, as Peter speaks, 2 Epistle 2. 15. 'He went astray, following the Ways of Balaam who loved the Wages of Unrighteousness.' Yea, he was in a worse State than Balaam, for God restrained Balaam, so that he confessed he durst not, for a House-full of Gold, wrong God's People: But God put no Restraint on that covetous Person; but he curied whom God bleisseth, and he betrayed the People of God for Promotion and Gain. That of the Apostle is verified in him. The Love of Money is the Root of all Evil, which some having coveted after, have fallen from the Faith, and pierced themselves through with many Sorrows.

The Erection of Prelacy proceeded chiefly from some Noblemen and corrupt Ministers.

Yet we must not look on this Man as alone guilty; he was the chief Apostate and prime Leader to this wicked Course, but others are guilty, even all who followed his Vices, making the Truth of God to be evil spoken of. God himself will be avenged upon them, for they dealt treacherously in his Covenant.

And that I may further free the King's Majesty of this Thing, whatever his Opinion might be of Episcopal Government, and his With and ardent Desires to have it, yet he was sparing to impose it in this Kingdom, as is evident by this one Thing.

When we heard the King was dealt with to set up Bishops in Scotland, we did write a Letter to the Secretary to be communicate to his Majesty, sign'd by Five of our Hands, persuading him that they were very considerable who were against Prelacy, if he would take the Trial of it by a General Assembly; and told him, If he made a Change in the Government, his Majesty would be forced to trouble the best Men, who were his best Friends in his low Estate, Men who had all due Respects towards him, and were most loyal, only they could not in Conscience admit of the Prelatical Government, as being against the Mind of Christ, and their own Engagements. I know that when this Letter was read in the Scots Council, his Majesty was at a Stand: But those Noblemen, with Sharp, did bear in upon him, that it was the Desire of his Nobles, and the Generality of the Kingdom, and only a few inconsiderable Persons against it.

The King put to a Stand, by the Letter from the Ministers
of Edinburgh.

All this being done, we must have Episcopacy; and Prelates are set up by the Ordination of Bishops of another Nation. Thus I have brought those Men to the Chair of worldly Estate. I must in the next Place shew you what Means were used to keep them in the Chair. Mr. Douglas goes on to narrate the several Acts of Council made this and the next Year, and to make Reflections upon their Unaccountableness. In our Progress we will meet with those Acts of Council, and I shall take Notice of any Thing needful from his Remarks, as I go through them.

We have seen the Parliament putting the whole Power, as to Church Affairs, into the King's Hands, by their 16th Act, which was passed March 29th. I have formerly made Remarks upon that Act, and it is really of an odd Tenor, for it is only declaratory, That the King resolves, and will do, as in the Act, and particularly settle the Government as he finds most agreeable to Scripture and Monarchy. The Parliament does not desire or empower the King to do so, but only consent to his Declarations, that he will do so: So that I really know not what Foot the Introduction of Episcopacy stands upon by this Act. The King declares what he is to do, declares so with Advice and Consent of Parliament; but I do not see that the Parliament

liament can be said either to impower him to make this Change, or do it themselves. Indeed next Session they actually put all Church Power in his Hand, after Episcopacy is settled by the Council, in pursuance of the King's Letters to them: But still Prelacy does not appear a proper Parliamentary Settlement in Scotland, but a mere Act of the King's assumed Power. But I shall leave this to the Gentlemen skilled in Law.

Proclamation,
June 10. concerning
Church Affairs,
App. N^o 24.

The King, by this Power which he is pleased in Parliament to declare he hath, emits a Proclamation concerning Church Affairs, June 10th, even when the Parliament is sitting, which I have annexed App. N^o 24. And there, after narrating the foresaid Act, is graciously pleased to declare his Acceptance of the Parliament's Duty and Affection, in consenting, as I take it, to his own Declaration of his Power; and that he purposes to settle the Government of the Church, as he sees good; and discharges all Petitions to him with relation to this.

Remarks
upon it.

To me there appears a very remarkable Inconsistency in this Proclamation. It is promised, the Government of the Church shall be settled to the Satisfaction of the Kingdom: And yet a few Lines after, all Subjects, Ministers or others are discharged to meddle with the Government of the Church, or address him thereanent. One must think the King had no great Mind to know what was satisfying to his Subjects, when he so peremptorily discharges all Application to him: Certainly he was already determined what to do, to whatever Side his Subjects Inclination ran. There is another Piece of the Proclamation I cannot easily knit together. The King allows Synods, Presbyteries and Sessions to meet for the present, and yet peremptorily discharges them to meddle with the publick Government of the Church any Way, particularly by Petitioning.

Mr. Douglas's
Observe upon
it.

Here Mr. Douglas remarks, 'That the like has not been heard, that Subjects should be debarred from shewing their Grievances to competent Judicatories, to be redressed. This Way the King was to be kept from Information, and the Managers were without Controul, and honest Men were born down without Remedy.' It is plain, that the Freedom of addressing and petitioning the Sovereign is never discharged, but when some scandalous and unhappy Measures are concerting to enslave them, in which no Interruption is desired.

The Allowance in the Proclamation for Synods, &c. to meet and act, was a mere Jest. It was well enough known Synods did not now meet, and before their ordinary Time of Meeting in October, Care was taken about them. By this Proclamation the Church-government is brought entirely to depend upon the Royal Supremacy, by virtue of which the King is pleased to allow Judicatories to meet. However, Ministers did not reckon themselves bound to regard this Procedure, but went on in their ordinary Work; this being a plain Force put upon them, which, as they did not approve, so they could not help.

Debates at London about erecting Prelacy ended, by the King's Authoritative Interposing.

Thus Matters stood till the Parliament was up. We have heard of the Debates at London, about a new Settlement in this Church. I am told they were not like to have ended peaceably, had not the King, pushed forward by Mr. Sharp and his Supporters in England, interposed, and signified, he would not reckon them his Friends who were not for establishing Prelacy in Scotland. After this there was no more Reasoning; the King's Friends, they all resolved to be at all Hazards.

Upon the last of August, the Earls of Glencairn and Roths, with Mr. Sharp, returned from Court, and the next Council-day, September 5. after the Earl of Dumfries and Sir Robert Murray had been admitted Counsellors, the Lord Chancellor presented a Letter from his Majesty, for establishing of the Church-government in Scotland; which was read, the Tenor whereof follows.

CHARLES R.

King's Letter
to Council,
August 14. for establishing Church government.

'RIGHT Trusty and well Beloved Cousins and Counsellors, We Greet you well. Where-
'as in the Month of August, 1660. We did, by Our Letter to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, declare Our Purpose to maintain the Government of the Church of Scotland settled by 'Law; and Our Parliament having since that Time, not only rescinded all the Acts since the 'Troubles began, referring to that Government, but also declared all those pretended Par-
'liaments null and void, and left to Us the Settling and Securing of Church-government: There'fore, in Compliance with that Act Rescissory, according to Our late Proclamation dated at 'Whitehall the 10th of June, and in Contemplation of the Inconveniencies from the Church-
'government as it hath been exercised these 23 Years past, of the Unsuitableness thereof to 'Our Monarchical Estate, of the sadly experienced Confusions which have been caused during 'the late Troubles by the Violences done to Our Royal Prerogative, and to the Government
'Civil and Ecclesiastical, settled by unquestionable Authority, We, from Our Respect to the 'Glory of God, and the Good and Interest of the Protestant Religion, from Our pious Care and 'Princely Zeal for the Order, Unity, Peace, and Stability of that Church, and its better Har'mony with the Government of the Churches of England and Ireland, have, after mature 'Deliberation, declared to those of Our Council here, Our firm Resolution to interpose Our 'Royal Authority for restoring of that Church to its right Government by Bishops, as it was
'by Law before the late Troubles, during the Reigns of Our Royal Father and Grandfather of blessed Memory, and as it now stands settled by Law. Of this Our Royal Pleasure concerning Church-government you are to take Notice, and to make Intimation thereof in such a Way and Manner as you shall judge most expedient and effectual. And we require you, and every one of you, and do expect, according to the Trust and Confidence we have in your Affections and Duty to Our Service, that you will be careful to use your best Endeavours for curing the Distempers contracted during those late evil Times, for uniting Our good Subjects among themselves, and bringing them all to a cheerful Acquiescing and Obedience to Our Sovereign Authority, which We will employ by the Help of God for the maintaining and defending the true Reformed Religion, Increase of Piety, and the Settlement and Security of that Church in her Rights and Liberties, according to Law and ancient Custom. And in order thereunto, Our Will is, That you forthwith take such Course with the Rents belonging to the several Bishopricks and Deanries, that they may be restored and made useful to the Church, and that according to Justice, and the standing Law. And moreover you are to inhibit the assembling of Ministers in their several Synodical Meetings through the Kingdom, until Our further Pleasure, and to keep a watchful Eye over all who, upon any Pretext whatsoever, shall, by Discouraging, Preaching, Reviling, or any irregular or unlawful Way, endeavour to alienate the Affections of Our People, or dispose them to an ill Opinion of Us and Our Government, to the Disturbance of the Peace of the Kingdom. So expecting your cheerful Obedience, and a speedy Account of your Proceedings herein, We bid you heartily Farewel. Given at Our Court at Whitehall, August 14th 1661, and of Our Reign the 13th Year. By His Majesty's Command.'
' of

1661.

LAWDERDALE.

To this Diet of the Council, all the Counsellors had been called by Letters from the Clerk: And they were pretty well convened. After reading the King's Letter, the Clerk is ordered to draw up an Act in obedience thereunto, to be proclaimed and made known to all his Majesty's Lieges, that none pretend Ignorance. Accordingly the Clerk presents the Draught next Day, September 6th, and the Council approve it, and order it to be printed and published; and it was proclaimed over the Cross with great Solemnity, by the Lyon King at Arms, with all the Trumpets, and the Magistrates of Edinburgh in their Robes. The Proclamation I have insert App. No. 25. It is very near a resumming of the Letter just now insert, with some little Alterations in Form, and the Addition of the Penalty of present Imprisonment, in case of Failzie. And in making Remarks upon the Proclamation I'll have Occasion to set all the Parts of the Letter in their due Light.

Act and Proclamation of Council in consequence of it, September 6.

App. No. 25.

This Letter, Act, and Proclamation, being the Foundation of the setting up of Episcopacy in Scotland at this Time, and Presbytery having only lived about Two Months under the Shadow of the Royal Supremacy; and what is contained in the King's Letter and this Act being so singular, and of such Importance, the Reader will bear with me in making some Observes upon them, and this great Turn in Church Affairs. It will have been already observed, that the Parliament for as far as they went, yet would not venture upon the direct Introduction of Prelates; this might have had Inconveniencies. And till once Matters were prepared by the Interposition of the King's Credit and Authority, I question if it would have carried in the House.

Observations upon both.

Now we have a plain Gloss upon the Letter to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, which indeed the Text cannot bear: From which it appears that many Ministers and others were shamefully bubbled by that Trick of Mr. Sharp. However it deserves our Notice, that in the Resumption of that Letter at this Time, the little mighty Word As, upon which so much Weight was laid, is left out, that there might be the fairer Room to bring in Bishops upon that very Ground, which so many took to be an Assurance given against them.

They are a plain Commentary on the Letter to the Presbytery of Edinburgh.

We have next a clear View here of the real Design of the Act Rescissory, passed by the Parliament, as we have seen, to unhinge Presbytery, and take away the Hedge from about it, and leave it to Mr. Sharp and his Associates, their Will. And by Mr. Sharp's Spite against Presbyterian Government of Christ's Institution, and his Ambition, Scotsmen must be deprived of many excellent Laws about Civil Things, as well as religious, made from the 1640 to the 1651. Indeed Religion and Civil Liberty stand and fall together.

And discover the Design of the Act Rescissory.

It appears further from this Letter and Proclamation, that the Settlement of Episcopacy in Scotland is the Child of the Regal Supremacy, one of the first Fruits of absolute and arbitrary Power, and the mere Effect of Royal Pleasure. The King is so tender of this, that he neither advises with his Council in this Matter, nor seeks their Consent, but requires their publishing of his Pleasure in this Point; and the Council themselves put it upon this Foot, and lay the Burden off themselves upon the King's Letter.

Episcopacy in Scotland the Child of Regal Supremacy.

Episcopacy was still thus brought in upon us in this Church, and crammed down our Throat in Scotland, not from convincing Reasons, or Pretext of Divine Right, but merely as the Sovereign's Will; yea, it never had the Shadow of Parliamentary Authority, till the King's Honour was once pledged and engaged; which, we may easily believe, went very far afterwards in Parliament, with such who had no Principle, and as little Concern about Church-

Grounds for Prelacy, in the Letter, considered.

government: And our Episcopalians have the less Ground to object against the throwing out of Prelacy at the Revolution, by a King and Parliament jointly acting, and in the fullest Freedom.

A Heap indeed of alledged Grounds for bringing in of Bishops are cast into the Letter and Act, which might be at much Length exposed, were not this a little foreign and wearisome in a History. The Inconveniencies accompanying and issuing from the Exercise of Church-government these Twenty three Years past, are put in the Front. Inconveniencies, I own, is a softer Term than I expected at this Time; those may, and do accompany the best Constitutions, the Exercise of just Power, and the Execution of the most excellent Laws; what they were I shall not affirm: But this I am sure of, much real Piety, Conversion of Multitudes, a signal bearing down of Profaneness, and a great Reformation of Manners accompanied Presbytery in the Interval spoken of, to the Observation of all the Reformed Churches. Perhaps some People now might reckon these Inconveniencies, at least their Practice seemed to speak out this.

Presbytery not contrary to Monarchy.

Presbytery, tho' never named, is next supposed contrary to Monarchy: The Reasons of this Cry have in part been already noticed. King JAMES VI. whose Apophthegm seems here pointed at, was of another Opinion, till he had the Gaining and Gratifying the English Prelates in his Eye; and if the Two Crowns had not been to be united, I cannot help thinking he would have continued in his first and justest Sentiments: Yea, King CHARLES I. did not stifle the Conviction he had, That the Covenanters were his best Friends, when he wrote his Sentiments to his Queen, without any Biass, and for the Benefit of his Children: And since the Revolution, as the Presbyterians, by their unshaken Loyalty, have demonstrate the Falseness of this Calumny, so the repeated Acknowledgments of the Consistency of their Carriage to their Principles, and of their real Regard to our limited Monarchy, now during Four Reigns, from our Sovereigns themselves, almost every Year to our Assemblies, do abundantly prove the same.

Confusions of the late Times not owing to Presbytery.

The Confusions of the late Times, and other Things in the Letter, can never be charged upon Presbyterian Ministers, without the greatest Impudence, since they were the only Body in the Three Kingdoms, who stood out against the Usurper; and their Loyalty since the Reformation, and in the Period here spoken of, hath been lately made evident in more Books than one, and fully vouched.

The Motives for Change of Government, in the Letter, considered.

I do not enter upon the Motives made up by some Body for the King, and in the Letter alledged to sway him in this Change. How far there was Regard to the Glory of God, in acting contrary to the solemn Oath, wherein God's Name was called in, when Presbytery was overturned, the World must judge. In the next Clause, the Religion of England and Ireland ought to have been put instead of the Reformed Religion, and then the Sentence would have run agreeably to Truth; since no other Reformed Church save these Two, ever thought their Good or Interest consisted in having Bishops. Whether Unity, Order, or Peace followed upon this Prelatical Establishment, the Reader will be in case to form some Judgment, after he has perused this History: Indeed Confusion, Division, and Cruelty were still the Produce of Prelacy in Scotland. The true and real Reason, tho' but a partial one, of this Change, comes last, That there may be a Harmony 'twixt the Government of England, Ireland, and Scotland. The Altar at Damascus was a Model of old, and now the English Constitution in Church must be Scotland's Model. Our Civil Affairs were very much henceforth to be under English Influence, and as a Step to this, and to gratify the high-flying Party in England, and Bishops there, our excellent Church-government, legally and solemnly settled, must be overturned. The Days have been when this would not have gone so well down in Scotland, as it did at this Juncture.

Many Reasons
since that Time much urged for Prelacy, not insisted
upon.

These are the Reasons, such as they are, given in the Letter, for this vast Alteration in the Church of Scotland. It is good in so far, that neither a Jus divinum, first the Tridentine, and then the Laudean Scheme of Episcopacy, neither Scripture, nor uninterrupted lineal Succession from the Apostles, nor boasted Antiquity, are so much as pretended. Our Noblemen, thro' whose Hands this Letter was to come, were of better Sense than to insist on those; and if they were in Mr. Sharp's first Draught, they found it proper to drop them.

Further Remarks on the Letter and
Proclamation.

Perhaps I have been too long in my Remarks on this Letter, and therefore I only further take Notice, That Episcopacy, As in the Reign of the King's Father and Grandfather, is set up; and so Perth Articles are brought in, and the Encroachments upon Religion and Liberty begun again, which were the true Inlets to what is so much talked of now, The Troubles of the late Times. The solemn Charge given unto all Subjects, to compose themselves to a cheerful Acquiescence and Obedience to the King's Will, in this Imposition, says, That it was scarce expected this Change of Government would be acceptable, yea, that it was against the Inclinations of the most Part. The positive Requisition of Obedience to the King's Sovereign Authority, in this very Thing exercised now in Scotland, lets us see again, that Bishops came in here from the sole Exercise of the Prerogative, and all who subjected to them homologated the Supremacy. To support this Establishment Persecution is begun, and Iniquity established by a Law. Imprisonment is ordered for all who speak according to their Conscience, known

known Principles, and solemn Engagements, or preach against Episcopacy, or any Thing now enacted. Men must either be silent and dumb; or, if they have any Principles and Conscience, and this Court very much under the Management of the Bishops, and most arbitrary. And all in Civil Offices are required to begin this Persecution upon their Allegiance to his Majesty. This was the first remarkable Act of our new constitute Council, and the Preface to many severe Processes and Oppressions, as we may hear. That same Day, September 6th, the Council order a just Double of the above Act and Proclamation to be forthwith transmitted to his Majesty, with the following Letter.

Most Sacred Sovereign,

WE no sooner perused Your Majesty's Letter, of the Date the 14th of August last, but in the Acknowledgment of your Majesty's Piety and Care for the Preservation of the Protestant Religion, the Establishment of the right Government of the Church, and Peace and Happiness of all your Subjects, we did immediately issue a Proclamation, to be printed and published, fully relating to all your Royal Commands; whereof we have sent a Copy herewith inclosed. We hope all your Majesty's good Subjects will acquiesce and give due Obedience to them, and thereby testify their Faithfulness and Affection to your Majesty's Government and Authority. We shall endeavour to have a watchful Eye over all Persons, and be ready to prosecute your Majesty's Commands, in order to what is enjoined, as becomes,

Most Sacred Sovereign,

Your Majesty's most humble, dutiful, and obedient Subjects and Servants,

The King, as we have seen above in his Letter about the Earl of Tweddale, approves of, and returns his Thanks for this Proclamation, September 23^d. Thus Episcopacy is brought in again to Scotland, and every Thing now must be done for supporting the Prelates, and taking away any Power Presbyteries yet essayed to exercise.

Accordingly, December 10. the Council desire the Chancellor to send the following Letter to the Presbytery of Peebles, upon Information they were about to ordain a Minister.

Council's Letter to the Presbytery of Peebles, Dec. 10.

R. R.

THE Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, being informed, that you are about to proceed to the Admission of Mr. John Hay, Student of Divinity, to the Kirk of Maner, which is within the Diocese of the Archbishop of Glasgow, and so cannot be admitted by you, since the Archbishop is restored to all the Rights and Privileges belonging to any of his Predecessors since the Reformation, have therefore desired me to intimate to you, in their Name, That you do not proceed to the Admission of the said Mr. John, but continue the same until the Return of the Archbishop, which will be in a very short Time. I doubt not but you will obey this Command, signified to you from

Your affectionate Friend,
Glencairn Chancellor.

At their next Sederunt, they go on to make a general Act to reach all Presbyteries and Patrons, That no Ministers be ordained unless their Presentation be directed to the Bishop. This Act I have not seen in Print, and therefore insert it here.

Council's Act
for discharging Presentations to Presbyteries.

FORASMUCH as by an Act of Privy Council, dated September 6th last, His Majesty's Royal Pleasure, to restore the Church of this Kingdom to its Government by Bishops, as it was by Law before the late Troubles, during the Reigns of His Majesty's Royal Father and Grandfather of blessed Memory, and as it now stands settled by Law, was made known to all the Subjects of this Kingdom, by open Proclamation at the Market-cross of all Royal Burghs: And that it is statute by the Act 1. Parl. 21. James VI. That all Presentations to Benefices should be directed thereafter to the Archbishop or Bishop of the Diocese, within the Bounds whereof any vacant Church lieth; so that since their Restitution to their former Dignities, and Privileges, and Powers settled upon them by Law and Acts of Parliament, no Minister within this Kingdom should be admitted to any Benefice, but upon Presentations directed as said is. And yet notwithstanding hereof, 'tis informed, That, upon Presentations directed to Presbyteries, they do proceed to admit Ministers to Kirks and Benefices, albeit the Bishops be restored to their Dignities, some of them already consecrated, and all of them in a very short Time will be invested in their Rights and Benefices, and impowered to receive Presentations, and grant Admissions thereupon. Therefore the Council prohibits, and by these Presents discharges all Patrons to direct any Presentations to any Presbytery: And also discharges all and sundry Presbyteries within this Kingdom to proceed to the Admission of any Minister to any Benefice or Kirk within their respective Bounds, upon any such Presentations, as they will be answerable. With Certification, if they do otherwise, the said Presentation and Admission shall be void and null, as if they never had been granted. And ordains these Presents to be printed, and published at the Market-crosses of the Head-burghs of the several Shires within this Kingdom, That none pretend Ignorance.

That same Day the Council make the following Act concerning the Presbytery of Peebles, who, it seems, either had not received the Chancellor's Letter to them, of the 10th, or could not stop the Ordination, having all necessary to the Gospel-settlement of a Minister.

Apud Edinburgh, Dec. 12. 1661.

Act of Council against the Presbytery of Peebles.

FORASMUCH as the Presbytery of Peebles have proceeded to the Admission of one Mr. John Hay to the Kirk of Manner, notwithstanding of the Letter and Command to the contrary from the Lords of Council, of the 10th Instant; the Council do therefore Ordain Letters to be directed against the haill Members of the said Presbytery, who were present at the said Admission, viz. Mrs. Richard Brown Minister at Drumelzier, Robert Brown of Lyne, Robert Eliot at Lintoun, Hew Craig at Railey, David Thomson at Dask, Patrick Purdie at Newlands, and Patrick Fleming at Stobo, to compare and answer to the Premises, under Pain of Rebellion.

Remarks upon
it.

I have nothing further of this Matter, but what is now insert from the Registers, where I do not find any more concerning this Presbytery: But next Year we shall find some other Presbyteries writ to by the Council; and in a little Time all Presbyteries were suppressed, save such as came and subjected to the Bishops. This Procedure against Presbyteries was a Stretch beyond the King's Letter in August, and the Council's own Act, September 6th, which only discharged Synods. They might have as well prohibited Presbyteries to cognosce upon Scandal, and have abrogate all Discipline, to which indeed many were obnoxious, as limit them in Point of Ordination, which is one great Part of their Ministerial Function, yet reserved to them by the King's last Letter: And in this the Council, without any Warrant from the King or Parliament, turn Law-makers, and go beyond their Power, which was only to execute the Laws made; but of this we shall have more flaming Instances afterwards. Perhaps they thought nothing beyond their Sphere, which might be a Service to the Prelates, and they would rather suffer many Congregations to ly vacant, than hazard the Admission of one who might happen to be averse from Episcopacy.

Some Account of the Prelates now advanced.

Thus I have gone through what I find done by the Council this Year, for the Erection of Episcopacy, by the King's Orders, and their abridging Church-judicatories in their Liberties; I shall now shut up this Section, with some Account of the Bishops themselves now set up, their Character and Reordination in England.

Many Solicitations for Bishopricks.

When Law, such as it was, had made Way for the Prelates, Solicitations begin apace for Bishopricks. No great Disliker of Prelacy observes, "In September and October this Year, many of the Ministry were seeking after the Episcopal Dignity, while in the mean Time a great "great many others spoke and taught against it as unlawful." Such apostate, ambitious, and aspiring Ministers as had most Friends in Court, carried them. Mr. James Sharp had secured the Primacy and Archbishoprick of St. Andrews to himself: 'Tho' he wanted not the Impudence and Dissimulation to make Offers of it to some eminent Presbyterian Ministers, one of which told him, He doubted not but he designed that for himself, and he would receive the Curse of God with it.

Our Bishopricks in Scotland are far from the Fatness and Opulency of those in England. An Account before me bears, that in Bulk they came but to 4 or 5000 Pounds Sterling a Year, in ordinary Years, much of their Rent being in Victual. I suppose I will not be much out, when I say the Bishoprick of Winchester is better than all our Scots Bishopricks put together. Some of them are very mean; the Revenue of that of Argyle is but about 130 Pounds a Year. That of Dumblain is about 120. But a weak Temptation goes far, where there is a strong Corruption. Surely it was violent Avarice and Ambition, which could persuade them to accept an Office so odious, and of so inconsiderable Incomes.

Tho' they be far from the Opulency of those in Engl. laid.

For the Honour of the first and great Authors of all the ensuing Sufferings of Presbyterians, I thought it not improper to give here a short Hint of the Persons the King was pleased to pitch upon for the first Set of our Bishops; and as they were Persons abundantly obsequious to the Designs now on Foot, so it will easily appear that none of them were any great Ornaments to their Office, which was so much hated in Scotland, neither any great Credit to their Brethren in England.

Mr. James Sharp was Metropolitan, and placed as Primate at St. Andrews. I shall not offer any large Character of him; somewhat has been narrated, and more is yet before us. His Life, until his arriving at the Top of his Ambition, I have read, written by one of the After-sufferers, a worthy Gentleman; and should I give an Abstract of it, the Portrait would be very black and surprising. His Dream, when at the University, his taking the Tender, his Proposal to Oliver Cromwel, which made the Usurper to assert him very publicly to be an Atheist, his betraying Presbyterian Ministers when at Court, and afterwards pursuing them for his Charges, his Baleness with Isobel Lindsay, as she declared in his Face openly enough, and Share in the Murder of the poor Infant, his Perjury in Mr. James Mitchel's Case, his cruel Life and strange Death, would make up a very black History; and as they were commonly talked of, so I find they were generally believed by those who lived with, and had Accesse to know him. But this is not a Place to insist on them.

Mr. James Sharp Archbishop of St. Andrews.

His great Talents were Caution, Cunning, and Dissimulation, with unwearied Diligence; these very much qualified him for his terrible Undertakings. He got himself into the Archbishoprick of St. Andrews, as a Reward for betraying this Church. Indeed when he first came down, August 1660. as we have heard, with the double-faced Letter to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, and gave a Narrative of his Pains at London, the Cheat was not perceived, and the Suspicions the protesting Ministers had about him, were not regarded: But very soon he opened out, and at length appeared in his true Colours; and none were more grieved at his base Dealing than the Reverend Mr. Douglas, and the Ministers of Edinburgh, who had formerly so much confided in him; and we have seen Mr. Douglas's Thoughts of him. However, he got his Ambition satisfied, and his Patent and Gift under the Great Seal in November this Year, of which some Notice may be taken afterwards.

Mr. Andrew Fairfoul got the Archbishoprick of Glasgow; a Man of some Learning and neat Expression, but never taken to be either serious or sincere. He had been Minister first at Leith, and at this Time was at Dunee, and in that Country there was no small Talking of his Intrigues with a Lady, who shall be nameless; but Death cut him off in little more than a Year after his Promotion, as will be noticed afterwards.

Mr. Andrew Fairfoul Archbishop of Glasgow.

Mr. George Wiseheart is placed at the See of Edinburgh. He had been laid under Church Censure by the old Covenanters, about the Time of the Encampment at Duncelaw, in the Year 1639. and this probably recommended him now. This Man could not refrain from profane Swearing, even upon the Street of Edinburgh; and he was a known Drunkard. He published somewhat in Divinity; but then, as I find it remarked by a very good Hand, his lascivious Poems, which, compared with the most luscious Parts of Ovid, de arte Amandi, are modest, gave Scandal to all the World.

Mr. George Wiseheart Bishop of Edinburgh.

Mr. Thomas Sideferf is fixed at Orkney. He had been Bishop of Galloway, and deposed in the Year 1638. for the common Faults of the Prelates at that Time, and in particular for erroneous Doctrine; and now he is translated to a better Benefice.

Mr. Thomas Sideferf at Orkney.

Mr. David Mitchel, once Minister of Edinburgh, but deposed by the General Assembly for Heresy, and thereupon going to England, was made one of the Prebendaries of Westminster, is named for Aberdeen, but enjoyed it not a full Year.

Mr. David Mitchel at Aberdeen.

Mr. James Hamilton, Brother to the Lord Belhaven, Minister at Cambusfuehan, is placed at Galloway. His Gifts were reckoned every Way ordinary; but he was remarkable for his cunning Time-serving Temper.

Mr. James Hamilton at Galloway.

Mr. Robert
Wallace Bishop of the Isles
Mr. David
Fletcher Bishop of Argyle.

Mr. Robert Wallace, Minister at Barnwell in the Shire of Air, famous for his large Stomack, got the Bishoprick of the Isles, though he understood not one Word of the Language of the Natives. He was a Relation of the Chancellor's, and that was enough.

Mr. David Fletcher, Minister at Melrofs, a remarkable Worldling, was named for the Bishoprick of Argyle: I doubt if he understood the Irish Language either. Melrofs was a good Stipend, and he continued a while preaching there, and because of his Preaching there, he boasted of his Diligence beyond the rest of his Brethren, who, it must be owned, for the most Part preached little or none; mean while I don't hear any of them, save he, took Two Stipends.

Mr. George Haliburton at Dunkeld.

Mr. George Haliburton, Minister at Perth, had the Sec of Dunkeld. His Character at that Time was, A Man who had made many Changes, and was sincere in none of them.

Mr. Patrick
Forbes at Caithness.

Mr. Patrick Forbes, the degenerate Plant of the excellent Mr. John Forbes, who kept the Assembly at Aberdeen, 1605. was fixed at Caithness.

Mr. David
Strachan at Bre-
chin.
Mr. John Paterson at Ross.

Mr. David Strachan Minister at Fettercairn, the Commissioner's Minister, got the small Bishoprick of Brechin.

Mr. John Paterfon, Minister at Aberdeen, got the Bishoprick of Ross. His Son made a greater Figure than he did.

Mr. Murdoch
Mackenzie at Murray.

Mr. Murdoch Mackenzie, Minister at Elgin, was placed at Murray. While a Minister, he was famous for searching Peoples Kitchens on Christmas-day for the superstitious Goose, telling them, That the Feathers of them would rise up in Judgment against them one Day; and when a Bishop, as famous for affecting always to fall a preaching upon the Deceitfulness of Riches, while he was drawing the Money o'er the Board to him.

Mr. Robert
Leighton at Dumblain.

Mr. Robert Leighton, once Minister of Newbottle, and at this Time Principal of the College of Edinburgh, Son to Mr. Leighton in England, the Author of Zion's Plea against Prelacy, who was so severely handled by the Prelates there, made Choice of the small Bishoprick of Dumblain, to evidence his Abstractedness from the World. His Character was by far the best of any of the Bishops now set up: And to give him his due, he was a Man of very considerable Learning, an excellent Utterance, and of a grave and abstracted Conversation. He was reckoned devout, and an Enemy to Persecution, and professed a great Deal of Meekness and Humility. By many he was judged void of any doctrinal Principle, and his close Correspondence with some of his Relations at Doway in Popish Orders, made him suspected as very much indifferent as to all Professions, which bear the Name of Christian. He was much taken with some of the Popish mystick Writers, and indeed a Latitudinarian, and of an over extensive Charity. His Writings published since the Revolution, evidence his Abilities, and that he was very much superior to his Fellows.

His Character.

This Set of Men not improper to the Design of setting them up.

This is the Set of Men pitched upon to lord it over the Church of Scotland. They were, it must be owned, very well chosen for their Work, and agreeable enough to the Design of setting them up; unless it was, that the Primate turned too heavy for several of our Nobility, who would have only had a moderate Prelacy brought in: But when considered as to their personal Character, they made good the Countryman's Remark, 'That the Bishops of England were like the Kings of Judah, some good, some bad; but the Prelates in Scotland were like the Kings of Israel, not one of them good, but all of them Followers of Jeroboam, the Son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.'

Necessary of their being ordained in England.

There were no Bishops, before the 1638. alive in Scotland, save Sydeserf; and so it was necessary these Persons receive their Orders somewhere else: None of the Reformed Churches, except England or Ireland, could help them in this Matter. It was not so fit, and perhaps not practicable, that the whole Fourteen should be brought up to England, therefore the Court pitched upon Mrs. Sharp, Fairfoul, and Hamilton to come up to London, and learn the Service of that Land, and receive Episcopal Ordination. Mr. Leighton, I think, was in England this Summer and Harvest, and October 18. the other Three go up.

Tenets as to this advanced by the English Bishops.

At this Time the Unchurching of all the Protestant Churches who had not Prelatic Ordination, the casting and voiding their Ministry, and consequently their Sacraments, with the jus divinum, and absolute Necessity of Episcopal Ordination, were Doctrines mightily coming in Request. From those abominable Principles came the Application about this Time made by some great Names in the English Church to the King, That his Ambassador in France might be discharged to hold Communion with the Protestants there, because they wanted Prelatic Ordination, and that he might no more go to the Seat he had appointed for him in the Protestant Church at Charentoun, and that he might have a Chapel of his own.

They insist upon the Re-ordination of our Scottish Bishops.

Hence it was insisted upon, That our Scots Bishops must be re-ordained, having only formerly had Presbyterian Ordination. This was a proper Juncture for High-fliers to insist in this Matter; and a Commission under the Great Seal of England was directed to Doctor Sheldon Bishop of London, the Bishop of Worcester, and some other Suffragans of the Diocese of Canterbury. The Two Archbishops in England declined to be put in, upon what Views I shall not say: But one would have thought, that our old Prelate Sydeserf might have been joyned in Commission with them. The Royal Prerogative from which all their Power came in this Consecration, might have sufficiently authorized a Scots Bishop to have acted acted in this Matter in England; but this was not done: Whether the English Prelates refused to act in a Concert with a deposed and excommunicate Bishop, tho' restored by the King, or what the Reason was, I cannot say.

When Doctor Sheldon made the Proposal, That they must be first ordained Deacons, and then Presbyters, before they could be consecrate Bishops; Mr. Sharp made some Bustle, and urged the sustaining of Spotiswood's Presbyterian Ordination, 1610. by the English Bishops, when he was consecrate; with some other Arguments. But the Doctor was peremptory, and abundantly fixed in this Point. The others very soon yielded, when they found this would be insisted upon; which made the Bishop of London to tell Mr. Sharp, when he came to acquaint him with their Consent to Re-ordination, That it was the Scots Fashion to scruple at every Thing, and to swallow any Thing.

Debate on this Point 'twixt them and the Bishop of London.

Thus they were justly reprov'd, but they resolv'd to bogle at nothing in their Way to the Prelacy; and one of them frankly declared, He would be ordained, re-ordained, and re-ordained again, if it was insisted upon. So our first Prelates cast a Slur upon, yea, on the Matter nullity all they had done as Gospel-bishops; they must become the King's Creatures, and renounce their Presbyterian Ordination, before they can receive the Episcopal Dignity and Consecration.

In December, these Four, with a great Parade at Westminster, before a great Confluence of Scots and English Nobility, were dubbed, first Preaching-deacons, then Presbyters, and then consecrated Bishops in one Day, by Doctor Sheldon and a few others. The Ceremony was performed in all the Modes of the English Church, with Vestments, and all their Cringes and Bows; at which, 'tis said, some Indecencies fell out, and after they had received the Sacrament kneeling, in all Points they were ordained according to the Office and Form there. After the Consecration, the Bishops and Peers were feasted at Westminster, and then went again to Church, and heard another Sermon.

In December Mrs. Sharp, Easton, Hamilton and Leighton were consecrated at London.

Being thus impowered, early next Year they come down, and lay on their Episcopal Hands upon their Brethren in Scotland, named by the Court for the different Sees, as we may afterwards hear. Thus our Scots Prelates are set up; and some obvious Reflections rise from this, with which I shall end this Section.

Our Scots Bishops, by submitting to be re-ordained as Presbyters, declared to all the World, That they did not believe their Presbyterian Ordination to be valid; and yet when they came down to Scotland, and entred upon the Exercise of their Episcopal Office, they did not re-ordain such of the Ministers as complied with them.

Remarks on the Re-ordination of our Scots Bishops.

The natural Question upon this, which offers to the Episcopal Party, is, Whether such Compilers, not having Episcopal Ordination, were true Gospel-ministers? If they were not, as is certain by the Episcopal Principles they could not be; was it not the most barbarous Thing in the World, to persecute People for not owning them as Ministers, who by their own Principles were indeed no Ministers?

It is in vain to say, That the Bishop's Allowance of them was equivalent to Ordination, by the Imposition of his Hands: For if so, why were they themselves reordained by Imposition of Hands; and thereby gave Scandal to all the Reformed Churches? I must leave the Party to answer this at their Leisure, the best Way they can; I am sure they have Reason to find a good Answer to it if possible, upon more Accounts than one; for I don't see how the Sacraments dispensed by them could be valid, any more than how their Harassing the Presbyterians can be justified.

Perhaps the curious Reader may be willing to have the Tenor of the Letters Patent, and Royal Gift, establishing those first Prelates after the Restoration; and therefore I subjoin here an Abstract of these for Mr. Sharp, of the Date November this Year, from which we will easily guess at the Form of the rest; and they run, Tenor of the Letters Patent for making Mr. Sharp Archbishop of St. Andrews.

'That during the Tumults in the Kingdom for Twenty three Years preceeding, Laws were made for the Extirpation of the Church-government by the Archbishops and Bishops, against the established Law and Government of the Church of this Kingdom, in Prejudice of his Majesty's Power and Prerogative, which are rescinded by the current Parliament; so that the Authority Civil and Ecclesiastick is redintegrate, according to the Laws in Force before the Rebellion.'

'And because at this Time the Deans and Members of Chapters are for the most Part dead, and their Offices vacant; so that Archbishops and Bishops cannot be nominated, presented, and elected according to the Order prescribed by Act of Parliament, 1617.'

'And that his Majesty considereth, that the Offices of the Bishops and Archbishops in this Kingdom do vaik in his Majesty's Hands, by the Death and Dimission of the last Incumbents, particularly the Archbishoprick of St. Andrews, by the Decease of the last Bishop thereof, to wit, Mr. John Spotiswood.'

'And his Majesty being informed of the Piety, Prudence, &c. of Mr. James Sharp, Doctor in Divinity, therefore his Majesty, ex autoritate regali, & potestate regia, certa scientia, proprioque motu, makes, creates, and ordains the said Doctor James Sharp Archbishop

Mistake of the English Historians, as to the Reintroduction of Pre-lacy, noticed.

Remarks on the Complete History of England
Vol. 3. p. 253.

of the said Archbishoprick of St. Andrews, and Primate and Metropolitan of all Scot'land.'

Before I end this Section, let me take some Notice of the Mistakes, not to say designed Misrepresentations of some of the most celebrated English Historians, when they give the Account of the Reintroduction of Prelacy to Scotland. More than once I shall have Occasion to observe their gross Blunders in plain Facts, for which the best Excuse I know of, is, our own unaccountable Negligence in giving the World and our Neighbours just Accounts of Scots Affairs. I hope after this they shall do us more Justice.

The Author of the Complete History of England, generally reckoned to be Bishop Ken-net, Vol. III. p. 253. first Edition, sets this Affair in a quite wrong Light. He would have us believe, that in Scotland Presbytery began to vanish upon the first Appearance of Monarchy.
Some few Sheets before, he had done the English Presbyterians the Justice to own they were heartily for Monarchy, while the Independents, according to him, were for a Commonwealth.
The Scots Presbyterians were not a whit behind them; so that if Presbytery vanished upon the Return of the King, the Reproach of Ingratitude must fall, where perhaps the Author did not design it; and how agreeable this was to Promises and Engagements the King and his Party were under, he cannot be ignorant. I am sorry there is such Ground given from the unfair Narrative of the Act of Parliament he cites, and other Acts of Parliament after the Restoration, to say that the Miseries of Scotland in the former Period, came from the Kirk-party. But as an Historian he might have known and observed, that those Narratives were not agreeable to Truth, and nothing else but partial and unjust Representations, to serve the Designs of a prevailing Party, vamped up by the Earl of Middleton and Mr. Sharp, as a Pretext for introducing Prelacy and arbitrary Power in Scotland. Indeed I suspect these unhappy Narratives have misled many of the English Writers into much of their foolish Satyr against the Presbyterian Establishment; but had they been so equal as to have considered the publick Papers of the Kingdom, and Church of Scotland from the 1638. to the Usurpation, and the fair Accounts of that Period in the Marquis of Argyll's Case and other Papers, much of this might have been prevented, and the World would not have been so much imposed upon in this Matter.

He adds, The Kirk had an Establishment by Law, which is an Evidence of the Author's Candor, and more than our Episcopal Writers will allow, and confirms the Remarks before made upon the base Treatment of this Church, in the double-faced Letter to the Presbytery of Edinburgh. A Writer who is heartily upon the Revolution-bottom, cannot in any Consistency with himself, treat the Procedure of the Scots Nation after the 1637. as illegal. What follows, but weak in the Hearts of the People, is apparently a most groundless Innuendo; Witness the insuperable Backwardness of the Body of the People for Twenty seven Years to Pre-lacy; which could not be rooted out from such who were not either indifferent about every Thing of this Nature, or plainly under the Influence of the Nobility and Gentry, who set up for Prelacy, especially in the Northern Shires. He adds, Especially the Nobles and Lairds.
That great Numbers of those fell in with Middleton's Projects, in his two Sessions of Parliament,
I do not deny: But then as to the Lairds, no small Care had been taken to keep out of the Parliament the most substantial and sensible Gentlemen, at least in the East, South and West, as much disaffected to Prelacy. And our Nobility in Scotland were generally against Episcopacy, save such who were in Places of Power, and some of their Relations whom they influenced, and those who were of broken Fortunes, and inclined to mend them. Some few indeed, once of other Sentiments, when grated by the faithful Exercise of Discipline under Presbytery, turned Favourers of Prelacy, and with those joyned many of our younger Noblemen, who knew little but Slavery and Oppression under the Usurpation, and were taught to speak against the Presbyterian Establishment.

Thus, concludes he, Presbytery was to fall without the Honour of a Dissolution. I imagine the Author did not know, that the Commissioner Middleton, notwithstanding all his Numbers, durst not venture upon a direct Dissolution of Presbytery: It was thought safest to make a Change, so contrary to the Inclinations of the best Part of the Nation, as gradual and insensible as might be; and when different Measures were taken in the Act at Glasgow, they soon felt the Mistake, and with some Difficulty Mr. Sharp retrieved it. The Falling of Presbytery then, without what the Author calls the Honour of a Dissolution, was from Necessity and Fear, and not Choice. In short, according to this Author's expressing himself, one would think that Presbytery remained the legal Establishment during the Two Brothers Reigns. He owns it was established by Law, and that these Laws were not dissolved and repealed; and in some respect this was indeed the State of the Case, as may afterwards be observed.

Upon the Prospect of this favourable Turn, adds the Doctor, some of the most worthy of the Scots Presbyters, Mr. James Sharp, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Farewel, and Mr. Logtoun, were consecrated by the Bishop of Winchester. His Mistake of Farewel for Mr. Fairfoul, and Logtoun for Leightoun, may be an Error of the Press; and yet the following Historians, Mr. Collier, and Mr.
Eachard, and other English Writers have copied after him. The Worth of those Presbyters is well enough known in Scotland, and their Character hath been already given. He further observes

erves very justly, That those Four obtained the Proclamation, September 6. for restoring 1661.
Archbishops and Bishops. This indeed was not the Deed of Scotland, but impetrate at London, by the Influence of the High-fliers there, and chim'd in with next Year by our obsequious Parliament. His Remark in the same Place, of the Inconsistency of Patronages with Presbytery, is also very just.

This great Change in Scotland the Author attributes to the Earl of Middleton, and so he well might; but what follows is such a Blunder as gives us a full Proof how little Acquaintance the best of our English Writers have with our Scots Affairs: 'But, 1663. Middleton was removed, and the Earl of Rothes appointed High Commissioner of Scotland, a Ringleader of the Presbyterians under King Charles I. and even the Principal of the Conspirators who subscribed a Letter au Roy, to aid their Kirk and Covenant. And now the Presbyterians lost Ground more and more.' The Letter here pointed at, to the French King, I hope will be set in its due Light by those who write the History of that Period; and the Memory of that extraordinary Person the Earl of Rothes, and others upon whom it is charged, may be easily vindicated from the Conspiracy this Author talks of. Since he wrote the History of the former Reign, he ought to have known, that that excellent Person, the Earl of Rothes, was got to Heaven many Years before the Restoration; and the Earl who was Commissioner at this Time, was never so unlike his Father and himself, as when serving the Interests of Prelacy, and under Bishop Sharp's Management, at the Top of the High Commission.

What this Author incidentally drops afterwards, p. 405. comes in the last Room to be considered here. In giving the Duke of Lawderdale's Character, among other Things, he makes him the Underminer of Episcopacy in Scotland, by laying it upon a new Foundation, The Pleasure of the King. This is not a Place to enquire how far the Establishment of Prelacy in the Christian Church was still from the Pleasure of the Civil Magistrate, and was brought in to model the Church-government, and Governors, in a Dependence upon the State: At least this seems plain enough, that the Continuance of the Hierarchy in Protestant Churches since the Reformation, is very much owing to this Spring. But the Doctor is certainly mistaken, when he calls this a new Foundation in Scotland, since it must be owned, by all who know any Thing of our Scots Affairs since our Reformation from Popery, that Prelacy here had never any other Foundation save the Pleasure of the King.

What hath been said upon this Historian, may serve upon the Matter, as Remarks upon the other English Writers, who have very much copied after The Complete History of England, in our Scots Affairs, and frequently keep by this Author's Words. Remarks upon other English Historians.

Mr. Collier, in his Account of this Turn, has nothing different from the former, unless it be an Insinuation, That the Presbyterians had seized Patronages: What he means, seizing them, needs to be explained. Presbyterian Ministers still complained of them since the Reformation, and a Presbyterian Parliament abolished them, but Presbyterians never made Use of them themselves. Mr. Collier.

Mr. Eachard very faithfully copies the two former, without observing that Distinctness, as to the Years, he might have done. His Reader will very readily imagine from his Account of this, that the Act of Parliament, restoring Bishops, was May 8th, 1661. especially since it stands so upon the Head of his Page; and several Acts he mentions, as well as the Proceedings against the Marquis of Argyle, were during that Year. Mr. Eachard.

S E C T. VIII.

Of several other Remarkables; which come not in upon the former Sections, during this Year 1661.

HAVING thus gone through the great Turn of Affairs in Scotland this Year, and such general Heads as appeared to me most proper, I have, in holding close by them, overlooked several Things remarkable enough, and not altogether alien from the Design of this History, which I am now to gather up here, and so end what I have upon this Year. And I take the greater Liberty to notice these incidental Matters, in this and the following Years, that we have yet almost nothing of a History of this Period I am upon. Some other Remarkables this Year.

Last Year, this Kingdom was delivered from the English Army, under the Fear of which, and an absolute Subjection, Scotland had been for a good many Years; and I find some Remarkables which were applied, perhaps without any Ground, to this Turn, in several Papers come to my Hands. I only hint at Two, which seem most observable. When the English subdued Scotland, the Swans which were in the Loch on the North-side of Lintithgow, left it, Observables at the King's Return.

it, and, as it was then termed, took Banishment on them; but last Year, or the Beginning of this, they came back upon the King's Return; and upon the Citadel of Perth, where the Arms of the Commonwealth had been put up, in May last Year, a Thistle grew out of the Wall near the Place, and quite overspread them, which was much observed, and our old Scots Motto, Nemo me impunè laceffet. Both these may be, without any Thing extraordinary, accounted for; but they were Matter of Remark and Talk, it may be, more than they deserved.

Solemn Interment of the Bones of the Marquis of Montrose.

At the first Session of Parliament this Year, when the Forms were over, January 4th, the Commissioner signified to the House, That it was his Majesty's Pleasure, that the Bones of the Marquis of Montrose should be gathered together to one Place, to be interred with the funeral Honours due to One who had died in his Majesty's Service. Accordingly, January 7th, all the Remains of his Body were gathered from the Places where they were placed, May 1650. His Corps was raised from the Burrow-muir, put in a fine Coffin, and carried up under a rich Canopy to the Tolbooth; where all being ready before, his Head was taken down, and put into the Coffin, with Colours flying, Cannons shooting, and Trumpets sounding, and carried down to Holy-rood-house, and depositate in the Isle, till afterwards what of his Members had been at Glasgow, Stirling, Perth and Aberdeen, had been taken down, and brought to Edinburgh beforehand: And May 11th, the Solemnity of the Funeral was performed in a vast Deal of State, and the Coffin was brought up to St. Giles's Church, with Mourners, led Horse, the Lyon, Heralds, and all the Members of Parliament attending, and the Commissioner in a Mourning Coach.

Appointment of the King's Life-guard.

Upon the 2^d of April, the King's Life-guard was formed. By their Constitution they were to consist of Noblemen and Gentlemens Sons, and they were to be One hundred and Twenty in Number, under the Command of the Lord Newburgh. After their taking an Oath to be loyal to his Majesty, they made a Parade through the Town of Edinburgh, with Carbines at their Saddles, and their Swords drawn. Whatever was their first Settlement, the Scum of the Nation was taken in to them; and we shall afterwards meet with them as ready Instruments in the Persecution which followed.

King's Coronation, April 25. observed.

April 23^d. was the Day of the King's Coronation at London; and it was solemnized at Edinburgh, by Preaching in all the Kirks; and Care was taken to have it kept with great State through all the remarkable Places in the Kingdom. There was Sermon in the Parliament-house, and great Rejoycings at the Cross, a sumptuous Feast at the Abbey, Ringing of Bells, Bonfires, and all other Demonstrations of Joy.

May 13. Waristoun's Forfeiture intimate.

May 13th, by Order of Parliament, My Lord Waristoun's Forfeiture was publicly intimate at the Cross by the Heralds, his Arms torn, and set up most contemptuously upon all the publick Places in Edinburgh. May 15th, the Proclamation for keeping the 29th of May was intimate by the Lyon with great Solemnity.

May 22. the Covenant burnt at London by the Hangman.

May 22^d, the Covenant was burnt with great Solemnity at London, by the Hand of the common Hangman, with all the Spite and Contempt that could be devised, and several senseless Roundels and Ballads were printed and spread, particularly one, entituled, The Execution of the Covenant burnt by the common Hangman, London May 22^d, 1661. One needs not be so much surpris'd at this by the High-fliers in England, since we shall just now meet with little less Contempt poured upon it in Scotland.

May 29. observed with Solemnity.

According to the Act of Parliament lately made and published, the 29th of May this Year was observed with the greatest Solemnity at Edinburgh. Sermons suitable to the Occasion were preached by Time-serving Ministers, in all the Kirks there. After Sermons a great Feast was prepared by the Town, in the great College-hall, at which the Commissioner, the great Nobility, and principal Members of Parliament were present: The Bells were rung, the Cannons discharged, and every Thing else that could be contrived to grace that Solemnity.

Reasons why the Church of Scotland were still against Anniversary-days.

Some Observations have been already made upon the Act of Parliament for keeping this Day. The Church of Scotland, since the Reformation, had still vigorously opposed the Observation of Anniversary Holy-days. They kept the holy Christian Sabbath with the most religious Strictness, and from Principle refused to keep any other stated Holy-days: And when upon very good Reasons they could not observe Christmas and Pasch, they could never think of doing that for their King, which their Saviour had not required to be done for himself.

This Day not kept to the Lord.

Certainly many who kept this Day, kept it not to the Lord, but it was solemnized with almost as much Riot, Revelling, and Madnefs, as if it had been one of the heathen Holy-days. For all these Reasons, the true Children of this Reformed Church refused this Impostition, as what by their Reformation-rights and Principles, as well as their solemn Vows, they were bound up from.

A melancholy Day this Year.

However this was a most melancholy Day to Scotland, being the Triumph of the Wicked, betwixt the Days of the Execution of the noble Marquis of Argyle, and Mr. James Guthrie; which made a very eminent Minister in the West of Scotland, yet in his Church, choose that

July 10th, Sir Alexander Durham Lord Lyon, was, with a great Deal of Solemnity, crown'd Lyon King at Arms. In the Face of Parliament there was a gold Crown put upon his Head, and the Commissioner had a Speech to him, and the Lord Register another. Before the Solemnity Mr. Robert Lawrie had a Sermon in the House, from that Text Esth. 6. 6. What shall be done to the Man whom the King delights to honour?

When the Parliament arose, and the Council sat down, with the whole executive Power in their Hands; at their first Meeting July 13th, they order the Citadels built by the English, to be demolished: And the Earl of Murray is appointed to sight and demolish that of Inverness, the Earl of Eglintoun that of Air, the Lord Bellenden that at Leith, and the Magistrates of Perth, with Sir George Kinnaird, that at Perth.

English Citadels ordered to be demolished, July 13.

July 25th, Mr. David Dickson applies the Council for their Licence and Privilege to print his Therapeutica Sacra, now translated into English by himself. The Council appoint Mr. Andrew Fairfoul to revise it, and report to the Council, whether it is fit to be reprinted. Now indeed the World was changed in Scotland, when Mr. Fairfoul is pitched upon to revise Mr. David Dickson, Professor of Divinity, his Books.

Application for a Licence to Mr. Dickson's Therapeutica Sacra.

This Year and the next, there are vast Numbers of Commissions granted by the Council to Gentlemen in every Shire, and almost in every Parish, especially in the North and East-country, to try Persons for Witchcraft: And great Numbers of these Wretches confess; clear Probation is found against others, and they are executed. The Numbers of these Commissions for Trial of Witches for several Years, surprised me when I met with them in the Registers.

Trial of Witches.

August 1st, the Council order that Day to be kept with such Solemnities as were formerly used before the late Usurpation, in Commemoration of the Deliverance of his Majesty's Grandfather JAMES VI. of ever Blessed Memory, from the Conspiracy intended by the Earl of Gowrie, conform to the late Act of Parliament made thereanent; and direct their Orders to the Magistrates of Edinburgh, and Governor of the Castle, to see to this. And, October 3^d, the like Orders are given, but more timeously, for the keeping of the 5th of November.

August 1. order'd to be kept, for the Discovery of Gowrie's Conspiracy.

September 17th, the Clerk is ordered to draw up a Proclamation, discharging the electing of any Person to be Magistrate or Counsellor within Burgh, but such as are of known Loyalty and Affection to his Majesty. To Morrow, September 18th, it was approv'd, and the Tenor of it follows.

WHEREAS, during the late unhappy Troubles, some Persons who were of Phanatical Principles, and Enemies to Monarchical Government and his Majesty's lawful Authority, to attain their ambitious Designs, did so comply with the Usurpers of the Government for the Time, and join with them, to secure their Tyranny and Usurpation, that by their Assistance and Countenance they did screw into their own Hands the sole Administration of Affairs and Jurisdiction within the most Part of the Burghs Royal in this Kingdom, and in Time did so settle their Interest, that none were chosen to be Magistrates, or of the Council, but such as adhered to them: And lest those Practices may be endeavour'd to be set on Foot again, and Attempts made to have such Persons elected, and the Power and Government continued as of late; which if not remedied, may be of dangerous Consequence, and prejudicial to his Majesty's Service and Authority, by obstructing these who are of known Integrity and Loyalty, to exercise his Majesty's Laws and Commands, in order to the securing his Royal Interest, and the Peace of the Kingdom, which is now necessary to be taken Notice of, when the Time of Election of Magistrates for Royal Burghs is approaching. Therefore the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, inhibit and discharge the electing of any Person to be Magistrate or Counsellor within Burgh, but such as are of known Loyalty and Affection to his Majesty's Government, qualified as is express in the late Acts of Parliament, and others made for that Effect, and whose Carriage, during the late Troubles, has been no Evidence to the contrary: With Certification, if any Elections be otherwise made, the said Elections shall be declared null and void, and the Persons elected, and these who shall elect them, shall be censured with all Rigour as Persons disaffected. These Presents to be forthwith published at the Market-cross of Edinburgh, and all other Royal Burghs.

Proclamation, September 17. about Elections of Magistrates and Counsellors.

I'll have frequent Occasion, in this History, to observe the strict Chain 'twixt Religious and Civil Privileges and Liberty; when the one is attacked, the other readily sinks. Last Year in September, Matters were a little more smoothly managed. The Chancellor wrote to the Meeting of the Royal Burghs, and that Convention wrote to each of their Number, giving them what they call Caveats in their Elections, that none be chosen but well affected Persons to his Majesty and his Government, whether on the Council or Magistracy. They forbid likewise the Choosing any who had subscribed the Remonstrance, Association, or who concurred in any Course for promoting the Ends thereof, or who protested against any publick Judicatories or their Determinations, since the Year 1650.

But now the Managers grow in these Attacks, and, beyond what the Act of Parliament ordains, declare the Elections void, if they be not of such Persons who shewed their Loyalty during the Troubles, and other Conditions spoken of in the Proclamation. I need make but few Remarks on it; several new Ways of speaking are in it, the King's Laws, and the like. In short the Design of this Proclamation was to exclude all from any Management of Burghs, those who were any ways Favourers of Presbytery, or were not fully and heartily for the Bishops, and the King's arbitrary Power, and to bring the Royal Burghs entirely under Yoke to the Courtiers: And they begin with Edinburgh, as a Pattern to all the rest; and when they were thus treated, none of the rest could think to stand out.

Thus October 3^d, the Council, understanding, that since their last Proclamation anent the Elections of Magistrates, these of Edinburgh are chosen, do ordain one of their Macers to warn the hail Magistrates, Counsellors, and Deacons of Crafts who are elected, as also these who did vote, or should have voted at the said Election, to compear before the Council November 1st, and give an Account of their Carriage, as they will be answerable. Accordingly, November 1st, the Council find the Election good, and the present Magistrates of Edinburgh, Canongate, and Portsburgh, lawfully elected, and authorize the same. They declare against some Protestations made by the Crafts. Thus we see the Liberty of the Royal Burghs overturned; and if the Council please, they may, by Citations and otherwise, harass all the Electors, and elected, if not according to their Scheme; and we shall find other Attacks made upon them afterwards.

At that same Diet, September 18th, the Council order that such suffering Ministers as petition for Redress, and are recommended, by his Grace the Lord Commissioner and Parliament, to the Council, shall have Precepts on Mr. John Wilkie, Collector of the vacant Stipends, for such Sums as shall be modified and allowed by the Council, notwithstanding any former Act. This was only meant of Episcopal Ministers; if Presbyterians had been allowed a Share, the Fund would have soon been exhausted: And a Provision is not only made for Ministers, but others reckoned Sufferers for the King's Interest. Accordingly, November 7th, I find Andrew Glen late Provost of Linlithgow, and James Glen, represent their Losses for Adherence to his Majesty's Interests, and constant Affection to his Service. Last Council-day a Committee had been appointed to examine their Losses, and upon Report, the Council find their Losses extend to 7834^{lib.} 5^{sh.} 8^{d.} and recommend them to his Majesty's Favour. I could name Presbyterian Ministers who lost as much as any of them, by standing up for the King, and yet now they are harassed, turned out, and persecuted: Whereupon I may safely enough apply the Learned and great Doctor Barrow his Distich he wrote on such Treatment in England, common to him and many good Men.

Et nemo sensit te rediisse minus.*

October 3^d, the Council ordain the President of the Session, Lord Register, and Lord Ley, and such of the Counsellors as shall be present, to be Auditors for taking away and composing the Differences 'twixt the Moderators of the University of Glasgow, and Mr. Patrick Gillespie: And in case of Variance 'twixt the said Auditors, the Lord Chancellor is to be Overlman; and give Power to the Lord Chancellor to grant Warrant to the said Mr. Gillespie to repair to Edinburgh for that Effect, notwithstanding of his Confinement.

November 7th, Information being given, 'That George Swinton, and James Glen, Booksellers in Edinburgh, have caused print several seditious and scandalous Books and Papers, such as Archibald Campbel's Speech, Guthrie's Speech, the Covenanters Plea, &c. Ordered, that the Lord Advocate, and Provost of Edinburgh seize upon these Books and Papers, and discharge them and the Rest of the Printers to print any more Books or Papers, till they have Warrant from the King, Parliament, or Council.' And, December 5th, they grant Liberty to Robert Mein, Keeper of the Letter-Office at Edinburgh, to publish the Diurnal weekly, for preventing of false News.

When at this Time the Council are prosecuting the worthy Mr. Robert Blair and other Presbyterians, for Shame they could not but do somewhat against trafficking Papists now mightily increasng; and indeed for some Years, as we shall see, the Council shew pretty much Zeal against Papists, but are retarded by the Backwardness of the Prelates in this Affair. Therefore, November 7th, the Chancellor reports, That, upon Information several trafficking Papists were come into this Kingdom, and that John Inglis was one of them, he had caused seize him, and found two Letters upon him, which were read in Council, and had caused commit him to Prison. The Council, finding that the said Inglis and William Brown had brought into this Kingdom several Books and Papers, order the Provost of Edinburgh to secure their Persons in the Tolbooth, till further Order, and cause seize all their Books and Papers, which are to be revised by the Earl of Linlithgow, Lord President, Mr. Bruce, and the said Provost of Edinburgh, who are to report; and that the President, Advocate, and Clerk draw up a Proclamation against trafficking Papists.

gainst Papists.

THE Lords of His Majesty's Council, considering that since the Reformation and Establishment of the Protestant Religion within this Kingdom, many desperate Plots and Conspiracies have been hatched, and incessantly prosecuted by the Pope and his Counsels, to the Hazard of the undermining of that glorious and blessed Structure; wherethrough not only many simple and ignorant People have been deluded and withdrawn from their holy Profession, and those Principles of Truth wherein they were bred and educated; but the Pillars and Foundations of Allegiance and Obedience to supreme Authority and Laws has been sore shaken, by saying and hearing of Mass, setting of Jesuits, and Seminary Priests, trafficking, and perverting unstable Souls, and setting of Superiors and other Officers depending upon the Romish Hierarchy, by whose Counsel and Conduct they may propagate the rebellious Principles, and erroneous Doctrines, which in all Probability had prevailed to the great Hazard of Religion, Monarchical Government, and the Peace of the Kingdom, if by the wholesome Laws and Statutes, and pious Care and Endeavours of His Majesty, and His Royal Ancestors, the same had not been prevented: And being informed, That, notwithstanding of the late Act of this current Parliament, solemnly published, against Popish Priests and Jesuits, whereby His Majesty, to witness His Royal Care of, and zeal for the Protestant Religion, with Consent of the Estates of Parliament, did command and charge all and sundry Jesuits, Priests, and trafficking Papists, to depart this Kingdom within a Month after the Publication thereof, and discharged all His Subjects to reset, supply, entertain, furnish Meat or Drink, or keep Correspondence with any of the foresaids, under the Pains contained in that and former Acts of Parliament, which, during the late Troubles, have not been put in Execution against the Contraveners: Yet divers Persons are come into this Kingdom, with Instructions, Popish Books, and Writings, and Priests Vestments, for Prosecution of these abominable Practices; who finding themselves now mightily disappointed of that great Increase of their Numbers, and Advancement of their Designs, whereof they had great Hopes from the late horrid Confusions, introduced into Church and State by Sectaries, do again adventure to trace their old Steps, and embroil that Order and Government restored to Us by Almighty God. Therefore they command and charge all His Majesty's Subjects, of whatsoever Quality and Degree, to observe and obey the foresaid Act, and all other Acts of Parliament made against Priests, Jesuits, and trafficking Papists: With Certification, if they do otherwise, the whole Pains there contained shall be inflicted without Mercy. And ordains all Sheriffs of Shires and their Deputies, Magistrates of Burghs, and other Judges, and all Ministers of the Gospel, within their respective Bounds and Jurisdictions, to make exact Enquiry after the Offenders, and to apprehend their Persons, and secure them in the next Prison, and immediately to give Notice thereof to the Privy Council: As also to send in yearly to the Lords of the Privy Council, a List of such Persons as are known or suspected to be Papists, and to seize on all Popish Books, Writings, Commissions, Instructions, and others belonging to them, which they can apprehend, conform to 194 Act, Parl. 13th, JAMES VI. and other Acts and Statutes, as they will be answerable, under all highest Pains. And ordains these forthwith to be Printed and Published.

That same Diet of Council, the following Letter from the King is read. 'Right Trusty, &c. having given Orders to Our Archbishops here, That in all the Churches and Chapels of this Our Kingdom, Our Royal Consort Queen Katharine be prayed for; We have resolved also, that in Our ancient Kingdom she be prayed for: And seeing Our Bishops of that Kingdom are not yet consecrated, We have thought fit to require you to issue Commands to all the Presbyteries of Scotland, That in all the several Churches, immediately after their Prayer for Me, they pray for Queen Katharine, and for Mary Queen Mother, James Duke of York, and the rest of the Royal Family.' In the Close of the Letter, he orders them to raise the Value of Gold to the same Proportion which 'tis in England. The Council order a Proclamation to be drawn, and 'tis published in the above Terms, November 21st. Thus the Reader hath a pretty large Account of this remarkable Year, 1661.

Of the Sufferings of Presbyterians, and State of Affairs in Scotland, during the Year 1662.

A Summary
of this Chapter.

HIS Year, and the second Session of Parliament, affords the Reader a new Scene of Persecution. Though none suffered Death this Year, yet a good many were imprisoned, and not a few Ministers banished into foreign Countries; several of whom never returned.

Till the Parliament sit down, the Council have but little before them; the Bishops who were consecrated at London, not coming down till April, and the rest were not consecrated till Four Days before the Parliament sat down. And indeed it was our Prelates who pushed the Council to most of their Severities: However, that arbitrary Court, in the Beginning of the Year, perfect what they had begun last Year, and discharge all Ecclesiastical Meetings, and prepare Matters for the Parliament, who sit down May 8th.

The Parliament set up the Prelates, and receive them with Solemnity enough into their Meeting; they persecute some of the most noted of the Presbyterian Ministers in the West-country, and attack the Ministers of Edinburgh: A new Set of Acts, for the Establishment of Bishops, and the further harassing of Presbyterians, are made; they also pass the Sentence of Death upon the Lord Lorn, afterwards Earl of Argyle, and spend much Time upon the fining of Presbyterians.

But the chief Part of the Persecution is managed by the Council, after the Parliament rises; and when some Things are done at Edinburgh, they come West to Glasgow, and there turn out some Hundreds of Presbyterian Ministers: And upon the Commissioner's Return from his Progress, the Council, in the End of the Year, attack a great Number of Presbyterian Ministers, in all the Corners of the Country, and banish some of them, and confine others. Those Things, with some other incidental Matters, will afford Matter for Four or Five Sections upon this Chapter.

this Section.

MOST Part of the proper Matter for the History of the Sufferings of this Church, during this Year, falls in during the Sitting of the Parliament, and towards the End of the Year. The Council had little before them till the consecrated Bishops came down; and yet in January they perfect the Work they had entred upon at the Close of the last Year, the overturning the Judicatories of this Church, to pave the Way for Prelates: And therefore I am to give some Account of this, with some Hints at the Testimony essayed against it by some few Ministers; and shall shut up this Section with an Account of the Ordination of the rest of our Prelates, which will hand us into the 2^d Session of this current Parliament, held by Middleton.

Our Scots Council receive their Orders from England, where Things were now concerted by Mr. Sharp, and the rest of our Bishops at this Time there; and these are carefully executed at Edinburgh, and Proclamations accordingly issued out.

Thus, January 2^d, the Council receive a Letter from the King, discharging all Ecclesiastical Meetings in Synods, Presbyteries, and Sessions, until they be authorized by the Prelates: The Tenor whereof follows.

CHARLES R.

1662.

King's Letter discharging
Synods, &c.

RIGHT Trusty, &c. Whereas, by the Advice and Consent of Our Parliament, We did allow the Administration of the Church-government of Scotland, by Sessions, Presbyteries, and Synods, notwithstanding of the Act Rescissory, until We should take Care for the better Settlement of the Government of that Church: And We having, by Our late Proclamation, declared Our Royal Pleasure for restoring the ancient and legal Government of that Church, by Archbishops and Bishops, as it was exercised in the Reign of Our Royal Father, before the Year 1637. and, in Pursuance of that Our Resolution, have nominated and presented Persons to the several Bishopricks of Scotland, of whom there has been lately Four consecrated, and invested with the same Dignities, Church-power, and Authority, which was formerly competent to the Bishops and Archbishops of that Church, in the Reigns of Our Royal Grandfather and Father.'

'Therefore Our Allowance of the Administration of the Government of that Church, in the Way it hath been since the violent Interruption of Episcopal Government, being inconsistent with the same now established, and being now of itself void and expired, seeing it was only for a Time, till we should settle and secure Church-government in a Frame most suitable to Monarchy, and complying with the Peace of the Kingdom.'

'Our Will is, That the said Allowance be of no further Force or Continuance; but that the Jurisdiction and Exercise of Church-government shall be ordered in the respective Synods, Presbyteries, and Sessions of the Church of Scotland, by the Appointment and Authority of the Archbishops and Bishops thereof, according to the standing Laws, and their known Privileges and Practice conform thereunto.'

'This Our Will and Pleasure, you are required forthwith to publish by Proclamation, discharging all Ecclesiastical Meetings in Synods, Presbyteries, and Sessions, until they be authorized and ordered by Our Archbishops and Bishops, upon their entering into the Government of their respective Sees; which is to be done speedily.

'We do further require, That you take special Care, that all due Deference and Respect be given by all Our Subjects, to the Archbishops and Bishops of that Church; and that they have all Countenance, Assistance, and Encouragement from Our Nobility, Gentry, and Burghs, in the Discharge of their Office, and Service to Us in the Church; and that severe and exemplary Notice be taken of all and every one who shall presume to reflect, or express any Disrespect to their Persons, or Authority with which they are entrusted. And so We bid you heartily Farewel. Given at Our Court at Whitehall, December 28th, 1661. By His Majesty's Command,'

LAWDERDALE.

The Clerk is ordered to draw up a Proclamation conform to this Letter and the Commands therein contained, and have it ready next Council-day. Accordingly, January 9th, 'tis read, agreed to, and ordered to be printed and published. It agrees very much with the above Letter; however, because of the Importance of it, I have insert likewise the Proclamation, App. N^o. 26. and 'tis signed by Glencairn, Rothes, Mortoun, Roxburgh, Southesk, Weems, Annandale, Dundee, Sinclair, Bellenden, John Fletcher, Robert Murray.

Proclamation,
Jan 9. to the same Effect.App. N^o. 26.

At the same Time the Council recommend it to the Lord Chancellor, to sign the following Letter to the Sheriffs and their Deputies, through the Kingdom, to be communicated to each Minister.

Right Honourable,

THERE is a Proclamation emitted by the Lords of Privy Council, intimating his Majesty's Pleasure for discharging all Meetings of Synods, Presbyteries, and Kirk-sessions, until they be ordered by the Archbishops and Bishops of the Church of this Kingdom: And lest the Contributions for the Poor, and the Distribution thereof within the several Parishes in the mean Time be interrupted, the Council has recommended it to me, to write to you in their Name, to acquaint the several Ministers of all the Parishes within your Shire and Jurisdiction, that, notwithstanding of the said Proclamation, they may appoint some of their Parish for Contribution of the Collection, and distributing the same to the Poor thereof, for which their Presents shall be your Warrant, from Letter allowing notwithstanding this Proclamation.Your affectionate Friend,

GLENCAIRN Chancellor.

What hath been said upon the former publick Papers, may supersede Reflections on this Letter and Proclamation. We see that gradually, yet pretty quickly, the Presbyterian Constitution of this Church was overturned. Synods were first interrupted, and then discharged; Presbyteries were inhibit to ordain any to their Vacancies, and now to meet; and Sessions likewise must die with the expiring Government of this Church.

Reflections on the Proclamation.

1662.

Difference
twixt this and the former Settlement of Episcopacy.

This Proclamation razed Presbyterian Government quite. And we may observe a considerable Difference 'twixt Prelacy now obtruded, and the old Scots Episcopacy. Presbyteries and Sessions remained under the Bishops, during King JAMES VI. his Reign, almost in the full Exercise of their Power, saving that Presbyteries were cramped with constant Moderators: But now Presbyteries and Sessions are made entirely to depend upon the Bishop, and indeed materially abrogated, as may afterwards be noticed.

The same Day this Proclamation is published, the Council having considered a Letter from the Earl of Lothian, desiring that the Presbytery of Kells may be discharged to plant the Kirk of Tettam, ordered the Clerk to sign the following Letter to their Moderator.

Right Reverend,

Council's Letter about planting the Kirk of Tettam.

THE Lords of Privy Council are informed, that the Kirk of Tettam being vacant, the Earl of Lothian did give in a Presentation, as likewise some other Persons pretending to have Right to the same; and that notwithstanding of the late Act, discharging the Presentations to Presbyteries, you are proceeding in order to the Admission of some Person to be Minister at the said Kirk; and therefore have commanded me to acquaint you of the foregoing Proclamation, that you do not proceed to admit any Person to be Minister at the said Church, as you will be answerable, which you are to communicate to your Brethren. I am, Sir,

Your humble Servant,

PETER WEDDERBURN.

Little more offers from the Council-registers till the Parliament rises, and then we shall meet with enough of Matter for this History.

Presbyterians
at a Stand what to do upon these Encroachments.

Those Invasions upon Judicatories, but especially the Letter and Proclamation, quite overturning them, raised an universal Sorrow and Concern through the Kingdom. Presbyterians, formerly broken among themselves, could not easily make any Concert, and the Ministers were of different Sentiments what Course was best to take. Now indeed they came to understand one another much better than formerly, when going to a joynt Furnace. Mr. Douglas, I am told, said, when he saw Matters came to this Pass, Our Brethren the Protesters have had their Eyes open, and we have been blind. Mr. Dickson used to say, The Protesters had been much truer Prophets than they. And Mr. Wood acknowledged to several of his Brethren who differed in Judgment from him, That they had been mistaken in their Views they took of Matters. And till the Ashes of those Burnings were raised to add Fuel to the Flame about the Indulgence, and after Separation for a good many Years, the Resolutions and Protestation were quite buried.

The Carriage of Judicatories.

Nevertheless, this was a Juncture of very much Difficulty; and Ministers and honest People had their Thoughts perhaps as much spent in the melancholy Forecastings of approaching Sufferings, as upon due Methods of a joynt Opposition to the Encroachments so fast making upon them. And it is with Regret I observe it, that too little of a Spirit for this appeared either with Ministers or People. At the first Desertion to Episcopacy in this Church, after our Reformation from Popery, a considerable Stand was made by Ministers then perfectly united: But now the most Part of Presbyteries silently obtempered this Proclamation. In some Places when they did meet, they found they could do nothing; and the Essays of some Presbyteries to keep themselves in Possessorio by meeting, were useless, and reckoned singular by others; and by Piece and Piece all the Presbyteries of the Church were deserted, save some few, very few, who subjected to the Prelates Orders.

Those Heart-breaking Encroachments upon the Liberties of this Church, brought many worthy gray Hairs to the Grave with Sorrow: Now indeed the Prelatick and old malignant Party saw Zion defiled, and their Eyes looked upon her with Pleasure, when many better Men mourned and wept to their Graves. Those may well be reckoned Sufferers; and though they were not Martyrs by Mens Hands, because Death prevented that, yet they were Confessors and Martyrs in Resolution, and their Death is justly chargeable upon the Contrivers and Carriers on of the Iniquity of this Time. Among those I shall afterwards, when I come to the Sufferings of particular Persons, take Notice of the Earl of London and Mr. Robert Bailie, who both died, I think, before the Parliament sat down.

Some Presbyteries give Testimony against those Encroachments.

Yet some Testimony was given by Presbyteries in some Places; besides others recorded in their Registers, Declarations against Prelacy, and the present Encroachments. In Edinburgh, Glasgow, and other chief Places, Care was taken by the Magistrates, there should be no more Meetings of Presbyteries; so that indeed we can expect little or nothing from them. I shall take Notice only of what the Presbytery of Kirkcudbright essayed to do at this Time, from some original Papers come to my Hand, preserved among others belonging to that truly great Man Mr. Thomas Wylie Minister at Kirkcudbright, whom we shall meet with this Year as a Sufferer.

When the Council-proclamations against Supplicating, taken Notice of last Year, and those discharging Synods, and restricting Presbyteries, came to their Knowledge, they send Two of their their Number to Edinburgh, with the following Commission, which I give from the Original before me. 1662.

At Kirkcudbright, January 7th, 1662.

THE Presbytery taking to their serious Consideration the Condition of the Work of God in the Land at this Time, upon mature Deliberation do judge it expedient to supplicate the Right Honourable the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, for removing the Bar that lieth in the Way of Address; and therefore do appoint their Reverend Brethren, Mr. John Duncan Minister at Rerick, and Mr. James Buglos Minister at Crosfmichael, to repair to Edinburgh, or where it shall happen their Lordships to be for the Time, and present unto their Lordships our humble Desires, and return their Diligence.

M. W. CANT Clerk.

I do not question but the Two came in to Edinburgh accordingly; and though there be no Account of this in the Council-records, and scarce can be expected there, I as little doubt they essayed to present the following Supplication.

Unto the Right Honourable the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, the humble Supplication of the Presbytery of Kirkcudbright.

May it please your Lordships,

AT our Synodical Meeting in April last, we were fully resolved in all Humility to have presented our earnest Petition in Zion's Behalf, unto the High and Honourable Court of Parliament, if we had not then been interrupted; and in October last the same Resolutions did revive in our Breasts, and would have vented themselves, if our Meeting had not been prohibited. And truly at this Time we do ingenuously confess, if we could obtain it of our selves and our Consciences before God, (when in his Presence we are most serious upon the Search, what Israel ought to do) we say, If we could obtain it of our selves to be silent, we should contentedly thrust our Mouths in the Dust, and not so much as presume once to move a Lip.

But when we consider the Work of the Lord, at what Height of Perfection it was, in the Purity of Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government in this Land; and when we look upon the sad Breaches already made upon the wonted Integrity of the Discipline and Government, without which the Purity of Worship and Doctrine cannot long continue; and upon the present Actings and Preachings of some, which sadly threaten the utter Eversion and Overturning of the established Discipline and Government; and when withal we lay to Heart, that the Lord requireth of us, "That for Zion's Sake we should not hold our Peace, and that for Jerusalem's Sake we should not rest, that we should earnestly contend for the Faith, and be valiant for the Truth upon the Earth," and that we should plead with the Powers of the Earth in the Behalf of Zion: When we consider and lay to Heart those Things, we cannot, we dare not any longer lay the Hand upon the Mouth, lest by a sinful Silence, and Truth-prejudging Modesty we betray a good Cause, and fetch a cutting Lash upon our own Consciences, and provoke the holy One to be offended with us.

Wherefore, Right Honourable, we do in all Humility prostrate our selves before your Lordships, most humbly and earnestly begging in the Name of Jesus Christ, that your Honours would be pleased to grant unto us Freedom and Liberty to unfold our Bosoms unto your Honours, in those Things that, relating to the Work of God in the Land, do sadly aggrrieve our Spirits: Or, if your Honours do not of your selves grant this Liberty, we humbly beg that your Lordships would be pleased to intercede with the King's most excellent Majesty, that he would be graciously pleased to remove the Bars that are drawn in the Way of Address, that so we may have free and safe Access unto your Lordships, and the ensuing High and Honourable Court of Parliament, to represent our sad Grievances arising from the undeniable Evils and Dangers that the Work of Reformation in this Land is now more than ever threatned with, and to supplicate your and their Honours for Remedy and Redress.

And particularly we humbly beg, That we may have Liberty, with Freedom and Safety, to express our Minds, against the Reintroduction of Prelacy upon this Church and Kingdom; in doing whereof we resolve in the Lord to walk (according to the Measure we have received) close by the Rules of Scripture, of Christian Prudence, Sobriety, and Moderation; in all our Actings testifying our real Affection, Faithfulness, and Loyalty to the King's most excellent Majesty; the Preservation of whose Royal Person, and whose long flourishing Reign in Righteousness, is the Thing in this World that is and ever shall be dearest unto us, next unto the Flourishing of the Kingdom of Jesus Christ.

‘ His Majesty’s gracious condescending unto those our just and humble Desires, will yet more engage our already most deeply engaged Hearts and Affections unto his Majesty’s Person and Government, under whom it is the firm Resolution of our Hearts, to live in all dutiful Obedience, praying that the Lord may long preserve his Royal Person under the Droppings of his Grace, and abundant Loadnings of his best Blessings, and special Mercies: And your Honours favourable Acceptance, of this our humble Petition off our Hands, and transmitting of the same to his sacred Majesty, seconded with your Lordships Intercessions for his Majesty’s Grant of these our just Desires, will make the present Generation blest you, and the Generation to come call you happy, and shall add to our former Obligations to supplicate at the Throne of Grace for the Spirit of Counsel and Government, in the Fear of the Lord, unto your Lordships, and that your Persons and Government may be richly blessed of the Lord. Thus we rest, expecting your Honours favourable Answer.’

When so modest and well drawn a Petition could not be heard, we may see what a low Pass Matters were at in Scotland. All they ask is a fair Hearing; and instead of this we shall find afterwards the Reverend Mr. Wylie, and a good many others in this Presbytery, where I think there was not one conformed to Prelacy, were attacked by the Council this Year and the following. This unreasonable and unmanly Method of discharging Addressees and Applications to a Government, and peremptory refusing the most humble Applications for the Liberty of them, as it cannot be defended, so it was the Occasion of all that can be, with the least Shew of Reason, objected against the Loyalty of Presbyterians: And who can justly blame them for seeking a Hearing to their Grievances in an armed Posture, when the Oppression of their Enemies had forced them to this? Yet they even came not this Length, but after several Years patient Suffering of the greatest Hardships; as we shall see in the Progress of this History.

It was expected the Parliament would have sit down early this Year; and the Presbytery of Kirkcudbright had under their Consideration the Form of an Address to the Parliament, a Copy whereof is before me, under the Reverend Mr. Wylie’s Hand: ’Tis but the first Draught, and no doubt would have been smoothed and altered to the better, had any Door been opened for presenting it. Imperfect as it is, in my Opinion it deserves a Room in this Work, as the designed Testimony of those worthy Persons at this Juncture; and I perswade my self they did well that they had this in their Hearts. The rude Draught, with some Clauses added on the Margin of it, which seem to relate to the following Years, I have added, App. No. 26. Numb. 2.

Little more offers before the Sitting down of the Parliament, save the Consecration of the rest of the Bishops; of which, with their Admission into that Assembly, I shall here give some Account.

April 8th, the Primate, and the other Three consecrated at London came to Berwick, and were met by considerable Numbers of Noblemen, Gentlemen and others, upon the Road to Edinburgh: Some gave themselves the Trouble to go as far as Cockburns-path, others to Haddingtoun, and many met them at Musselburgh; and under pretext of Obedience to his Majesty’s Commands to put all Respect on them, they were received at their coming in with all Pomp and Solemnity, and Trumpets sounding, which was not a little pleasing to Mr. Sharp’s ambitious Temper.

The Commissioner Middleton came down from Court to Holy-rood-house upon Sunday May 4th, and the Consecration of the rest of our Prelates was put off till he should be present to countenance this Solemnity, which was indeed a new Thing in Scotland. Accordingly, May 7th was fixed for their Consecration, in the Church of Holy-rood-house. The Nobility and Gentry in Town, with the Magistrates and Town-council of Edinburgh, contributed their best Endeavours to put Respect upon this Work. The Church-doors were strictly kept, and none had Access but those who had Warrants. The two Archbishops went to the Church in great Parade in their Pontifical Habits, black Gowns, Surplices, Lawn Sleeves, Copes, and all other Things in due Form.

Before the Consecration, a Sermon was preached by Mr. James Gordon Minister at Drumblait in the North of Scotland: His Text was, 1 Cor. 4. 1. Let a Man so account of us as Ministers of Christ, and Stewards of the Mysteries of God. And in his Sermon he insisted upon the Faults and Escapes of the former Prelates, which made them fall, and exhorted the Bishops not to encroach upon the Nobility, but to keep themselves sober, and not exceed the Bounds of their Function. The Consecrators were the two Archbishops. The Primate made use of the English Forms, and read all from the Book, the Lord’s Prayer, Creed and Ten Commandments, and Consecration and Exhortation after it. I do not find that the Bishops were re-ordained Presbyters and Deacons before their Consecration, as the Four had been at London; neither that ever it was once proposed. Three of the Bishops nominated were not present, but hasting up as soon as possible, the Bishop of Aberdeen, and other Two who were out of the Kingdom: And those Three were consecrate afterwards at St. Andrews, in June this Year.

This Ceremony paved the Way for their Admission as Members in the Parliament to Morrow May 8th; where, after the Voting of the first Act for Restitution of Bishops, of which in the next Session, they were brought up to the House, and convoyed from it with much Pomp. All the Bishops were together in the Archbishop of St. Andrews Lodgings, near the Nether-bow, waiting for the Honour to be done them.

The Manner
and Circumstances, of this.

Six Members of Parliament, two Noblemen, the Earls of Kelly and Weems, and two Barons, and two Burgesses were sent to invite them to come and take their Seats in the House. From the Nether-bow they came up in State: The two Archbishops in the midst of the first Rank; the Gentlemen, Bailies, and the Town-council of Edinburgh, mix'd in with the rest of the Bishops, who had all their black Gowns and Robes. When they came to the House, a Speech was made to them, and the Parliament's Act restoring them, read, and the House dismissed that Day.

They were all invited to dine with the Commissioner; and he did them the Honour to walk down the Street with them on Foot. Six Maces went first, with their Maces elevated: Next, Three Gentlemen Uihers, one for the Commissioner, another for the Chancellor, and the third for the Archbishop of St. Andrews; and then the Pursebearer discovered. The Commissioner and Chancellor came next, with two Noblemen upon their right Hand, and the Archbishops upon their left Hand, in their Gowns: And the other Noblemen and Members of Parliament invited, with the rest of the Bishops, followed, making up the Cavalcade.

When I come to consider the Act for their Restitution, some general Remarks upon the Reintroduction of Prelacy will offer themselves: Only here it may be Matter of Wonder, that Bishops are thus brought in upon this Church, without the least Shadow of the Church's Consent or Authority. In King James VI. his Time another Method was judged better. The corrupted and overawed Assembly at Montrose, 1600. after a great Struggle, agreed to the Caveats, and paved the Way for their coming in under another Name than that of Bishops: And this was found necessary by the Court, to prepare Matters for the King's Succession to England, and the Union of the two Crowns. The yet more corrupted Assembly at Glasgow, 1610. which was so scandalously and openly bribed, did more directly countenance, and some way ratify Prelacy.

Prelates introduced without the Church's Consent.

But now they come in without the least Consent of the Church; yea, contrary to many unrescinded Church-canons, which made many in Scotland look upon them, and such as they authorized and hatched, as real Intruders, not only without Consent, but renitente & contradicente Ecclesia.

The Reasons of such Procedure in this Obtrusion were various: The Bishops and Managers durst not hazard any considerable Meeting of Ministers in Scotland upon this Point. Things were not so ripe for this as in the 1610. nor so gradually prepared for their giving Consent. And now when absolute and arbitrary Government was to be set up in the State, and the Prerogative stretched to its utmost, it was not unfit to have the Ministry and the Government of the Church entirely depending upon, and set up by the Royal Prerogative and Pleasure: So a Church Concurrence was not so much as endeavoured, but Prelates and Prelacy brought in entirely by the Supremacy. And upon this Foot the Parliament give their Consent to, and settle Episcopacy in their Second Session; to which I now come,

this.

If once I had remarked, that May 7th, the Commissioner in Council declares, That it is his Majesty's Royal Will and Pleasure, that the Earl of Tweddale's Restraint be taken off, and he restored to all his former Rights and Privileges, and his Bond be delivered up to him. Which the Council orders to be done; and he had Opportunity to sit in Parliament to Morrow: But he and others must be taught, by his Eight Months Imprisonment and Confinement, how dangerous it would be to speak their Light, and cross the Court in any of their Votes in the ensuing Parliaments.

S E C T. II.

Of the Acts of the Second Session of Parliament, with Reflections upon them, in so far as they concern Church-affairs this Year, 1662.

IN my Account of the Sufferings of Presbyterians this Year, I shall begin with the Laws made by this Session of Parliament, which were the Foundation of much After-persecution, and then consider the Procedure of the Council, and their Acts, during the rest of the Year. The particular Sufferings of Ministers, Gentlemen, and others, I shall leave to a Section or Two by themselves, tho' several of them were during the Sitting of Parliament. I begin now with the Acts of this Session of Parliament under Middleton.

The Parliament had been adjourned to March; but it being resolved, that the Prelates should have their Places in it, and Matters not being concerted as to their Consecration, it was put off till that could be completed: Besides, our Nobility at London were fond of being there at the Solemnity of the Queen's Reception. When she arrived, her Majesty was received with the utmost Pomp and Expectation: And when, in some Years, People's Expectations of a Successor from her failed, it began to be alledged, That Chancellor Hyde had pitched upon a barren Woman for the King, that his Grandchildren, by the Duke of York, might succeed: But Providence had a further View in it, and both made Way for the wonderful Revolution, 1688. and Deliverance of those Kingdoms, when well nigh ruined by the wide Steps taken towards Popery, during the Two Brothers Reigns, and the seasonable Establishment of the Protestant Succession, so happily now taken Effect, upon the Extinction of that Line.

Sermon at the Beginning of this Session.

Accordingly, May 8th, the Parliament sat down. After the old Fashion, this Session was, if I might speak so, opened by a Sermon, preached by Mr. George Haliburton, now Bishop of Dunkeld. What his Subject was, I don't know, but find he was prolix enough, and exceeded two Hours considerably. But leaving this, I come to their Acts and Proceedings, in as far as they concern Ecclesiastick Matters. The Length of my Remarks upon the Acts of the former Session, will help to shorten any Observations I have to make upon this Session. The same Persons were prosecuting the same Design, and much by the same Methods, only a little more openly and roundly.

The Prelates, already brought in by the King, must now be confirmed by Act of Parliament; and that is all the Warrant they had in Scotland. They were already set up by his Majesty's sole Authority, and it was very fit they should lean entirely upon his Supremacy: However, the Representatives of the Nation, his Majesty's and his Bishops obedient Servants, must give their Assent; yet not until they could not refuse it, without blaming themselves in giving an absolute Power to the King, or casting a Blur upon what his Majesty had done. Therefore they fall to Work;

Act 1. for Restitution of Bishops.
App. N^o. 27.

And their very first Act is, For the Restitution and Re-establishment of the ancient Government of the Church, by Archbishops and Bishops; which I have added, App. N^o. 27. It was the Prelates Fault if this Act was not ample enough, for it was drawn at the Sight, and by the Direction of the Primate: And yet, it was said, some of our Bishops grumbled that they were not reponed to all that the Popish Bishops enjoyed. This Act, I find, passed in the House with very little Opposition: Some Objections were made, as to some Clauses, by some of the Lords of Election. David Lefly, this Day admitted to the House as a Temporal Lord, dissented from the Act; and when he did so, and some near him began to smile, he roundly told them, The Day was, when none of them durst have mocked him. The Reader will bear with me in making a few Remarks upon this Act restoring Bishops.

Remarks upon
it.

The Title of the Act would not be at all disagreeable to Popery, had they been reintroducing it. The ancient Government of the Church under Antichrist, was by the Pope, Archbishops, and Bishops. In the Body of the Act, indeed they find that Government to be most agreeable to the Word of GOD. Had they been as freely chosen Representatives, as those after the Revolution, and had declared Prelacy agreeable to the Inclinations of the People in Scotland, as then, upon just Grounds, Prelacy was declared an insupportable Grievance, and contrary to the Inclinations of the People, it had been a Declaration very competent for them, providing it had agreed with Truth. But, without any Breach of Charity, we may suppose, that few who voted this Act, had been at any great Pains to search into the Word of GOD; it was enough to many, that it was the King's Word, and what he was for. For my Share, I cannot well see the Consistency of their finding this Government agreeable to the Word of GOD, with the very first Clause of the Act, 'Forasmuch as the Ordering and Disposal of the external Government, and Policy of the Church, doth properly belong to his Majesty, as an inherent Right of the Crown.'

Prelacy bot-tommed on the Prerogative, and inconsistent with Liberty.

This leads me to observe, That the Parliament bottom their Bishops upon the King's Prerogative, and the Ecclesiastical Supremacy; which abundantly seems to explain the Oath of Allegiance, really of Supremacy, formerly spoken of. I have said so much already upon that Oath, that I need only observe, That Presbyterians allow heartily all the Prerogatives to their Sovereign which Scripture and sound Reason can allow of; yet the People of that Perswasion have still stood up in asserting Liberty and Property, in Conjunction with the Prerogative bounded by the Laws of the Land. And it is worth our Notice, that so soon as our Princes set up for an unbounded Prerogative and absolute Power, they continually attacked Presbyterian Government, as most agreeable to Law and Liberty. Indeed the Cause and Interest of Liberty and Presbytery have still stood and fallen together in Scotland.

Prelates may act with or without the Clergy.

By this Act, the Bishops are 'restored to their ancient Prerogatives, Privileges, and Functions, which they are to exercise with Advice of such of the Clergy, as they shall find to be of known Loyalty and Prudence.' Hereby it is left to their Choice to pitch upon whom they please, among the Underlings, to joyn with them in the Management: And, for what I can see, they may act entirely without taking any of them in at all. Thus indeed they generally did in Fact.

The Parliament, in the next Room, approve all the Acts of Council, since they were created; and so, by their own Deed, discharge all Petitioning of the King by his Subjects, in the Matters of the Church, and prohibit all Synods, Presbyteries, or Sessions, to meet, except as the Bishops shall allow them, and all Subjects to countenance or submit to these Judicatories of Christ's Institution. We shall afterwards find, that 'tis very customary for our Parliaments to make their Acts to look backwards.

Council-acts in their favour ratified.

Yea, they for ever put the Power out of their own Hand, and from their entire Confidence of the Infallibility of the Civil Pope, and his Council, the Archbishops and Bishops, the Parliament beforehand ratify, make valid and effectual 'all that shall be determined by his Majesty, with the Advice of his Bishops and Archbishops, and such of the Clergy as he shall call, 'as to the external Policy and Government of the Church;' and frankly give them Liberty to do every Thing, but establish Presbytery, which was against the (then) standing Laws.

King and Prelates future Actings ratified.

They go on to cass and anul all Acts and Laws, which gave any Jurisdiction to Churchmen, or Judicatories independent of the King's Supremacy. One must in Charity hope, they mean this only of human Laws, and they take not upon them to abrogate the divine Law establishing a Jurisdiction and Ministerial Power in the Officers of Christ's House, as a spiritual Society independent, to be sure, upon the Regal Supremacy, and some Hundreds of Years in Exercise of those Powers, before a Regal Supremacy was thought upon. However, in as far as in them lies, this is a home-thrust at all Ecclesiastical Power, and a Putting the King, as far as their Law could put him, in Christ's Room, and making him somewhat above the Pope himself, in the Eyes of a great many Papists.

All Acts inconsistent with the Supremacy, rescinded:

And the Act of Parliament, 1592. which, because not in every Body's Hands who may read this History, I have annexed, App. N. 28. is particularly rescinded in all its Heads and Clauses. This Act relates to the Doctrine as well as the Government of this Church, and was one of the greatest Bulwarks against Popery we had, being the Act about Religion, framed with the greatest Deliberation and Care, when King JAMES VI. was come to his Majority, and about the Time when our excellent National Covenant was formed: So that the Introduction of Prelacy was attended with the Sapping the very Foundations of our Reformation in Scotland; and this Act restoring Bishops, makes not only the Government of the Church, but also the Profession of the Protestant Religion, in its Doctrine, depend entirely upon the King's Pleasure. Thus King JAMES VII. had a short and easy Game to play in Scotland, had not the happy Revolution prevented him.

Particularly Act 1592. App. N. 28. Consequences of this.

Any Church-power remaining, is to be exercised in a Line of Subordination to the King, by the Archbishops and Bishops, who are to put Order to all Ecclesiastical Matters and Causes, and to be accountable to the King only, for their Administration, no, not to the Parliament itself; tho', in the Beginning of the Act, they seem Copartners with his Majesty in the Administration. Certainly the Management of all Ecclesiastical Matters and Causes, was a Trust too great for any Fourteen Men upon Earth, with the best King at their Head. In former Times, the Bishops, when first palmed upon this Church, were accountable to General Assemblies, and the Ministry had some Share in the Government; but now they have none, except the Bishops please to call for them.

Prelates accountable to none but the King.

To complete the Power of the Prelates, they are restored to all the Commissariats in Scotland. Our Lord would not be Judge about Inheritances, nor the Apostles serve Tables, nay, not so much as take up their Time in ordering the Money collected for the Poor: Yet our pretended Successors to them, take willingly upon themselves the whole Burden of the Testamentary Causes in Scotland, those of Divorces, and many others: And rather than the Bishops want this Branch of their Dignity, this loyal Parliament will rescind their own 28th Act, made last Year.

They have the Power of Commissariats put in their Hands.

In short, by this Act Erastianism is set up in its greatest Vigour and Extent. The Actings approved by the King and his Father, in many Parliaments and Treaties, are branded with Rebellion, and all the Evils which fell out in the former Times, are charged upon the Presbyterians; whereas indeed, it was the Bishops themselves, now brought in contrary to the Acts of Assembly, ratified in the Parliaments held by the King's Father and himself in Person, who, by their Innovations, and imposing the Service-book and Canons, occasioned any Confusion or Disorder which was in that Period.

Evils in former Periods, charged in the Act on Presbyterians, really chargeable on the Bishops.

Upon the Whole, any Body who is acquaint with the History of this Church, must observe, That the old Set of Bishops, made by the Parliament 1612. were but Pygmies to the present high and mighty Lords. A large Account might be given of the Differences 'twixt the former Establishment of Prelacy in Scotland, and this; some of them have been pointed at, and I shall notice a few more, and mix in some Remarks of the Reverend Mr. Douglas, from his Paper formerly spoken of.

Difference between the former and present Prelates.

Our first Prelates were not against the Meetings of Presbyteries in their several Jurisdictions, but they continued to meet regularly, and had almost the Whole of Church-discipline in their Hands: But now there is no Church-power save in the Person of the Bishop, and what he pleases to measure graciously out to whom he pleases. All Church-judicatories, as we have seen, are pulled down, to make Way for the Episcopal Throne. It was some Years after this, before the Curates and inferior Clergy in most Places were allowed to meet for the Exercise of their Gifts together; and when at length this was permitted, they were constituted only for such and such Ends, by a Commission from the Bishop, allowing the Ministers in such and such a Precinct to meet, with a Clause excluding ruling Elders. Mr. Douglas remarks here, 'That he dealt with the Statesmen not to discharge Presbyteries, but allow them to stand as under the former Bishops; and suggested, That several Ministers would keep those Meetings, if permitted to continue as before, notwithstanding Bishops were set up; but, if pulled down, and set up in Subordination to the Prelates, no honest Minister could keep them. But, says he, our Prelates would have them discharged, fearing that their lordly and absolute Power would be diminished by them; and in this they discovered their Folly and Vanity. The former Bishops advanced not without Presbyteries, Synods, and Assemblies. Those indeed were corrupt Meetings, yet this Way they came to have their Power and Jurisdiction by a Sort of Consent: But thir Men want all Consent, which shews their Usurpation and lordly Dominion the more. God, in his Providence, infatuated them so, as they waited not for any Consent: I am afraid they might have met with too many corrupt Men to give Consent, but they would not hazard this; and our Suffering is the more clear, that they are plain Usurpers without Consent of the Kirk; and whatever hath been the Carriage, or rather Mis-carriage of particular Persons, I am glad the Kirk in her Courts is free of that Usurpation, and only those who joyned are guilty of it.'

'When I compare the former Prelates with the present, whose little Finger is bigger than their Predecessors Loyns, I would not be thought to approve the former Bishops; for they are both evil, but the last exceed. The former Bishops removed very few, but suffered many eminent godly Men to live at their Charges; but the present have cast out Heaps, and scarce a Nonconformist is at his Charge. Those who were removed formerly, were suffered to live where they pleased, and even to converse with their People; but now they must remove at such and such Distances from their Flock.'

'Formerly, when Nonconformists were removed, no Restrictions were laid upon them; they might preach any where save in their own Charges; and I know some of them who did preach even in the next Congregation; but now 'tis made a Crime to preach in the Kingdom. Now Ministers are discharged to come near Cathedrals or Burghs: The former Prelates did not think their Cathedrals so holy as to be defiled by the Nearness of Nonconformists; yea, some of them continued in their Charges very near them, and were never before prohibited to live in Burghs for their own Conveniency, and the Education of their Children. The former Bishops never cared how many Ministers lived in one Place; and they knew it was better to have the Nonconformists together, than scattered abroad: But now none but one must be in one Congregation, and that will the more scatter them. The former Bishops never thought of such an impossible Division of Confinements, as Twenty Miles from a Minister's former Charge, Six from a Cathedral, and Three from a Burgh, with one only in one Parish; neither of prohibiting Ministers from coming to Edinburgh, without the Bishop or Council's Licence, which is against Law and Reason; far less did the former Prelates ever think of discharging Charity to suffering Ministers.' Thus far Mr. Douglas. We shall meet with those Acts afterward in their Place.

Those were Peculiarities of this Prelacy, unknown almost any where save in Scotland. In short, the first Prelates claimed only a Sort of Negative over the Brethren of the Exercise or Presbytery, and great were the Struggles before even this was yielded in several Places: But now the Bishop has not only a Negative, but a Positive; and all Church-power and Government is lodged in his sole Person, his Assistants being only his own Choice, and mere Shadows as to Power of deciding in any Case. I have run out at so great a Length upon this Restoring Prelacy, that I shall be the shorter upon the following.

Their 2^d Act, For the Preservation of his Majesty's Person, Authority, and Government, is every Way so singular an establishing Iniquity by Law, a Foundation for much Persecution, and an Opening the Door to Popery, since the National Covenant, and Acts relating to it, pointed most against Popery, that I could not omit inserting it, App. N^o. 29. Reflections are now obvious, Things are no longer disguised, or softly and ambiguously expressed, but the carved Work pull'd down at once; yea, all Petitioning for a Redress of Grievances, upon the Matter is discharged by this odd Act, when the Prelates have taken their Seats in the House. The very Title of the Act supposes the King's Authority and Government could not be preserved without overturning all that Work in the late Times, so signally owned of God; which sober People must reckon a lasting Blot upon the King by this loyal Parliament.

They thank the King for Passing by the Miscarriages of his Subjects; Witness his unparalleled Grace and Goodness to the Marquis of Argyle, whose Son they are just now about to try and condemn! Next, they thank him for Restoring of Bishops, which being really his proper Deed, and never the Desire of Scotland, had it been worth Thanks, they belonged to his Majesty. Then they declare it a treasonable Position and seditious, That 'tis lawful for Subjects to enter into Leagues and Covenants for Reformation. This Declaration runs so flatly in the

the Face of Scripture, Reason, and the approved Practice of many, that 'tis a Shame and Reproach that it stands in the Body of our Scots Laws, and casts a Slur upon our excellent Reformation from Popery, which upon the Matter is here declared to have been seditions and treasonable. And we need not be surpris'd to find them declaring all done since the 1637. in Meetings, Petitions, Protestations, &c. to be unlawful and seditions.

Then they declare, 'Those Oaths, the National Covenant, as sworn and explained 1638. and afterward, and the Solemn League and Covenant were, and are in themselves unlawful Oaths, and impos'd against the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom.' O tempora! O mores! Will nothing satisfy them, and the Prelates now among them, save the making themselves and the King guilty of taking the Lord's Name in vain; and to arraign his Majesty as an Invader of the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom? Then they assume the Pope's Power, and declare the Consciences of all who had taken those Oaths free from the Obligation of them. The Motive whence all this excentric and wild Work flows, is plain from what follows: Those solemn Oaths had barred out Prelates, so they must as far as they can disengage themselves and the Nation from them, that no Alteration be now made in the Church: And to complete all, further they rescind all Acts, Ecclesiastical or Civil, approving those Covenants, particularly the Acts of the Assembly at Glasgow 1638. It is a Wonder they spared the succeeding Assemblies.

Next 'tis made Treason, 'To take up Arms against any commissioned by his Majesty, or to invite Strangers to come into any of his Majesty's Dominions.' By this our Revolution, had Matters repined far enough, as they were pretty fast halting some Years ago, would have been found to be Treason.

There follows a Hedge about the Supremacy and Prelacy, which appears odd enough, and became a Foundation of a most extensive Persecution for Conscience Sake, if any Thing can be so called: 'All Writing, Speaking, Printing, Preaching, Praying, &c. tending to stir up a Dislike of his Majesty's Royal Prerogative and Supremacy in Causes Ecclesiastical, or the Government by Archbishops and Bishops now settled.' Which takes in not only Presbyterians, but many Prelatists, and all who were upon any other Lay in this Matter, but that of absolute Supremacy; 'or tending to justify any Thing done since the Year 1638.' Such as were guilty, upon Conviction, are declared incapable to enjoy any publick Trust, Civil, Ecclesiastical, or Military, yea further, made liable to all the Pains appointed by Law for Sedition.

The very naming of these Clauses of those Acts, does abundantly justify the happy Revolution; and cannot but expose our Prelates, to whom we ow all those iniquous Clauses, and plainly evince that Prelacy in the Church of Scotland was still the Road to Tyranny in the State, Persecution in the Church, horrid Invasions upon the Liberty of the Subjects, and dreadful Oppression in the Matters of Conscience.

Their Third Act, concerning Benefices, Stipends, and Patrons, which is added, App. No. 30. gives us a new Proof that Patronages were one of the great Pillars of Prelacy. The Parliament find, that Patrons Rights were unjustly taken away in the Year 1649. Whereas, as we have seen, nothing was removed by that Act, save the unreasonable as well as unchristian Burden of the Patron's Presentation of Ministers, so obstructive to the Planting of Congregations according to Christ's Rule, the Interests of the Gospel, and Good of Souls; and the Civil Interest and Benefit of Patrons was preserved and enlarged.

By this Act all Ministers entred since the Year 1649. are to take Presentations from their respective Patrons. The Reason given in the Act, at and before which Patrons were injuriously dispossessed, seems to lead them higher than that Year. Joynly with this, Ministers must receive Collation from the Bishop, before the 20th of September this Year. One of the ordinary Clauses of Collations was, I do hereby receive him into the Function of the holy Ministry: And one may easily see what a Strait this would be to a Minister who reckoned his former Actings in that holy Office good and valid. If Ministers neglect this, and the Patron present not another before March next Year, the Right of Presentation is declared to fall jure devoluto to the Bishop, and he is ordained to settle a Minister in the Place, yea, the Bishops are appointed to plant the Kirks which have vaik'd since the Year 1637. I imagine they had but few of these, if any; and to be careful to provide all the Kirks of their Diocese, according to this Act.

It will be remembred, that last Year the Parliament had ordained, that both Presenters and Presented should take the Oath of Allegiance or Supremacy, now pretty fully explained; and by this Act the Presented must own the Prelates: Thus a great Part of the Ministry of the Church of Scotland, must either quit their Principles or their Charges.

Certainly it was very hard upon the Ministers, who had been admitted since the 1649. according to standing Law, that they are declared Intruders, and to have no Right to their Stipends since their Admission, merely because a new Law was made for the Support of Prelates. Such, who in that same Period had purchased an Estate, or possessed a Rent, are by this same Parliament declared lawful Possessors: But nothing now can be seen unreasonable, which may strike at Presbyterian Ministers, the Bishops great Eye-fore. Thus a great Number of worthy Pastors, who had suffered sensibly for Noncompliance with the English, and their Stanchness to the Royal Family, who had been admitted to their Charges in the Scripture-manner, where Patrons are not to be found, according to Law and Acts of Parliament approved by the King himself, are declared, if they will not alter their Principles, and cast a Reproach on their former Administration, Robbers and Intruders.

The plain View of this Act seems to have been, to tempt the younger Ministers gradually to conform, and, if they had the Courage to stand out, to ruine them and their Families. The elder Sort were but few, and it might be expected they would soon wear out, and less Compliance was to be looked for from them, who had been to active in the Covenants, and late Work of Reformation: But our Managers were disappointed as to the younger Intrants, and they did with great Firmness and Resolution stand to their Principles, and suffer rather than sin.

To secure the Hierarchy now established, to entail it upon the Nation, and to corrupt and bias the Youth, the Parliament by their Fourth Act, concerning Masters of Universities, App. N^o. 31. turn out all Masters of Colleges who do not submit to, and own the Government by Archbishops and Bishops, and who take not the Oath of Allegiance. The Cunning of Juban the Apostate, in suppressing and poisoning Christian Schools, as the most effectual Way for ruining of Christianity, was now much spoken of, and some did not scruple to compare Primate Sharp to him in more Respects than one.

This Act further obliges all Ministers to wait upon the Bishops Visitations and diocesan Meetings, or Synods, which were but seldom kept in many Dioceses; and further, Ministers are required to give their Assistance in all Things, as they shall be required by the Bishops: Which certainly was hard enough, and next Door to implicate Obedience. And this is to be done as a Token of their complying with the present Church and Government, and under the Penalty of Suspension, for the first Fault, from Benefice and Office, until the next diocesan Meeting, which, for any Constitution I can find, might be long enough; and Deprivation for the next. This Act strikes at the elder Ministers not thrown out by the former Act about Patronages.

Further they discharge all private Meetings, or Conventicles in Houses under Pretext of religious Exercises. How far this agrees with the 16th Act of the former Session of this Parliament, wherein the King promises to promote the Power of Godliness, and encourage the Exercises of Religion both publick and private, the Advocates for this present Management may explain. And, to make thorough Work, none are allowed to preach, or keep School, or to be Pedagogues to Persons of Quality, without the Bishop's Licence.

By their Fifth Act, the Parliament put the Copestone upon the Building of Prelacy, and, in as much as is in their Power, the Gravestone upon the Covenants and Presbytery; and ordain all Persons in publick Trust, to sign and subscribe a Declaration. The Act it self the Reader hath, App. N^o. 32. The Declaration being the Foundation of a great Part of the following Sufferings, deserves a Room in the Body of the History, and is as follows.

Declaration to be subscribed by all in publick Trust.

‘ I do sincerely affirm and declare, That I judge it unlawful to Subjects upon Pretext of Reformation, or any other Pretext whatsoever, to enter into Leagues and Covenants, or to take up Arms against the King, or those commissioned by him; and that all those Gatherings, Convocations, Petitions, Protestations, and erecting or keeping of Council-tables that were used in the Beginning, and for the carrying on of the late Troubles, were unlawful and seditious: And particularly, that these Oaths whereof the one was commonly called the National Covenant, (as it was sworn and explained in the Year 1638. and thereafter) and the other, entituled, A solemn League and Covenant, were and are in themselves unlawful Oaths, and were taken by, and imposed upon the Subjects of this Kingdom, against the fundamental Laws and Liberties of the same; and that there lieth no Obligation upon me or any of the Subjects, from the said Oaths, or either of them, to endeavour any Change or Alteration of the Government either in Church or State, as 'tis now established by the Laws of the Kingdom.’

Observations upon it.

Some Remarks have been made on several Clauses of this Declaration, upon the Acts of this and the former Session of Parliament. Such who had taken the Covenants, and thought them obligatory upon Posterity, and their Ties indissoluble by human Authority, could not but reckon, that Perjury was, by this Act and Declaration, made a chief Qualification and necessary Condition, required of all to be admitted to Places and Offices in Church and State. The Reader cannot but observe, that under this Period, and during the Establishment of Prelacy, there were more ensnaring and Conscience-debauching Declarations, Bonds, and Oaths, invented and imposed through the Contrivance and Influence of the Bishops in this Kingdom, than ever were in so short a Space upon any Part of the World. We shall see that scarce a Year passes but some new Declaration, Bond, or Oath, was brought upon the Subjects in Scotland; all of them dubious, many of them impossible to keep, and some of them evidently self-contradictory. This dreadfully corrupted Peoples Morals, and was a sad Inlet to the Atheism, Profaneness, and Unrighteousness, which now abounded.

Some compared this Declaration to the receiving the Mark of the Beast in the right Hand. The very Matter of the Declaration cannot but stun such as seriously reflect upon it. The declaring all Leagues and Covenants among Subjects, upon any Pretext whatsoever, unlawful, is unreasonable and foolish. All Resistance upon any Pretext, even against the least Person who hath a Commission from the King, is what will now be laughed at. The Covenants are declared to be unlawful in themselves; and the Declaration goes further, and affirms, They can have no Obligation upon others. Every where but in Scotland, it would have sufficed to declare an Oath unlawful, and for a Man not to take it himself, or renounce it, without any Declaration as to others; but our Prelates can never be secure enough against the Covenants. Last Session they procure them to be declared illegal; this Session, by Act 2^d, they are called and annulled, and now all in publick Trust declare so much in a separate Instrument; and in a few Years the Covenants must be forsworn and renounced by the Test, that one Oath may expel another. In short this Declaration is but Prejudice of the Oath of Allegiance, that is, both must be taken.

The Allegiance, this Declaration, and in some Years afterward the Test, were the great Snares of this Time. And as upon the one Hand the unaccountable and violent Pressing of them, run some poor People to Extremities, and some Measure of Wildness; so upon the other, such Methods turned severals of greater Knowledge to Irreligion, Atheism, and rejecting every Thing serious, when they observed the Bishops and their Time-serving Ministers fall in with this Declaration; tho' a little Time ago they had pressed the Covenant, as the great Duty of the Times, a Mode of the Covenant of Grace, and what not; yet now it is to them Rebellion and Sin.

Some Acts in this Session about Civil Affairs, seem design'd for the further Establishment of Episcopacy; but I do not enter upon them. Towards the End of the Session they came at length to the much longed for Indemnity, which had been granted in England, almost as soon as the King came Home; but his ancient Kingdom must not enjoy such a Favour till the Prelates had their main Interests settled and secured; tho' they were the Scots who crowned him, fought for him, suffered most for him under the Usurpation, and moved first his Restoration.

Act of Indemnity and Oblivion.

This Act of Indemnity and Oblivion was clogged with some Exceptions in the Body of it: Besides the ordinary Crimes still excepted in such Acts, and the Murderers of the King's Father, if any such were in Scotland, the Parliament except, out of the Indemnity, all who had been declared Fugitive by the Committees of Estates or Parliament, since August 1660. and in particular, 'The Marquis of Argyle, Waristoun, Swinton, Mr. James Guthrie, William Govan, John Hume, William Dundas, and the Campbells of Ardkinglas, and Ormsay.'

The Exceptions in it.

This Act of Favour was further clogged with an unprinted Act, secluding twelve Persons from Places of Trust, who were to be named in Parliament by Ballots: Which Act, commonly called the balloting Act, was a Contrivance of Middleton's, to turn out Lawderdale, Crawford, and Sir Robert Murray, from all their Offices and Polts. However, this turned about to Middleton's Ruin, and occasioned an odd Reckoning 'twixt the King and Parliament, as may be seen at the End of the printed Acts of Parliament 1663. when the Parliament, after a very flaunting Letter to the King, wherein they, I had almost said blasphemously, declare the King's Royal Judgment is the Rule of their Actions, rescinded this balloting Act. Some of the Members of Parliament, when giving in their Lists or Ballots, were so merry as to put down any Twelve of the Bishops the Parliament pleased.

The Act of Balloting.

The last Clog upon this Indemnity is, The Act containing Exceptions from the Act of Indemnity; the Tenor of which will fall in afterwards in the Act September 9th, 1663. rescinding the balloting Act. I find the Reason alledged for this Act of Fines, or the Exceptions from this Indemnity, is, 'That the Fines therein imposed, may be given for the Relief of the King's good Subjects, who had suffered in the late Troubles,' as now it is fashionable to term the Work of Reformation since the 1638. The Parliament appointed a Committee for pitching upon the Persons to be fined with the Quota of their Fines, the Members whereof were solemnly bound to discover none whom they pitched upon, till once the Act was passed in the House.

Act of Fines.

This Committee most arbitrarily formed a List, which the Parliament, I may say, implicitly approved, of Seven or Eight Hundred Noblemen, Gentlemen, Burgesses, and others, mostly in the Western Shires, to be arbitrarily fined in the Sums they named, without any Libel, Probation, or pretended Crime, but what was common to the whole Nation during the Usurpation, and now was indemnified to the rest of the Subjects. I have heard of nothing of this Nature imposed upon the Compliers with Cromwel, in England or Ireland.

Manner of forming it.

The Persons they name are fined in the Sum of One Million Seventeen thousand three hundred fifty three Pounds, Six Shillings and Eight Penies, Scots Money, as will appear by the List of them, annexed App. N^o. 33. This List may be faulty in the Syllabication of some Persons Names and Stiles, but as to the Sums and the Bulk of Persons named 'tis exact.

List of the Persons fined by it.

The Persons contained in this Act of Fines, as far as I can now learn about them, were, generally speaking, of the best Morals, and most shining Piety in the Places where they lived, and chargeable with nothing but being Presbyterians, and submitting to their Conquerors when they could do no better.

Middleton thought to have got all this Money to himself and his Dependents, as well as the Estate of the Marquis of Argyle, with the Addition of the Title of Duke; but he was balked in both; and neither he nor his Friends fingered those Fines. They were indeed uplifted, and much more, as shall be observed in its own Room, by military Force; but the Money came to other Hands.

Remarks upon
it.

Many Observations were made upon this Act of Fines at this Time: That some named in it were in their Grave, some upon the Nurse's Breast, some never had a Being: Several were in the Act who were subsisted upon the weekly Collections for the Poor of the Parish where they lived; and a good many were put in, as much from little private Pique, as for any Activity in the late Times: Generally speaking, these Fines were inflicted upon such whom they reckoned Presbyterians, and averse from the present Establishment in the Church; and we shall meet with a good many of them suffering greater Hardships in the after Part of this History. I am told, that a good many Presbyterian Ministers were at first named in the List, but it seems upon Reflection the most Part of the Managers themselves were ashamed of this: And indeed it would have looked odd enough, to levy Fines from such as they were turning out of their Houses and Livings as fast as might be.

Sir George Mackenzie's Remark, upon the Indemnities of this Reign, considered.

But enough of the Indemnity: It was no wonder it was so slow a coming, when it had so many Clogs hanging upon it. I remember Sir George Mackenzie, in his Vindication, affirms, that more Indemnities were granted by this King than by any who ever reigned. And indeed had they come seasonably and freely from him, they would probably have endeared him to the Subjects; but to grant an Indemnity after the Nation had been overawed into so many ill Things by the Delay of it; to grant it so incumbered with Fines and Exceptions; in a Word, to grant it after some of the best Blood in the Nation was spilt, and more designed, was, I must needs say, but an indifferent Compliment, and very near the common Proverb, When I am dead make Caudle. Gratia que tarda est, ingrata est gratia. It is the lovely Character of God Almighty, that he is ready to forgive, and which therefore would have well become him who was called his Vicegerent. But when a Favour sticks to the Fingers of the Giver, 'tis the less obliging. As for the Number of Indemnities Sir George boasts of, I believe it will, I am sure it ought to be granted, that they were much fewer than ensnaring and oppressive Laws, which made People stand in need of them.

Act concerning the Ministers of Edinburgh.

Those are the printed Acts that chiefly relate to the Subject of this History, during this Second Session of Parliament. Among the unprinted Acts I find one concerning the Ministers of Edinburgh, of which I may afterwards take Notice, when I come to the Sufferings of particular Persons this Year. Those worthy Persons, without any Citation, Libel, or Reason given them, are discharged from the Ministry, and ordained to remove themselves and Families out of the City, some Time in September.

In the same Place I find the Title of a Proclamation of Parliament for keeping the Anniversary of the 29th of May, the Month and Day which they had devised of their own Heart for a Feast unto the People. Unto it the Parliament saw good to add a Certification of the Deprivation of Benefice, upon such Ministers as did not keep it. Whereupon a good many were, without Citation, or being heard, deprived of their Stipends that Year, tho' they had served the Cure; and their just Incomes were uplifted by a common Collector, and disposed of otherwise.

This Session of Parliament continued long, and did very little, save what we have heard in favours of the Prelates. In June Sir George Mackenzie of Tarbet was sent up to the King by the Commissioner, with some Things to be advised with his Majesty. He was not well received, but from Time to Time delayed; and he was told the King's other weighty Affairs hindered him from minding those Matters. But Lawderdale was averse to several Things proposed by Middleton, and the Differences betwixt them were drawing now to some Head, and this was the true Spring of this Delay.

They had my Lord Lorn's Affair before them, and several West-country Ministers were called in to Edinburgh during this Session of Parliament, the Accounts whereof may come in as well under the succeeding Sections. The Matter of the forming the List of Persons to be fined, took them up likewise for a considerable Time, and it was the 9th of September before they dismissed, and adjourned till May next Year.

So much for this Second and last Session of Parliament, held by the Earl of Middleton, wherein he reckoned he had merited very much at his Master's Hands, by screwing up the Prerogative, and establishing the Bishops, to support it, and flatter the King. And yet after he had made a Circuit through the West and South, and in Council passed many iniquous Acts against Presbyterians, when he went up to Court his Reception was but indifferent, and his Rival in a short Time prevailed against him; and he never sat in another Parliament, and for any Thing I know, never saw Scotland again. I come now to the Procedure of the Council.

S E C T. III.

Of the Acts and Proceedings of the Council after the Parliament rose, and particularly of the Act at Glasgow, October 1st, this Year 1662.

HAVING thus seen the Procedure of this Second Session of Parliament, it may be fit to take a View of the Acts of Council, who begin, where they left and go on vigorously against Presbyterians, especially Ministers: And we shall understand the Sufferings of particular Persons the more distinctly, after we have seen the Train of the more publick Actings this Year.

Now Prelacy, that Tree of Sorrow and Death in Scotland, is planted; the Fruits it bears will be best gathered from the Records of Council, who were for many Years the Bishops Executioners, and spent much of their Time to serve them and harass the Presbyterians. There we shall meet with a large Harvest of 'Imprisonments, Finings, Confinings, Scourging, Tortures, Banishments, selling as Slaves, Scattering of many poor but religious Families, Night-searchings, Heading, and Hanging.' Yet just as Pharaoh's Policy to extirpate the Children of Israel succeeded of old, so now it did in its Copy; the more Presbyterians were oppressed, the more they multiplied.

Effects of the Settlement of Prelates, whose Supports the Council were.

The very next Day after the Parliament rose, the Council begin their iniquous Acts; and in Prosecution of what they left at January last, they publish their Act anent diocesan Meetings, September 10th, which I have added App. N^o. 34. The Council begin with remarking, that the Bishops and Archbishops had been taken up since their Consecration, in attending the Service of the Parliament, and thereby kept from the Exercise of the Government, and ordering the Affairs of the Church: Which may sufficiently convince even the Abettors of Prelacy, of the Unreasonableness of the Civil Places and Powers of Churchmen, and how much their Seats in Parliament abstract them from what ought to be their proper Work.

Council's Act about diocesan Meetings, September 10. App. N^o. 34.

Now they are to go to their respective Dioceses, to exercise the Authority and Jurisdiction established upon them by the Laws: And to be sure they had no other Establishment; and it had been dangerous, for what I can observe, for them to claim any other but what flow'd from the Regal Supremacy. The 2^d Tuesday of October is to be the Diet for the Dioceses of St. Andrews, Glasgow, Edinburgh, Dunkeld, Brechin, and Dumblain, whereupon their Diocesan Assemblies are to be held: And the 3^d Tuesday for those in the Dioceses of Galloway, Aberdeen, Murray, Ross, Caithness, Isles, Argyle, and Orkney.

Remarks upon it.

All Parsons, Vicars, and Ministers are required to be present, and give their Concurrence in their Stations, for the Exercise of Ministerial Duties, and that under the Penalties of Contemners of his Majesty's Authority: And all other Meetings of Ministers are henceforth to be held as seditious. This Proclamation put it out of the Power of Presbyterian Ministers to attend those Meetings, if they were not resolved to quit their Principles, since all their Power is derived from the Prelates, and theirs from the King. Accordingly they came under a Course of sore Sufferings.

Those Diocesan Meetings were very ill kept, save in the North. Synods and Presbyteries were now discharged, and those Meetings did entirely depend on the Bishop, and Attendance upon them was reckoned a Subjection to Prelacy. In the Diocese of Glasgow, consisting of the Presbyteries of Air, Irwine, Paisly, Dumbarton, Glasgow, Hamilton, and Lanerk, the largest Body of Ministers, next to the Assembly, in this Church, together with the Shires of Niddale, Tweeddale, and Teviotdale, the Bishop had only Twenty seven present with him.

Those Meetings ill kept.

At Edinburgh, the Bishop had double their Number with him, and great Pains was taken by the Noblemen and Courtiers, to get Ministers to be present. October 14. the Bishop and his Chapter held the diocesan Meeting, which consisted of Fifty eight Members present. To put Honour upon this first Prelatical Synod, the King's Advocate, some of the Lords of Council and Session, with the Magistrates of Edinburgh, were present. The Bishop opened the Meeting with a Sermon from Phil. 4. 5. Let your Moderation be known unto all Men.

Diocesan Meeting at Edinburgh, October 14.

Two out of every Presbytery were pitched upon by the Bishop, as a Committee, which was named The Brethren of the Conference, to prepare Business for the Synod. They proposed, and the Synod went into it, That there should be Morning and Evening Prayers in the Church, in every Burgh, and every other Place where any Confluence of People could be had. I do not find that this was continued during Prelacy.

Their Actings.

That the Lord's Prayer should be repeated by every Minister once at every Sermon, or twice as he saw good. That the Doxology, or Glory to the Father, being a Song composed and sung in the Church, when Arians and other Sects denied the Deity of our Saviour, should be again revived and sung, this being a Time when many Sectaries deny the Godhead of Christ. That the Creed, or Belief, be repeated at the Administration of the Sacrament of

Baptism,

Baptism, by the Father of the Child, or the Minister, at his Discretion. Probably those Things were concerted beforehand among the Bishops, and proposed to every Meeting, and agreed to. It had been good for them and this Church, if they had rested here.

This Meeting likewise agreed, That all Ministers within their Diocese, who had not conformed to the Act of Council made at Glasgow, of which more just now, should be indulged to come in and accept of Collation from the Bishop, 'twixt and 25th Day of November next to come, otherwise the Bishop is to proceed against them, and fill their Kirks with other Ministers. The Meeting continued Part of Two Days, and were appointed to meet after Pasch next. The Writer of the Papers, from which I take this, no Disliker of Prelates, observes, 'That all this did not please the People, who much hated the Bishops, and favoured the Doctrine of their own Ministers, and lothed Episcopacy: However, some Ministers in the Diocese came for and accepted Collation.' But to return to the Proceedings of the Council.

The Commissioner's Progress to the West and South, Sept. and Oct. this Year.

To put this Act the better in Execution, and put the more Honour upon the Prelates in the Western and Southern Shires, where they were generally disliked, towards the End of September, the Commissioner resolves upon a Tour through that Part of the Country, where he expected most Coldrifeness to the Bishops, and makes his best Efforts to bring all to a Subjection to them. He had a full Quorum of the Council with him, ready to meet as Occasion offered, not only for the executing of what the Parliament had enacted, but even to go beyond them.

Accordingly, his Grace the Commissioner, the Chancellor, the Earls of Morton, Linlithgow, Callender, and the Lord Newburgh Captain of the King's Life-guard, with the Clerk to the Council, and a great many Attendants, came to the West Country with much Solemnity, Macers, Trumpeters, and Kettle-drums. They came to Glasgow, September 26. and were regaled and royally treated at Hamilton, Paisly, Dumbarton, Rosedoe, and Mugdock, and some other Places about, by the Noblemen and Burghs concerned.

Many Remarks upon the Prodigality, Profaneness, and terrible Revelling at this Progress, were made at this Time. Such who entertained the Commissioner best, had their Dining-room, their Drinking-room, their Vomiting-room, and Sleeping-rooms, when the Company had lost their Senses. I find it regretted, that while they were at Air, the Devil's Health was drunk at the Crofs there, in one of their Debauches, about the Middle of the Night; indeed it was a Work of Darknes: But I leave those Things to such as shall write a History of the Morals of this Time, which will be black enough, and ungrateful to Christian Ears, but a Proof that Profaneness and Prelacy in Scotland go Hand in Hand.

Design of this Progress.

It was given out, that Middleton went West to press the Declaration imposed by Parliament upon the Presbyterians in that Country. Whether the Kindness and good Company he met with at Glasgow and the Neighbourhood, where every Body almost waited on him, softened his Spirit, or what was the Reason I know not, but I don't find he pressed it.

The Occasion of the Act at Glasgow.

When he came to Glasgow, the Commissioner was entertained with a very heavy Complaint from the Archbishop, That notwithstanding of the Act of Parliament, and that the Time was elapsed, there was not one of the young Ministers, entred since 1649. had owned him as a Bishop; That he had only the Hatred which attends that Office in Scotland, and nothing of the Power; That his Grace behoved to fall upon some other and more effectual Methods, otherwise the new-made Bishops would be mere Cyphers.

Archbishop Fairfoul's Proposal to the Commissioner.

Middleton desired to know what the Archbishop had to propose, and he should heartily fall in with it. Fairfoul moved, that the Council might agree upon an Act and Proclamation, peremptorily banishing all the Ministers who had entred since the Year 1649. from their Houses, Parishes, and respective Presbyteries, betwixt and the 1st of November next to come, if they come not in to receive Collation and Admission from the Bishop; assuring the Commissioner, there would not be Ten in his Diocese who would stand out, and lose their Stipend in this Cause.

A Meeting of Council upon it.

Every Desire of the Prelates was now next to a Law; and so a Meeting of Council was agreed upon, and convened at Glasgow, in the College Fore-hall, towards the Street. At this Time it was termed the drunken Meeting at Glasgow, and it was affirmed, That all present were flustered with Drink, save Sir James Lockhart of Lee. When the Council met, the Commissioner laid before them the Archbishop's Desire and Overture, and the Necessity of supporting the Bishops the King and Parliament had brought in. There was no Debate upon it, save by the Lord Lee above named.

Lord Lee's Arguments against it.

He reasoned some Time against it, and assured them such an Act would not only lay the Country desolate, but cast it in Disorder, yea increase their Dislike to the Bishops, and at length bring the common People into Confusions and Risings; he peremptorily asserted, That the younger Ministers, admitted since the 1649. would go further than the Loss of their Stipends, before they would acknowledge and submit to Bishops: But Reasoning, tho' never so just, could not have any great Weight in the present Circumstances. Thus the Act was formed in the Terms of the Archbishop's Demand, though some say it was with Difficulty, whether for want of a fresh Man to dictate or write, I know not. The Tenor of it follows.

At Glasgow, October 1. 1662.

Act at Glasgow,
October 1.

THE Lords of His Majesty's Privy Council, taking to Consideration, That notwithstanding it is statute and ordained, by an Act of the last Session of the current Parliament, intituled, Act concerning such Benefices and Stipends as have been possessed without Presentation from the lawful Patron; That all Ministers who have entred upon the Care of any Parish in Burgh or Landward, in or since the Year of God 1649. (at and before which Time the Patrons were most injuriously dispossessed of their Patronages) have no Right unto, or shall uplift the Rents of their respective Benefices, modified Stipends, Mante or Glebe, for this instant Year 1662. nor for any Year following, unless they should obtain Presentation from the lawful Patron, and have Collation from the Bishop of the Diocese where they live, before the Twentieth Day of September last: As likewise, That it is statute and ordained, That the Twenty ninth of May be yearly kept as a Holy-day unto the Lord, for a solemn anniversary Thanksgiving for his Majesty's Restoration to his Royal Government, and that all Ministers should observe the same in their respective Parishes, under the Pains therein contained: Yet several Ministers have not only contravened the foresaid Acts of Parliament, but, in manifest Contempt of His Majesty's Royal Authority, albeit they have justly forfeited their Right to the Benefices, modified Stipends, and others, continue to exercise the Function of the Ministry at their respective Churches as of before; Therefore they prohibit and discharge all Ministers who have contravened the foresaid Act of Parliament concerning the Benefices and Stipends, to exercise any Part of the Function of the Ministry, at their respective Churches in Time coming, which are hereby declared to be vacant: And that none of their Parishioners who are liable in any Part of their Stipends, make Payment to them of this instant Crop and Year of God 1662. or in Time coming, as having no Right thereunto: And that they do not acknowledge them for their lawful Pastor, in repairing to their Sermons, under the Pain of being punished as frequenters of private Conventicles and Meetings. And command and charge the said Ministers to remove themselves and their Families out of their Parishes, betwixt and the First Day of November next to come, and not to reside within the Bounds of their respective Presbyteries. As likewise, That no Heritor or other, liable in Payment of any Part of the Minister's Stipend, make Payment to any Minister who hath contravened the foresaid Act of Parliament, for keeping the anniversary Thanksgiving, of any Part of this Year's Stipend; and declare, That the Ministers who have contravened the said Act, shall be liable to the whole Pains therein contained. And ordain those Presents to be forthwith Printed, and Published by the Sheriffs of Shires, and Magistrates of Burghs, that none may pretend Ignorance.

In the Registers, this Act stands signed by Glencairn Chancellor, Duke Hamilton, Montrose, Morton, Eglintoun, Linlithgow, Callender, Newburgh, Sinclair. There are in the Sederunt this Day, besides the Commissioner, the Laids of Lee and Blackhall, who do not sign the Act.

This Act appears to be beyond the Council's Power, which was only to execute the Acts of Parliament, and not to make new Laws; and they evidently go beyond what the Parliament had statuted. But a little Time convinced them that they had taken a false Step. The most Part of the West and South of Scotland was laid waste of Ministers, and People turned discontent, and almost desperate: And what they did at Glasgow, was disliked by some of their best Friends; particularly the Primate was mightily dissatisfied, and complained, That Fairfoul's Folly had well nigh ruined them. His Scheme was to have Presbyterian Ministers more insensibly turned out at first; and therefore another Proclamation was shaped at Edinburgh, in December, partly rescissory of this, and a little more soft, as we shall hear.

By this Act of Glasgow, near a Third Part of the Ministers of this Church were cast out of their Charges, and, by the following Acts some more, merely for Conscience Sake, being free of the least Degree of Disloyalty or Rebellion. They could not keep Holy-days, they could not take the Oath of Allegiance or Supremacy, they could not own Patrons, nor subject themselves to Bishops; and therefore must be turned out. I shall afterwards have Occasion to observe the lamentable Consequences of this Act; and only here remark, That, at Glasgow, the Council proceeded to severe enough Measures with some particular Gentlemen and Ministers, of which in its own Place.

After this heavy Work at Glasgow, the Commissioner went forward in his Circuit, through Renfrew, Cuninghame, Kyle, and Carrick: He was some Time at Air, and from thence went to Wigtoun and Dumfries; and upon the last of October, he returned to Holy-rood-house. When the Accounts came in to Edinburgh of the rueful Circumstances of the West and South, by the silencing their Ministers, Middleton, who had depended upon the Accounts given

He knew many of the Ministers had little to sustain themselves and their numerous Families; and curling and swearing, asked, What will these mad Fellows do? knowing nothing of their living by Faith, as Sufferers for Conscience and a good Cause use to do.

During the Month of November, the Council are taken up in retrieving, as much as possible, this hasty Act at Glasgow. Their Prosecutions of particular Ministers and Gentlemen shall be noticed in the following Sections. Accordingly, the very first Meeting at Edinburgh, November 4th, they appoint the following Letter to be writ to the Archbishops of St. Andrews and Glasgow.

My Lord,

Council's Letter to the two Archbishops, Nov. 4.

‘HAVING considered, That by the Execution of the late Acts of Parliament and Council, against several Ministers who have contravened the same in many Places of the Kingdom, the Condition of the Parishioners will be rendred very hard, through the Want of the Ministry, and the Benefit of the Ordinances. We have thought fit your Lordship come here with your first Convenience, that by your Advice we may redress those Disorders, and provide for the Good of the People, which shall be seriously looked to by’

Your Lordship's Friends,

Observes upon it.

How much better had it been to have considered those fatal Consequences, before they had made such Laws and Acts, than after they were made to provide Remedies? Had they seriously looked to the Good of the People, certainly they had never been made. However, this was the next best: The Archbishop of Glasgow seems to have been backward to come to discourse with the Lords, as perhaps knowing he was to blame. November 6th, under Expectation of the Upcoming of the Archbishops, the Duke of Hamilton, Lord Register, Tarbet, Advocate, and any other the Commissioner pleases to name from the Council, are appointed to meet with his Grace, the Chancellor, and the Two Archbishops, anent such Matters and Business as do concern the Affairs of the Church. But it seems the Archbishop of Glasgow still hangs off; for, November 18th, the following Letter is writ to him.

Most Reverend,

Another Letter to the Archbishop of Glasgow.

‘IT is now a Fortnight since we did write to your Lordship to come here, in order to some Affairs that concern the Church: And seeing we have had no Return, we thought fit to renew our Desires; and the Matter being of such Importance, your Lordship is expected as soon as can be, by’

Your assured Friends,

Glencairn Chancellor, &c. ut in Sederunt.

That same Day, the Members of Council are writ to, to attend on the 21st; and on the 21st, Duke Hamilton, Montrose, and other Members are again writ to, to attend upon the 27th. Whether the Archbishop of Glasgow came up or not, I cannot tell, but, November 27th, the Chancellor, Roxburgh, Haddingtoun, Callender, the Register, and Lee, are appointed to meet in the Afternoon with the Commissioner, about such Business as his Grace shall propose: But I find no Account of the Archbishop's coming up. Mean while, the Council go on to the Banishment and Confinement of a good many particular Ministers, as we shall hear. It seems they could not concert their general Act till December 23^d, which was the last Meeting of Council Middleton was ever present at.

Act and Proclamation, December 23. App. N^o. 35.

That Day the Council publish their Act and Proclamation, which being pretty long, I have annexed it App. N^o. 35. The Council, under the Sense of the wrong Step taken at Glasgow, and how hard it was to leave so vast a Number of Congregations desolate, as had their Ministers ejected by that Act, and the Bishops having but few ready to fill them, extend the Day, and allow Ministers to obtain Presentation and Collation before the 1st of February next: But if 'twixt and that Time they neglect, they are ordained to remove out of their Parishes, Presbyteries, and the Dioceses of St. Andrews and Edinburgh; and such Ministers as were in those Dioceses are ordained to remove beyond Tay before the First of March, as the Proclamation it self more fully bears.

This

This Act some looked upon as a Permission to return to their Parishes, at least until the First of February; and so a good many up and down the Country did come back and preach. But very soon they found no Favour was designed for Presbyterian Ministers by that Act, save what was absolutely necessary for a present Conveniency; and Ministers Return and Removal so quickly after, at the Diets named by the Council, was one of the first Handles to the common People to censure them. Ignorance, Scrupulosity, and Centure, ordinarily go together, especially in so dark an Hour as this.

In Reality this Act was a cunning Fetch of the Primate, and an insidious Lengthning out of the Time, which it now appeared had been too much shortned at Glasgow, for Ministers coming in; and in the Event it turned to the Disadvantage of the persecuted Ministers.

Cunningly enough, in the Proclamation, Ministers are blamed for refusing to ask a Presentation from Patrons, and no Notice is taken of the Clause enjoined with this in the Act of Parliament, their receiving Collation from a Bishop, which was a plain Renunciation of Presbyterian Principles. And no doubt this was designed to exasperate the Nobility and Gentry at Ministers, though out of Principle and Conscience they refused both; and beside what hath been observed upon those Heads, the Remarks of Mr. Douglas on this Act deserve a Room here.

He says, 'The receiving a Presentation and Collation may be accounted a small Matter, but who considers it well, will find it very weighty. Taking of Presentations condemns the Removal of laick Patrons, and which is more, condemns the Call from the People: And Presentations directed to Bishops, condemn the Call from the Presbytery; and it vacates the Right to the Benefice, and says, They had no Right to it; and yet in Law beneficium sequitur officium. Besides, the Collation is not a simple Collation, and giving a Right to the Benefice, which is tolerable; but the Right is given upon the Account of their acknowledging their Ordinary, and Submission to the present Episcopal Government, which is a real acknowledging their Power. This honest Ministers could not do; therefore by the Act they are removed from their Charges; and more Ministers were removed in one Month, than ever were removed in Scotland since the Reformation. 'Tis no Wonder then the Complaint against their Bishops be, That their little Finger is thicker than the Loyns of the former.'

Further Observations upon the obliging Ministers to receive Presentation and Collation.

The King's Goodness is magnified in not making Ministers pay back all their Stipend since the 1649. in which Period they had as good a Title to them as the Law of the Land and the King's Consent to it could give. It is noticed, that this Prolongation of the Time was at the Request of the Bishops present, which might be Matter of Fact, since the Act of Glasgow was reckoned by the Primate and the wiser Part of them, to be of ill Consequents to their Interests; and they were glad to amuse, and give a little Quiet to the Country, who now hated the Bishops more than ever.

Their banishing Ministers from such and such Precincts, and tossing them up and down, as in the Proclamation, was both cruel and beyond the Acts of Parliament, of which they were only Executers, and contrived and calculated to hold off Applications to Persons of Influence at Edinburgh, and to deliver Bishop Sharp's Diocese of the Trouble of Presbyterian Ministers. It was hard enough Measure to oblige the Ministers who lived upon the Border of England, to which the Diocese of Edinburgh reacheth, to remove themselves and Families be North Tay, for no other Fault save Noncompliance with Prelates, for which they had already lost their Benefices.

In the next Room, the elder Ministers, who were not reached by the Act of Glasgow, are imprisoned in their own Parishes for their not being present at the diocesan Meeting. This is plainly illegal; but harder Things come upon them afterward.

Neither does this Proclamation spare the People, but after, most groundlessly, the Blame of their not hearing the Curates is laid upon Presbyterian Ministers, their not keeping their Parish-churches, while in the mean Time they were banished, I know not at what Distance, from them, the Council orders Twenty Shillings Scots to be uplifted by Magistrates and Justices of the Peace, from every one who is absent from his Parish-church; which would have been a goodly Sum, had it been uplifted; as indeed it was in a little Time upon Presbyterians, most severely. In the End of the Act the Council come to regulate Communion, and restrict Ministers as to their Helpers at them; being grated lately with that which Mr. John Livingstone kept at Ancrum, with sensible Measures of the Divine Presence. Truly they were a very unfit Company to make Ecclesiastical Canons and Regulations.

Under all those severe Acts against Presbyterian Ministers and People, Middleton is daily losing Ground at Court, and Lawderdale gaining; and after this Proclamation he never sat in a Court in Scotland. He was, in the End of December, called up to London, and charged with High Treason, and reduced to no small Difficulties, as shall be afterward noticed. The King being informed of the partial Manner of imposing, and Unreasonableness of the Act of Fines the Commissioner had brought the Parliament to, prorogated the Time of paying the first Moiety. Middleton for some Time kept up the Order for this, being fond of a Share in the Payment of them, and forbore publishing a Proclamation for this Effect. This irritated the King exceedingly, and Lawderdale was not wanting to improve such a Step to his own Advantage. Thus we have some View of the more general Procedure of the Council this Year.

S E C T. IV.

Of the particular Sufferings of Ministers and Gentlemen, from the Beginning of this Year to the Rising of the Parliament.

THE Sufferings of particular Persons, Noblemen, considerable Numbers of Gentlemen, Ministers, and others this Year, grow so much upon my Hand, that I am obliged to give them in Two Sections, the one before, and during this Second Session of Parliament, and the other after it was up; and we shall find great Numbers attacked by the Council towards the End of the Year.

Grief, for the dismal Alteration in this Church, kills some.

I might begin with such whose Heart was indeed broke with the Change made upon this Church last Year, and the dismal Alteration this Year, by the Introduction of Prelacy: Those were certainly Confessors and Martyrs in Resolution. Their Death is some way chargeable upon the present Managers, and 'tis probable, had not Death prevented, they would have been attacked in this evil Time.

Among this Kind of Sufferers I only instance Two, both very eminent in their Stations, and singular Ornaments to Scotland; The Right Honourable the Earl of Lowdon, and the Reverend and Learned Mr. Robert Bailie Professor of Divinity, and for a little Space Principal of the College of Glasgow. The first died in the Beginning of the Year, and the other in a little Time afterward, and both of them of Grief in some Measure.

The Earl of Lowdon.

John Earl of Lowdon late Chancellor of Scotland, was a prime Instrument in the late Work of Reformation begun 1637. and such who write the History of that Period will do him the Justice his Memory deserves. He was a Nobleman of excellent Endowments, great Learning, singular Wisdom and Conduct, bewitching Eloquence, as the Impartial Pen Terms it, joyned with remarkable Resolution and Courage. Next to the Marquis of Argyle he was the great Butt of the Spite and Malice of the Party now in Power, as well as their Envy.

He knew his Life was at the King's Mercy for the political Guilt all the Nation lay under: He had frequently applied for his Majesty's Grace, and was as often refused. The Courses now so violently carrying on, and the plain Invasions upon the Liberty and Religion of Scotland, made this great Man weary of his Life. He often exhorted his excellent Lady to pray fast, he might never see the next Session of Parliament, else he might follow his noble Friend the Marquis of Argyle. The Lord was pleased to grant the Request, and he died in a most Christian Manner at Edinburgh, March 15th this Year, and his Corps were carried to the West-country, and interr'd with his noble Ancestors.

Mr. Robert Bailie.

Mr. Robert Bailie may most justly be reckoned among the great Men of this Time, and was an Honour to his Country, for his profound and universal Learning, his exact and solid Judgment, that vast Variety of Languages he understood, to the Number of Twelve or Thirteen, and his writing a Latin Style which might become the Augustan Age: But I need not enlarge on his Character, his Works do praise him in the Gates.

His publick Services and Temper.

He had been employed in much of the publick Business of this Church since the Year 1637. and was a worthy Member of the venerable Assembly at Westminster, and at London almost all the Time of it; and hath left behind him very large Accounts of Matters both of Church and State, which passed in his Time. He was of a most peaceable and healing Temper, and always a vigorous Asserter of the King's Interest. And although at the first he wanted not his own Difficulties from his Education, and Tenderness of the King's Authority; yet after Reasoning, Reading, and Prayer, as he himself expresseth it, he came heartily in to the Measures of the Covenanters.

He died a firm Presbyterian.

I have it from an unquestionable Hand, one of his Scholars, who afterwards was his Successor, and waited on him a few Weeks before his Death this Year, that he died under a rooted Aversion to Prelacy in this Church. My Author desired Mr. Bailie's Judgment of the Courses this Church was so fast running into. His Words to him were, 'Prelacy is now coming in like a Land-flood; for my Share I have considered that Controversy as far as I was able, and after all my Enquiry I find it, and am perswaded it is inconsistent with Scripture, contrary to pure and primitive Antiquity, and diametrically opposite to the true Interest of those Lands.'

The Introduction of Prelacy shortened his Days.

The Incoming of this Land-flood, which lasted Twenty Seven Years, indeed shortened his Days, and broke his Heart. And that the Reader may not take this upon my Word, 'tis worth while to insert here this excellent Person's Sense of Things, from Two original Letters under his own Hand, to the Earl of Lowderdale; and they may serve as his Testimony against the Courses of this Time. 1662.

His First Letter is dated June 16th, 1660. and therein he says, 'I was one of those, who in my Heart, and all needful Expressions, adhered to the King in all his Distresses; he had my continual Prayers to God for his Restitution, any Way God pleased, even the most hard. Divers know my Readiness to have furthered his Return to his Throne, by laying down my Head on the Block for it, and the utter Ruin of all my worldly Fortune--- When the Lord lately, at a very cheap Rate, brought all my Prayers, and much more, to pass, there were few had a more hearty Joy for it than I. While I am going on in my daily renewed Joy, behold, your unhappy Diurnals and Letters from London have wounded me to the Heart! Is the Service-book read in the King's Chapel? Has the Bishop of Ely (I still feared Wren) the worst Bishop of our Age after D. Laud, preached there? Has the House of Lords passed an Order for the Service-book? Ah, where are we so soon! The granting us in Scotland the Confirmation of what we have, brings us just back to James Graham's Time. Is our Covenant with England turned to Hary Martin's Almanack? Is the solemn Oath of the Lords and Commons assembled in Parliament, subscribed to oft by their Hands, to eradicate Bishops, turned all to Wind? Why did the Parliament a few Months since appoint the Covenant to be hung up in every Church in England, and every Year to be publickly read? Is Cromwel the great Enemy of our Covenant so soon risen out of his Grave? Can our gracious Prince ever forget his solemn Oath and Subscription? He is a better Man than to do it, if those about him be not very unfaithful Servants.'

His Sense of this Letter, in a Letter to Lowderdale, June 1660.

'For my self, such are my rooted Respects both to his Person and Place, that do what he will, and tolerate what he will, I purpose while I live to be his most loving and loyal Subject. But, believe me, if I were beside him I would tell him sadly and with Tears, that Oaths to the Almighty are not to be broken, and least of all by him for whom the Lord has wrought, at this very Time, a more marvellous Mercy than he hath done for any, yea for all the Princes in Europe those Three Hundred Years.'

'Bishops were the very Fountain of all our Mischiefs. Will they ever change their Nature? Will God ever bless that Plant which himself hath not planted? 'Tis a Scorn to tell us of moderate Episcopacy, a moderate Papacy! The World knows that Bishops and Popes could never keep Caveats. The Episcopal Faction there, were never more immoderate than at this Day. You know how far Pierce, Heylin, and Taylor justify all the Challenges against Episcopacy in their late Writs, and go beyond them to all the Tridentine Popery of Grotius. T. G. Thomas Gallovidianus, for his printing Doctor Forbes Bishop of Edinburgh his wicked Dictates, is now in his Way for London, being sent for by the English Bishops who scoff at our Church's Excommunication.'

'Your Lordship was the Man who procured and brought down to us the Ordinance for abolishing of Episcopacy; I doubt not but you and Mr. Sharp have done your Endeavours; but could I ever have dreamed that Bishops and Books should have been so soon restored with so great Ease, and Silence of the Presbyterian Covenanters in both Houses, the City, and Assembly at London, of Lancashire and other Shires?'

'Be assured that whatever Surprise it be for the Time, this so hideous a Breach to God and Man, cannot fail to produce the Wrath of God in the End. Shall all our Blood and Labour for that Covenant be so easily buried? Tho' all Flesh, English and Scots, for their own Designs, were silent at so needful a Time, I doubt not but the Lord himself will hear our Cries against the Beast which hath got so deadly a Wound, that all the Kings and Parliaments of the Earth will never be able to cure. I and many more, who have and will rejoice in the Restitution of our King, resolve to complain to God and Man, while we live, for the Return of Books and Bishops. Thus far I have poured out my Heart to you at this Time.'

The Reader will not grudge to have this honest and great Man's Sentiments, when our Parliament last Year are overturning the Work of Reformation very fast, in another Letter to the same noble Lord, dated April 18th, 1661.

My Lord,
'HAVING the Occasion of this Bearer, I tell you my Heart is broken with Grief, and I find the Burden of the Publick weighty, and hastning me to my Grave. My Prayers daily, when my Heart is loosed, are for the King and you, and his Blessing on you both. I have no private Desires nor Fears, but I think we are very ill guided, and very needlessly so. What needed you do that Disservice to the King, which all of you cannot recompense; to grieve the Hearts of all your gracious Friends in Scotland, to whom the King's Majesty was, is, and will be, I hope, after God, most dear, with pulling down all our Laws at once, which concerned our Church since the 1633? Was this good Advice, or will it thrive? Is it Wisdom to bring back upon us the Canterburian Times? The same Designs, the same Practices, will they not bring on the same horrible Effects, whatever Fools dream? That old Maxim of the State of England is wise and good, That the King can do no Fault: But the

the highest Ministers of State ought in all Reason to answer on their highest Pain for all Miscarriages. It was one of King JAMES VI. his wisest Practices, To permit his greatest Favourites to sink, before that by protecting them, the Grief of his People should fall on his Back. Ye have seen the contrary Principle destructive, and it will be still so.' 'My Lord, you are the Nobleman in all the World I love best, and esteem most; I think I may say and write to you what I like: If you have gone with your Heart, to forsake your Covenant, to countenance the Reintroduction of Bishops and Books, and strengthened the King by your Advice in those Things, I think you a prime Transgressor, and liable among the first to answer to God for that great Sin; and the opening a Door, which in haste will not be closed, for the Persecution of a Multitude of the best Persons, and most loyal Subjects that are in all the Three Kingdoms. And if otherwise your Heart be where it was, as I hope it is, and that in your own Way you are doing what you can for the Truth of God, yet daily I have my Fears for you. I think you stand in a ticklish Place: Remember your Cousin Hamilton's Poisoning before King James's Eyes, without Search. My Heart whiles trembles for you; I will continue to pray for you, do what you will. I ever opposed Mr. James Guthrie his Way; but see none get the King persuaded to take Ministers Heads. Send them to some Place where they may preach and live; you may obtain this if you will.' Then he goes to College-Affairs, and adds, 'I will beg for it while I live, which I think shall not be long; for Presbyterians at London, their Misguiding has slain me. There are some of my Twenty Year old Pamphlets reprinted at London; it is totally without my Knowledge, tho' indeed I remain fully in the Mind I was then in. If you and Mr. Sharp, whom we trusted as our own Souls, have swerved towards Chancellor Hyde's Principles, as now we see many do, you have much to answer for. This may possibly be my last to you, therefore I crave no Pardon for its Length.' I am

Your Lordship's old Friend

ROBERT BAILIE.

Other Expressions of Mr. Bailie.

By another original Letter of his to Mr. George Hutcheson, June 24th, this same Year, I find Mr. Bailie acquainting him, 'What you desire me to write to L. I have done it already, as my Testament to him, fully and sharply to obviate the Chancellor, &c. at their last going up: I think verily if that wicked Change come, it will hasten me to my Grave.' And in the last Letter I have seen of this good Man's, dated May 12th, 1662. which I take to have been a few Weeks before his Death, he tells his Cousin Mr. Spang, after some Account of the West Country Ministers being called in to Edinburgh, 'The Guise is now, The Bishop will trouble no Man, but the State will punish seditious Ministers. This poor Church is in the most hard Taking we have ever seen: This is my daily Grief, this has brought all my bodily Trouble on me, and is like to do me more Harm.' And very quickly he got to his Rest and glorious Reward. This was the Case, and those were the Sentiments of many Ministers and others at this Time.

West Country Gentlemen brought to Trouble for Things alleged in Nidsdale, done 1650.

But I go on to the direct Sufferers of this Period. In the End of the last Year, and Beginning of this, many worthy Gentlemen in the West Country were brought to much Trouble, upon the Pretext they had done Prejudice to the Earl of Queensberry's Lands, and were with the Forces under Colonels Strachan and Ker, in the Year 1650. But the real Reason was, because most Part of them had appeared for the Remonstrance, and were heartily against Prelacy; and therefore some Money must be raised from them, and given to Queensberry and his Son. All of them are likewise in the Act of Fines, and we shall meet with a good many of them under other Branches of Suffering, as we proceed in this History. I shall then give as short an Account of this Affair as I can, from the Council-registers.

Queensberry's Complaint against them in Parliament last Year, who appointed a Committee.

The Parliament, last Year, upon a Complaint of Losses sustained by the said Earl, and some Agreement among Parties, by their Act of the 29th of March, did state the Losses at Two thousand Pounds Sterling, and appointed a Committee to meet at Cumnock, to enquire into the Persons who were with the Army under the foresaid Colonels, and to proportion the said Sum upon the guilty Persons. Accordingly the Committee, the Earl of Eglintoun, Lord Cochran, the Sheriff-depute of Nidsdale, Gilbert Richard of Barskimming, and some others, meet, and make their Report to the Council, who had this Affair committed to them by the Parliament, December 3^d, last.

Their Report to the Council.

By their Report, it appears they found the underwritten Persons present in Nidsdale, at the Time complained, with the said Colonels, when Queensberry sustained his Losses, and therefore, that they ought to bear the Proportion of the Two thousand Pounds Sterling. A good many of them are absent, and some off the Country; but all are found guilty of being present with the Forces aforesaid, and that many of them were instrumental of the Losses sustained. And having taken the most exact Trial of the Estates real and personal, they rated them at the Valuations aftermentioned, as their Part of the Two thousand Pounds.

There are a good many Objections given in to the Council against several of those Quota's. Cunninghamhead, Craigends, Glanderston, and some others are declared by the Council to be free, and their Defences sustained. And the Council approve of the rest, and renew their Appointment upon the Committee to meet, and adjust the Proportions of the others, take further Trial of some not cited, and report to the Council against the 1st of March next. I do not observe any further Report in the Registers, but find those Sums were increased upon some, and a few added to make up the Quota. I need not insist upon the Unreasonableness of attacking so many Gentlemen, a good many of them of the first Rank, and singular for Probity and Religion, for an alledged Fault, committed upwards of Ten Years ago, and merely because they were hearty Presbyterians, and suspected to be averse from the Courses entering upon; and in a little Time to fine most, if not all of them, in the Act of Fines: Those were Steps peculiar to this Time.

As the Fury of this Period ran much against Gentlemen who had been active in the Work of Reformation, so, in a particular Manner, some of the most eminent Ministers of this Church must be attacked. The reverend Mr. Robert Blair is among the first. And when our new consecrated Bishops came down, anew and more general Storm comes, and Persecution upon Presbyterians

Presbyterians turns very sharp : And the Prelates resolve to be as sovereign in the Church, as the King, their Creator, was over the State and them ; and therefore they must be rid of all Presbyterian Ministers, especially of such as were too hard for them.

Mr. Robert Blair.

Accordingly, I find Mr. Robert Blair before the Council, towards the Beginning of the Year. January 9th, the Lord Bellenden, the Advocate, and Provost of Edinburgh, are appointed to examine all the Witnesses cited in Mr. Robert Blair's Case, and report. I find no more about him till September 4th, when, 'the Macers, or any of them, are ordained to bring ' the Person of Mr. Robert Blair, late Minister at St. Andrews, to Edinburgh, 'twixt and ' Saturday next, and secure his Person in the Tolbooth till further Orders. September 10th, ' Information being given to the Council, and Testificates produced from sure Hands, that ' Mr. Robert Blair is under great Sickness for the present, so that at this Time he cannot travel nor be transported to Edinburgh, without the manifest Hazard of his Life: And it being represented, that he is content to quit the Charge of the Ministry at St. Andrews, and ' for that End he had sent in his Presentation, to be disposed of at the Council's Pleasure ; which ' was produced in Council : For all which Causes, the Lords dispense with his Imprisonment, ' and declare his Place vacant.'

Nothing found against him.

This is all I meet with in the Council-registers about Mr. Blair. From other Papers I find, that after their most diligent Search, nothing could be fixed upon against this great Man. His Life is writ by himself to the Year 1638. and had Mr. Blair gone through with it, I persuade myself it would have been one of the best Accounts of that Time we could have had: But there remain only some short Hints by another Hand, as to the last Part of this great Man's Life. From those and other Accounts come to my Hand, I find, That Mr. Blair, after the Imprisonment of the Ministers, August 1660. and the Appearance of reintroducing Prelacy by the rescinding of our former excellent Laws, had a free and yet cautious Sermon upon 1 Pet. 3. 14. This was most unfairly represented to the Council last Year, and he was cited over to Edinburgh. The Citation came to him on Saturday Night late, and resolving to obey it, and foreseeing he should not return to his People, to Morrow, being the last Sabbath of September 1661. he preached upon these Words, Finally brethren, farewell, &c. when there was an extraordinary Concern among his Hearers. When he came to Town, after some Days, he was examined by a Committee of the Council upon the Matter of his Sermon, of which he gave a most distinct Account. All they did was to confine him to his Chamber at Edinburgh, where falling ill for Want of the free Air, he had his Confinement altered to the Town of Musselburgh. There he continued till September this Year, when Bishop Sharp, having a Mind to have Mr. Andrew Honyman planted in his Room, procured a new Order from the Council, and a Macer was sent to bring him in Prisoner. But the Lord ordered another Messenger to seize him, and he fell very ill of a Fit of the Gravel, and could not come. And the next Council-day he was under a very severe Sickness, which was attested by his Physicians. Mr. Blair, hearing that his Charge had been declared vacant the former Sederunt of Council, and the Order which the Macer brought designing him late Minister at St. Andrews, did, with the Attestation of his Illness, send in his Presentation, which allayed their Fury against him. In some Time thereafter he procured Liberty to reside in Kirkcaldy, where he continued in very much Respect for a considerable Time. Mean while his Back-friend the Primate, vowed he would harry that Nest. And soon after, the Order came out discharging all Presbyterian Ministers to live in Burghs ; and he removed to Couston. In short, the true Ground of all this Trouble this excellent Person met with, was, The Archbishop could not be easie when so good a Man was near him. And the Primate had a particular Quarrel against Mr. Blair, because of a free and faithful Admonition given him by Order of the Presbytery, by Mr. Blair and Mr. David Forret.

Prosecution of Mr. Carstairs, Nasmyth, Moruat, Rowat, Blair, Veitch, Blair, and Fullarton.

But the most remarkable Prosecution of Ministers, in the Period I am now upon, was that before the Parliament, of Mr. John Carstairs Minister at Glasgow, Mr. James Nasmyth Minister at Hamiltoun, Mr. Matthew Moruat, and Mr. James Rowat, Ministers at Kilmarnock, Mr. Alexander Blair Minister at Galsoun, Mr. James Veitch Minister at Mauchlin, Mr. William Adair Minister at Air, and Mr. William Fullarton Minister at St. Quirvox.

Springs of it.

When the Bishops came down from England, it was found necessary to endeavour to bring some of the most eminent Presbyterian Ministers in the West Country, where the greatest Aversion to Prelates was, either to subject to the Government now set up, or to suffer. Besides this general View in this Prosecution, several others concurred. Some say that a Difference 'twixt the Chancellor and the Primate had fallen in, very soon after the latter his coming down from Court ; and the first design'd, by this Act of Zeal for the Bishops, to make up the Breach. It was further pretended, that this Treatment of so many noted Ministers, would be a good Way to keep the West Country in Aw, and prevent what they termed Sedition and Disorder, upon the intended Parliamentary Establishment of Bishops ; and this was their ordinary Colour and Pretext for many of their Severities. In short Mr. Carstairs behov'd to preach no more in so eminent a Place as Glasgow, with that Freedom and Plainness, as well as Caution, he used to do ; and Mr. Nasmyth behov'd to give Way to Mr. James Ramsay, who was design'd to be Dean of Hamiltoun, and Assistant to the Archbishop.

Thus

Thus the Chancellor was impowered by the Council to send Letters to such Ministers in the West Country, as he thought fit; and by the Advice of the Prelates, and particularly the Bishop of the Isles, he pitched on the above named. Mr. Fullarton had been pretty forward for the Publick Resolutions, and had some Friends at Edinburgh, through whose Interest he got Favour, and was dismissed. Mr. Adair took a different Course from his Brethren, as we shall hear, which grieved them and many others.

1662.
Chancellor
writes Letters
to them.

All of them obey the Chancellor's Letters, and came to Edinburgh. When they appeared before him, he threatened them severely for their alledged disloyal Principles, and particularly for some Expressions, he said, they had in their Sermons. They fully vindicated themselves in Point of Loyalty, and desired particular Condescensions might be made, as to any Thing blame-worthy in their Sermons; but no Condescensions could be made. The Interview was concluded with Insinuations, that their only Way of Escape would be by complying with the Bishops the King had set up. And when no Ground could be gained that Way, the Chancellor commanded them to stay at Edinburgh, till the Parliament should meet; which accordingly they did.

They come in to Edinburgh.
What pulled twixt the Chancellor
and them.

When the Parliament sat down, the Ministers were dealt with in private, and all Methods were used to bring them to a Subjection to Prelacy, but in vain. The Managers, finding them fixed in their Principles, resolved to put the Oath of Allegiance to them; and here they imagined they had them under a Dilemma: If they swore, they reckoned they were obliged to submit to the Bishops, now set up by Virtue of the Supremacy contained in the Oath; and if they refused, they lay open to the Penalties appointed by Law, against disloyal and seditious Persons.

The Oath of Allegiance put
to them.

All of them, save Mr. Fullarton, were cited before the Parliament, for a Terror to the rest of Presbyterian Ministers who stood firm to their Principles, and to fright them into a Submission to the Bishops. Nothing of a Libel could be formed from their Carriage, or any Thing in their Sermons; and therefore, to catch them, they are brought before the Lords of the Articles, and, as a Test of their Loyalty, they are required to take and subscribe the Oath of Allegiance, as it stood in the Act of Parliament.

All of them
save Mr. Fullarton, cited before the Parliament, and by the Lords of Articles, are required to swear.

The Ministers desired Time to advise, and with Difficulty obtained a few Days. Now they were upon the Stage, in a Matter which very nearly concerned the Crown and Kingdom of Jesus Christ; and being the first Presbyterian Ministers to whom this Oath was tendered, they conceived their Carriage and Practice was a Matter of no small Consequence. And, after they had set some Time apart, for asking of the Lord Light, Direction, and Conduct in this important Matter, they came to this Issue;

And after Deliberation,

That if they swore the Oath as it stood, without any Explication, especially in this Juncture, they might be reckoned thereby obliged to comply with Episcopacy, seeing the Act of Parliament just now made for the Restitution of Bishops, runs, Forasmuch as the Ordering and Disposal of the external Government and Policy of the Church, doth properly belong to his Majesty, as an inherent Right of the Crown, by Virtue of his Royal Prerogative and Supremacy in Causes Ecclesiastical. Upon the other Hand, if they altogether refused the Oath of Allegiance, they feared they might be reckoned Refusers of lawful Subjection in Civil Things, to him whom they heartily owned their lawful Sovereign.

offer to take the Oath with an Explication.

Upon the Whole, they resolved to offer an Explication of their Sense in this Matter to the Legislature, and if it was received, then to take the Oath in that declared Sense; if not, cheerfully to suffer, which, in that Case, they hoped would not be as evil Doers, or disloyal Persons, but merely for Conscience Sake. Next, it came to be considered, whether it was most proper to give in their Sense in Writ, or verbally, and found it safest to give it in in Writing; and accordingly, Six of them agreed to the underwritten Draught, and signed it. Mr. Adair would not sign it, till once the Chancellor had seen it, as, it seems, he had promised to his Lordship. The rest judged this inconvenient, that any of the Managers should see it, till it was tabled before the Parliament. The Tenor of the Paper follows.

Mr. Adair's different Practice.

WE Underscribers, Ministers of the Gospel, being commanded on Munday last, by the Lord Commissioner his Grace, and the honourable Lords of Articles, to take the Oath of Allegiance, do, from the Sense we have of that Duty which lieth upon all his Majesty's Subjects, and more eminently and exemplarily upon Ministers of the Gospel, in Ingenuity and Plainness, upon every Occasion, to declare their Loyalty to his Majesty our dread Sovereign, and in Obedience to your Lordships Commands, heartily and cheerfully acknowledge, That his Majesty is the only lawful supreme Governor, under God, within this Kingdom; and that his Sovereignty reacheth all Persons, and all Causes, as well Ecclesiastick as Civil, having them both for its Object, albeit it be in its own Nature only Civil and extrinsick as to Causes Ecclesiastical: All which we are most willing, in Testimony of our Loyalty, to declare upon our most solemn Oath. And accordingly, upon that same Oath, in the foresaid Sense, we declare, That, in Testification of our faithful Obedience to our most gracious and undoubted Sovereign, CHARLES King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the

Their Expli-
cation,

‘ the Faith, we do acknowledge his Majesty our said Sovereign, the only Supreme Civil Governor of this Kingdom, over all Persons, and in all Causes; and that no foreign Prince, Power, State or Person, Civil or Ecclesiastick, hath any Jurisdiction, Power or Superiority over the same. And therefore, we do utterly renounce and forsake all foreign Jurisdictions, Powers, and Authorities, and shall, at our utmost Power, defend, assist, and maintain his Majesty’s Jurisdiction foresaid, as we shall answer to GOD. Here the Ministers explain the most dark and dangerous Part of this Oath. Their Explanation was reckoned a Refusal; but their very Enemies must grant it was a respectful and conscientious Refusal, if it must be one; and that they went as far as their Light would allow them, to satisfy the Imposers. But it was resolved by our Prelates, that those Six Ministers shall be either Examples of Obedience, or Suffering.

May 28. presented to the Parliament, and the Ministers imprisoned.

So, May 28th, when they are called upon, and present the above written Paper, it was reckoned an high Crime. When the Ministers appeared before the House, and the Chancellor received the Paper, he observed that Mr. Adair, who was present with the rest, had not signed it; ordered him presently to remove, and I have no more about him. As soon as the Declaration was read, there were many warm Speeches on it. It was arraigned as Presumption, and a putting a Restriction on the Oath framed by the Parliament, with many other hard Names: And the Six Ministers straight committed to close Prison, Three and Three of them to one Chamber, to the great Prejudice of their Health; and no Body was permitted to have Access to them.

Bishop Leighton sent to converse with them.

Thus they continued several Weeks. Great Pains were taken to prevail with them to take up their Paper, and swear the Oath absolutely, and as it stood; but they remained unshaken. Among others, Bishop Leighton was sent in to them: He used all his Eloquence and Art, but was entertained with solid Arguments against the Oath, and very free Checks, and a Charge of Apostacy and Desertion, and laying Stumbling-blocks before his Brethren.

They are banished by Vote of Parliament.

At length their Case came to this Vote, Whether process them criminally, or banish them? and the last carried; and, by Vote of Parliament, they were banished out of the King’s Dominions, to bear Company with their worthy Brethren sent off last Year. And the Time was left to the Commissioner and Council to name, and they continued in close Confinement.

In a little Time softer Courses with them prevail.

In some Time, when the Commissioner’s Rage was a little cooled, and he and the Prelates began to reflect upon the Consequents of this warm Procedure, some more sober Measures came to be entertained. Mr. Robert Douglas, and some others, plainly told the Managers, that the Ministers Paper was sound and orthodox, and what the whole Reformed Churches would heartily approve of as their common Doctrine; and the Ministers Banishment, upon such a Declaration, would expose them every where. Upon this, they began to allow them some more Liberty; their Friends were permitted to see them, and some of them permitted to go out of Town for their Health.

Mr. Carstairs falls ill before Sentence.

Indeed their Confinement was so close, and Treatment so severe, that during their Confinement, and before the Sentence, Mr. John Carstairs fell so dangerously ill, that, upon the Testimony of Physicians, he was allowed to go to Dalkeith for his Health; and accordingly he escaped the Sentence. The rest continued in Prison till the Parliament was up, and then the Commissioner and Council were much solicited by the Prelates, to pronounce the Sentence. It was put off till the 16th of September, when, I find, the Council’s Act runs as follows.

Council’s Act about them, Sept. 16.

FORASMUCH as the King’s Majesty, with Advice and Consent of the Estates of Parliament, have pronounced Sentence against Mr. James Nasmith Minister at Hamilton, Mr. Matthew Mowat and Mr. James Rowat, Ministers at Kilmarnock, Mr. Alexander Blair Minister at Galsoun, and Mr. James Veitch Minister at Mauchlin, for refusing to take the Oath of Allegiance, leaving the Time thereof to his Majesty’s Commissioner, and have remitted to the Lords of his Majesty’s Privy Council, the Course to be taken with them in the interim: And the said Lords having taken the same to their Consideration, have thought fit to discharge, likewise, they hereby do discharge the forenamed Persons, all further Exercise of their Ministry at the former Churches above mentioned respective; and declare the said Churches and Cures at the said Time to be be vacant, and ordain the said Persons to remove their Families, and to leave the Possession of their Manſes and Glebes, at Martinmas next to come; withal, diſcharging them all Reſidence within the Presbyteries where the ſaid Churches ly, or within the City of Glasgow or Edinburgh: As alſo declare, they have no Right to the Stipends of the ſaid Kirks for this inſtant Year 1662. and ordain the Members of the Council, or any of them, to make Intimation hereof to the ſaid Persons, that none of them pretend Ignorance.

Thus the Miniſters got off for a Season: We ſhall afterwards meet with ſeveral of them under new Sufferings; and their Churches were vacated to be filled with the Creatures of the Biſhops, and this Perſecution did but confirm the Diſciples, whom the Prelates would have taught with Briars and Thorns. This Perſecution, I hope, will be owned to have been upon Conſcience and Principle, and ſo much the rather that Sir George Mackenzie durſt not attempt to vindicate it.

During this Session of Parliament, there were Letters writ to ſeveral other Miniſters in the South and Weſt to come in to Edinburgh, as we ſhall hear afterwards in Mr. Thomas Wylie's Caſe, when it comes in before the Council at Glasgow in October. But finding the Conſtancy of theſe juſt now ſpoken of, the Proſecution was put off, and this Matter left to the Council to manage after the Parliament was up.

Letters writ calling ſeveral other Miniſters to wait on the Commiſſioner at Edinburgh.

I find likewiſe the Lord Lorn, eldeſt Son to the late Marquis of Argyle, whom we ſhall afterwards meet with more than once, was ſiſted before this Session of Parliament. The pretended Reaſon of this was ſome Letters he wrote down to his Friends from London, which were intercepted, or ſome way or other came to Middleton's Hands; but the real Deſign was to make Way for Middleton's Acceſs to the Eſtate, Titles and Jurifdictions of that Family, wherein, as in many other of his Projects, he was balked by Lawderdale.

Lord Lorn ſiſted before the Parliament.

In June the Commiſſioner informed the Parliament, that the Lord Lorn, now at London, had both ſpoken and written againſt the Proceedings of this ſupreme Meeting. The moſt, as far as I can learn, that was in his Letter, was ſome free Expreſſions about the Procedure laſt Year againſt his excellent Father, and ſome tacite Inſinuations of private Views in the deſigned Act of Fines. However the Parliament, at the preſſing Inſtances of the Commiſſioner, find his Speech and Actions treaſonable.

In June they find his Letters treaſonable.

Accordingly June 24th, they ſent up an Information upon this Affair to the King, which I have not ſeen, with their Deſire that the ſaid Lord Lorn may be immediately ſecured and ſent down to them, to abide his Trial. The King was pleaſed to grant their Deſire, and cauſed him find my Lord Lawderdale Bail for him, that he ſhould compear before the Parliament in July. Probably the King ſcarce expected they would puſh Matters ſo far as they did, or if they did, he knew how to ſtop the Execution of the Sentence.

The Parliament deſire he may be ſent down from London to abide his Trial.

My Lord came down to Edinburgh July 17th; and ſuch was their Haſte, that he was immediately charged to appear that Afternoon at the Bar; which he did, and after a handſom Speech, he was committed cloſe Priſoner to the Caſtle. I know no more of his Proceſs, but that Auguſt 26th, he received Sentence of Death, for his treaſonable Speeches and Writings againſt the Parliament, to have his Head ſevered from his Body, and his Lands, Goods, and Eſtate to be forfeited. The Time of Execution is remitted to the King; and he was ſent back to the Caſtle cloſe Priſoner. We ſhall afterwards find a Remiſſion granted him.

He comes down July 17th, and Auguſt 26th, receives Sentence of Death.

And the Parliament go on againſt ſome of the Friends of that noble Family, and September 3^d, Campbel of Ardkinglas, and Campbel of Ormsay, Fugitives from the laſt Session of Parliament, are now forfeited in Abſence, and declared Traitors for ſome alledged Crimes againſt Gentlemen of the Name of Lawmont, I know not how long ago. Their Forfeiture was intimated at the Croſs of Edinburgh; and George Campbel Sheriff-depute of Argyle, was about the ſame Time declared Fugitive. I only name theſe, that the Reader may have ſome View of the Temper of this Period I am giving the Hiſtory of.

Ardkinglas and Ormsay forfeited.

I ſhall conclude this Section by obſerving that Mr. James Hamilton, Mr. George Hutcheſon, and Mr. John Smith, Miniſters of Edinburgh, were ſilenced, and depoſed by the Parliament for not giving Obedience to their Biſhop; and it was intimate to the reſt of the Miniſters of Edinburgh, that they were to meet with the ſame Punishment and Censure, if they did not without Delay ſubmit to their Ordinary: But not having ſeen the unprinted Act, I ſhall ſay no more of it till we find them before the Council in the following Section.

Auguſt 1st, Act of Parliament againſt the Miniſters of Edinburgh.

S E C T. V.

Of the Sufferings of Presbyterian Ministers, Gentlemen, and others, after the Parliament rose, to the End of this Year, 1662.

Many Ministers proceeded before the Council.

IN this Period now before me, the Severities against Presbyterian Ministers and others grow very much, and a good many particular Ministers from all the Corners of the Church are sifted before the Council, and hardly enough dealt by, to gratify the new made Prelates. We have already had the more general Proceedings of the Council towards the Close of this Year, and now I come to the Detail of the particular Processes against Ministers and others, much in the Order they lie in the Council-books.

Order of Council that all House-keepers in Edinburgh give up the Names of their Lodgers.

When the Parliament is up, the Council fall about their Work of harassing Presbyterians; and because People, when persecuted in the Country, sometimes came into Edinburgh, where they lurked more easily, to prevent this they make the following Order. September 16th, Information being given, That many disaffected Persons to his Majesty do daily and continually resort and haunt to the Burgh of Edinburgh, The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council do order and command the Magistrates of the said Burgh, to cause all their Burghesses, Vintners, Inn-keepers, and all other Inhabitants thereof, to give Notice to them, or such as they shall appoint, of all such Persons as are lodged or harboured by them every Evening, and that under such Pains and Penalties as the said Magistrates shall think fit to inflict.

Council's Act about the Ministers of Edinburgh.

That same Day they attack the Ministers of Edinburgh, and pass the following Act with relation to them. Consideration being taken, that by an Act of the last Session of Parliament, Mr. James Hamilton, Mr. John Smith, and Mr. George Hutcheson, are discharged from any further Exercise of their Ministry within the Town of Edinburgh, and their Places declared vacant; and that all the other Ministers within the Town, who shall not, betwixt and the First of October next to come, own and acknowledge the present Government of the Church, and concur in the Discipline thereof, are also discharged from any further Exercise of the Ministry within the said Town, after the said Day. And finding it not fit that those, who upon such an Account are removed from the Ministry, shall reside in the Town; Therefore the Lords of Council ordain the Magistrates of Edinburgh to make Intimation to the said Mrs. Hamilton, Smith, and Hutcheson, and to all such others of their Ministers, as shall not betwixt and the First Day of October next, give Satisfaction thereanent, that they remove themselves forth of the said Town, and make their Residence elsewhere at Martinmas next.

Remarks upon it.

This Act of Parliament, with relation to the Ministers of Edinburgh, I have not seen: But 'tis plain from the Fourth printed Act of this Parliament, that Ministers were permitted to continue in their Charges till their Nonattendance on the Bishops diocesan Meeting; yet a singular Method is taken with the Ministers of Edinburgh before the Time of that; and the Council banish them from the City and Place where they had exercised their Ministry, and deprive them not only of their legal Maintenance, but, as far as they can, of the Company, Comfort, and Compassion of their Flocks, when destitute of all other Support. This appears both illegal, and beyond the Act of Parliament, and cruel, and is a Prelude, to the mild Acts a coming. We shall have frequent Occasion to notice, that the Council in this Period assume a Parliamentary Power, and either enlarge or go beyond the Penalties inflicted by the Parliament, or anticipate most of the Acts to be made, and make an Experiment how they will take, before they are enacted by the Parliament.

Not only are the Ministers turned out from their Office and Benefice, but tossed up and down with their innocent Families, at this Season of the Year: And all this upon no other Crime save their Nonsubjection to Prelates, which Office in Conscience they judged unscriptural, and so unlawful. Sure our Prelatical Writers cannot say, those excellent Persons and their good Families were thus treated for Rebellion and Resistance. What Impudence then was it for Sir George Mackenzie to say in his Vindication, 'That the Governors of that Time might truly and really say, That no Man in Scotland ever suffered for his Religion?'

Ministers submit to the Act. Mr. Robert Lawrie only conforms, and dies soon under Remorse.

Accordingly the Ministers of Edinburgh had this Act intimate to them, and submitted. Mr. Robert Trail had withdrawn some little Time before, and we shall meet with him before the Council just now; only Mr. Robert Lawrie, by the common People called The Nest-egg, conformed, and as a Reward got first the Deanry of Edinburgh, and then the small Bishoprick of Brechin, which he possessed but a short Time, and died under that Remorse, so bitter a Morfel was a Bishoprick to many of them, that, a little before his Death at Edinburgh, he discharged the Bell-man to cry him by the Designation of Bishop, but ordered himself to be cried late Minister of Edinburgh.

Before

Before I leave this melancholy Ejection of so many worthy Men, and bright Lights in the City of Edinburgh, let me add the Reverend Mr. Robert Douglas's Reflections upon, and Account of this Step of the Managers. 'Seeing Ministers are in the Prelates Way, they must be laid aside. Some are banished, some sentenced to be banished, but the Act not put in Execution; and some are confined. Because the Ministers of Edinburgh are in the great City, they must be first dealt with to give Obedience to the Acts made for Bishops.'

'The Commissioner sent for me; and he and the Chancellor being alone in a Room, I was told that we must speak with the Bishop. I desired to know their Meaning; for wise Men had an End in all their Actings and Commands. Then it was told me, The End was not merely to speak to the Bishop, but to own and acknowledge him. I answered, I was clear I could not do that, and since they had called me, I took it to be my Duty to use Freedom. I wished they might be more sparing in what they did; they were setting up Men who would tread upon them, as they had done in former Times. After a little Silence the Chancellor said, We will take Care to keep them from that. I answered, It is impossible to keep those Men down, they will domineer over Noblemen as well as Ministers; and they both found it so. The Chancellor, before he fell sick, desired a worthy Gentleman to tell me that I was a true Prophet, and Middleton said the like. I might tell that without Prophecy, for the Nature of the Preferment leads to it.'

1662.

Mr. Robert Douglas's Remains on the Ejection of the Ministers of Edinburgh.

Conference with Mr. Douglas with Commissioner and Chancellor.

Both of them relate their Death, and the continuing of what they were now told of as to Bishops.

'In a little Time Three of the Ministers of Edinburgh, Mrs. James Hamilton, John Smith, and George Hutcheson, are required to acknowledge the Bishop, or remove from their Charges; and they choosed rather to suffer than sin. After their Removal, Mr. Thomas Garvan, Mr. John Stirling, and my self, sat still for a short Time: Their Removal was in August, we preached not long after; but are charged to acknowledge the Bishop, and confer with him, before the First of October, or else to remove out of Edinburgh with our Families. What was acted in Parliament is followed out by the secret Council, for they charge us beforehand to remove upon that Day; and upon the very First of October, a Mace came to every one of us, and charged us and our Families out of the Town.'

Mr. Douglas subjoins a short Vindication of the Ministers, as to their doing so little in Opposition to Episcopacy, and observes, 'They dealt with the King, supplicated the Parliament; that to shew their Detestation of it they preached against it, and, when called, suffered for not submitting to it; and that is all that is in the Examples of the Prophets. James 5. 10. Take, my Brethren, the Prophets who have spoken in the Name of the Lord, for an Example of Suffering and of Patience. We have spoken and suffered; and if any say we should have stayed, notwithstanding of the Parliament's Inhibition, and preached, I understand it not. The Apostles were persecuted from City to City; and in the primitive Times godly Men, when obliged to it, removed from one Place to another. I look upon the Commands of the Parliament as a physical Impediment and Restraint, and such who speak otherways reflect upon the Banished.'

Presbyterian Ministers vindicated as to their doing so little against the Ejection of Prelacy.

To return to the Subject of this Chapter, I find no particular Persons before the Council till their Meeting at Glasgow, October 1st, where they grant a Commission to some Persons to be nominate by the Commissioner to take James Campbell, sometime of Ardringlas, and James Campbell, sometime of Ormsay, declared Traitors, to pursue them and their Complices, take in Forts, raze Houses, &c. in the common Form of Commissions of Fire and Sword, as they are ordinarily called. And further, they order Letters of Intercommuning against them.

Commission against Ardringlas and Ormsay, Glasgow, October 1.

After they have passed the forementioned Act, they come to make two Acts, one against Mr. Donald Cargill, and the other against Mr. Thomas Wylie, and they did not more at Glasgow. I transcribe them as they stand in the Registers.

INFORMATION being given, That Mr. Donald Cargill, Minister of the Barony Church at Glasgow, has not only disobeyed the Acts of Parliament for keeping an Anniversary Day of Thanksgiving for his Majesty's happy Restoration, and for obtaining a lawful Presentation and Collation from the Archbishop of Glasgow, before the 25th of September last, but that also his Carriage hath been seditious, and that he hath deserted the Flock, to their great Prejudice by want of the Ordinances: Therefore the Lords of the Council declare the foresaid Church to be vacant, and at the Disposal of the lawful Patron. And, for avoiding the Inconveniencies that may follow by his residing at Glasgow, or Places near adjacent, they command and charge the said Mr. Donald Cargill not to reside in any Place on the South Side of the River of Tay, and to cause transport his Family and what belongs to him out of the Town of Glasgow, before the First of November next to come: With Certification, that if he be found to contravene, and be seen on this Side of Tay, he shall be apprehended, imprisoned, and proceeded against as a seditious Person. And ordain these Presents to be intimate to him personally, or at his Dwelling-place, or at the Market-cross of Glasgow, and Parish-kirk where he lives, that he pretend not Ignorance.

We shall afterward meet with this pious and zealous Minister, in the Progress of this History, a Martyr for the Truth. And shortly a good many of his Fellow-servants are sent to North-side of Tay, as well as he, where they did Service by their Preaching and Conversation. The Deserting of his Flock, here spoken of, is his Withdrawing from a Party of Soldiers who were about to take him into Edinburgh, and his Sedition is to be understood of his faithful Preaching against the Sins of this Time.

Mr. Thomas Wylie follows next; and I shall first give his Case as it stands in the Registers, and then his Sufferings this Year, from an Account before me under his own Hand. In the Council Books follows, 'The like Act made against Mr. Thomas Wylie Minister at Kirkcudbright, who hath deserted his Flock, and contravened the forefaid Acts of Parliament, which is to be intimated to him personally, or at his Dwelling-house, or at the Market-cross of Kirkcudbright, or Parish-church where he lives.'

I come now to give some Account of this excellent Person's Hardships since the End of May this Year, from his own Papers, wherein he records some very remarkable Providences, and Answers of Prayer he met with when under his Hiding and Wandrings, too long to be here insert. Mr. Wylie and the whole Brethren of that Presbytery continued preaching, and to keep their Presbyteries, notwithstanding of the Acts made against their Meeting, and Mr. Wylie was the Person the Managers had their Eye chiefly upon in that Country.

He laid his Account with Troubles a coming, and was earnestly desirous to have the Sacrament of the Supper dispensed to his People before the Cloud came on. The Lord granted his and the People's earnest Prayer: And June 8th, he had his first Day of Distribution of the Sacrament; for he had so many Communicants, and such Numbers joyned with him, that they could not all communicate in one Day. After Sermon on Munday he had a Letter, signifying that the whole Presbytery of Kirkcudbright was to be cited in to Edinburgh, for keeping Presbyterial Meetings, which much troubled him: Yet he went on in his Design to give next Lord's Day the Supper to his People who had not participate. On the Friday he received certain Accounts, that only himself, Mr. Robert Fergusson, Mr. Adam Kae, Mr. John M'Michan, and Mr. John Wilkie, were to be sent for by a Party, and they were very soon to be at them. However, with an Eye to Providence, he resolved to go on in the designed Solemnity, and they had Saturday, Sunday and Munday quiet and free of Distraction. But on Munday, when at Dinner, they were alarmed with Accounts that the Party were to be in Town that Night: The Ministers, Mr. Wylie's Helpers, advised him to remove; which he did, after the Gentleman who brought the Account told him, The Party had Letters to the other Four, but Orders to apprehend him, and bring him in. Tuesday at Twelve of the Clock the Party came straight to his House, and searched it with the utmost Exactness for him.

Mr. Wylie thought it convenient to move the most secret Way he could into Edinburgh, and met with many remarkable Providences and Answers of Prayer by the Way; and when he came there, he found that ill Impressions had been given of him to the Managers; and there was no getting out of their Hands without taking the Oath, and therefore was resolved to retire from the Storm, till he should see if their Rage against him calmed. He left Edinburgh on Saturday undiscovered; and, after some Stay in a Friend's House, he drew up a Vindication and Supplication to be presented, if need were, to the Commissioner. He wandred up and down drawing toward Home, near to which he came, Saturday June 28th, and heard that Orders were left by the Party to the Magistrates of Kirkcudbright to seize him as soon as he was returned.

He continued under his Hiding the whole Month of July, when he had new and wonderful Experiences of God's special Interposition, in his Providence, in his Behalf, and that even as to his outward worldly Affairs. He heard from the rest of the Brethren, who went into Edinburgh upon the Letters received, and waited upon the Commissioner at Holy-rood-house, which was the Purport of their Letters; that the Commissioner was civil to them, and wondered Mr. Wylie came not in, and promised him free Access to him when he came. Whereupon, towards the End of July, his Wife Mrs. Wylie went into Edinburgh with Letters from her Husband, a new Supplication, and Instructions how to present it, with a Vindication of his Procedure, for the former had not been made Use of.

In some Weeks his Wife returned from Edinburgh, and acquainted him that she had been three Times with the Commissioner; that his Grace assured her, his Life should not be in Hazard, and offered this under his Hand if she pleased; that he had given Liberty to the other Four Ministers to return Home, and visit their Families, and continue a Month, with an express Charge not to preach, and after that required them to return to Edinburgh; that he allowed Mr. Wylie the same Liberty, with express Condition that he should not come near the Town of Kirkcudbright; but my Lord Kenmare prevailed to get that taken off: And so he returned Home till the 20th of September.

When he with the other four Ministers went into Edinburgh, the Commissioner being on his Progress to the West, they had not Access to him, and returned to Galloway. We have heard of the Act of Council at Glasgow; and it was hard enough to send him and his Family to the North-side of Tay, by the first of November, without ever hearing him, and when he

he had come in to Edinburgh to be heard according to Concert. However his Wife, being in the West Country, through the Interposition of my Lady Cochran, obtained a Mitigation of the Sentence from the Commissioner, the Account of which came to him before the Act at Glasgow was intimate to him, which was not till October 20th. October 21st, the Commissioner came to Kircudbright, and Mr. Wylie waited on him, and found his Anger much abated. The Commissioner discoursed him upon the Covenant, Church-government, and several Matters of Fact, and professed his Regard to him, but as a Friend advised him to remove with his Family as soon as possible; told him that he was loaded with Reports, and would be so as long as he stayed at Kircudbright, or was in the West Country. He promised to do his best to get him Allowance to stay on this Side of Forth; and desired him to wait on the Council Tuesday come a Fortnight; which Mr. Wylie did, but got nothing done. At that Time the Commissioner told him, that the Council were yet averse; but desired him to bring his Family to Lothian, and he would see what might be done for him.

He waits on the Commissioner at Kircudbright, Oct. 21.

In the End of November, Mr. Wylie brought his Family to Leith in a great Storm of Frost. When he came to Edinburgh, he found that his Name was in a List with Mrs. Livingstone, Trail, Carstairs, Dunlop, and a good many others, who were to have the Oath tendred to them; and upon their Refusal to be banished. Upon the 1st of December, he waited on the Commissioner, who stopp'd his Citation at that Time, and in some Days thereafter had a long Conversation with Mr. Wylie, and pressed him to declare himself against defensive Arms; but especially insisted upon his taking the Oath, which Mr. Wylie offered to take with an Explication. This the Commissioner peremptorily refused, and yet expressed his great Kindness for him, and dismissed him by saying, Well, Mr. Wylie, I shall give you Time enough to think upon it. Thus far I have given this excellent Man's Case this Year from his own Papers, and from it we may understand the Case of many Ministers at this Time.

In November, he brings his Family to Lothian.

I find subjoyned to this Account some Grievances under Mr. Wylie's Hand, written at this Time; and they contain several Matters of Fact, which tend to set the present State of Things in this Church in their due Light: And I apprehend they were design'd to be put in some Paper he was to have presented to the King, or some who were most favourable about him; and therefore, tho' they are but the first Draught, and would no doubt have been put in better Form if presented, I have added them here.

Grievances of Presbyterian Ministers at this Time.

GRIEVANCES, 1662.

- I. THAT free Access should be debarred to present our Grievances to his Majesty, except in a Way that is unfeasible, and scars Men from expressing them.
- II. That the Government of the Church should be changed from that Form which the Generality, both of Ministers and People within the Kingdom, judge to be of Divine Institution, which has been established by many wholsom Laws, which the Land has been in an universal Enjoyment and Exercise of, and under which Error, Heresy, Superstition, and Profanity has been discountenanced, timeously discovered, censured, and suppressed, unto a new Form, which the Generality look upon as merely of human Institution, imposed upon Political Considerations, under which Error, Superstition and Profanity in former Times abounded, and with which, at this present Time, Profanity is springing up to so great a Height already; so that the Generality in the Land are as barbarous in Inhumanity, and brutish in Impiety, as were once our Forefathers in their Heathenish Paganism and Darkness.
- III. That this Change should be carried on, and closed in an arbitrary Way, and imposed upon the Church, without any previous Consultation, not to speak of a Conclusion, had by her in Church-judicatories, and especially in her General Assemblies; whereby the Affection or Disaffection to the Change, would have been more clearly evidenced.
- IV. That General Acts relating to Ministers should be emitted by Parliament, not clear and full, but ambiguous and dark, and that without any penal Statute or Certification; and that the Council, without any known Warrant, should, by their After-acts, enlarge the Meaning of Parliamentary Acts, statute the Penalty, and instantly apply it to Hundreds of Ministers through the Kingdom, ere ever they have known whether they have been in culpable, or Transgressors of any Law or not: Whereby it comes to pass, that with one unexpected Blow, Hundreds of Congregations are laid waste, to the great Grief and Prejudice of Thousands of Souls.
- V. That Letters should be sent by Persons in highest Trust under his Majesty, requiring worthy Ministers of the Gospel to repair to the said Persons at Edinburgh, or where they are at the Time, and to speak with them of Business of Importance, to be communicated at Meeting: Which Letters seem to import, to candid and well-meaning Men, that nothing is intended but a friendly Craving of Counsel and Advice in those Businesses of Importance; whereupon the Ministers, in dutiful Obedience to the Magistrate, have, without regard to Pains or Expence, repaired to the said honourable Persons; and yet, upon their Appearance,

No Access to present their Case to the King.

Overturning of the Church-government.

The Change made without consulting the Church.

The Parliament make general Acts, and the Council enlarge them, and add Penalties.

Fraudulent Letters sent to Ministers by the Managers.

Appearance, have found nothing of what the Letters, sent to them, seemed to import; but are posed with ensnaring and entangling Questions, and put under Restraint not to pass off the Town, and delayed from Time to Time, until they have been wearied and outspent in Attendance; yea, though offering just Satisfaction, imprisoned, or otherwise sentenced. And some so called upon, tho' liberate to return to their Families, yet discharged, by particular Persons in Civil Trust, to preach, without any Sentence of a Judicatory: So that by this Practique, several Ministers with their Families have been put to hard Suffering, and their Congregations robbed of Ordinances.'

Ministers cited ad iudicia causa, and Oaths put to them.

'VI. That there should be a Citation of several most faithful and loyal Ministers, indicta causa particulari, to appear before the Council, charged as Persons suspected of Disloyalty, without giving the least Presumption as a Ground of Suspicion, and then the Oath presented, as a Test and Touchstone; upon the Refusal of which, in the general comprehensive Terms, (tho' Subscriptions be heartily offered, with an Explication of the Meaning, according to what the Council themselves profess to be the only Sense of the Oath) yet is all such Explanation refused, and honest Men, most loyal to their Prince, banished.'

Subscriptions to Sentences of Banishment pressed.

'VII. That when Sentences are thus passed against honest Men, they should press them, under Pain of Imprisonment, to subscribe, that betwixt and such a Day, they shall pass off the Country, and never return on Pain of Death: A Practice, as it is unusual, so it may be involving to honest Men in inextricable Difficulties.'

Ministers charged to leave their Parishes, without a Sentence.

'VIII. That some should be discharged Preaching, and charged to leave their Congregations, at the Commissioner his Pleasure, and without the Sentence of any Judicatory, and, for any Thing known to the Party or others, without any alledged, let be just Cause.'

Harsh Sentences passed without Citation or Proof.

'IX. That some are sentenced by the Council upon mere Information, without Citation, without Process, for Trial of the Verity and Truth of the Information, to remove with their whole Family, in the Winter-season, above 100 Miles from their Congregation and Place of Residence, with peremptory Certification of Imprisonment, and Indictment upon Sedition, in case of contravening; which necessitates the Party, to his great Loss, and Hazard of his young Children, to take upon him a long Journey in the stormy Winter.'

Letters sent to some Ministers by Parties of Soldiers, who have Commission to apprehend others.

'X. That Letters should be sent to Ministers, with a Party of Soldiers under Command, requiring the Ministers to repair unto Edinburgh, and immediately after to Holy-rood-house, to speak with the Commissioner of Business of Importance; and yet the Leader of the Party to be expressly instructed, personally to apprehend one of them to whom the Letters were directed, and instantly to carry him as Prisoner to Edinburgh. The Verity of which, tho' there were no more to make it out, appears from the Practice of the Party, who diligently searched all the Corners of Beds, Chests, &c. in the Minister's House, for his Person, as if he had been a most notorious Malefactor, and commanded one of the Bailies of the Town to be assisting to them herein.'

Letters of Horning against Ministers, for preaching after Permission

'XI. That after passing of Acts, discharging Ministers to preach, Acts of Indulgence should be emitted, permitting Ministers, at least consequentially, to preach again for some Time; and yet when they, out of Zeal to benefit the People of their Charges, have preached, Letters of Horning, and Citation before the Council, are used against them, to their great Molestation and Trouble.'

Deprivation of Ministers, as to their Office, for Want of Collation, which is pretended to be a mere Civil Right.

'XII. That the Council should punish Ministers, tho' fully called and ordained, with Deprivation, not only of the Benefice, but of their Ministerial Office amongst the Lord's People, to whom they were lawfully sent, and amongst whom they have laboured to the great Benefit of their Souls, and that only for the Want of the Bishop's Collation. If the Collation be merely a Civil Thing, giving the Incumbent Right to plead in Law (in Case of Necessity) the Payment of his Stipend, as is pretended, it is the Minister's own Loss and Disadvantage that he wants it: But what Reason is there that both he and the People of his Charge, should be so severely punished by the Secular Power, with an Ecclesiastical Stroke, which robs them both of that which is dearer to them than all their Civil Liberties, and that only for the Minister's voluntary Want of an alledged Civil Benefit?'

From those Matters of Fact, which in the former Part of this Chapter are all plain, the Severity and Unreasonableness of the Procedure of the Managers appears in its due Light: But 'tis Time to return to the further particular Attacks on Gentlemen and Ministers, which turn throng when the Council meet at Edinburgh in November.

Procedure of the Council at Edinburgh in November.

Tho' the Act at Glasgow by that Time was perceived to have been rash and impolitick, yet the Prelates and their Supporters were fretted with the noble Stand made by so many Ministers, and the general Dissatisfaction of the Country at the Loss of their Ministers; and 'tis resolved to go further, and destroy those they cannot terrify. I give the Procedure just as it lies in Order of Time, and each Person's Sufferings together, as much as may be.

November

November 6th, the Council begin a Process against Sir James Stuart, late Provost of Edinburgh, and his Son, upon a most groundless and malicious Information, which, when depicted into, came to nothing: However, I shall insert what I find of it in the Registers, as a Specimen of the Trouble Gentlemen were now brought to, who were Presbyterians, and Favourers of them. 'Information being given, That Mr. Hugh McKail, Chaplain to Sir James Stuart of Kirkfield, did of late, in a Sermon preached in one of the Kirks of Edinburgh, most maliciously inveigh against, and abuse his sacred Majesty, and the present Government in Church and State, to the great Offence of God, and stumbling of the People; and that the said Sir James Stuart, and Walter Stuart his second Son, were present when the said Sermon was preached, at least were certainly informed thereof; yet, notwithstanding thereof, did entertain him in their Family. As also, that the said Walter Stuart has emitted some Speeches tending towards Sedition, especially, that within these few Weeks, he, at the Smithy of -----, upon the Occasion of a Discourse anent publick Differences, said, That before Businesses went as they are going, a Hundred thousand in the three Kingdoms would lose their Lives; Therefore Macers are ordered to cite them both before the Council against the 11th Instant.

Information against Sir James Stuart and his Son, for a Sermon of Mr. Hugh McKail, in Edinburgh.

'November 11th, reported, That Sir James Stuart and his Son had been cited to answer this Day; and it being informed by some of the Members, That Sir James can clear himself, The Lords appoint the Earl of Morton and Lord Tarbet, to examine Sir James, and report. Walter Stuart his Son appeared, and denied the foresaid Speeches charged against him. Witnesses being called and examined, the Council find he uttered some Things tending to Sedition, and imprison him in the Tolbooth till further Order.'

Every Thing which favoured of a Sense of Liberty, or expressed any Dislike at Bishops, was now reckoned seditious Speaking. This excellent and religious young Gentleman was soon dismissed, and died not very long after this, not without some very remarkable Fore-notice of his Dissolution, to himself and excellent Father; and having run fast, came soon to his eternal Prize. We shall afterward hear of worthy Mr. Hugh McKail, and find him sealing the Truth with his Blood after Pentland. It was, as I take it, after this faithful and free Sermon, wherein it was pretended he reflected on the King, because he preached the Scriptural Doctrine upon Church-government, that he went abroad, and accomplished himself in travelling for some Years. When he came Home, he was the more qualified to be the Object of the Prelates Spite.

A Committee to examine Sir James.

His Son imprisoned.

Remarks on this.

Mr. McKail goes abroad.

Upon the same Day, November 6th, the Reverend Mr. John Brown, Minister at Wamfray in the South, was before the Council. Whether he had been brought in by Letters desiring him to converse with the Managers, or by a formal Citation, I cannot say; but this Day's Act about him runs, 'Mr. John Brown of Wamfray being convened before the Council, for abusing and reproaching some Ministers for keeping the diocesan Synod with the Archbishop of Glasgow, by calling them perjur'd Knaves and Villains, did acknowledge that he called them false Knaves for so doing, because they had promised the contrary to him. The Council ordains him to be secured close Prisoner in the Tolbooth till further Order.'

Mr. John Brown Minister at Wamfray, listed before the Council, and imprisoned, November 6.

His Character.

I need not enter upon the Character of this great Man; his Abilities were so well known to the Prelates, that he must not be suffered any longer, and so his Freedom that he used with some of his neighbouring Ministers, for complying with the Prelates contrary to the Assurances they had given him, was made a Handle of for this End. He was a Man of very great Learning, warm Zeal, and remarkable Piety. The First he discovers in his Works printed in Latin, against both Socinians and Cocceians, which the learned World know better than to need any Account of them from me. I have seen likewise a large Latin MS. History of his of the Church of Scotland, wherein he gives an Account of the Acts of our Assembly, and the State of Matters from the Reformation to the Restoration; to which is subjoyned a very large Vindication of the Grounds whereupon Presbyterians suffered. The Apologetical Relation appears to be an Abbreviate of this in English. His Letters he wrote home to Scotland, and the Pamphlets and Books he wrote, especially upon the Indulgence, manifest his Fervency and Zeal; and the practical Pieces he wrote and printed, discover his solid Piety, and Acquaintance with the Power of Godliness: Such a Man could not easily now escape.

December 11. liberate upon his obliging himself to depart the King's Dominion.

I meet not with him again till December 11th, when, after Mr. Livingstone and others received their Sentence, the Council come to this Conclusion about him. 'Anent a Petition presented by Mr. John Brown Minister at Wamfray, now Prisoner in Edinburgh, shewing, That, for some Speeches rashly and inconsiderately uttered against some Neighbour Ministers, he has been kept close Prisoner these Five Weeks bypast; and that seeing, that by Want of free Air, and ordinary Necessaries for maintaining his crazy Body, he is in Hazard to lose his Life, humbly therefore desiring Warrant to be put to Liberty, upon Caution to enter his Prison in Person when he shall be commanded; as the Petition bears. Which being at length heard and considered, the Lords of Council ordain the Supplicant to be put at Liberty forth of the Tolbooth, he first obliging himself to remove and depart off the this Sentence.

King's Dominions, and not to return without Licence from his Majesty and Council, under Pain of Death.'

I need not observe this unusual Severity against this good Man: The utmost he could be charged with, was a Reproof given to his (once) Brethren, for their Apostacy; and for this he is cast in Prison, and, when there, deprived of the very Necessaries of Life; and when, through ill Treatment, he is brought near Death, and offers Bail to re-enter when commanded, cannot be permitted to have the Benefit of the free Air, till he sign a voluntary Banishment for no Cause.

He is allowed
Two Months longer Stay.

However, it seems his present Danger brought this good Man to these hard Conditions: And, December 23^d, I find him petitioning for some more Time to stay in the Country; which is granted. 'Ancient a Petition by Mr. John Brown late Minister at Wamfray, desiring that the Time of his Removal off the Kingdom may be prorogate, in regard that he is neither as yet able to provide himself of Necessaries, and the Weather so unseasonable that he cannot have the Opportunity of a Ship, as the Petition at length bears: Which being heard, read, and considered, The Lords of Council do grant Liberty to the Petitioner to remain within this Kingdom for the Space of Two Months after the 11th of December last, he carrying himself in the mean time peaceably, and acting nothing in Prejudice of the present Government.' Next Year this good Man went to Holland, and lived there many Years, but never, that I hear of, saw his native Land after this.

The Case of William Dobbie.

At this Time the Council have before them the Case of William Dobbie Weaver in Glasgow, who might have been overlooked, being really crazed, had it not been the Severity of the Time. He is accused for slanderous Speeches against the Commissioner, and remitted to the Criminal Court; and his is the only Process, for alledged Disaffection, I find in the Justiciary Books before Pentland. December 14th, Witnesses prove some Expressions against the King and Commissioner, and present Church-settlement, and declare he had been diltamped once. There is no Sentence, and he continues in Prison a long Time.

Ministers called in to Edinburgh, where they are kept waiting long, and without any Process discharged to preach.

But to return to Ministers: It had been customary for the Managers for some Months, by private fair Letters, to call before them a good many of the old Presbyterian Ministers, ordained before the 1649. and keep them hanging on at Edinburgh for some Months; and if they got Liberty to return to their Families, it was with an express Charge not to preach. We have had many Instances already, and this Method was taken also with Mr. Alexander Dunlop, and others. Now they came to a shorter Way with a considerable Number of them, and November 18th, after they write for all absent Members, the Council give the following Orders.

Information in Council, November 18. against many Presbyterian
Ministers.

INFORMATION being given of the seditious Carriage of Mr. John Livingstone at Ancrum, Mr. Samuel Austin, Mr. John Nave Minister at Newmills, Mr. John Cairns, Mr. Matthew Morat, Mr. Robert Trail, Mr. James Nasmith, Mr. Andrew Cant elder, Alexander Cant his Son, Mr. John Menzies, Mr. George Meldrum at Aberdeen, Mr. Alexander Gordon Minister at Inveraray, Mr. J. Cameron Minister at Kilsinnan, Mr. James Gardiner Minister at Saddle: Order the said Persons, and every one of them, immediately, upon Intimation made unto them, to repair to Edinburgh against the 9th of December next, and make their Compearance before the Council the said Day, as they will be answerable at their utmost Peril; and for that Effect ordain Letters to be direct to the Noblemen and others underwritten, and that a Double of this Act be inclosed in these several Letters.'

Mr. Gilbert
Rule, and Mr.
John Drysdale ordered to be secured.

Likewise Information being given of the turbulent and seditious Practices of Mr. Gilbert Rule and Mr. John Drysdale, Ordered that their Persons be secured, and presented to the Council, as follows, viz. That the Magistrates of Kirkaldie shall secure the said Mr. Gilbert Rule, and bring him along with themselves, and present him to the Council on Friday next; and the following Letter be writ to them for that Effect.'

Loving Friends,

YOU will perceive by the inclosed Order, what Commands the Council have laid upon you, which you are immediately to execute, and come your selves to attend the Council on Friday next, as you will be answerable.'

Glencairn Chancellor.

Follows the Order, that the Magistrates of Kirkaldie secure the Person of Mr. Gilbert Rule, and present him to the Council.

Magistrates of Kirkaldie their Report about
Mr. Rule to the Council, with their Orders to them about signing
the Declaration.

And that I may give all which relates to this in this Place: November 21st, the Magistrates of Kirkaldie appear, and report that Mr. Rule was gone out of their Bounds before the Council's Orders came, and could not be found, and that they had no Hand in his being employed to preach; which Excuse was sustained. 'And the said Magistrates having also reported that there were some in their Council who refused to subscribe the Declaration, appointed by the Parliament to be taken by all such Persons as bear publick Office or Charge:

Ordered,

Ordered, that the Magistrates cause all their Members to subscribe the same, or declare them incapable of all publick Trust within their Burgh. And because 'tis informed that several disaffected Ministers reside there, who study to alienate the Hearts of the People from the present Government of Church and State; therefore ordain the said Magistrates to warn them to remove forth of their Bounds within Fourteen Days, and report against the next Council-day.' A Report is accordingly made, that the Orders were obeyed. We shall afterward meet with the Reverend Mr. Rule, and there I shall give a larger Account of his Sufferings during this Period.

To return to the Procedure against the rest of the Ministers; November 18th, the Council orders the Earl of Eglington by himself or his Deputes, Sheriffs of Renfrew, to cause seize the Person of Mr. John Drysdale Minister at Paisly, and send him in to the Council against the 9th of December; and that he cause intimate the above mentioned Act to Mr. Alexander Dunlop Minister at Paisly. A Letter is likewise sent to the Magistrates of Aberdeen, to intimate the Act to Mrs. Menzies and Meldrum, and command them to appear the said Day: Another to the Magistrates of Edinburgh, as to Mr. Trail: Another to Duke Hamilton, as to Mrs. Nasmyth and Carstairs: One to the Sheriff of Teviotdale, as to Mr. Livingstone: One to the Sheriff of Niddale, as to Mr. Austin; and one to the Marquis of Montrose, in regard there is not a Sheriff or Deputes in Argyle, as to Mr. Alexander Gordon and Mr. John Cameron, Ministers in Argyle, and Mr. James Gardiner. November 27th, 'tis reported that Mr. Robert Trail cannot be personally apprehended; and the Council order their Macers to cite him at his Dwelling-house, and by open Proclamation at the Cross of Edinburgh, to compare before the Council, December 9th, to answer to such Things as shall be laid to his Charge, under the Pain of Rebellion.

I find no Letters writ about Mr. Nave, Mr. Cant, and his Son; yet we shall find them present afterwards; nor for Mr. Matthew Mowat, who was not before the Council, as far as I have observed in the Registers, and probably was overlooked, as we saw Mr. Wylie, and it may be some others, who were at first in the List. Mr. Drysdale is not before the Council either, having absconded, and perhaps gone to Ireland. The rest we shall just now meet with before the Council, December 11th, and the After-diets. In the Registers I find no Sederunt, December 9th, to which the Ministers were cited. It would seem that Day either a Committee of Council met, before whom Mr. Livingstone and others were, or the Council themselves; but coming to no Issue till December 11th, there is nothing in the Council-books.

Those worthy and excellent Persons were pitched upon from all Corners of the Country, the South, West and North, as those that must either comply with the Bishops, or be sent off the Nation. And indeed they were all of them bright and shining Lights in this Church, and the Attack made upon them was designed to fright Presbyterian Ministers to a Compliance in all Corners. I come now to give as distinct an Account as I can of their several Cases and Processes.

I begin with the Reverend and Learned Mr. John Livingstone, who, among these Worthies now under Process, was first before the Council; and because I have the fullest Accounts of him from his Life writ by himself, out of this I shall give a pretty large Detail of the Council's Method with him; and probably many of the same Things were proposed to the rest. A large Abstract of this excellent Person's Life, I know, would be useful and entertaining to the Reader; and 'tis certainly a great Loss to this Church that we want a Biography of our eminent Ministers and Christians, done by some good Hand, when there yet remain a good many Materials for such a Work, which may in some Time be lost: But I shall only make a Remark or Two as to this singular Person, and then come to his Sufferings, which is my Province.

Mr. John Livingstone was one remarkably honoured of the Lord, to be an Instrument of the Conversion of Thousands. While yet only a Probationer he was the honoured and happy Mean of that remarkable Conversion, upon Munday after the Communion, at the Kirk of Shotts, 1630. From Mr. Livingstone's Sermon in the West-side of the Church-yard there, upon Ezek. 36. 26. A new Heart also will I give you, and a new Spirit will I put within you, and I will take away the stony Heart out of your Flesh, and give you a Heart of Flesh; about Five hundred Persons dated their saving Change. Such another, and yet a more plentiful Effusion of the Spirit, attended a Sermon of his at a Communion at Hollywood in Ireland, if I mistake not, in the Year 1641. where about a Thousand were begotten unto Christ. Besides, he was blessed with very much Success through the ordinary Tract of his Ministry. Perhaps few Ministers since the Apostles Days were more remarkably countenanced from Heaven in their Work than Mr. Livingstone. The Prelates violent Pushing to be rid of such a Man as he, gives Occasion to make severer Reflections than I am willing to insert here.

He was one of the Three Ministers, who, with some from the State, were sent over to the King at Breda: And after the Treaty was finished, before his Majesty landed in Scotland, Mr. Livingstone was pitched upon; and accordingly in the Ship tendred the Covenant to the King. His faithful Freedom with his Majesty at that Time, with his declared Dissatisfaction with the Manner of carrying on and concluding of that Treaty, probably were not altogether forgot now.

When at London, in the Year 1656. in a very publick Auditory, before Oliver Cromwel, and even to his Face, Mr. Livingstone asserted the King's Right and Title to those Three Kingdoms. He was in his Opinion a Protester, but very moderate; and I find him in his Life heavily lamenting and regretting the sad Breaches and Extremities in that divided Time. Every Body owned his Modesty and Sweetness of Temper.

Upon the King's Return, and through the Summer 1660. he with many others had very melancholy Impressions of the approaching Ruin coming upon the Work of Reformation in this Church. The last Communion he had at Ancrum, was upon the 12th of October this Year 1662. at which great Multitudes of serious and godly Persons were gathered from all Corners of the Country. Upon the Munday, at the Close of the Work, Mr. Livingstone had more than ordinary Liberty in discoursing to the People about the Grounds and Encouragements to suffer for the Truths at present controverted in Scotland; and in a Manner took his Farewel of his People, reckoning that would be the last Communion he would have in that Place. In his Life he remarks, That at this Time he knew nothing of what was hatching against him, nor of his designed Persecution, which followed so soon. His extemporary Discourse, October 13th this Year, was taken from his Mouth in Characters, and is what would be acceptable to a good many of my Readers, in its popular and homely Dress, just as it was delivered, to be sure without the least Thoughts of its appearing in Print; but it is so large that I must not insert it.

After he had, with Elijah, eaten before a great Journey, and as the Disciples did, had communicate before he entred upon suffering, he had Notice in a little Time of the Council's Procedure against him and others: And before the Summons could reach him, Mr. Livingstone went in to Edinburgh, and lurked a while there, till he got certain Information of the Council's Designs. Had he found them about to have proceeded against their Lives, and treat them as Mr. Guthrie was dealt with last Year, he was resolved to retire and hide himself the best way he might, and the rather that he was not cited nor apprehended personally: But finding their Design only to be Banishment, he resolved to appear with his Brethren. Accordingly, December 11th, he was before the Council. I cannot give an Account of the Procedure there, and his Carriage, so well as in his own Words, and therefore I here insert his own Account from his Life.

An Account of what passed when Mr. John Livingstone appeared before the Council, in the lower Council-house, Edinburgh, December 11th, 1662.

Conference with the Managers, and his Examination December 11.

‘AS soon as he appeared, the Chancellor (whom for Shortness I design by Ch.) said,
‘You are called here before his Majesty's secret Council, for Turbulency and Sedition.
‘You, Sir, have been in all the Rebellions and Disobedience to Authority that have been ‘those many Years; and though his Majesty and the Parliament have granted an Indemnity ‘for what is past, you continue in the same Courses. Mr. Livingstone (whom I express by ‘Mr. L.) answered, My Lords, if I shall not be so ready in my Answers as were requisite, ‘or if in any Thing through Inadvertency I shall offend, I crave to be excused, in regard of ‘my Unacquaintedness with such Ways. I am now towards Sixty Years, and was never till ‘now called in such Sort before such a Judicatory. I am a poor Servant of Jesus Christ, and ‘have been labouring to serve him and his People in the Ministry of the Word, and 'tis a ‘Grief to me to be so charged by your Lordships. I am not conscious to my self of any ‘Turbulency or Sedition. There are some Things anent the Government and Officers of ‘the Church, wherein I confess my Judgment and Principles differ from what is presently ‘maintained, but I have laboured to carry my self with all Moderation and Peaceableness, ‘with due Respect to Authority, and have lived so obscurely, that I wonder how I am taken ‘notice of.’

Of Mr. Livingstone his not keeping the 29 of May.

‘Ch. You have transgressed Two Acts of Parliament; one appointing the 29th of May a ‘Day of Commemoration of his Majesty's happy Restoration, and another appointing Synods
‘to be kept. Did you preach on the 29th of May?’

‘Mr. L. There are Witnesses in Town who will testify I preached the last 29th of May.’

‘Ch. Did you keep the Day, as it is appointed, in Obedience to the Act of Parliament?’

‘Mr. L. I dare not say that I did so. It was my ordinary Lecture-day; yet the Place of ‘Scripture which was my Ordinary, gave Occasion to speak somewhat of the Benefit and Ad‘vantage of Magistracy.’

‘Ch. But will you publickly, as others, acknowledge the Lord's Mercy in restoring the ‘King?’

‘Mr. L. I have done so, my Lord, both at first and sometime since.’

‘Ch. But what is the Reason you do not keep the Day appointed by the Parliament?’

‘Mr.

Mr. L. My Lord, I have not that Promptness of Judgment, or Expression that were requisite for surprising Questions, and would beg, if your Lordships please, to be forborn. 1662.

Ch. Can you not give a Reason why you keep it not?

Mr. L. My Lord, even as to the Laws of God there is a great Difference between a Man's doing of that which God hath forbidden, and the not doing of a Thing, for Want of Clearness that God hath commanded it; and much more this holds in the Laws of Men.

Ch. But you kept Holy-days of your own; you kept a Day of Thanksgiving for the Battle of Long-marston-muir, and several Days of Fasting in the Time of the Engagement. Did you not keep the Day for Long-marston-muir?

Mr. L. So far as I know, I did: But these Days were not called Holy-days, but only appointed upon some special Occasions. And besides, one may scruple if any have Power to appoint anniversary Holy-days.

Ch. But will you keep that Day hereafter?

Mr. L. My Lord, I would desire first to see an Issue of this wherein I am now engaged, by this Citation, before I am urged to answer for the Time to come.

Ch. Well, because of your Disobedience to these Two Acts, the Council look upon you as a suspect Person; and therefore think it fit to require you to take the Oath of Allegiance. He is required to take the Oath of Allegiance.

You know it, and have considered it?

Mr. L. Yes, my Lord.

Ch. The Clerk shall read it to you. (He reads it) Now that you have heard it read, are you free to take the Oath?

Mr. L. I do acknowledge the King's Majesty (whose Person and Government I wish God to bless) to be the only lawful Supreme Magistrate of this and all other his Majesty's Dominions, and that his Majesty is the Supreme Civil Governor over all Persons, and in all Causes as well Ecclesiastick as Civil; but for the Oath, as it stands in terminis, I am not free to take it. His Sentiments of it.

Ch. I think you and we agree as to the Oath.

Lord Advocate. My Lord Chancellor, your Lordship doth not observe that he useth a Distinction, That the King is the Supreme Civil Governor, that he may make Way for the coordinate Power of Presbytery.

Mr. L. My Lord, I do indeed believe and confess that Jesus Christ is the only Head of his Church, and that he only hath Power to appoint a Government and Discipline for removing of Offences in his House, which is not dependent on Civil Powers, and no ways wrongs Civil Powers: But withal, I do acknowledge his Majesty hath a cumulative Power and Inspection in the House of God, for seeing both the Tables of the Law kept; and that his Majesty hath all the ordinary Power that was in the Kings of Israel and Judah, and in the Christian Emperors and Kings, since the primitive Times, for reforming, according to the Word, what is amiss. and of the Civil Magistrate's Power about the Church.

Ch. We do not say that the King hath Power to ordain Ministers, or to excommunicate; and therefore are you not free to take the Oath?

Mr. L. My Lord, in the Terms that I have expressed I am free to take it, but I know not if it would be well taken off my Hand, to add one Word, or give an Explication of the Oath which the Right Honourable the Estates of Parliament have set down. Declines explaining the Oath.

Ch. Nay, it is not in the Power of the Council so to do.

Mr. L. I have likewise been of that Judgment, and am, and will be, That his Majesty is Supreme Governor, in a Civil Way, over all Persons in all Causes.

Lord Commissioner. You may not say that you have been always of that Judgment, for you have been opposite to the King, and so have many here, and so have I been; but now it is requisite we profess our Obedience to him, and would wish you to do so. You would consider that there is a Difference betwixt a Church to be constitute, and a Church constitute; for where it is to be constitute, Ministers and Professors may do their Work upon their Hazard; but when a Church is constitute with Consent of the Civil Magistrate, who hath Power to appoint the Bounds of Parishes and Stipends, he may appoint the Bishops his Commissioners, and ordain them to keep Synods, and ordain Ministers to come to those Synods.

Mr. L. May it please your Grace, I hope the Churches that are mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles, were constitute Churches, although they had not the Concurrence of the Civil Magistrate.

Ch. You have heard many Things spoken, will you take some Time to advise whether you will take the Oath or not?

Mr. L. I humbly thank your Lordship; 'tis a Favour, which, if I had any Doubt or Hesitation, I would willingly accept: But seeing, after seeking of God, and advising anent the Matter, I have such Light as I use to get in such Things, if I should take Time to advise, it would import I have Unclearness and Hesitation, which I have not; and I judge it were a Kind of mocking your Lordships, to take Time, and then return your Lordships the same Answer. He waves a Time to consider whether he will take the Oath.

Council's Sentence against him.

' Lord Commissioner. Then you are not for new Light? '
 ' Mr. L. Indeed I am not, if it please your Grace.
 ' Ch. Then you'll remove your self. Being removed, and called in again, the Chancellor said, Mr. Livingstone, The Lords of his Majesty's Council have ordained, That within Two Months you remove out of his Majesty's Dominions, and that within Forty eight Hours you remove out of Edinburgh, and go to the North-side of Tay, and there remain till you depart forth out of the Country.'

' Mr. L. I submit to your Lordships Sentence; but I humbly beg I may have a few Days to go home and see my Wife and Children.'

' Ch. By no means; you cannot be suffered to go to that Country.'

' Mr. L. Against what Time must I go to the North of Tay, my Lord?'

' Lord Commissioner. You may be there against Saturday come Se'ennight.'

' Mr. L. Well, although it be not permitted to me to breathe in my native Air, yet I trust, whatsoever Part of the World I go unto, I shall not cease to pray for a Blessing to these Lands, to his Majesty and the Government, and the inferior Magistrates thereof, but especially to the Land of my Nativity.'

' Ch. You must either go to the Tolbooth, or subscribe a few Words of Acquiescence to your Sentence.'

' Mr. L. My Lord, rather than go to the Tolbooth, I will subscribe the same. And accordingly he did it; and the Tenor of it was,'

' I Mr. John Livingstone, late Minister at Ancrum, bind and oblige me, that I shall remove my self forth of his Majesty's Dominions, within the Space of Eight Weeks after the Date hereof, and that I shall not remain within the same hereafter, without Licence from his Majesty or Privy Council, under the Pain of Death; and that I shall depart from Edinburgh to the North-side of Tay, and there remain while my Departure, and that my going off from Edinburgh shall be within Forty eight Hours after the Date hereof. Subscribed at Edinburgh, December 11th, 1662.'

JO. LIVINGSTONE.

' Lord Commissioner You must see that you keep no Conventicles, nor preach in Churches or Houses. To this Mr. Livingstone answered nothing.'

Mr. Livingstone remarks, That he cannot say this is all that either he or they spoke, but it is as far as his Memory served him; That he could not so punctually repeat their Speeches as his own, but as near as he remembers this is what passed. He further observes, That his Difficulty as to the Oath, was not only that it was conceived in general and ambiguous Terms, as might import a receding from the Covenants and Work of Reformation; but upon the Matter, the Imposers unlawful Sense of the general Terms, was determined and fixed by their rejecting the only safe Sense offered by the West Country Ministers lately, as we have seen. He adds likewise, He was afraid his taking Time, when offered him, to consider the Oath, after he had thoroughly pondred it, might lay him open to Temptations, and offend and weaken the Hands of others. However, he apprehended his refusing their Offer, grated the Council, and made them sharper upon him than others.

According to this Sentence, Mr. Livingstone went out of Edinburgh to Leith, in the prefixed Time; where I find him petitioning the Council, December 23^d, which I give in the Words of the Registers. ' Anent the Petition presented by Mr. John Livingstone, shewing, That, in regard of his Age and Infirmary, his going beyond Tay in such a Season of the Year, might be dispensed with, and he permitted to go to the South, and see his Wife and Children, and dispose of his Affairs; and by this means, he expects, within the Two Months prefixed, to get a more ready and shorter Passage from Newcastle, and in better Vessels than can be looked for out of the Firth: Which being at length heard and considered, the Lords of Privy Council do allow the Petitioner to remain at Leith during the Time that is granted him to abide in Scotland, he behaving and carrying himself peaceably in the mean Time.'

He insisted for Liberty only of a few Days to go Home and take his Farewel of his excellent Wife and Children; but that would not be allowed. He further remarks, That by no Means would the Council allow him a Copy of his Sentence, though he petitioned once and again for it. One would think they had Cause so to do, and they might be ashamed if it should appear abroad in the Reformed Churches, whither he was retiring.

After he had stayed some Time at Leith, toward the Beginning of April he was accompanied with a good many of his Friends to a Ship, in which he got safe to Rotterdam, where he found his dear Brethren formerly banished, and lived till August 1672. when he entred into the Joy of his Lord, in a good old Age.

Mr. Livingstone's Observations on the Whole.He petitions the Council, and his going beyond Tay excused; but he is hindered from going to Ancrum.

The Copy of his Sentence refused him.

In April goes to Holland.

While

While in Holland, he spent his Time in reading the Scripture, and forming a new Latin Translation of the Old Testament, being very well seen in all the Eastern Tongues. This was revised, and approved by Voetius, Essenius, Nethenus, Leusden, and other eminent Lights of that Time. At his Death it was put into the Hands of the last, in order to be printed, but was never published; and now I fear it is lost.

Since Mr. Livingstone was not permitted to see his dear Flock at Ancrum, he wrote a Letter to them before his leaving Scotland, which breathing much of this holy Man's excellent Temper, and containing many Things suitable to this Time, and not being, as far as I know, printed, as another Letter of his to them is, I have subjoyned it, App. N^o. 36.

I return to the rest of the Ministers at this Time before the Council. That same Day, December 11th, Mr. James Gardiner was called upon; and, after some Questions proposed to him, much of the Nature with these to Mr. Livingstone, and the tendering him the Oath, which he refused, was banished; and his Act, as the Title of it is in the Registers, follows.

There he forms a Latin Translation of the Old Testament.

Mr. James Gardiner his Sentence.

I Mr. James Gardiner, late Minister of Kintyre, oblige me to remove my self out of the King's Dominions, within a Month after the Date hereof, and not to be seen within the same under the Pain of Death; and that in the mean Time I shall not repair to any Place within the Bounds of the Diocese of Glasgow, Galloway, or Argyle. Subscribed at Edinburgh, December 11th, 1662.

JA. GARDINER.

The same Day Mr. Robert Trail was before them. This good Man had used Freedom in his Sermons, and very much displeased the Managers and Prelates. After the Parliament had turn'd him over to the Council, and he had, upon his Liberation, retired, sooner than the rest of his Brethren at Edinburgh, he stayed some Time in Preston-grange-house. There some of the Family being detained by Sicknefs, and several Relations of the Family being there at the Time, Mr. Trail was prevailed upon to expound a Piece of Scripture, at Family-worship, on the Lord's Day after Noon. This was mightily aggravated as a Conventicle, and he cited in peremptory Terms, as we have heard, and banished with the other Two. I shall give it from the Council-books.

Mr. Robert Trail,

MR. John Livingstone, Mr. James Gardiner, and Mr. Robert Trail, being cited, and compearing personally, who being examined, and the Oath of Allegiance offered to be taken and subscribed; which they having refused, The Lords of Council ordain the said Persons to be banished forth of his Majesty's Dominions, and to enter their Persons in Prison within the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, while they be conveniently transported off the Kingdom, or otherwise act themselves to that Effect. Likeas they enact themselves in the Manner underwritten.

His Sentence.

We have had Mr. Livingstone's and Mr. Gardiner's; follows Mr. Trail his Act.

I Mr. Robert Trail, late Minister at Edinburgh, bind and oblige me to remove forth of the King's Dominions, within a Month after the Date hereof, and not to remain within the same hereafter, under the Pain of Death. In Witness whereof, I have subscribed thir Presents, at Edinburgh, December 11th, 1662.

RO. TRAIL.

December 23^d, the Council prorogate his Time of Continuance in Scotland. 'Anent a Petition of Mr. Robert Trail, sometime Minister at Edinburgh, shewing, That, by an Act of Council of the 11th Day of this Instant, the Petitioner is ordained to remove out of this Kingdom, within a Month after the Date thereof; to which Sentence, as he did then, so he does now humbly submit: But seeing the Season is now tempestuous, and that hardly can he have the Occasion of a Ship in that Time, and that the Petitioner is towards the Age of Sixty Years, if not more, and so cannot well undertake Removing at such a Season, without evident Hazard of his Life; Therefore humbly desiring that the said Space, appointed for the Supplicant's Removal, may be prorogate for some longer Time. Which Petition being at Length heard, read, and considered, The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council do allow and grant Warrant to the Supplicant to remain within this Kingdom for the Space of a Month after the --- Day of January next to come, and ordain him to confine himself within his own House, where his Family is, during that Space, except the last Eight Days, which is allowed to him for making Way for his Transportation.'

His Time of Removal prorogate.

Those Three took up the Council at that Diet; and the rest, who were cited, being called, were continued, and appointed to continue in Town, and attend the next Meeting of Council. Accordingly December 16th, Mr. John Menzies, and Mr. George Meldrum being called, compeared personally, and being examined, did declare their Readiness to comply with the Government of the Church, as the same is presently established by Archbishops and Bishops, and

‘and most cordially did take and subscribe the Oath of Allegiance, in Presence of the Lords of Council; wherefore they do seriously recommend their Condition and Case to the Archbishop of St. Andrews, in order to their Restitution.’

‘This is all I find about them in the Registers. We shall afterward meet with the learn’d Mr. Menzies in the Progress of this History, and see how burdenson this Compliance with Prelacy was unto him, before his Death. The Reverend and Learn’d Mr. Meldrum, upon Misrepresentations cast upon him in Print, did at the End of Doctor Rule’s Second Vindication of the Church of Scotland, publish an Account of this, and other Parts of his Carriage during Prelacy; of which I’ll here give the Reader an Abstract, that this great Man’s Memory may have all the Justice I can do him.

‘He was ordained Minister of the Gospel by the Presbytery of Aberdeen, 1659. When Prelacy was introduced he was stopt in the Exercise of his Ministry, by the Act of Council, which laid aside divers Hundreds of worthy Ministers of this Church, and obliged them to retire Twenty Miles from their Parishes, because they received not Presentation from the Patron, and Collation from the Bishop, the Condition of which was the Oath of Canonical Obedience. At First Mr. Meldrum did offer Submission, and to joyn in Presbyteries and Synods, supposing this was but the same that worthy Men have done before the 1638. and not discerning, as others who suffered did, the Difference betwixt the State of Things Anno 1662. and before the 1638.’

‘This Stop in the Exercise of his Ministry was Fourteen Days before the Bishop of Aberdeen’s First diocesan Synod; at which, when he passed the Sentence of Deposition against the learn’d and pious Mr. Menzies, for not subscribing the Oath of Canonical Obedience, tho’ he offered Submission, as said is, the Bishop joyned Mr. Meldrum in the Sentence, tho’ neither present nor cited to be present. Nothing moved with this Sentence of Deposition, Mr. Meldrum retired to the Country, Twenty eight Miles from Aberdeen, in compliance with the Council’s Act. Yet in the Beginning of December, he and Mr. Menzies got a Citation to appear before the Council, as was said, by the Procurement of the Bishop of Aberdeen, who alledged he could not appear in the Streets of that City, for Fear of the People irritated, as was alledged, by their Pastors whom they had lost.’

‘When they appeared before the Council, the Commillioner and the rest of the Counsellors, finding them willing to joyn in Presbyteries and Synods, did by their Act recommend them to the Bishop of St. Andrews to be restored to their Places. When this was presented to the Bishop, he readily promised to obey it, but never spoke to them one Word of the Oath of Canonical Obedience. And when in his Letter to the Bishop of Aberdeen, he signified that we were willing to own the Government, Mr. Meldrum refused to receive it, unless he added this Qualification, So far as to joyn in Presbyteries and Synods; to which the Primate agreed, when they would take it in no other Terms.’

‘When Mr. Menzies and Mr. Meldrum returned, Bishop Mitchel ordered Doctor Keith to read that Paper publickly in Aberdeen, thinking thereby to lessen their Esteem: But the Design failed; none of them were present at the reading of it. But next Lord’s Day, when Mr. Meldrum appeared first in the Pulpit, he told his Hearers, and the Bishop of Ross was one of them, That he conceived he had yielded to nothing, but what at first he had offered, viz. to joyn in Synods and Presbyteries. Mr. Meldrum adds, that Mr. Menzies’s Compliance was grievous to that learn’d and pious Man at his Death, and to himself several Years before, and tells the World that he repents for the subscribing that Paper of Submission, to joyn in Presbyteries and Synods, and asserts he never took the Oath of Canonical Obedience.’

‘He confesses that afterward he did sit in Presbyteries and Synods, thinking himself free to joyn in those Duties, to which he was authorized by his Office, although there had not been one Bishop in the World; yet adds, If any can shew me wherein I have complied contrary to my Principles, or to the just Offence of others, which I have not confessed already, I am ready to acknowledge it was my Fault: But this I can say, the Bishops themselves did not judge me a Favourer of Prelacy; and my Intimates knew me to be Presbyterian in my Principles, and I did never wittingly desert those Principles. He adds, That it was a manifest Untruth that he took the Declaration when he was admitted Rector in the Marishal College of Aberdeen, and appeals to the Records, and declares he never took it then, or at any other Time. He says, That it was none of the least Causes of his refusing the Test, that he was obliged thereby to declare that there lay no Obligation upon him to endeavour any Alteration in the Government of the Church, and professes he judged it Duty in his Station, and according to his Power did endeavour, to promote the Alteration and Removal of it, and prays that it may never return.’

This truly great Man, and Ornament to this Church, Mr. George Meldrum, is so well known, and his Memory so savoury, that I need say nothing of him to the most yet alive; and his Works shew abundantly his eminent Abilities. He was remarkably useful in Aberdeen, with his excellent Colleague Mr. Menzies, against the Quakers, and the cunning Jesuits, till the self-contradictory Test turned him out of that City: And with many other pious and learned learned Ministers he was persecuted, and silenced till the Toleration; a little after which he was settled at the Parish of Kilwinning, where he was soon called to more publick Service. He had an Invitation from the University of Glasgow, to be Colleague in the Profession of Divinity, with the Reverend Mr. James Woodrow; and a Call to the City of Edinburgh, to which he was transported, and preached many Years to great Edification, and was a mighty Master of the holy Scriptures, and blessed with the greatest Talent of opening them up, or lecturing, of any I ever heard.

After the Death of that great Light, the Reverend Mr. George Campbell, Mr. Meldrum was brought to the Chair of Divinity at Edinburgh, which how well he filled, many of the Ministers of this Church can testify. By a prudent and faithful Sermon of his against Episcopacy, he was led into a publick Debate with some of the Abettors of it; and how generally useful he was to stop the Design, 1703. to introduce Toleration and Patronages in this Church, is well enough yet remembred; and what he printed upon the nice Subject of Toleration, led him into a Paper-war with Mr. Sage, and some others of the Episcopal Clergy, where he had an open Field to display the great Talents of Learning, Prudence, and Zeal his Matter had bestowed on him. Should I speak of his singular Usefulness in Church-judicatories, his modest and healing Temper, his Solidity in Teaching, his Success in Preaching, his excellent Conversation, and abounding in Alms and Charity, I would not soon end. He will make a bright Figure whenever we shall have the Benefit of the Lives of our Scots Ministers: And his Compliance at this Time, we see, was Matter of deep Repentance to himself. I go forward to the rest of the Ministers, who being called, were continued till the next Council-day.

Accordingly, December 23^d, Mr. John Neave or Nevoy compeared, and was examined, and, upon his Refusal of the Oath of Allegiance, he was banished, and enacted himself as follows.

Mr. John Neave's Sentence.

‘ I Mr. John Neave, late Minister of the Gospel at Newmills, bind and oblige me to remove my self forth of the King's Dominions, and not to return, under the Pain of Death, and that I shall remove before the First of February; and that I shall not remain within the Dioces of Edinburgh or Glasgow in the mean while. Subscribed at Edinburgh, December 23^d. ’

JOHN NEAVE.

This excellent Man was the Earl of Lowdon's Minister, and very much valued by his Lordship, and therefore must be attacked now: He was a Person of very considerable Parts, and bright Piety. There is a handsom Paraphrase of his upon the Song of Solomon, in Latin Verse, printed; and I have seen some accurate Sermons of his upon Christ's Temptations, which I wish were published. He obeyed the Sentence, and died abroad.

His Character.

Mr. John Cameron next appeared, ‘ Who being examined, and heard to express himself as to his Principles towards the present Government in Church and State, the Lords of Council ordain him forthwith to remove himself with all convenient Diligence from the Place of his present Dwelling, and confine himself within the Bounds of Lochaber, and not to remove forth thereof without Licence from his Majesty or the Privy Council, as he will be answerable at his utmost Peril.’ He was a singularly pious and religious Person, and he got this Favour, if it may be so called, not to have the Oath put to him, by the Interposition of his Chief the Laird of Locheal, who was Caution for Mr. Cameron's peaceable Behaviour, and his keeping his Confinement. He continued some Time at the deserted Garison of Inverlochrie, where he preached to Locheal's Family; and the People about came in and heard him. He lived a good many Years after this, and had several remarkable Communications of the Lord's Mind as to Events a coming in this Church.

Mr. John Cameron's Sentence.

That same Day, ‘ Mr. James Nasmyth, and Mr. Samuel Austin compeared personally, were referred by the Lords of Council to the Commissioner his Grace, that he may take such Course and Order with them as he thinks fit; and they appointed to attend and wait his Pleasure.’ He was not long after this in the Country, and it would seem the Commissioner put back Mr. Nasmyth upon the Council; for I find, January 6th next Year, Mr. Nasmyth appears before the Council, and they ordain him, ‘ To confine himself within the Bounds of the Sherifdom of Merse, till further Order, and that he demean himself in the mean Time peaceably. I have no more of Mr. Austin. ’

Mr. James Nasmyth and Mr. Samuel Austin committed to the Commissioner.

At that Diet, January 6th, Mr. Alexander Dunlop, Minister at Paisly, was before them; Who being examined, and the Oath of Allegiance offered to him to be taken and subscribed, and he refusing the same, the Lords of Council ordain him to be banished forth of his Majesty's Dominions, reserving to themselves to prefix the Time of his Removal; and in the mean Time ordain him to confine himself within the Bounds of the Dioces of Aberdeen, Brechin, Caithness, or Dunkeld; and allow him the Space of Ten Days to go home and order his Business and Affairs.’ He was a Person of eminent Piety, and extraordinary Diligence and Learning, and singular Prudence and Sweetness of Temper. He has left behind him, among other valuable Papers, Collections towards a System of Divinity in English, which

Mr. Alexander Dunlop banished, and mean while confined to the North.

His Character.

1662. had he been able to have put in order, would have been one of the most valuable Bodies of Divinity which hath been drawn up.

Mr. Alexander Gordon sick at this Time. His Trouble afterward.

I find nothing in the Registers about Mr. Alexander Gordon, the Marquis of Argyle his Minister at Inveraray: The Reason is, He was under a dangerous Fever when cited before the Council. The Magistrates of that Place sent up a Testificate under the Physicians Hands, which the Council could not but accept. He was a while forgot as dead, and indeed he was very near Death, but the Lord had more Work for him; and he upon his Recovery continued some Years preaching in Bishop Fletcher's Time: But when Scrogie succeeded to that Bishoprick, Mr. Gordon fell into very great Hardships, and sore Persecution, of which he told me he had drawn up a large Account, but I have not been able yet to come by it. This good Man was a Member of the Assembly 1651. and I have a very distinct and accurate Account of their Procedure, writ by him at the Time, which he gave me. He lived to a great Age, and died in the Lord, 1714.

No Accounts have come to my Hand about Mrs. Andrew and Alexander Cants, who were present upon Citation. This is all I have of those excellent Men, marked out in all the Corners of the Church. Mr. Dunlop was banished, but came to be overlooked. Mrs. Trail, Livingstone, Brown, Newoy, and Gardiner, went over to Holland Beginning of next Year, being turned out of their native Country, merely for refusing the Oath of Allegiance, tho' all of them were willing to take it in the very Sense the Managers said they had themselves taken it in. Mr. Trail returned and died in Scotland. Mr. Gardiner, through his tedious Exile, fell under some Melancholy, and ventured home likewise, and was overlooked. The rest, with Mr. McVaird and Mr. Simpson, died in a strange Land. We shall meet with a good many more Presbyterian Ministers attacked next Year, but we may well reckon these spoken of in this Chapter, among the first Worthies.

S E C T. VI.

Of some few other Remarkables this Year 1662.

I Come now to conclude this Chapter with a few other incidental Matters this Year, that came not in so well upon the general Heads in the former Sections, and yet tend a little to enlighten the History of this Period I am now upon; and I give them just in the Order of Time in which they offer.

The Council pass their Act and Proclamation for keeping of Lent, February 6th, and the curious Reader may desire to have the Tenor of it.

THE Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, taking to their Consideration the great Advantage and Profit which will redound to all the Lieges of this Kingdom, by keeping the Time of Lent, and the weekly Fish-days, viz. Wednesday, Friday, Saturday, and discharging all Persons to eat Flesh during that Time, and upon the said Days, or to kill and sell in Markets any Sort of Fleashes which are usually bought at other Times; whereby the young Brood and Store will be preserved, so that thereafter the Hazard of Scarcity and Dearth may be prevented; and the Fishes, which, by the Mercy of God abound in the salt and fresh Waters of this Kingdom, may be made use of for the Food and Entertainment of the Lieges, to the Profit and Encouragement of many poor Families, who live by Fishing; the Improvement of which has not been looked unto these many Years bygone, which hath been occasioned by the universal Allowance of eating Flesh, and keeping of Markets for it at all ordinary Times without any Restraint; against which many laudable Laws have been made, and Acts of Parliament, prohibiting the eating of Flesh during the said Time of Lent, or upon the said Fish-days, under the Pains therein contained: Ordain and command that the Time of Lent for this Year, and yearly hereafter, shall begin and be kept as before the Year of God 1640. and that the said weekly Fish-days be strictly observed in all Time coming; and that no Subject of whatsoever Quality, Rank or Degree, except they have a special Licence under the Hand of the Clerk of the Council, presume to eat Flesh during the said Space of Lent, or upon the three said weekly Fish-days; and that no Butchers, Cooks, or Officers, kill, make ready, or sell any Flesh, either publickly in Markets, or privately in their own Houses, during the said Time, or upon the said Days, under the Penalties following, to be exacted with all Rigour, viz. For the First Fault Ten Pounds, for the Second Twenty Pounds, for the Third Forty Pounds, and so to be multiplied according to the oft contravening of the said Act, to be exacted and paid, the one Half to the Council's Act for keeping Lent.

the King's Majesty, the other Half to the Delaters. Likewise for the surer erasing of the said Pains, they give Power and Warrant to all Magistrates within Burghs, and all Sheriffs, Stewarts, and Bailies, within their several Jurisdictions, to enquire after the Contraveners, and to pursue them before the Lords of Council, or such others as shall be appointed or delegate for that Effect. And ordain Publication hereof to be made at the Market-cross of Edinburgh, and all other Places needful, that none pretend Ignorance.

This Proclamation was merely a Requisition of a Civil keeping of Lent, and the weekly Fish-days, for the Preservation of the young Beastial, and the Consumption of our Fish, which the Lord has so bountifully given us; and had the Council seen to the Execution of this good Act, as well as they did the severe and bloody Acts against Presbyterians, it had been much for the Interest of the Lieges: But we shall find them so much taken up to satisfy the Prelates, and execute their Desires against Presbyterians, that so useful an Act as this is very much neglected, and, as far as I know, came to nothing.

This same Month the Articles of Marriage, 'twixt the King and Princess Katharine of Portugal, came to be made publick: And with a View to have our Nobility present at her Reception, the Parliament, as we heard, was adjourned from February to May. The Articles of that Marriage differed much from these in the projected Match with Spain, and the real Marriage of CHARLES I. with France: And, as I find them in Papers come to my Hand, the chief are, 'That the Queen be of the Protestant Religion, which I don't know if ever any Care was taken about. That she bring no Priests with her. That the Half of the Silver Mines the King of Portugal hath, belong to Britain. That after the Decesse of the King of Portugal's Son, if he die without Heir, the Kingdom of Portugal shall belong to England.' Those were the Articles given out here in Scotland, whether they hold I don't know.

Articles of Marriage with the Queen.

This Year, the usual Solemnities were kept up in all Cities and Burghs, in celebrating of the 29th of May; and we have heard the Nonobservance of it as an anniversary Holy-day, was Matter of great Trouble to Presbyterian Ministers: But the Town of Linlithgow signalized themselves, by mixing in with their Solemnity a most horrid, irreligious, and unaccountable Treatment of our Solemn Covenants, which was Matter of Grief unto all who had any Regard to Religion and sacred Things, and a terrible Guilt and Stain upon poor Scotland.

The Observation of the 29 of May, this Year.

The Account given by the profane and impious Actors of this abominable Jest upon sacred Things, when at this Time they gloried in their Shame, I shall give here from a Paper writ this Year, which follows.

OUR Solemnity at Linlithgow, May 29th, 1662. was performed after this Manner. Divine Service being ended, the Magistrates a little thereafter repaired to the Earl of Linlithgow his Lodging, to invite his Lordship to honour them with his Presence at the Solemnity of that Day; which he did. Then coming to the Market-place, where a Table covered with Confections was placed, they were met by the Minister of the Place, who prayed to them, and sung a Psalm; after which, eating a little of the Confections, they threw the rest among the People.'

Account of the Solemnity at Linlithgow.

'Mean while the Fountain did run plentifully with French and Spanish Wine, and continued so for Two or Three Hours. The Earl of Linlithgow, and the Magistrates, drank the King and Queen, and the Royal Family and Progeny, their Healths.'

'At the Cross was erected an Arch, standing upon Four Pillars: On the one Side of the Arch was placed a Statue in Form of an old Hag, having the Covenant in her Hand, with this Supercription, A GLORIOUS REFORMATION. On the other Side, there was another Statue in a Whigmuir's Habit, having the Remonstrance in his Hand, with this Inscription, NO ASSOCIATION WITH MALIGNANTS. On the Top of the Arch was placed a Statue, representing the Devil as an Angel of Light, with this Label at his Mouth, STAND TO THE CAUSE.

'The Arch was beautifully adorned with several Draughts of Rocks, Reels, and Kirk-stools upon the Pillar beneath the Covenant: And upon the Pillar beneath the Remonstrance were drawn Brechams, Cogs, and Spoons.'

'Within the Arch, upon the right Hand, was drawn a Committee of Estates, with this Supercription, ACT FOR DELIVERING UP THE KING. On the left Hand was drawn a Commission of the Kirk, with this Inscription, ACT OF THE WEST-KIRK. In the Middle of the Arch hung a Tablet with this Litany,

From Covenanters with uplifted Hands,
From Remonstrators with associate Bands,
From such Committees as govern'd this Nation,
From Kirk-commissions and their Protestation,
Good LORD deliver us.

1662.

‘ Upon the Back of the Arch was drawn the Picture of Rebellion, in a religious Habit, with Eyes turn’d up, and other Phanatick Gestures; in its right Hand holding LEX REX, that infamous Book, maintaining, among other absurd Tenets, defensive Arms; and in its left Hand holding that pitiful Pamphlet, THE CAUSES OF GOD’S WRATH. Round about her were lying Acts of Parliament, Acts of Committees of Estates, Acts of General Assemblies, and Commissions of Kirk, with their Protestations and Declarations during those Twenty two Years Rebellion. Above her was this Superscription, REBEL-LION IS AS THE SIN OF WITCHCRAFT. At drinking the King’s Health, Fire was put to the Frame, and the Fire-works about it gave many fine Reports, and suddenly all was consumed to Ashes; which being consumed, straightway there appeared a Tablet supported by Two Angels, bearing this Inscription.

Great Britain’s Monarch on this Day was born,
And to his Kingdoms happily restor’d:
The Queen’s arriv’d, the Mitre now is worn;
Let us rejoyce, this Day is from the LORD.

Fly hence, all Traitors who did mar our Peace,
Fly hence, Schismatics who our Church did rent,
Fly, covenanting remonstrating Race;
Let us rejoyce that God this Day hath sent.

‘ Then the Magistrates accompanied the Earl of Linlithgow to the Palace, where the Earl had a magnificent Bonfire, and drank with the Magistrates the King’s, Queen’s, and other loyal Healths. When they had taken their Leave of the Earl, the Magistrates, accompanied with a great many of the Inhabitants, made their Procession through the Town, saluting every Person of Account.’

Remarks upon this Jest on Liberty and Religion.

Reflections upon this mean Mock of the Work of Reformation, and Appearances for Religion and Liberty, are obvious. Whatever the different Sentiments of sober and any way serious Persons might have been at this Time, as to our Covenants, yet, I perswade my self, such impious and scurrilous Treatment of those solemn and national Ties and Engagements, wherein the holy and fearful Name of the Lord our God was called upon, hath been, and is Matter of deep Abhorrence to all who have any Reverence for that holy and sacred Name.

Indeed if this publick Reproach upon, and burning of the Covenants, could have loosed their Obligation, one would think this profane Work was necessary upon these anniversary Days, really contrary to the Reformation we are bound down to by them; but that was beyond their Power.

This wicked Attack, not only upon our religious Ties, which were the Glory of Scotland, but also upon the Appearances made for recovering and preserving our Civil Liberty, was chiefly managed by Robert Miln, then Bailie of Linlithgow, and Mr. James Ramsay, at this Time Minister of the Town. The first in some Time thereafter came to great Riches and Honour, but outlived them and the Exercise of his Judgment too, and died bankrupt in miserable Circumstances at Holy-rood-house. The other, for this meritorious Act of Loyalty, after he was made Dean of Hamilton, came at length to be Bishop of Dumblain, where we shall afterwards meet with him, in no good Terms with his Superior the Primate.

Both of them, some few Years ago, had solemnly entred into, and renewed these Covenants, with uplifted Hands to the Lord. This vile Pageantry was not required by any Law, or Order from the Government, and so I hope is not chargeable on the Publick, any further than it was not punished: And as it had no Precedent in Scotland, so there was no Appointment for it, or Approbation of it by the Town-council of Linlithgow.

It was then both officiously and impiously perpetrate, and comes very near Belshazzar’s quaffing in the holy Vessels. Those People would outrun others in Wickedness, and by this bold Insult upon religious Matters, for what I know, without Parallel in the whole World, avowed themselves perjur’d, and left a Blot upon their Memory in After-times.

Order of Parliament for razing Mr. Henderson’s Monument in the Grey-friar’s Church-yard.

Some Time in June or July this Year, the Commissioner stooped so low, as to procure an Order of Parliament, for the razing of the Reverend Mr. Alexander Henderson his Monument in the Gray-friar’s Church-yard, Edinburgh. After his Death, August 18th, 1646. a Monument was erected for him, with a Pyramid, and Inscription, wherein some Mention was made of the Solemn League and Covenant. Indeed so great and useful a Man as he was, whose Character I shall leave to the Writers of the History of this Church, from the 1637. to his Death, when he had so great a Share in all publick Ecclesiastical Transactions, deserved to be had in Remembrance. Now the Letters and Inscription must be razed, and the Memory of this extraordinary Person stained as much as might be. Yet, after all this, the Abettors of Prelacy, Prelacy, sensible of the great Endowments of Mr. Henderson, would fain have him brought over to their Side at his Death; and palm upon the World most groundless Stories of his changing his Principles at his last Hours. 1662.

I omitted to observe, That the Council, immediately after the Rising of the Parliament, September 10th, 'Ordain the Act of Parliament, Intituled, Act concerning the Declaration to be signed by all Persons in Publick Trust, to be signed by all who have not subscribed the same, in the Presence of any one of the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council: And that thereafter they cause their Deputes, Clerks, Stewarts, or Commissaries, their Deputes and their Clerks, Magistrates, and Members of Council in Burghs, Justices of Peace and their Clerks, within their respective Bounds, subscribe the said Declaration, conform to the said Act of Parliament, in all Points; and that they make a Report of their Diligence in the Premises to the Council.' The pushing of this Order brought a vast deal of Trouble to the Country, of which we shall have Instances afterwards.

Council, Sept. 10. order the Declaration to be signed.

After the Election of Magistrates in Edinburgh this Year, all the Ministers of the Town, as we have heard, were discharged Preaching, save Mr. Robert Lawrie. I find one, who is no Enemy to the Change in Church-government, observing, 'That Sermons were taught by Strangers in all the Kirks, but they were not well liked; the People went from Kirk to Kirk, and many wandred to other Kirks, and the Munday's Preaching was either difused or discharged.'

Ministers of Edinburgh turned out.

Upon the 5th of November, Mr. Joseph Meldrum Minister at Kinghorn, Mr. John Robertson Parson of Dysart, and Mr. Archibald Turner Minister at North-Berwick were received Ministers of Edinburgh. Mr. Robertson had a Sermon to the People, and after it, came down to the Elders Seat, and placed himself with the other Two, who sat there with the Magistrates and Elders. Then the Bishop of Edinburgh went up to the Pulpit, and, in a short Discourse, declared those Three Ministers were called and chosen; and they were received by the Elders and Magistrates, who afterwards feasted the Company. So the Ministers of Edinburgh, at this Time fixed, were those Three; Mr. Robert Lawrie continued; Mr. John Paterson, formerly Minister of Ellon, and afterward Bishop, first of Galloway, next of Edinburgh, and last of Glasgow, was received Minister there, the first Sabbath of January next Year: And upon the first Sabbath of February, Mr. William Annand, formerly a Minister in England, and Chaplain to the Earl of Middleton, was received Minister there. They were Six in Number, and some were joyned to them as Helpers. How vast a Difference must every Body allow to have been 'twixt them, and Mrs. Hutcheson, Douglas, Trail, Smith, Stirling; and yet those are turned out to make Room for them.

Nov. 5. Mrs. Meldrum, Robertson, and Turner, admitted Ministers of Edinburgh, and afterwards Mrs. Paterson and Annand.

Now the Ministers who comply have double Stipends allowed them, when they are translated to better Posts, upon Consideration of their alledged Loyalty; when, I am sure, the Presbyterian Ministers who are turned out, and deprived of the Stipends of these very Years for which they had served the Cure, had much more appeared for the King's Interest. Thus I find, December 11th, when they are harassing Presbyterian Ministers, 'The Council taking to their Consideration, That Mr. James Chalmers, late Minister of Cullen of Boyn, and now Minister of Dumfries, has been at a great Deal of Charges and Pains in pursuance of his Majesty's Interest and Government, both in Church and State; have therefore ordained, and by these Presents ordain, That the present Year's Stipend, 1662. due to the late Minister at Dumfries, be paid to the said Mr. James Chalmers; and that the Heritors, Feuars, Farmers, Tenants, Possessors, and others liable, make ready and thankful Payment of the same to him, or any having his Order; and, if need be, ordain Letters of Horning to pass hereupon as effects: And this is without Prejudice to the said Mr. James, of the said Year's Stipend, 1662. due to him from the Parish of Cullen.'

Mr. James Chalmers at Cullen, allowed double Stipend, that of Cullen, and that of Dumfries.

December 25th, being Tule-day, was kept this Year with much Solemnity at Edinburgh. The Bishop preached himself, and the Commissioner, with a good many of the Nobility, and the Magistrates, came to the New Church: And the Magistrates, by Tuck of Drum, advertised all the Inhabitants of the Town to observe the Remainder of that Day as a Holy-day; tised all the Inhabitants of the Town to observe the Remainder of that Day as a Holy-day; and discharged any Shop to be opened, or any Market to be in the Streets, under the Pain of Twenty Shillings Scots. And I know not, but this was the last Time ever Middleton heard Sermon in Scotland; for in a few Days after, upon a Call, he went up to Court, where we shall meet with his Treatment next Year.

Tule-day kept at Edinburgh.

I shut up this Chapter with remarking, while Prelacy is set and setting up in Scotland, that severe Proclamation in England is emitted, commonly called, The Bartholomew Act, where-by some Thousands of Churches were, August 24th, this Year, laid desolate, and Multitudes of People deprived of their Pastors; and a Set of Ministers, who were equal to any of their Number in all the Protestant Churches, were laid aside, for not doing what was really impossible to most of them to do, though they had, as they were not, been satisfied as to the Lawfulness of what was required. The Reverend and Learned Doctor Calamy has done them Justice, and set this Matter in its due Light, by his excellent Abridgment of Mr. Baxter's Life; which supersedes my observing the Inconsistency of this Procedure, with the Declaration at Bartholomew Act in England.

1662. Breda; and the great and undeniable Share the English Presbyterians had in the King's Restoration. In short, the same true Prelatick Spirit of Persecution, and oppressing People in their Consciences and Liberty, was raging through the whole Island.

CHAP. IV.

1663. Of the State and Sufferings of Presbyterians, during the Year 1663.

The Contents of this Chapter.

WE have now seen the Scriptural Institution of Church-government overturned in Scotland, and Prelacy established, and the Foundations laid of turning out all the Presbyterian Ministers, and many of them confined and banished. This same Work is carried on this Year, and the few remaining old Presbyterian Ministers and others, are attacked and harassed.

The Council hath the greatest Part of this sad Work in their Hand; and from their Books I am to give a distinct Account both of their more general Acts, and particular Prosecutions of Ministers, Gentlemen, and great Numbers of Country People, for their Affection to their outed Ministers.

This Summer the Hands are changed in Scotland, and a considerable Turn of Managers in England also: Chancellor Hyde there, and Middleton here, the great Abettors and Introducers of Prelacy in all its Heights, are turned out; and Lawderdale comes to Scotland, and the Parliament sits down, where some new Acts are made against Presbyterians. The Act for Ballotting is rescinded, and Lawderdale and his Party have the entire Management in their Hands for many Years.

During the Sitting of Parliament, the excellent Lord Wariston is executed; and tho' he be the only Person suffering unto Death, yet we shall have Abundance of others sorely oppressed this Year. The Accounts of these will afford Matter for Five or Six Sections, much in the Order I have used in the former Years.

SECT. I.

Of the Ejection of near Four hundred Ministers, the dismal Effects thereof, with the general State of the West and South Country, this Year 1663.

A general View of the Ejection of Ministers last Year and this.

HAVING, upon the former Year, laid before the Reader the Act of the Council at Glasgow, and what followed upon it toward the End of the Year, by which such Multitudes of Ministers were cast out, I thought this as proper a Place as I could find, to give him some further View of this melancholy Scene and its Consequences, especially in the West and South of Scotland, since what was begun in the Close of the last Year, was completed in the Beginning of this. We shall indeed afterwards meet with the Mile Act, and that discharging Alms and Charity, and some others about Presbyterian Ministers: But those formerly mentioned were the great Foundation of scattering these Multitudes of worthy Ministers.

More than a Third of the Ministers ejected, and the Ground of
this.

By the Act of Glasgow, more than a Third Part of the Ministers of the Church of Scotland were cast out of their Charges, merely for Conscience Sake, because they would not take the Oath imposed upon all who received Presentations, and the Oath of Canonical Obedience, a necessary Requisite to Collation; and because they could not, contrary to their Light, subject to Bishops.

Difference
twixt this and the Ejection at the Revolution.

Scotland was never Witness to such a Sabbath as the last those Ministers preached; and I know no Parallel to it, save the 17th of August, 1662. to the Presbyterians in England. It was not now as it came to be afterwards in the Year 1689. when the Episcopal Ministers left their Congregations, the People in many Places through the West and South, obliging them to promise they should never return to them: But when those I am now speaking of took their Leave of their dear Flocks, it was a Day not only of Weeping but Howling, like the Weeping of Jazer, as when a besieged City is sacked.

This

This I take to be a very proper Place to record the Names of the Presbyterian Ministers of this Church, who were thrown out of their Churches by the Spite and Enmity of the Bishops. Most Part of them were cast out by that Act at Glasgow, October 1st, and that December 23^d last Year. Some indeed continued preaching for some Time at their Peril; and several of the elder Ministers, who were ordained before the Year 1649. were not so directly reached by those Acts.

1663.

But I have put together all the Ministers ejected at this Time, and formed the best Account I could give from several Papers come to my Hand, of such as were cast out from their Charges now, and in a very little after. The List I give is as complete as now, after Three-score of Years, I could have it. Probably there may be some Mistakes in some of their Names, their Parishes or Presbyteries where they resided, because this Account is made up in part from the verbal Notices given by old Ministers, and taken out of several old Lists which I have seen. And, which I more lament, there are some Parishes out of which I know Ministers were ejected, and yet I can by no Means recover their Names. But I persuade myself this is the most exact List that yet hath been framed, and the best I could give from the Helps in my Hand.

List of the Presbyterian Ministers ejected at this Time.

I have added it App. N^o. 37. and, as far as I could recover them, have added the Names of such as conformed to Prelacy, that the Advocates for that Government may see whom they have to glory in, especially in the West and South. And to make this List of Nonconformists to Prelacy as full as might be, I have added an Account of such Presbyterian Ministers in the North of Ireland, who refused Conformity to Episcopacy there, and suffered severely enough for it; because I have always found the elder Presbyterian Ministers in Ireland reckoning themselves upon the same Bottom with, and as it were a Branch of the Church of Scotland. It stands App. N^o. 38. as it comes to my Hand, under the Correction of the Reverend Ministers of that Kingdom; and the Reader may see a full List of the ejected and nonconformist Ministers in England; in the Abridgment of Mr. Baxter's Life formerly mentioned.

App. N^o. 37.

List of non-conformist Ministers in the North of Ireland.

App. N^o. 38.

The Ejecting near Four Hundred such worthy Ministers, was the greater Hardship, that generally speaking they were Persons of remarkable Grace and eminent Gifts. They were pious, painful, and a great many of them learned and able Ministers of the Gospel, and all of them singularly dear to their People. Many of them were but young Men, who had but a small Share in the Actings in the late Times of Reformation, so much reproached now. Most of them had suffered under the Usurpation, for their Loyalty to the King, and their refusing the Tender.

Character of the ejected Ministers.

Those Persons were not only deprived of their Livings in Time to come, but of the last Year's Stipend, for which they had served; and in the Winter Season obliged with sorrowful Hearts and empty Pockets to wander, I know not how many Miles, with their numerous and small Families, many of them scarce knew whither. But the Lord wonderfully provided for them and theirs, to their own Confirmation and Wonder. And should I set down here many Accounts I have from very good Hands, of the remarkable Interpositions of kind Providence in their Straits, they might tend to the Conviction of Unbelievers: But they are too many to come in here, some of them will fall in afterwards.

Hardships in their Ejections.

All this was for no other Fault in them, save a Firmness to their known and professed Principles. They are deprived of their Ministry, which of all Things on Earth was dearest to them, without ever being summoned, called, or heard; no Libel was given them, neither were they ever heard upon the Reasons of their Nonconformity.

They are punished without any Process.

This severe Procedure with so many excellent Men was the Foundation of many of the Distractions and Troubles, until the happy Revolution. In the North Parts of Scotland, many Places of the Highlands and Isles, a good many Ministers conformed; so that this Stroke lay heaviest where People had most of the Gospel and Knowledge of real Religion, which made it the worse to bear. And it was the more distressing to the People, that their Ministers suffered so hard Things, merely for their adhering to the Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government of this Reformed Church, and the Covenants which they themselves had sworn solemnly, and often renewed.

This Ejection falls heaviest on the West and South, and was Foundation of much of the Trouble till the Revolution.

I find those worthy Ministers blamed for leaving their Congregations so easily, and going out at the first Publication of the Council's Pleasure. At this Distance I reckon the most Part of my Readers must be very much unacquainted with Circumstances of this Hour and Power of Darkeness, and wonder why so many excellent Persons, in good Terms with their God, their Conscience, and their People, did so easily part with their Charges. Therefore, besides what I have already given from Mr. Robert Douglas upon this Head, I think it not improper to give the Reader a Taste of the Circumstances Things stood in at this Time, and leave him to form a more favourable Judgment of the Conduct of so many Presbyterian Ministers, than some have done.

The Censures passed upon them for leaving their Charges, considered.

Preaching after the First of November last was declared a seditious Conventicle, and some forbore to hear the Presbyterian Ministers who continued to preach, notwithstanding of the Act of Glasgow; so fickle and uncertain are the Sentiments of a Multitude, that some were ready even to have jealousied the Ministers, had they continued at their Posts, as secretly in 1663.

Collusion

Collusion with the Bishops, as afterwards did appear in the Reproaches cast on some this Way.

Upon the other Hand, the most solid and judicious, and far greater Part of their People, encouraged Ministers at this Time to enter upon Suffering: So far were they from censuring them for quitting their Charges, that they rejoiced in their Honesty and Firmness to the Principles and Covenants of this Church.

None of the Ministers questioned the Magistrate's Power over their Persons and Families, or that upon just Grounds, which indeed were not in this Case, he might banish and confine them, as well as imprison or put them to Death. And to be sure it was impossible for them to maintain themselves against the persecuting State in the Issue; and the Benefit arising to their Flock by continuing at their Work a few Sabbaths, till Force should be employed to dispossess them, they were of Opinion would never have balanced the Penalties of the Acts, a Minister's Ruin, and at best his Banishment.

Further, they had the Example of Multitudes of worthy Ministers in neighbouring Churches, to lead them into the Method they took. In England Presbyterian Ministers took this same Course, when absolutely discharged the Exercise of their Ministry; whereas here, this was only done by Consequence.

And if we may reason from Events, and the Issue of this their Practice, it is plain, that if the Ministers had continued at their Work publicly, until they had been gradually turned out one by one in a Way of Violence, which was Bishop Sharp's Scheme, and their Room had been still filled up as the Prelates had Leisure, the Change had neither been so sensible and affecting as it was to many, nor the Opposition to Bishops by far so considerable as it came to be. But now this uniform Course for many Ministers jointly fell into, was the first and a very remarkable and clear Stand against Prelacy, a fair Testimony against this horrid Invasion made upon the Church, and did mightily alienate the Nation from the Bishops. Indeed this Wound, made by such a general Act of Passive Obedience, and cheerful Suffering, was what the Bishops could never heal in the West and South of Scotland.

Let me only add, that as the Violence of the Time was such as they had no probable Prospect of standing out against it, so the Ministers judged it would be more for the Interest of their People, to be left in some Measure to be useful now and then to them privately, in Visiting, Conversing, and Preaching, than that, by absolute Disobedience to the Acts, they should be entirely deprived of them.

The melancholy Circumstances of their People.

The Reader will easily perceive, that the Circumstances of conscientious Presbyterians were most deplorable, by the ejecting of so many worthy Ministers. Last Winter and this Spring were the heaviest, Presbyterians, that is, the Bulk and Body of the People in Scotland of the greatest Piety and Probity, ever saw.

Multitudes of Congregations without the preached Gospel.

Parish Churches, generally speaking, through the Western and Southern Shires, were now waste and without Sermon, which had not happened in Scotland since the Reformation from Papery; and the brighter and sweeter the Light had been formerly, the blacker and more intolerable was this sudden and general Darkness. The common People now had Leisure, as well as Ground enough, to heighten their former Aversion at the Bishops the Authors of all this Calamity.

Their Hardships before they could hear any Sermon.

In many Places they had 20 Miles to run before they heard a Sermon, or got the spiritual Manna, which of late fell so thick about their Tents. Some went to the elder Ministers, not directly touched by the Act of Glasgow. Such who could not reach them, frequented the Family-worship and Exercises of the younger Ministers, now outed of their Churches. And so great were the Numbers who came to their Houses, that some were constrained to preach without Doors, and at length to go to the open Fields. This was the Original of Field-meetings in Scotland, which afterwards made so much Noise, and in some few Years was made Death by Law, first to the Minister, and then to the Hearers.

Original of Field-meetings.

Terrible Abuses committed on the Lord's Day.

At this Time began the barbarous and unchristian Abuses, committed upon the Lord's holy Day by the rude Soldiers, which shall be afterwards noticed. When People flocked to the Churches of the few remaining Presbyterian Ministers, Parties of armed Men went up and down upon the Sabbath, to exact the Fine imposed upon such as did not keep their own Parish-church, by the Proclamation, December 23^d last: This, we shall find, turned frequent in a little Time; and upon the Road, and at the Churches of the old Presbyterian Ministers, they plundered and abused such as would not presently swear they were Parishioners in that Place.

The People suffered yet more from the Ministers thrust in upon them.

As the Presbyterians in Scotland suffered in a most sensible Part, by the Loss of their own dear Pastors, who had been so useful among them; so they reckoned themselves in some Sort yet more oppressed by thrusting in upon them a Company of Men, who were not only useless, but hurtful unto them, and really the Authors of most of the Harassings and Persecution of the common People to be narrated.

Those termed Curates, which Observes on that Name.

Those Underlings of the Bishops were called by the Country People Curates, a Name rather odious than proper; for the most Part of them were both unfit for, and very much neglected the Cure of Souls. The Prelates, strictly speaking, were Sine-cures, and few or none of them preached, save at extraordinary Occasions. Those Substitutes of theirs were set to the Care and Cure of Souls; but as their Care was about the Fleece, so they rent and wounded the Sheep and Lambs, instead of curing them. 1663.

That the Reader may have some View of the Manner of their coming in at this Time, and somewhat of their Character; he would remember that the Bishops diocesan Meetings last Year were very ill kept; in some Places there were not so many Ministers came as there had been Presbyteries in the Diocese, and I find it observed, that some Prelates had none at all. General Remarks on the coming in of Curates.

Wherefore this Winter and Spring, the Bishops were busied in levying a Crew of those Curates to fill up the now Multitudes of vacant Parishes. They were mostly young Men from the northern Shires, raw, and without any Stock of Reading or Gifts: These were brought West, in a Year or two after they had gone through their Philosophy in the College, and having nothing to subsist upon, were greedily gaping after Benefices. To such the common People were ready to ascribe all the Characters of Jeroboam's Priests; and it must be owned great Numbers of them were as void of Morality and Gravity as they were of Learning and Experience, and scarce had the very Appearance of Religion and Devotion. Character of them.

They came into Parishes, much with the same Views a Herd hath when he contracts to feed Cattle; and such a Plenty of them came from the North at this Time, that it is said a Gentleman of that Country cursed the Presbyterian Ministers heartily; For, said he, since they have been turned out, we can't have a Lad to keep our Cows. Those, with some few elder Expectants, who, by Reason of their Scandal and Insufficiency, could have no Encouragement under Presbytery, were the Persons forced in upon People in room of the routed Ministers. The Manner of their Entry to Parishes.

In many Places the Patrons, some from Principle, and others because they were under a Necessity to please the Bishop in their Nomination, refused to present; so the Right of Presentation devolved into the Bishops Hands. Indeed the whole of the Curates were of the Prelates Choice; and perhaps it may a little excuse them, that really they had no better, among such as would subject to them, to fix upon. The most of them chosen by Prelates.

Certainly this was a very ruining Step to the Interests of Prelacy in Scotland; and some, when too late, saw so much. I know some of that Perswasion do endeavour to reproach Presbyterians after the Revolution, for taking the same false Step; but their Information, to say no more, is ill. If any insufficient Ministers have been at any Time brought in by Presbyterians to Congregations, I shall blame it in them as well as the other Side; and more, because they in other Things are agreeable to the Divine Institution, and ought not to take the Liberty others do: But that I may set this Matter in its due Light, Presbyterian Ministers, at the Revolution, wished they had found more Labourers at first to send into the Lord's Vineyard; and yet they had a considerable Number of godly and learned Youths, very ripe for the holy Ministry. I shall not say, but in the Morning of the Church's Recovery, some few here and there, who had not that Time they would have desired for Study, were put to work in the Lord's Vineyard: But then accurate Care was taken, that any insuperable Defects this Way should be supplied by a shining Piety, Seriousness and Diligence. And whatever Outcry some of the Episcopal Party make as to the hasty filling of Churches after the Revolution, Presbyterians are willing a Parallel be drawn 'twixt the Intrants to the holy Ministry after the 1688. and those after the 1661. and are no way afraid of the Issue. Remarks upon the Settlement of Parishes by Presbyterians, after the Revolution.

Indeed there was never a more melancholy Change made in a Church, than when Presbyterian Ministers were thus turned out, and the Bishops with their Curates came in. This will be more than evident, if we consider the State of the Church of Scotland in the preceding Years, and compare it a little with the lamentable Circumstances it is now falling into. Comparison of the former State of the Church of Scotland under Presbytery, with its present State.

Before the Reintroduction of Prelacy last Year, every Parish in Scotland had a Minister, every Village a School, every Family, and in most Places each Person, had a Bible; the Children were all taught to read, and furnished with the holy Scriptures, either at their Parents or the Parish's Charge: Every Minister professed and obliged himself to adhere to the Protestant Reformed Religion, and owned the Westminster Confession, framed by the Divines of both Nations, and were regulate by our excellent Acts of Assemblies. State of Things before the Restoration.

Most Part of Ministers did preach thrice a Week, and lecture once, to say nothing of Catechizing, and other Pastoral Duties, wherein they abounded according to the Proportion of their Ability and Faithfulness. None of them were scandalous, insufficient, or negligent, as far as could be noticed, while Presbyteries continued in their Power. A Minister could not be easy himself without some Seals of his Ministry, and Evidences of the Divine Approbation in the Souls of his People, of which there were in that Period not a few. One might have lived a good while in many Congregations, and rode through much of Scotland, without hearing an Oath. You could scarce have lodged in a House where God was not worshipped, by singing, reading the Word, and Prayer; and the publick Houses were ready to complain their Trade was broke, every Body now was become so sober.

As soon as the Prelates and their Curates were thrust in, one would have met with the plain Reverse of all this, which was the heavier, that it resembled King Saul's Change, a bad Spirit after a good. Some Two Years ago there was scarce a Minister or Expectant in this Church, but professed himself a covenanted Presbyterian; and so the Bishops and Curates in the Eye of

The plain Reverse of all this after it.

1663.

The Curates
very coldly received;

of the common People came in with Perjury, written in their Foreheads, where Holiness to the Lord should have been; and one need not wonder at the Opposition made to them.

When the Curates entered their Pulpits, it was by an Order from the Bishop, without any Call from, yea contrary to the Inclinations of the People. Their personal Character was black, and no wonder their Entertainment was coarse and cold. In some Places they were welcomed with Tears in Abundance, and Intreaties to be gone: In others with Reasonings and Arguments, which confounded them: And some entertained them with Threats, Affronts, and Indignities, too many here to be repeated. The Bell's Tongue in some Places was stolen away, that the Parishioners might have an Excuse for not coming to Church. The Doors of the Church in other Places were barricado'd, and they made to enter by the Window literally.

And in some Places violently opposed:

The laxer of the Gentry easily engaged to join in their drinking Cabals, which with all Iniquity did now fearfully abound, and sadly exposed them: And in some Places the People, fretted with the dismal Change, gathered together, and violently opposed their Settlement, and received them with Showers of Stones. This was not indeed the Practice of the religious and more judicious; such Irregularities were committed by the more ignorant Vulgar, yet they were so many Evidences of the Regard they were like to have from the Body of their Parishioners. Such who were really serious mourned in secret, as Doves in the Valleys, and from a Principle could never countenance them, and others dealt with them as hath been said.

Which drew down Persecution.

This Opposition to the Settlement of the Curates, occasioned severe Enquiries and Prosecutions before the Council; and we shall meet with Instances of it just now from Irongray and Kirkcudbright this Year, and more Instances will offer from many other Parishes of the Kingdom. The Punishment became very severe, Banishment to America, cruel Scourgings, and heavy Finings. Thus the Effects of forcing the Curates in upon Congregations were Confusion, and every evil Work, and the first Fruit of the Prelates Ministers was the Scattering of their Congregations.

Debates arise about the Lawfulness of hearing the Sermons of the Curates.

Towards the Beginning of this Year I am now upon, that Question sprang up among the People, which was the Occasion of so much hot Persecution afterwards, Whether they might hear the Curates? They were looked upon as coming in over the Belly of solemn Oaths and Covenants the Kingdom was under to the Lord; and the People did not find their Conscience relieved from these by the Act of Parliament introducing Prelacy; and 'tis not much to be wondered at, that there were Scruples to hear Men put into Pulpits by military Force, and kept in by so many Banishments, Fines, and so much Cruelty.

The Immorali-ties of the Curates.

The longer they continued, and the better they were known, the more they were lothed for their dreadful Immoralities. If that Party were to be dealt with in their own Coin, a black List might be given of Scandals, unheard of except among Popes and Romish Priests, about this Time breaking out among them: But I do not love to rake into this unpleasant Subject. Some of them, alas too many, were heard swearing very rudely in the open Streets. And this was but of a Piece with the Doctrine taught in their Pulpits, that to swear by Faith, Conscience, and the like, were innocent Ways of speaking. And they used to adduce Bishop Andrews, as of those Sentiments. Instances were sadly common of their staggering in the Streets, and wallowing in the Gutters, even in their canonical Habits; and this needs be no Surprise, when many were Witnesses to Bishop Wishart's Preaching publicly, that he was not to be reckoned a Drunkard, who was now and then overtaken with Wine or strong Liquor, but he only who made a Trade of following after strong Drink.

If I should speak of the Uncleanliness and vile Practices of Mr. Bruce Curate at Balmerino, Bishop Sharp's Chaplain; Chisholm of Liliesleaf, Mr. John Paterson, afterwards Bishop, who was chastised by the reformed Bishop; Mr. Keith in Ginglekirk, Mr. Thomas Hamilton at Carnwath; the Accounts would stun the Reader, and offend modest Ears. Mr. Archibald Beith Curate in Arran, of whom we shall hear afterwards, and one Duncan, near Perth, were processed, and the last executed for Murder. Mr. Edward Thomson at Anstruther, and Mr. Gideon Penman at Creighton, were charged with Crimes yet of a higher Nature. The first made a terrible Exit, either by his own Hands or the Devil's; and the last, tho' delated by many confessing Witches, escaped what he deserved. I find all those taken Notice of, as Things notoriously known in this Period I am describing, in the Papers of a worthy Minister; and Multitudes might be added; but indeed this is a Subject I don't love to enlarge upon. Those and many other Things gave Ground to People, to form a very black Idea of those Persons now thrust in upon this Church. And if all be true which at this Time was believed of Primate Sharp, one needs not wonder such Persons were brought in, and overlooked, notwithstanding of their prodigious Wickedness.

Their Work, when they come into Parishes, height-ned Peoples Dislike.

Indeed tho' the Curates had been freer than they were of those gross Immoralities, they had Work upon their hand, ready enough of it self to give People bad Impressions of them. They were to subdue the People of Scotland to the hated Bishops, yea, to persuade them to alter their Religion and Principles in some Measure. The Way of their coming in, and this Carriage when in, helped the Odium forward.

When

When a Presbyterian Minister came in by the hearty Choice of the People, and recommended himself by Faithfulness and Painfulness in his Master's Work, and a humble Dependence upon the Lord, there was no Need of Soldiers to force People to him; Hearers came unconstrained: But the Curates were settled by the secular Arm, Compulsion and Violence; and the Wonder must be the less that their Doctrine was unacceptable, and themselves loathed. The Apostle of the Gentiles recommended himself to the Consciences of those he dealt with, Pureness, by Knowledge, by Long-suffering, by Kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by Love unfeigned, by the Word of Truth, by the Power of GOD, by the Armour of Righteousness. Now another Course must be taken, since those Things were not to be found. The Curates were commended by Fines, Imprisonments, Banishments, Relegation and selling for Slaves, scourging, stigmatizing, and bloody Executions.

1663.
As did likewise their Settlement
by the Army

Most Part of Presbyterians did agree in the Conclusion and Practice of forbearing to hear the Curates, when they were thus forced in upon this Church; but the Grounds they went upon were very different, as may be seen in the Papers upon this Head, both in Print and Writ, which were pretty throng at this Time and afterwards.

Grounds of many then withdrawing from Hearing.

There were some who thought the Curates Ministry null and illegal, because their Authors, the Bishops, Ordination was void, in as much as they were fallen from their Office, by open Violation of their own and the Land's Solemn Covenant, nullified their former regular and scriptural Ordination by Re-ordination, and now derived any Power they claimed from the Supremacy entirely.

Many thought the Curates had no Relation to the Congregations where they entered, and upon that Score refused to joyn in with them, without dipping into the Validity of their Ministerial Actings: And indeed 'tis undeniable, they came in by Force almost every where, and not only without the Invitation, but against the Inclination of the People; and refusing to hear them for a while, was the only Testimony the most sober and judicious had to give against this unaccountable Intrusion; and, one would think, a very modest and proper Testimony.

Some could not hear, because they observed the Bulk of them so immoral and profane, that they were ashamed to haunt their Company, much less could they own them as their Ministers; and those who were smooth and blameless, which was the Case of a few in more eminent Posts, many of these were erroneous in their Principles, and their Doctrine Pelagian, and very much tending to Popery. All of them were settled among them by Bishops, by virtue of the King's absolute Supremacy Ecclesiastical; and it was what stuck much with a good many, that by joyning with, and subjecting to their Ministry, they concurred all they could in their private Capacity, in owning that iniquous and burdensome Imposition.

In short, the Generality did reckon themselves bound, by the Oath of God's Covenant, against Prelates, and their Underlings: And since both were obtruded upon them by an Oppression in their Civil Liberties and Reformation-rights, they could not prevail with themselves actively to concur in the Deformation now established, or by countenancing it, to bind it down upon themselves and their Posterity. And lastly, a good many forbear Hearing, because it was offensive and stumbling to many serious and religious People.

Those Things prevailed with the Generality, at this Time, to refuse to countenance the Curates. Indeed some now, but especially many Years after this, when the whole Presbyterian Ministers were silenced and banished, and they had no other Way of publick Worshipping of God, and not daring to call entirely in question the Validity of their Mission, and having no sinful Terms of holding Communion, as they thought, imposed upon them, did hear, especially a little before the Liberty, when Circumstances were not a little altered from what they were at this Time I am upon.

Some continued to hear, and their Reasons

And such as withdrew now, alledged many Things in their own Vindication, which I shall not here enter into the Detail of. They advanced Instances in other Churches; the Practice of the Christians in Chrysostom's Case, when, by the Emperor unjustly turned out of his Charge, his People would not subject to such who came in his Room; the Practice of many worthy Persons in Holland, when several worthy Ministers there were turned out by the Barnaveist Faction, and Arminians put in their Place, they would neither hear nor submit to their Ministry, but went and joyned in Word and Sacraments with the Calvinist Ministers remaining among them.

Reasons brought by Withdrawers
in their own
Vindication

Further they alledged, That Scripture, primitive Practice, and the Method of this Church of Scotland since the Reformation, gave them ground to withdraw from such who were settled in Congregations, not only renitente, but even contradicente Ecclesia: And they declared, That in such Cases they could never see where the Pastoral Tie, and Ministerial Obligation was bottomed; and in some of those Reasonings they brought the Judgment of some of the best Writers in the English Church it self to support them.

Those Reasonings I only relate as an Historian: The Consequence of so many gravelling Scruples, and the Nonconformity which followed upon them, was first empty Churches. The Ministers forced in upon the West and South, in several Places, for some Time had

Consequences of the Curates Intrusion.

bare Walls, and no Body to preach unto; and many had scarce Twenty or Thirty Hearers; yea, in very numerous Congregations not above Fifty. And in the next Place, a grievous Persecution, till vast Numbers of the more ignorant and meaner Sort, were compelled by Force, and even too many others were brought by Violence to do what was against their Profession, and the Light of their own Conscience. This was a long and fiery Trial.

The following Persecution merely for Conscience Sake.

It will be noticed now, upon every Turn, by the Reader, without my Help, That all the Branches of the Persecution now growing so hot, were merely for Conscience Sake, and not upon any real Disregard to the King and Government, which they did heartily own and submit to, in all Civil and lawful Things. Indeed the Whole of the Persecution I am entering upon this Year, and the Two following, was barely upon the Score of Nonconformity to Prelates and Curates; and no other Reason can be assigned for the Severities during this Year, or the Rigour and terrible Heights of the High Commission, and heavy Oppression of the Country, which issued in the Rising at Pentland; as will appear fully in the Sequel of this Book.

S E C T. II.

Of the more general Acts and Proceedings of the Council, this Year 1663.

General View of the Procedure of Council.

WE shall meet with very severe Persecutions of many Ministers, Gentlemen, and Country People, by the Privy Council this Year: But, before I come to them, let me take a View of the Acts of that Court, and the Parliament, in as far as they concern suffering Presbyterians; and I lay them before the Reader from the Registers, and begin with those of the Council.

The Act of Fines, made last Session of Parliament, and the Earl of Middleton his Endeavours to have a Share of the Fines, turned about to his Ruin. Those Fines concern Presbyterians so much, and the Procedure of the Managers about them being but very little known, I shall give a Detail of what I meet with in the Council-registers about them this Year altogether, and then go on to other Matters which took up that Court.

What they did about the Act of Fines.

This Matter will stand best in its own Light, from the principal Papers themselves, which are not very long. February 12th, the Council receive and read a Letter from the King, of the Date, January 23^d, last; which follows.

Right Trusty, &c.

King's Letter,
Jan. 23. to Council.

WE have considered that late Act of the last Session of Parliament, Intituled, on the Back of that Copy sent to Us, Anent Persons excepted forth of the Indemnity, bearing Date at Edinburgh, the 9th of September, 1662. which Act hath not the Names of the Persons, nor the Proportions of the Fines imposed: Yet we have lately received a List of the Names, and those Proportions, which we have not as yet taken into Our Consideration. In the mean Time, seeing this Act appoints the Sums imposed to be paid, the one Half at one Term, the other at another, (both which Terms are blank in the Copy transmitted to Us) with this express Certification, That whoever of the fined Persons shall not make Payment of the respective Sums imposed upon them, betwixt and the above mentioned Terms, they are from thenceforth to lose the whole Benefit of Our Pardon and Indemnity: And the said Days being past, and the Sums not paid, 'tis now as then, and then as now declared, That they have no Share in Our Pardon, but are excepted therefrom, and their Estates, Rents, and Goods to be sequestrate and raised for Our Use, their Persons secured, and they punished as guilty of Sedition, Usurpation, and Rebellion. And that you, Our Privy Council, and others of Our Ministers and Magistrates, are ordained to see this Act put in due, exact, and punctual Execution, conform to the Tenor thereof, as you will be answerable. And seeing We are informed, that the first Term's Payment is at Candlemas first, upon serious Consideration of the whole Matter, We have, for Reasons importing the Good of Our Service, thought fit to suspend the first Term's Payment of the said Fines, until Our further Pleasure be signified thereanent; Likeas, We do by these Presents suspend the first Term's Payment. As also by Our Royal Prerogative We do dispense with all the Penalties contained in the said Certification, which the Non-payers should have incurred by their not Payment at the Term foresaid. And We do hereby require you to make publick Proclamation of this Our Command, for the Suspending of the first Term's Payment of the Fines, until We shall declare Our further Pleasure concerning the same; as also Our dispensing with the Penalties, as afore said, by open Proclamation, and all other

Ways

‘ Ways requisite; to the end Our good Subjects may take notice of the same. And further, if any Person be, or is impowered to be Receiver of the Fines, you shall in Our Name discharge him to receive any of them till Our further Pleasure shall be declared. We also require you to registrate this Our Letter in the Council-books: And to these Our Commands We expect your ready Obedience, and a speedy Account. Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the 23^d of January, 1662, and of Our Reign the Fourteenth Year.’

1663.

By His Majesty's Command,
LAWDERDALE.

The same Day the Council draw up a Proclamation, intimating the Suspension of the first Term's Payment of the Fines, and the Penalties incurred, just in the Terms of the above Letter, and so it needs not be repeated; and order the Macers to pass to the Market-cross of Edinburgh, and intimate so much. Subscribitur.

But next Day, February 13th, I find in the Registers as follows. ‘ There being a Letter directed from the Lord Commissioner his Grace, of the Date the 7th of this Instant, bearing, ‘ That if you have not published any Thing relating to the Fines, I do, in His Majesty's Name, desire that nothing may be done; for his Majesty's Commands are obeyed by the not Publication of the Act for Fines.’ Therefore the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council ordain the Proclamation subscribed, anent the Fines, of the Date the 12th of this Instant, be not published until further Order; and recommend to the Lord Chancellor to write to the Lord Commissioner, to give an Account thereof to his Majesty.’

Council's Act, Feb. 13 upon a Letter from the Commissioner Middleton, sitting Proceed.

Glencairn Chanc. I. P. D.

Thus Matters stood till March 17th, when I find the Proclamation agreed upon February 12th, was published by the Chancellor in the Interval of Council-days, upon his receiving the Letter just now to be spoke of; and next Council-day, March 24th, his Majesty's Letter directed to the Council, anent the Fines, was read; the Tenor whereof follows.

Proclamation at length published, March 17.

Right Trusty, &c.

‘ UPON Consideration of an Act of the last Session of Our Parliament, Intituled, Act nent Persons excepted forth of the Indemnity, bearing the Date of the 9th of September, 1662. We did, by Our Letter of the 23^d of January last, command you to make public Intimation of Our Pleasure for suspending of the first Term's Payment of the Fines, until We shall declare Our further Pleasure thereanent; as also for dispensing with the Penalties, and that by open Proclamation, and all other Ways requisite, to the end all Our good Subjects might take Notice of the same: This Letter We commanded you to registrate in Our Council-books, and to these Commands We did require ready Obedience, and a speedy Account. In Pursuance of which Letter, We were informed that you gave Order for a Proclamation upon the 12th of February last: But We wondred to hear, That by the 13th of February, you did ordain by an Act, that that Proclamation should not be published until further Order; yet, not having heard any Thing from you concerning that sudden Change, We did forbear the declaring of Our Pleasure concerning the same; till We should see an Extract of the said Act. And now finding, by a subscribed Extract of that Act, that a Letter was directed by the Earl of Middleton, Our Commissioner, to Our Chancellor, in these Words, That if you have not published any Thing relating to the Fines, I do in his Majesty's Name desire that nothing may be done: We have again thought fit to let you know, that We do again require you to obey Our said Letter of the 23^d of January last, according to the Tenor of it. So expecting a speedy Account of these Our renewed Commands, We bid you heartily farewell. Whitehall, March 10th.

The King's Second Letter suspending the Fines, March 10.

By His Majesty's Command,
LAWDERDALE.

1663.
Council's Procedure on it.

When the Chancellor presented the above Letter to the Council, he acquainted them, that upon the Receipt of it he had immediately given Orders to the Clerk to make Publication of the Proclamation at the Cross of Edinburgh. 'The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council do approve of the Lord Chancellor's Proceedings, and give him hearty Thanks for his Diligence and Care in prosecuting his Majesty's Commands. And considering that Part of his Majesty's Letter, January 23^d, requiring Persons impowered to receive the Fines, not to uplift them; Therefore do discharge all who have been, or shall be appointed, to intermit with the said Fines, or to uplift the same or any Part thereof, while his Majesty's further Pleasure be known; and ordain Intimation hereof to be made to Sir Alexander Durham Lyon, and others having Interest.'

This is all I meet with in the Registers as to the Fines this Year. The Reader will easily perceive where the Stop of the King's Letter's being execute, lay; and this was a very considerable Article against Middleton, who had, it seems, kept up some Orders, formerly sent him, delaying the Execution of the Fines. In the following Years we shall find the King's Pleasure declared, and the Fines severely exacted.

Mr. Jo. Wilkie, Collector of the vacant
Stipends, petitions; and the Bishops are writ to for exact Lists.

March 3^d, the Council, in Prosecution of the former Acts of Parliament, ordaining vacant Stipends to be uplifted, having named Mr. John Wilkie to collect them, write the following Letter to the several Bishops through the Kingdom.

My Lord,

THE Lords of Privy Council, having heard a Petition presented by Mr. John Wilkie Collector of the vacant Stipends, did recommend to me to write to your Lordship, that you make Trial what Churches have been vacant within your Diocese, how long they have vaiked, and the true Quantity of the Stipends; as also what of the said Vacancies have been uplifted by the said Mr. John Wilkie, that the Case of the said Vacancies may be truly known, and all Obstructions removed that may hinder the Ingetting of what is resting, to be employed to the Uses for which the same are destinate: And that with your Conveniency you may make a Report thereof to the Parliament, or Privy Council. I am, &c.

GLENCAIRN Chancellor.

I find no more upon this Head. Many were the Vacancies made by the late Acts of Council and Parliament, and there would be a round Sum to distribute among such as they called Sufferers in late Times, whereas Presbyterian Ministers were among the greatest Sufferers, and now are brought to a new Scene of suffering.

The Diet of the diocesan Meeting in Galloway delayed.

That same Diet of Council, 'The Lords of Council finding it most necessary and expedient upon very grave and good Considerations, that the Diet of the Diocesan Meeting of the Synod of Galloway, should be continued while the 2^d Wednesday of May next, have thought fit, and hereby do continue the same till that Day, and ordain Macers or Messengers at Arms, to make Publication hereof at the Market-crosses of Edinburgh, Kirkcudbright, and other Places needful.' The Reason of this was, few or none of the Ministers in that Synod did comply with Prelacy, and none were expected at this Synod. Most Part of the Ministers of that Country, as we shall hear, were cited in February before the Council, either to frighten them into a Compliance, or in order to a Banishment.

While the Council are persecuting Presbyterian Ministers, and the very Day the Galloway Ministers are before them, March 24. they have such Accounts of the terrible Increase of Popery, as draw out the following Letter to each of the Bishops.

Right Reverend Father in GOD.

Letter to the Bishops about Popery.

THE Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, having received frequent Informations of the great Increase of Popery within this Kingdom, and the insolent and bold Carriage of many of that Profession, who not only make open Avowance of the same, tho' contrary to Law, but make it their Work to pervert and seduce his Majesty's good Subjects into that sinful and wicked Way, and to corrupt them thereby both in their Religion, Obedience and Allegiance: And finding themselves obliged, in Conscience and Duty, to prevent the further Growth of this Evil, have therefore thought fit by those to desire your Lordship to take some effectual Course at the next Meeting of your Synod, or any other Way you shall think fit, that an exact Account of the Number, Quality, and Names of all Persons within your Diocese, who profess Popery or are popishly affected, and upon that Account withdraw from the publick Ordinances, and that with all Diligence you send in the same to his Majesty's Council; and that in the mean Time all Means be used for bringing them to Conformity; and in case of their Obstinacy, that the Censures of the Church be execute against them. Herein expecting the Fruits of your Care and Diligence, we rest your Lordship's affectionate Friends.

GLENCAIRN Ch. &c. ut in Sederunt.

In

In the Progress of this History we shall find the Bishops backward to this Work, and nothing done in it to purpose, tho' one would think there was no great Difficulty in it, had their Zeal against Papists been equal to that against Presbyterian Ministers. 1663.

That same Day they give the following Order about private Meetings. 'Information being given that there are several Persons who study to keep up private Meetings and Conventions, in several Parts of the Kingdom, studying to alienate the Hearts of the Subjects from the present Government in Church and State; the Lords of Council do recommend to the Lord Chancellor to write to Sir James Turner, or any other whom he shall think fit, to take Notice of all such Persons, and to give Account thereof to the Council.'

Council's Order about private Meetings.

What is meant here by private Meetings, I shall not determine; I take them to relate to the Meetings in the outed Presbyterian Ministers Houses for Worship, when they were turned out; or to the Meetings among good People for Prayer and Conference, in this black and sinful Time. This I know, that at neither of them was there any alienating People from the King's Government; and if their Complaints to God against the Invasions upon the Church by introducing Prelates and Curates, and Confession of their own and the Land's Sins, alienate Peoples Hearts from the prelatical Government of the Church, this they avowed, and could not but pour out their Soul before the Lord in the Distress this Church was at this Time under. I only further remark, that Prelatical Men in this Church, and Prelates, have ever been against Meetings for Prayer and Christian Societies this Way; and even during Presbytery, towards the 1640. and afterwards, Mr. Henry Guthrie, and other Malignants among the Ministry, who had continued at their Charges under Presbytery, but were for Prelacy in their Judgment, made a terrible Sputter against private Meetings and Societies for Prayer: But Mr. Rutherford, Dickson, and Douglas took up that Matter, and were so happy as to fall upon an Act of Assembly, that did much to heal the Rent that was like to rise upon this Head. The Lord, it is certain, did wonderfully countenance private Meetings for Prayer in this Period I am describing.

Remarks upon it.

The Council, April 14th, make the following Appointment. 'The Chancellor having declared to the Council, that he had received a Letter from a sure Hand, that there was great Abuse committed by several Heritors and Parishioners in Galloway, (I am of Opinion it ought to be in Renfrew or Air-shire, and I observe here, the Registers are not so exactly writ as to the Names of Persons and Places, as I could wish) especially those of the Parish of Nisbetoun, tending highly to the Disquiet of the Government, both of Church and State, without present Remedy be provided; the Lords of Council, upon Consideration thereof, appoint the Marquis of Montrose, the Earl of Eglinton, and Lord Cochran, and the Lord Chancellor to be Supernumerary, if his Affairs can permit, to meet at such Times and Places as they shall think fit, and to call the Persons, who have been either the Committers or Assistants to that Abuse, before them, and, after hearing them, to examine Witnesses, if need be, for proving what shall be laid to their Charges; and if, after Examination of Witnesses and Parties, there shall be just Ground found, that the said Lords shall either cause secure their Persons in Firmance, or cause them find sufficient Caution to answer before the Council with all Diligence; and that a Report thereof be made to them.'

Commissioners appointed to enquire into the Abuse in the Parish of Nisbetoun.

Very probably this Letter was from the Archbishop of Glasgow; and it shews how ready the Council were to serve the Prelates, when, upon one Letter from them, or others, they straight appoint such a Committee as this is. I find no more about this Affair, and suppose nothing was made of it. Another Evidence of this is, what follows in the Registers. 'The Chancellor having declared, that there were several Ministers, and preaching Expectants, who inveighed highly against his Majesty's Government, ordered that Letters be direct to cite all such Ministers, or preaching Expectants, as the Lord Chancellor shall give Order for, to compare before the Council next Council-day, to answer for their Misdemeanors.'

Little further remarkable of a general Nature offers until the 13th of August, when the Council pass their Act and Proclamation of this Day's Date, which may be termed The Scots Mile Act. I have added it, App. N^o. 39. The Council had had considerable Numbers of Presbyterian Ministers before them, for the refusing Obedience to the Act of Glasgow, as we shall see in the Fifth Section. It had been endless Work to have called the vast Numbers from all Corners before them, who were Recusants to their former Acts; and therefore, after they had, to terrify the rest, brought not a few before them, and banished them benorth Tay, they come to a shorter Way, and comprise them all in this Act.

Proclamation August 13. ordering Ministers to remove so many Miles from their Charges. App. N^o. 39.

It deserves our Remark in the Entry, that it was not formed, as most of other Proclamations are, upon Letters from the King, but at Edinburgh, without any Orders from his Majesty about it: And it is the first Act of general Concern made after the Two Archbishops are admitted Counsellors; and indeed it favours much of their fiery persecuting Spirit. The Reader will further notice, That it was made during the Sitting of Parliament, the proper Legislature. Whether the Prelates dreaded the Parliament would not come in to so unreasonable an Act, or whether the Council inclined to assume this Power, properly Parliamentary, under their Nose, and, from their Connivance at such a Practice, plead a Right to make

Remarks upon it.

1663.

Laws for the Subjects, when the Parliament was not sitting, with a better Grace, I do not determine.

By this Act, Presbyterian Ministers entred since the 1649. not receiving Presentation and Collation, are to remove with their Families from their Parishes in Three Weeks, and must not reside within Twenty Miles of the same, or Six Miles of Edinburgh, or any Cathedral Church, or Three Miles to any Burgh Royal in the Kingdom, under Pain of Sedition. All Heritors or Housholders are discharged to receive them, but in the above Terms; and the Ministers ordained before the 1649. who attend not the Dioceſan Synods, are to be proceeded against as Contemners of his Majesty's Authority; as the Act it ſelf more fully bears.

From this Act we may ſee that the Biſhops would have none of the Presbyterian Ministers ſo much as breathing Air near them. The Five Mile Act in England was reckoned abundantly ſevere, but this runs far higher; and all along we ſhall find our Prelates ſcrew every Thing higher than the English Laws go.

In Part I have already taken notice of the Hardſhips in this rigid Act, and the bare Reading of it will diſcover them. Every Body muſt ſee what Charges and Trouble it puts poor Miniſters to, as well as their ſmall Families. They are removed merely for Conſcience ſake, far from their beloved People, from whom at leaſt they might have been allowed ſome Commiſeration in their Diſtreſs: But the Biſhops, in as far as lies in their Power, deprived them of any Thing which might in the leaſt alleviate their Sufferings, and very barbarouſly ſend them to make the beſt they can of a hard Lot among Strangers.

Presbyterian Miniſters had been already thrice puniſhed for their ſimple Nonconformity; and this is indeed the Fourth Proclamation and Punishment for the ſame pretended Crime of mere Nonſubjection to Biſhops, and their Adherence to the Reformation-rights of Scotland, and their own known Principles: And where the Equity of this Procedure lies, the Reader muſt judge.

According to the Epiſcopal Principles, at leaſt the Profeſſion of many of them, and ſure, according to the very Laws of this Time, the Government of the Church is ambulatory, a Matter indifferent, and entirely at the Diſpoſal of the Magiſtrate. At the worſt that can be made of the Miniſters Practice, they were only guilty of an Omiſſion in a Matter indifferent; and it is at beſt grievous Oppreſſion to violent Men at ſuch a Rate, and to force them to run counter to their own Light, in a Thing of ſuch a Nature, according to the Prelatiſts own Principles.

By former Laws none but one Miniſter muſt reſide in one Congregation; and I am of Opinion, the nicest Geographer will ſcarce find Room for near Four Hundred Miniſters to live in ſeparate Congregations, provided they keep by all the Conditions in this Act, Twenty Miles from their own Pariſh, Six Miles from Edinburgh, and from every Cathedral, and Three from every Burgh Royal.

Several of the outed Miniſters had Relations and Friends in Towns and Burghs, and the Industry of their Families was now the only Means of their Subſiſtence, and there they had the beſt Occaſion of imploying themſelves. By this Act they were almoſt deprived of the Means of educating their ſmall Children, at leaſt they muſt be at double Charges this Way, and have them removed from their Inſpection when at Schools. In a Word, it was every way unprecedented, as well as unreaſonable, to oblige poor Miniſters to remove themſelves and Families the Third Time, in leſs than the Space of one Year. Yet ſuch are the tender Mercies of the Wicked.

Upon the 7th of October, another ill-natured Act is paſſed in Council. The Biſhops were fretted that any of the Presbyterian Miniſters of Ireland ſhould have a Shelter in Scotland, and no leſs grated that ſuch Multitudes withdrew from hearing the Curates; and therefore, to reach both, this Act is framed; which being the Foundation of very much Perſecution, and not having ſeen it in Print, I ſhall inſert it here, tho' it be pretty long.

Act, October 7. againſt People who come out of Ireland,

here.

Apud Edinburgh, 7th October, 1663.

WH E R E A S his Majesty, with Advice and Conſent of his Eſtates of Parliament, by their Act and Proclamation bearing Date the 22^d Day of February 1661. finding, That many ſeditious and turbulent Perſons, Miniſters and others, in the Kingdom of Ireland, who by Reaſon of their Phanatick Principles could not comply with the Adminiſtration of his Majesty's Authority and Government ſo happily eſtabliſhed in that Kingdom, were coming over, expecting Shelter here, that they might be the more able to carry on their Deſigns in perverting the Allegiance of the Subjects, and ſubverting the Peace of the Kingdom; and it did much concern the Publick Peace, that ſuch Wafps and unworthy Perſons, Enemies to all lawful Authority, and to whom it is natural to ſtir up Sedition, and undermine the Peace wherever they are, ſhould have no Countenance in this Kingdom; did therefore declare, that no Perſons whoſoever coming from Ireland, without a ſufficient Paſs and Teſtimonial in Writ from the Lord Lieutenant, or from the Lords of Council, or ſome having Power from them, or the Sheriff of the County, or Mayor of the City where theſe Perſons lived, of their peaceable Carriage and Conformity to the Laws, ſhould be allowed any Reſidence, Re-ſcit,

ceit, and Stay within this Kingdom; but it should be lawful, likeas all Magistrates and Justices of the Peace, are hereby required to seize upon, and imprison such Persons wanting such Testimony, who should not willingly remove out of the Kingdom within fifteen Days after the intimating of the said Proclamation to them (excepting all ordinary known trafficking Merchants) likeas, by the said Act it is ordained, that all such Persons, who should come over with any such Testimony, should within fifteen Days after their Landing make their appearance before the Parliament, or in case of their not sitting, before his Majesty's privy Council, or such as shall be warranted by them, and make known the Reasons of their coming hither, and give Security, such as shall be thought fit, for their peaceable Carriage, otherwile to remove off the Country in fifteen Days; wherein if they should fail, Magistrates, Sheriffs, and other publick Ministers, are by the said Act empowered to apprehend, secure, and imprison them, till Course shall be taken with them as with seditious and dangerous Persons.

And seeing the said Act and Proclamation was only to endure for a Year after the Date thereof, and longer as the privy Council should think fit; and seeing the same has not yet been renewed or prorogated, neither as yet have any Person or Persons been nominated and empowered, before whom those coming from Ireland in Manner foresaid, should be examined, and make known the Reasons of their coming hither, and to whom they should find Caution for their peaceable Carriage in Manner mentioned in the said Act; by Reason whereof several Ministers have presumed to come from Ireland to this Kingdom, without either acknowledging the Authority of his Majesty's Parliament, or privy Council their Authority, Civil or Ecclesiastick, some of which have been so bold as to preach publicly in Churches, and others privately do watch their own Opportunities, to stir up the Subjects to Sedition, and alienate their Minds from the Government so happily established in Church and State: The Lords of his Majesty's privy Council have renewed, and by those presents do renew the said Act and Proclamation, and ordain the same to stand in full Force, Strength, and Effect, and to be put to due Execution against the Contrabeners thereof, and for that Effect have nominated, appointed, and empowered, and by thir presents nominate, appoint, and empower, William Earl of Glencairn Lord Chancellor, Hugh Earl of Eglington, the Earl of Galloway, William Lord Cochran, the Provost of Glasgow for the Time, the Provost of Air for the Time, Maxwell of Munthes, the Provost of Wigtoun for the Time, and Stuart of Taudergie, or any of them, to call before them all such Persons coming from Ireland, wanting sufficient Testimonies and Passes from the Lord Lieutenant, or other Persons mentioned in the said Act and Proclamation, who shall not willingly remove off the Kingdom within fifteen Days after the Publication of those presents, and to secure their Persons till his Majesty's Council be acquainted therewith; with Power also to the forenamed Persons or any of them, to examine all such Persons as shall come over from Ireland, having such Testimony, concerning their Reasons of coming hither, and to take such Caution and Security of them for their peaceable Carriage, as they shall think fit; and, in case they shall not find the said Security, to cause them to remove off the Country within fifteen Days, otherwile to apprehend, imprison, and secure them, until they be proceeded against as seditious Persons, and Disturbers of the publick Peace.

Moreover, the Lords of his Majesty's privy Council taking to their Consideration, that notwithstanding of the Acts of Parliament and Council, published for the preventing and suppressing the Seeds of Separation and Disobedience to Authority, divers Persons in several Parishes presume to withdraw and separate themselves from attending upon the ordinary Meetings for Divine Worship, in those Parishes where Ministers are legally planted, to the scandalous Contempt of the Laws, and great Increase of Disorder and Licentiousness, and that some do pervert the true Meaning of the Act of Parliament against Separation and Disobedience to Ecclesiastical Authority (of which we shall hear in the next Section) which appoints every Minister to give Admonition in presence of two Witnesses, to such Persons as shall be given up to the Council as Transgressors of the said Act; therefore the Lords of his Majesty's privy Council, for Explanation of that Clause of the said Act, according to the true Meaning and Intent thereof, do declare that those Persons shall be proceeded against by the Council as Transgressors of the Act, who withdraw from their Parish-church after three publick Admonitions given by the Ministers of the respective Parishes out of the Pulpit, in the Church, upon the Lord's Day, after Divine Service, and that the Minister's Attestation under his Hand, that in the presence of two or more sufficient Witnesses, he hath from the Pulpit upon three Lord's Days intimated the Names of such who ordinarily and wilfully absent themselves from the ordinary Meetings for Divine Worship in their own Parish-church, shall give a sufficient Ground of proceeding against such Persons as Transgressors of the said Act. For putting of which into the more effectual Execution, as they do discharge such Persons, who under the pretext of their being Elders in Kirk-sessions formerly, do go about to leaven the People with Dissatisfaction and Disobedience to the Laws and Ecclesiastical Authority, upon the Pain of being proceeded against as seditious Persons; so they do require such Persons as shall be called by the Ministers legally planted, to assist them for suppressing of Sin and Disorders in the Parish, to give their Concurrence for that Effect. And further they do command and require, and hereby authorize and warrant all Noblemen, Sheriffs, Magistrates of Burghs, Justices of Peace, and all Officers of the standing Forces, as they tender his Majesty's Service and the Peace of the Country, to give their Assistance and effectual Concurrence to Ministers in their respective Bounds in the Discharge of their Office, and to put the Law in Execution, and to execute the Penalties which are expressed in the Acts of Parliament and Council, from all and every Person who are Transgressors in every Parish, unless the Minister of the Parish where the Transgressor does reside, shall give a sufficient Reason why the said Person or Persons should not be proceeded against; and to take Care that the said Penalties be employed for the Relief of the Poor, and other pious Uses within the respective Parishes. And further, all Magistrates, Sheriffs, and other publick Ministers, are hereby ordained, as they will be answerable able upon their Duty, to put this present Act and Proclamation, with the Acts of Parliament and Council, hereby renewed and explained, to due Execution, against the Contraveners thereof, in Manner therein expressed, and ordain those Presents to be printed and published.

Remarks upon it.

This Act speaks for it self. I know not but the Noise about Blood's Plot, which was about this Time, might occasion a greater Severity in the first Part of this Proclamation, than otherwise perhaps might have been; but none of the Ministers who came here many Months ago, were in the least concerned in any Thing disloyal, and the Sedition talked of here, is only their Dislike at Prelatical Government. What I remarked upon the former Act, as to the Council's Procedure during the Sitting of Parliament, comes in upon this; for the Parliament was yet sitting: And what an arbitrary Step must it be in them, to explain and enlarge, yea, alter some of the Branches of an Act of this present Parliament, even when they themselves are sitting? After this, I confess, we need not be surprized to find few Parliaments, except upon some very special Occasions, since the Council take their Power to themselves, even when sitting.

Execution of it put in the Hand of the Army.

In short, the Reader no doubt hath observed, that the Execution of this Act, and the Uplifting of the Fines, afterward called Church-fines, for Absence from the Parish-church, are put in the Hands of the Army. Indeed Noblemen and others are named, but 'tis only pro more, and the Army were the Uplifters of the Penalties; and the Curates, we see, the Informers, and Witnesses in their own Cause, which certainly was very impolitick, as well as unreasonable.

Declaration much pressed in the End of this Year.

Towards the End of this Year, the Council are at much Pains to press the Declaration imposed by the Parliament, and it became Matter of sore Suffering to Multitudes. I shall give what I find in the Registers about it altogether. November 17th, the whole Lords of Privy Council present, viz. Chancellor, St. Andrews, Dumfermling, Roxburgh, Tweeddale, Kincardin, Halkerton, President, Register, Justice-clerk, Hatton, Niddry, Sir Robert Murray, did subscribe the Declaration appointed by Act of Parliament to be taken by all Persons in publick Trust; and recommend it to the President of the Session, to see that the same be taken by all the Members of the College of Justice.

That same Day, the following Letter was ordered to be directed to whole Sheriffs of Shires and Stewarts.

Assured Friends,

Letter to Sheriffs and Burghs upon the Declaration.

SEEING it is recommended to the Council, by the Parliament, to see their Act concerning the Declaration, to be taken by all Persons in publick Trust, put in Execution, and receive Obedience conform to the Tenor of the said Act, and that a speedy Account be returned thereof, immediately after the expiring of the Terms appointed for that Effect; we have thought fit to give you timeous Notice thereof, that your Deputes and Clerks subscribe, and be careful to require all those within your Shire to subscribe the Declaration, who are appointed to take the same, according as is appointed by the said Act of Parliament, whereof we have sent you a printed Copy, with the Declaration annexed; and that you give an Account of your Diligence immediately after the first of January next to come.

And because we are informed likewise, That the late Act of Council concerning Ministers that have entred since the Year 1649. and have not obtained Collation from their Ordinary, has been openly and avowedly disobeyed, the said Ministers still remaining in those Places prohibited by the said Act; therefore we require you to take Trial what Ministers within your Bounds and Jurisdictions have disobeyed the foresaid Act, where they live and reside, and give Advertisement to the Clerk of Council, to be communicate to us, that further Order may be taken thereanent. We rest

Your assured Friends.
Ut in Sederunt.

Another Letter is directed to the Burghs, and a Copy of the Act and Declaration is sent, of the same Tenor with that above; only that Part about Ministers is not insert in it, now that Ministers are discharged from all Burghs. And as to the Burghs where Sea-ports are, this Addition is made. 'We being informed, That the Pestilence is raging at Hamburgh and Amsterdam, so that the keeping Commerce with these Places may endanger this Kingdom; therefore you are to take Care that no Ships, Persons and Goods from thence, be suffered to enter your Harbour, till they abide the ordinary Trial of Forty Days, during which Time you are to cause them keep apart by themselves.'

Their Returns about its being signed, to be attested.

And December 2^d, 'The Lords of Council considering, that many Reports from the Burghs, anent the subscribing the Declaration, are informal, do therefore appoint and ordain the whole Shires and Burghs to return to the Clerks of Council in Writ, the very Words of the Declaration, subscribed by those who are appointed to take the same; and that the

Clerk

Clerk of the Court do testify, the same is truly subscribed by the whole Persons whose Names are subjoyned; and where any refuses, that the Names of the Refusers be returned under the Hands of the Magistrates of Burghs, Sheriffs of Shires, and their Clerks. 1663.

We see the exact Care taken about the Subscription of this Declaration, whereby the Covenants were renounced; and in the Beginning of the next Year, we shall find more Efforts used this Way. Great Numbers refused this Declaration, and severals left their Places and Offices. I find it remarked by no Enemy to this Imposition, 'That in December, Sir James Dalrymple of Stair, Sir James Dundas, and Sir George Mackenzie of Tarbet, refused the signing of this Declaration, among the Lords of Session; but in a little Time my Lord Stair repented, and signed it.'

November 24th, the Council finding the Army making some Misimprovement of the general Powers granted them by the Proclamation, October 7th, give an Explication and Restriction of it, to the Penalty of Twenty Shillings Scots for Abience, perhaps to quicken them to persecute, by binding them down to this Particular. Their Order runs, 'Forasmuch as the Lords of Council, in Prosecution of the Acts of Parliament and Council, for settling Church-government, and for preventing and suppressing the Seeds of Separation and Disobedience to Authority, did emit an Act and Proclamation, of the 7th of October last, and, by a Clause of the said Act, did give Warrant to all Noblemen, &c. and Officers of the standing Forces, to give their Assistance and effectual Concurrence to Ministers, in their respective Bounds, in Discharge of their Office, and to put the Laws in Execution, and to exact the Penalties expressed in the Acts of Parliament and Council, from all Persons Transgressors thereof, within their respective Parishes: The said Lords, for the Explanation of the foresaid Act, and for clearing the Power thereby given to the Officers of the Army, anent the exacting the Penalties contained therein, do declare that the said Officers of standing Forces, shall have no Power to exact any of the Penalties contained in the said Acts, except allanarly the Penalty of Twenty Shillings Scots, from every Person who stay from their own Parish-churches upon the Sabbath-day; which they are to exact in Manner, and for the Use contained in the Act of Council.' Wolves will not be tamed; and when the Soldiers were once let loose, we shall find they soon got over their Restrictions, and no Notice was taken of them for so doing.

Further Explication of the Act, October 7.

This Year the Council had many particular Ministers, Gentlemen and others before them; but those will afford Matter for a Section by themselves, if once I had given some Account of the Parliament this Year.

S E C T. III.

Of the Acts of Parliament, in as far as they relate to the Church, with some Account of Middleton's Fall this Year 1663.

THE former Two Sessions of Parliament had done so much in overturning the Reformation, Government, and Discipline of this Church, that very little was left to this Session to do. And because I am to be very short upon the Proceedings of this Court, I shall begin with the Change of their Commissioner, the Earl of Middleton, who had managed the Two former Sessions very much to the Prelates Satisfaction.

Another Commissioner to this Parliament.

The History of a Church under the Cross, can scarce be well given without intermixing something relating to the State, especially when the Cross comes from the State, supporting corrupt Church-men; yet I have given, and shall insist upon as little of the Civil History of this Period, as is consistent with the Reader's understanding the Springs and Circumstances of Presbyterians Sufferings.

Towards the Close of the last Year, the Earl of Middleton hastes up to London, and quits the Stage of Scotland, upon which he had acted a severe, rough, and unacceptable Part, never to return to his native Country again, as I am informed, a Country Woman told him at Coldstream, when he passed by; from what Art she had her Information I know not, but she assured him, He would never have any more Power in Scotland.

Middleton's Disgrace.

When he came to London, the King welcomed him with that angry Question, Whether he was sent to Scotland to be a Check upon the King, and controul his Orders? The Reason of this is, what was remarked before, his concealing Letters writ to him, and stopping the Proclamation anent the Fines.

Coldly entertained when he comes to Court.

In a little Time I find Lawderdale gave in a Libel and Charge of High Treason against him, consisting of many Particulars. One of them, I hear, was, that he had taken Bribes from some of the greatest Criminals in Scotland, to keep them out of the Exceptions from the Act of Fines.

Fines. The King was pleased to keep the Issue of this Controversy 'twixt those Two great Men in his own Breast, until the Time of the Parliament drew near.

At length his Patent for being King's Commissioner is recalled; and, as we shall hear, the Earl of Rothes is put in his Room. And in December, after the Parliament is up, and the Act of Ballotting rescinded, his Commissions, as Governor of Edinburgh Castle, and General of the Forces in Scotland, are recalled, and he resigned all his Places to his Majesty's Hands.

The Causes of this Disgrace at this Time were said to be, The Act of Fines, and the illegal Manner of contriving it; the Act that none should address themselves to his Majesty in any Matter, without first applying to the Commissioner or Council; the Ballotting Act incapacitating Twelve Persons of Honour, from all Places of Trust and Power; his uplifting and Misapplication of some Months Cess imposed by the Usurper; his misemploying the Cess and Excise, to the Value of Forty thousand Pounds Sterling; a mislive Letter of his to a certain Delinquent in the late Times, requiring him to pay a great Sum of Money to one of his Friends, otherwise assuring him he should abide the highest Pains of Law; a Letter of his to the Duke of Ormond Lord Lieutenant in Ireland, desiring Correspondence and mutual Assistance, when there was need in either Kingdom, without any Warrant; which Letter, 'tis said, the Duke sent over to his Majesty: And lastly, his stopping the Proclamation for prorogating the Payment of the Fines. Those were alledged as the Grounds of this great Man's Fall; some of them are certain, the rest I give as I find them in the Memoirs of this Period. Since the writing of this, I find the Earl of Lawderdale's Charge and Middleton's Answer, are both printed in Brown's Miscellanea aulica, 8^{vo}. Lond. 1702. where the curious Reader may see them.

Middleton had for his Patrons, the Duke of Tork, Chancellor Hide, and the Bishops of England, whom he had so much served in Scotland. It fared no doubt the worse with Middleton, that a Party in England was about this Time a forming against the Chancellor; and in July this Year the Earl of Bristol and others in Parliament managed a Charge of High Treason against him, and carried their Point so far, as he in some Time resigned his Places. Thus the grand Introducers of Prelacy in Britain, began to fall about the same Time.

Lawderdale was a complete Courtier, and had very much of his Master's good Graces, and stood much by the Interest he had with Barbara Villiers, first Mrs. Palmer, and then Dutches of Cleveland, the King's She-favourite.

The Earl of Middleton, in his own rough Way, uttered some Expressions of his Regard to the Duke of Tork, which were wanting in that Respect he owed to the King: Those Lawderdale failed not to improve. After a long and considerable Struggle, Middleton, notwithstanding of his great Friends and remarkable Services, fell before his Rival, for whom the King had a personal Kindness and Regard: And he was obliged to live obscurely enough, until the Governor's Place of Tangier fell vacant by the Death of the Lord Rutherford; and as an honourable Sort of Banishment, the King was prevailed with to bestow this Post upon him as a Reward of his establishing Prelacy in Scotland.

Our Scots History makes it evident, That all, who, since our Reformation by Presbyters, put hand to build the Hierarchy in Scotland, were turned out of their Estates and Honours, as might be shewn at great Length; and this last Builder, after he had banished so many worthy and excellent Ministers from their native Country, was himself sent to die in a strange Land.

In Tangier he lived but a short while in Contempt, till Death seized him; and by a Fall he broke the Bone of his right Arm, and the broken Bone, at the next Tumble down a Pair of Stairs, went into his Side and wounded him, so as he turned first stupid, and very quickly died. I have it from good Hands, that in Times of taking the Covenant, such was his forward Zeal for it, that coming out of the Place where he and others had taken it, he said to some Gentlemen and others about him, 'That this was the pleasantest Day ever he had seen, and if ever he should do any Thing against that blessed Work he had been engaging into, holding up his right Arm, he wished to God, that might be his Death.' Whether he had his Wish at Tangier, he now knows best.

This was the Fate of the great Overturner of our Reformation-establishment in Scotland, and, as hath been hinted, Chancellor Hide's, who acted much the same Part in England, was not much better. The Attack began upon him this Year, and after he was disgraced at Court, in a little Time he was forced, to escape the Punishment of what was charged against him, to flee his native Country, and died in a strange Land after a Seven Years Exile: So dangerous a Thing is it to meddle with the Church of Christ!

The Dependence of these Debates 'twixt these Two great Men, made the Parliament to be adjourned more than once: At length 'tis determined it shall meet, and a new Commissioner must be provided. Lawderdale now has all Scots Affairs entirely in his Hand, and finds it not convenient to fill that Post himself, but pitches upon the Earl of Rothes, afterwards Duke; and to make all sure in Scotland against a new Rival, and that he might be at the Bottom of Middleton's Plot against him, he comes down to Scotland with him, and brings a Remission to the Lord Lorn, as we shall hear; and Rothes hath a Multitude of Places heaped upon him; and

and the Earl of Tweddale, whose Son married Lawderdale's Daughter, is made President of the Council.

Upon June 15th the Commissioner comes down to Holy-rood-house, and June 18th the Parliament sat down. The Bishop of Aberdeen had a Sermon before this Session opened, and the Commissioner and Chancellor had Speeches, which I have not seen; and the formerly absent Members took the Oaths.

Parliament sits down June 18.

The chief Business of this Parliament seems to have been to enquire into the Act of Ballotting, and the Design formed during the last Session against Lawderdale, which I leave to Civil Historians. The Lords of the Articles were changed, and Middleton's Party left out in the Nomination. I find it remarked, that after all the Search was made into this Plot against the Secretary, it was found mostly to land on Middleton, Lennox, and Newburgh.

Enquiry made into the Act of Ballotting.

The former Sessions had left very little to this Meeting of Parliament, to do in Favour of the Prelates, unless it was to guard them against the Spite of the Country,* and to lay the Foundations of a more open and universal Persecution, than ever Scotland saw since Popish Prelates were removed.

Slavish Principles as to Civil Rights and Liberty, still lead the Van to Persecution for Conscience Sake; and therefore, tho' indeed it hath little Reference to the Church, I could not but notice the Tenor of the * First Act of this Session anent the Lords of Articles.

Remarks upon their first Act.

By this Act the King in a Manner hath the Whole of the Business of the Parliament in his Hand; the Prelates being the Creatures of the Court, and having the Choice of the Nobility who were to be Members of the Committee, would not readily fix upon any who were not acceptable to the Court. The Nobility, who chose Members from the Bishops, could scarce go wrong, they being all absolute Creatures of the King's making: And those Two together chose the Barons and Burgeses, who indeed could not mis to be right chosen of their own Kidney; and they were on the Matter but Cyphers, the Officers of State being supernumerary, and the Chancellor President always. By this Committee, every Matter which was not agreeable to the Court, was effectually kept out of the House, be it never so much for the Good of the Country. This was certainly one of the highest Incroachments possible upon the Privileges of the Subject, as well as the Christian; and one of the most slavish Acts that could be well made, limiting the supreme Power, and making the King as absolute almost as he can wish; and the Parliament must fall in with every Thing proposed. They were a mere Shadow, and as Sir George Mackenzie somewhere calls them, The King's Baron-court. The Narrative of this Act appeared to me odd enough when I read it. The Commissioner is brought in representing that it is his Majesty's express Will and Pleasure, that in this and all succeeding Parliaments, the Way used in choosing the Lords of Articles in the Year 1633. shall be observed; and then 'tis added, The Parliament in all humble Duty acquiesced thereunto.

One must take it for a Jest to call this an Act of Parliament; it was the King's Will and Pleasure, and that was to be the Rule of their Actions, as this Parliament, in their eccentric Loyalty to the King, are pleased to express themselves in their printed Letter to his Majesty, at the End of this Session, to be seen in the printed Acts. Thus they tamely fall in with the old Maxim of Tyrants, before the Restoration truly a Stranger in Scotland.

Sic volo, sic jubeo, stat pro ratione voluntas.

This being their Rule, let us see what was his Majesty's Will and Pleasure, signified to them in their following Acts, as to Church-affairs.

We need not doubt but the Prelates and their Adherents were chagrin'd by the general Opposition made to their Curates through the West and South, and many other Parts of the Kingdom. To bear down this as far as they can, they make their second Act against Separation and Disobedience to Ecclesiastick Authority. This Act was termed, The Bishops Drag-net, and all alongst this Reign it was altered, amended, and confirmed in their Favours, as their magna charta; and therefore I have added it, App. N^o. 40.

Their 2d Act against Separation.

Many Remarks might be made upon it, but they fall much in with what hath been said on the Acts of the former Sessions. The Parliament begin with a heavy Libel against Presbyterian Government, as the Fountain of the Evils in the late Times. If we suppose this enacted as the King's Pleasure signified to them, which now, it seems, must be their Rule as to Truth as well as Practice, every Body will not acquiesce in it, and to be sure it was no infallible Rule.

App. N^o. 40. Remarks upon it.

They next resume their former Acts last Session, which have been considered; only this Act speaks out the Design of some of the preceeding more plainly than many at first believed, to bring all Ministers to subject to Bishops. Then the King is made to engage his Roy-1663. al Word pro futuro to maintain the Prelates, and not to endure or give any Connivance to the least Variation from Prelacy. It had been better to have used softer Terms, than afterwards, in a Kind of Contradiction to this, when there appeared an absolute Necessity to grant Indulgences, and to travail in Accommodations to please some of the Bishops.

Next, they give us to understand, That the Acts of the First, as well as the Second Session of this Parliament, were made to settle the Episcopal Dignity, tho' the contrary was at first pretended: But the Fashion now was, to make Acts in general and dubious Expressions, and in a Year or Two after, fully to extend their Meaning, when King and Council had practically explained their Sense.

Accordingly, the Council, in the next Place, are made the Bishops Executioners, and the Execution of all Laws and Acts relative to the Church, is put into their Hands: This Clause was of great Use to the Prelates, and for many Years that Court served them vigorously. But Generals are not sufficient, therefore more particularly the Council is required to begin the Persecution of Ministers who dared to fulfil the Ministry they had received from Christ Jesus, without the Bishops Collation, and Patrons Presentation, and to punish them as seditionous, and Contemners of Royal Authority.

The following Clause is in Favours of the condemned Curates, who are pretty singularly described, Ministers by publick Authority admitted to Parishes. This Kind of Ministers, I dare say, the Christian Church was unacquainted with for Three hundred Years after Christ. Ministers they were literally of the King and Bishops, and not the People, the sacra plebs, their Choice, settled by publick Authority, and the Reader may add, by military Force, and not by Consent, and consequently Servants of Men, and not of Christ, or his People for his Sake.

Further, all are required to subject to those Ministers as his Majesty's Government Ecclesiastical now established; and the not hearing of those Creatures of the King and Bishops, is declared to be of seditionous and dangerous Example and Consequences, and punishable by the Fines specified in the Act. Indeed the uplifting of those Fines drew prodigious Sums of Money from the Country; but constrained Worship cannot be conscientious.

In a Parenthesis the Papists are cast in with the Presbyterians, and made censurable for withdrawing from their Parish-church: But I never heard of any of them troubled by our zealous Protestant Bishops! In the next Session of Parliament, this Clause is expunged, and the Papists left to their own Freedom, and the Anger of the Government levelled only against religious Protestants.

Toward the Close of the Act, the honourable Privy Council are de novo, that all might be sure, constitute Executioners of this Act, and impowered not only to exact the Fines from all whom the Curate shall delate, but further corporally to punish them, as they shall think fit. How far corporal Punishment in Law extends, I am not to determine; but they seem impowered by this to make poor People's Life a Bitterness to them. Last of all, the Council are warranted to do all Things necessary for procuring Obedience to this Act, in the Intent thereof. How far this goes, I know not; but it looks very like the Spirit of the Treaty we heard of since in another persecuting Country: We need not doubt that the Bishops, in this Case both Judges and Parties, sufficiently extend the Intent of the Act. In a Word, this Act contains a Rule and Canon, I cannot call it Ecclesiastical, but 'tis sufficiently so to Prelates, when to suspend and deprive Ministers of the Gospel.

We have seen the Council very soon explaining and enlarging this Act; and the first Persecution of Country People, which was any way general, began upon this; and indeed it was the Foundation of much Severity.

Their 3^d Act specifies the Time of signing the Declaration, appointed last Year to be subscribed by all Persons in publick Trust, which hath been insert, and needs not be repeated. All are required to sign twixt and the 11th of November, and make Returns to the Council against the 1st of January next to come; and 'tis recommended to the Council to be careful it be put in Execution, which, as we have seen, and shall have Ground to observe further, they were careful to do.

At this Time a new Clause is added, unreasonable enough: If Persons be elected Counsellors or Magistrates, and refuse to sign the Declaration, they are not only for ever declared incapable of being Magistrates, but are to forfeit all the Privileges of Merchandizing and Trading. The Remark is so obvious, that we need not be surprized that this was called the Mark in the right Hand, without which none might buy or sell. This was highly unjust. A Party in a Town that had a Mind to be rid of a Man, who, it may be, was their Rival in Trade, and knew he could not declare the Covenants to be in themselves sinful, had no more to do but to get him chosen a Counsellor or Magistrate; and then, tho' otherwise he was not obliged to take the Declaration, yet now, by Pique and Party, he must be turned out of all his Trade and Business.

This Declaration comes pretty near the Sacramental Test, annexed to Civil Places and military Posts in some Nations; upon the Account of which we are so much abused by the Papists, for prostituting that holy Ordinance, contrary to our own Protestant Principles, and the the Nature of the Institution. For refusing this Declaration imposed last Year, John Earl of Crawford lost his Office of Lord Treasurer, and Sir James Dundas of Arny his Post of One of the Lords of Session. The Lord Stair, and Sir George Mackenzie of Tarbet, since Earl of Cromarty, after some Difficulties, came at length to sign it.

Their 5th Act is for establishing a National Synod, which, because it concerns Church-affairs, tho' never put in Execution, I have annexed it, App. N^o. 41. The Bishops who framed this Act, and with whose Concurrence, and at their Desire it was passed, took effectual Care to prevent the convocating any such Synod; and we shall afterwards hear of some Debate upon this Head among the Clergy.

Act 4th. about a national Synod. App. No. 41.

By this Act, and consequently by the Bishops, it is declared, That 'tis necessary for the Honour of GOD, and Good of Souls, there be a National Synod. And if the Act be true, our Prelates had neither of these before their Eyes. By this Act, besides other Members constituent of this Synod, (the dignified Clergy, and some from Universities, but none from Burghs) a Power is lodged in the Meeting for Exercise, to send one to the Synod who is a Presbyter. These Meetings which, for what I can find, were very unfrequent, they will not call by the Name of Presbyteries.

Remarks upon it.

The Power of this Synod is very much narrowed, that it may be as near the English Convocation as possible. Here indeed they differed, that in Scotland, The King or his Commissioner behoved always to be present; and without him there can be no National Synod. This looks as if no Restrictions could bound them, neither a perpetual President, nor the King's Will expressly signified to them, from Time to Time, by the Archbishop of St. Andrews, but the King or his Commissioner behoved always to be present.

How far the Frame of this Act agrees with the Foundation of Scots Prelacy, where all Church-power is lodged in the Persons of the Bishops, as Creatures of the Regal Supremacy, and the King's Delegates in Church-affairs, I shall not spend Time in considering. By this Act the Jurisdiction seems to me to be lodged in the Plurality of the Meeting, and the Vote of the meanest Presbyter goes as far as the Vote of the Bishops, and one of the Archbishops. Indeed the President hath a Negative, and tho' the Plurality of the Meeting, yea the whole Bishops and the other Archbishop should vote a Matter, yet if the Primate, the constant President of this Synod, go not in, it cannot pass into an Act or Canon; and thus it was Pity the Primate set not up the Claim of Infallibility, which seems necessary to such a Power as is lodged here in his Hands.

But I shall leave those Things to be debated and determined by the Friends of this Frame of Government in Scotland; only Things are here upon a very different Plan from the Make of the diocesan Synods, where Presbyters were only allowed a consultative Voice; and if they fall not in with their Bishop, they may be prosecuted as seditious Persons, and deprived.

This Session of Parliament continued long, and did very little; the Reason was, the Act of Ballotting was to be rescinded, and the Commissioner and Lawderdale resolved to be at the Bottom of it; and the searching into the Authors and Promoters thereof took up very much Time: At length the State of that Affair was drawn up, and sent to his Majesty, by Sir William Bruce Clerk to the Bills, that the King's Pleasure thereanent might be had; and till that came, the Parliament was adjourned from Day to Day. At length, as will best appear from the printed Act rescinding this Ballotting Act, it was declared, 'A Way never formerly practised under Monarchy, or any Government, to punish Men without making known their Names to the Parliament, who gave Sentence, and what was contrary to his Majesty's Honour and Interest, and after which none could be secure in their Honour, Estate, Liberty or Life,' and so rescinded.

The Parliament sits long, and the Reason of this.

September 23^d, the Parliament order a Levy to be made, if Need be, of Twenty thousand Foot, and Two thousand Horse, for the Preservation of Christendom against the Turks. It was never made, but their Army had certainly been much better employed this Way, than in persecuting Protestants. This Session rose, October 9th, and the Parliament was rode from the House to the Abbey, but it was very thin, many of the Nobility being absent. Bishop Fairfoul lived not long after this Parade, as we shall hear. When the Parliament was up, many of our great Folks went to Court: The Earl of Roths was well received by the King, and made a Member of the Privy Council in England.

A Levy made against the Turks.

The Parliament rises, Oct. 9.

The rest of the Acts of this Parliament relate to Civil Matters, and, as far as I have observed, have nothing in them relative to the History I have now in hand; and so we have done with Parliaments for more than Six Years Time. I come now to the Sufferings of particular Persons this Year, and the sealing the Laws of this and former Sessions, with the Blood of the excellent Lord Waristoun.

No more Parliaments for Six Years.

S E C T. IV.

Of the Sufferings and Martyrdom of the Lord Waristoun, July 22d, 1663.

1663.

HAVING thus got through the general Rules and Acts, which were the Foundation of the particular Sufferings of Presbyterians, I come to the Hardships which Gentlemen, Ministers and others were brought under this Year; and before I give a Detail of these, the singular Case of the good Lord Waristoun deserves a Section by it self, and I place it here, because he was executed in Time of Parliament, as all our Three first Worthies were.

I might have brought in the Account of this excellent Person upon the Second Chapter, with that of his dear Friends and Fellow-martyrs, the noble Marquis of Argyle, and Mr. James Guthrie, both because these Three are the chief Instances of suffering unto Death in this First Book, tho' we shall meet with Multitudes in the following Books; and it was fully determined that my Lord's Life should have been taken at the same Time, but he was not caught: And the Manner of dealing with his Lordship, was much the same with that taken with his Fellow-sufferers unto Death, if not more base, tho' less seen; and the Cause was much the same he died upon, tho' his Circumstances, in some Things, differed from the former Two; yet I thought it most proper to keep to the Order of Time in which he suffered, as much as might be.

As the Foundations of Prelacy in Scotland, attended with the Destruction of our Civil Liberty, were soked with the Blood of one of the best of our Noblemen, and one of the most eminent of our Ministers, so the Walls now fast building, and pretty far advanced, behoved to be cemented with the Blood of this excellent Gentleman; so this godly and innocent Person must fall as a third Sacrifice.

Orders given 1660. for seizing the Lord Waristoun,
but he then
escapes,

In the 1st Chapter it hath been already observed, that the King by his Letter ordered Major General Morgan to seize Sir Archibald Johnstoun of Waristoun, Lord Register: The Day upon which his Two excellent Friends, Sir John Chiesly of Carswel, and Sir James Stuart of Priestfield, were seized, my Lord Waristoun knowing nothing of the Orders, was providentially out of Town visiting a Friend. When in his Return, just entring the Town, he got Notice of the Warrant for apprehending him, and turned his Horse, and retired a while from the Storm.

and leaves the Kingdom.

For some Time he was very narrowly hunted up and down, till, after his escaping many imminent Hazards, at length he got off the Kingdom in the Habit and Character of a Merchant.

Two Acts made against him by the Parliament,
1661.

In the Second Chapter we have heard that his Persecutors, during the first Session of Parliament, got passed Two Acts against him: By the First they declare him incapable of all publick Trust and Office, after, by a Proclamation, he had been declared Fugitive. By their next they pass a Sentence of Forfeiture and Death upon him, in Absence; the Grounds of which we already heard. The first was as unnecessary as the last was unjust.

He lurks for some Time in the Low Countries, and at Hamburgh, where he is abused by a Physician.

Mean while this excellent Person is obliged to lurk very closely, sometimes in the Low Countries, sometimes in Germany, and mostly at Hamburgh. I find in the Preface to the Apologetical Narration, that when he was at Hamburgh, and under Sickness, Doctor Bates, one of King Charles's Physicians, being, as was said, hired either to kill or distract him, did give him Poison in his Physick, and took from him upwards of Sixty Ounces of Blood, whereby he was brought to the Gates of Death, and so far lost his Memory, that he could not remember what he had done a Quarter of an Hour before.

He goes into France.

After Waristoun had wandred a Part of Two Years, he most unadvisedly went into France, the unsafest Place he could go to. The King or some Body about him at London got some Hints of this, and caused seize one Major Johnstoun, and bring him before him, expecting more particular Accounts from him, it seems, than any he could think upon. The Major was imprisoned and threatned with Death, if he would not discover where Waristoun was. What he told I cannot positively say, but when dismissed and gone to his Lodgings, he never came any more abroad, but pined away in Grief, till in a few Days he died. Those Circumstances, and a good Part of what is in this Section, I have from the Papers of a Reverend Minister, who lived at this Time, and had a particular Occasion to know the State of my Lord's Sufferings.

Alexander Murray sent in Quest of him, and he is seized at Roan.

In the mean Time one Alexander Murray, commonly called crooked Murray, is dispatched over to France, where Notice had been got my Lord Waristoun was: The Messenger, they say, was not unfit, and it was believed, as he lived, so he died an Atheist. This Man, when he went over, found Means to trace out the Lady Waristoun, and by noticing her narrowly, at length he came to discover my Lord at Roan. In that City, a very little after he was come to that Lodging, he was seized, when at secret Prayer, which Duty he was much exercised in.

Murray

Murray applied to the Magistrates to send over Waristoun to England, producing the King's Commission to him for that Effect. They put my Lord into Custody, and sent up an Account of the Affair to the French King and Council, before they would take any further Steps. I hear the Question was put in Council, Whether the Prisoner should be retained or delivered up? and the most Part were for his being kept in France, at least till more Reason was shewn for giving him up than yet appeared. But that King, to whose Influence in part we owe many of the bloody Measures, and destructive Steps to good Men and Religion, fallen into during the Reigns of the Two Brothers, determined he should be delivered up.

Accordingly, in January this Year he was brought over Prisoner, and put in the Tower of London; and in the Beginning of June he is sent down to Edinburgh, to be executed with the greater Solemnity, when the Parliament is sitting. By the Council-registers I find that, June 2^d, 'The Lords of Council having received certain Intelligence, that Archibald Johnstoun, sometimes of Waristoun, is coming home, and that in a few Days he is to arrive at Leith, do therefore ordain the Magistrates of Edinburgh to provide a sufficient Guard to receive him at the Shore of Leith when he is landed; and that he be brought up from thence on Foot bare-headed to the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, where the Magistrates of Edinburgh are to secure his Person in close Prison, without suffering his Wife or Children, or any others, to have Access to speak with him, while further Order from the Council or Lord Chancellor.'

June 8th he landed at Leith, and was brought up under a Guard, and dealt with as above. June 9th the Council meet, and the King's Letter about him is read. 'Right trusty, &c. You shall give Order to receive into our Prison, the Body of Archibald Johnstoun, sometime of Waristoun, whom we have sent into that our Kingdom, to the End that he may be proceeded against according to Law and Justice. Given, &c. May 16th, 1663.'

That same Day the Council give the following Order, about the Desire of my Lord Waristoun's Friends. 'The Council having considered the Desire of several Friends of Archibald Johnstoun, late of Waristoun, desiring they may have Liberty to speak with him, do grant Liberty to any one of his Relations or Friends, to have Access unto him, at any Time 'twixt Eight of the Clock in the Morning and Eight at Night, and do discharge the Magistrates of Edinburgh and Keeper of the Tolbooth, to suffer any more Persons to enter the Prison but Three at once; and those Three to stay no longer than an Hour, or Two at farthest, and ordain the Keeper of the Tolbooth by himself, or those he shall intrust, to wait upon the Chamber where he is, to take Care of the Security of his Person, that he escape not in Disguise or otherwise; and continue to determine the Time and Manner of his Execution, till next Council-day.'

If would seem from this, that at first it was projected that the Council should name the Time and Place of his publick Death, upon the old Sentence passed by the Parliament: But afterwards it was resolved to bring him before the Parliament, and to have his Sentence solemnly pronounced at the Bar. Accordingly, July 8th, he is brought before the Parliament. I suppose their Forms in his Circumstances did not make any Indictment necessary, at least I have heard of none, nor of any Lawyers allowed him.

When he appeared at the Bar, he was so evidently weakned in his Memory and Judgment, by the vile Methods taken with him, that every Body lamented the vast Change upon him. My Lord Waristoun was once in Case to have reasoned before the greatest Assembly in Europe, yea, to have presided in it; but now he could scarce speak to any Purpose in his own Case. The Primate and Bishops, now Members in Parliament, pleased with this vast Change in this great Man, scandalously and basely triumphed over him, and mocked him in the open House.

No sober Man could refuse him a great deal of Compassion in such Circumstances, and, it seems, most of the Members of Parliament were inclinable to spare his Life. This began to appear in the Vote upon this Question, Whether the Time of his Execution should be just now fixed, or delayed? When the Rolls were called, at first a great Number of Members were for a Delay. Which Lawderdale observing, and knowing he needed scarce return to his Master if Waristoun were spared, contrary to all Order and Form, in the middle of the Calling the Rolls, rose up and had a very threatening Harangue for his present Execution. And thus upon the proceeding in the Rolls, Sentence was pronounced against him, That he should be hanged at the Cross of Edinburgh the 22^d Day of July, and after he was hanged dead, that his Head be severed from his Body, and put up upon the Nether-bow Port, beside his dear Friend Mr. James Guthrie's.

It is said, with what Certainty I know not, That the Bishops would have had the Day of his Execution to have been the 23^d Day of July, as a Kind of Expiation for what was done against their Predecessors in Office, July 23^d, 1637. when the first open Opposition was made to their Innovations and the Service-book: But they were not humoured in this.

I regret that I can give so little Account of this great Man's Christian and affecting Carriage while in Prison. A Person of very great Worth, who was several Times with my Lord while in the Tolbooth, hath left this Account of him, 'That when there he was sometimes

A vast Change appears upon him at the Bar.

The Bishops not humoured as to the Day of his Execution.

1663.

‘under great Heaviness and Distress, and born down with bodily Weakness and Melancholy, yet he never came in the least to doubt of his eternal Happiness, and used to say, I dare never question my Salvation, I have so often seen God’s Face in the House of Prayer.’

He was wonderfully revived the Day before his Execution.

It was certainly a most remarkable Appearance of Providence in behalf of this good, and once great, Man, that the very Morning before his Execution, notwithstanding for some Time formerly, he had, as it were, lost the Exercise of those extraordinary Parts and Talents he once enjoyed, and his Memory for some Time was almost quite gone, yet like the Sun at his Setting, after he has been for a while under a Cloud, he shone most brightly and surprizingly, and so in some Measure the more sweetly. That Morning he was under a wonderful Effusion of the Spirit of Sons, as great perhaps as many have had since the primitive Times. With the greatest Confidence and holy Freedom, and yet the deepest Humility, he repeated that, Father, Father, Abba, Father, the Savour of which did not wear off the Spirits of some who were Witnesses for many Days.

His Carriage at his Death, July 22.

The Day of his Execution, an high Gallows or Gibbet was set up at the Cross, and a Scaffold made by it. About Two of the Clock he was taken from Prison: Many of his Friends attended him in Mourning. When he came out he was full of holy Cheerfulness and Courage, and in perfect Serenity and composure of Mind as ever he was. Upon the Scaffold he acknowledged his Compliance with the English, and cleared himself of the least Share in the King’s Death. He read his Speech with an audible Voice, first at the North Side, and then the South Side of the Scaffold: He prayed next with the greatest Liberty, Fervour and Sense of his own Unworthiness, frequently using the fore said Expression. After he had taken his Leave of his Friends, he prayed again in a perfect Rapture, being now near the End of that sweet Work he had been so much employed about through his Life, and felt so much Sweetness in.

Then the Napkin being tied upon his Head, he tried how it would fit him, and come down and cover his Face, and directed to the Method how it should be brought down when he gave the Sign. When he was got to the Top of the Ladder, to which he was helped because of bodily Weakness, he cried with a loud Voice, ‘I beseech you all who are the People of God, not to fear at Sufferings for the Interests of Christ, or stumble at any Thing of this Kind falling out in those Days; but be encouraged to suffer for him; for I assure you in the Name of the Lord he will bear your Charges.’ This he repeated again with great Fervour, while the Rope was tying about his Neck, adding, The Lord hath graciously comforted me. Then he asked the Executioner if he was ready to do his Office, who answering he was, he bid him do it, and crying out, O, pray, pray! praise, praise! was turned over, and died almost without any Struggle, with his Hands lift up to Heaven. He was soon cut down, and his Head struck off, and his Body carried to the Gray-Friars Church-Yard. His Head was put up upon the Nether-bow Port; but in a little Time, by the Interest and Moven of Lieutenant-General Drummond, who married one of his Daughters, it was permitted to be taken down and buried with his Body.

His Speech upon the Scaffold is printed in Nephtali; and there he declares, that what he had prepared to have said at his Death, was taken from him, but he hoped it should be preserved to be a Testimony to the Truth. In what is printed he speaks his very Heart, touching his own Soul’s State, his Sins and Infirmities, the Publick, and his poor Family, and present Sufferings; and tho’ it hath been often printed, I could not but insert it, App. N^o. 42. with some Account of his Carriage before and at his Death, printed at this Time.

App. N^o. 42.

Remarks upon his Compliance with the English.

Many Things are laid to this great Man’s Charge most falsely, of which he was perfectly innocent, particularly his Accession to the King’s Murder, as to which he vindicates himself in his printed Speech. The one Thing which he himself heavily lamented, frequently to his dying Day, and which was the only reasonable Pretext for this severe Sentence, was his Compliance with the English, in taking the Office of Clerk-register, and sitting and presiding in some Meetings at London, after Cromwel’s Death.

In the Year 1657. after many and long Struggles against Cromwel’s Usurpation, when he was sent up from Scotland about some important Affairs, he was prevailed upon to re-enter upon his former Office of the Clerk-register, by Cromwel, who was abundantly sensible how much it would be for his Interest to have so bright a Person gained over to him. During Five Years and more, he wrestled and acted with the utmost Vigour for the King’s Interest, and being a Man of great Resolution, he both spoke very openly, and wrote against Scotsmens submitting to take Offices under the Usurper. I have it from good Hands, that in the Meeting at Edinburgh, which sent him up to London upon Business, he reasoned against, and to his utmost opposed his being sent up. With great Ingenuity he acquainted them with what he thought was his weak Side, and that he was sensible of the Easiness of his Temper, and that he could not resist Importunity, and begged he might not be sent among Snares; but after all he was peremptorily named.

My Lord’s Family was numerous, and very considerable Sums were owing him, which he had advanced for the publick Service, and a good many Years of bygone Salaries: And when no other Way appeared to recover what was justly his, he was, thro’ Importunity, prevailed upon to fall in with the Usurper, there being now no other Door open for his Relief. Thus he he fell before the Temptation, that all Flesh, even the best, may appear to be Grass. After his Compliance he was observed to be generally sad and heavy, and not what he had been formerly; neither did his outward Affairs thrive much upon his Hand. 1663.

But it is certain enough, that it was neither his lamented Compliance under the Usurpation, nor his great Activity in the Work of Reformation, both which the Government now were pretty much above; but a personal Prejudice and Pique at this good Man, for his Freedom in reproving Vice, was at Bottom of this bitter persecuting him to the Death. This was what could never be forgot or forgiven, either to him or the Marquis of Argyle, as was pretty plainly intimated to the Earl of Bristol, when interceding for my Lord Waristoun. I have an Account of this holy Freedom my Lord used, from a reverend Minister not many Years ago dead, who was his Chaplain at the Time, and took the Freedom to advise my Lord not to adventure upon it: Yet this excellent Person having the Glory of God, and the Honour of Religion more in his Eye than his own Safety, went on in his design'd Reproof; and would not for a Compliment quit the Peace he expected in his own Conscience, be the Event what it would by disburdening himself. He got a great many fair Words, and all was pretended to be taken well from my good Lord-register, but as he was told by his Well-wishers, it was never forgot.

The true Reason of the Severity exercised against him.

To shut up this Section, my Lord Waristoun was a Man of great Learning and Eloquence, of very much Wisdom, and extraordinary Zeal for the publick Cause of Religion and Reformation, in which he was a chief Actor; but above all, he was extraordinary in Piety and Devotion, as to which he had scarce any Equal in the Age he lived in. One who was his intimate Acquaintance says, He spent more Time, notwithstanding the great Throng of publick Business upon his Hand, in Prayer, Meditation, and close Observation of Providences, and Self-examination, than any ever he knew or heard of: And as he was very diligent in making Observations of the Lord's Way, so he was visited with extraordinary Discoveries of the Lord's Mind, and very remarkable Providences.

His Character.

He wrote a large Diary, which yet remains in the Hands of his Relations, an invaluable Treasure of Christian Experiences and Observations; and, as I am told by one who had the Happiness to see some Part of it, there is mixed in sometimes Matters of Fact very little known now, which would bring a great deal of Light to the History of Scots Affairs, in that Period wherein he lived. There he records his sure Hopes after Wrestling, in which he was mighty, That the Church of Scotland would be mercifully visited, and freed from the Evils she fell under after the Restoration. His numerous Family he left upon the Lord's Providence cheerfully, who provided as well for most of them, as they could have expected tho' he had continued in his outward Prosperity. But 'tis Time to come forward to other particular Sufferers this Year.

His Diary.

S E C T. V.

Of the particular Hardships and Sufferings of great Numbers of Ministers, Gentlemen, and others, this Year 1663.

HAVING delayed the Accounts of the severe Persecution of vast Numbers of Presbyterian Ministers, Gentlemen, and People this Year, especially before the Council, to this Place; I come now to give them altogether, mostly from the Records of that Court, and that much in the Order of Time they ly in.

The Council are scarce ended with the West Country Ministers last Year, and their banishing good Numbers to foreign Places, yea, even before the banished Ministers went off, but they begin, February 24th, a new Process against a greater Number of Ministers in Galloway. Few or none in that Synod had conformed, and, we have heard, the Bishop's diocesan Meeting was adjourned, because there were few or none to wait upon it: Therefore, probably at his Instigation, the Council pass the following Act.

Process of the Galloway Ministers before the Council, February 24.

THE Lords of His Majesty's Privy Council being informed, That there are several Ministers in the Diocese of Galloway, who, not only contrary to the Order of Council, dated at Glasgow, October 1st last, do continue at their former Residences and Churches, but in manifest Contempt thereof, and contrary to the Indulgence granted them by the late Act, dated December 23^d last, do yet persist in their wicked Practices, still labouring to keep the Hearts of People from the present Government in Church and State, by their pernicious Doctrine; and more particularly that M^rs. Archibald Ha-Council's Act about them.

1663. milton Minister at Wigtoun, William Maitland at Whitthorn, Robert Richardson at Mo-chrum, George Wauch at Kirkindair, Alexander Rols at Kirkowan, Alexander (it ought to be Fergusson) Hutchefon at Sorbie, Ministers in the Presbytery of Wigtoun; Mrs. Alexander Pedin at the Muir-church of Glenluce, John Park at the Shappel, Thomas Kennedy at Litward, James Lawrie at Stainkirk, James Wilson at Kirkmaiden, John McBroom at Port-patrick, Ministers within the Presbytery of Stranrawer; Mrs. Patrick Peacock at Kirmabreck, William Erskine Minister at Gariltoun, Adam Kae Minister at Borg, Robert Fergusson at Boittil, Samuel Arnot at Tongland, John Wilkie at Twinam, James Buglos Minister at Corfmichael, Thomas Warner at Balmaclelland, John Cant at Kells, Adam Aliton at Balmagie, John M'Michan at Dalry, John Duncan at Dundrenean and Kerick, and Thomas Thomson Minister at Partoun, Ministers in the Presbytery of Kirkcudbright; and Mr. Alexander Smith at Cowend and Siddick, are chief Instruments in carrying on that wicked Course: Have therefore ordained Letters to be directed against the forenamed Persons, charging and commanding them, and every one of them, to remove themselves, Wives, Bairns, Servants, Goods and Gear, forth and from their respective Dwelling-places and Manses, and out of the Bounds of the Presbytery where now they live, betwixt and the 20th Day of March next; and that they do not take upon them to exercise any Part of the Ministerial Function: And also charging them to appear before the Council, the 24th of March next to come, to answer for their former Disobedience; with Certification as is above specified.

In the Registers there are Five or Six of those Ministers Names blank, and only the Name of the Parishes, which I have filled up from another List I have before me; by which I find, that Mr. Robert Fergusson and Mr. James Lawrie were ordained before the 1649. and to in Law came not under the Two Acts 'tis alledged they broke.

Council's Act
 about them,
 16 arch 24.

Upon the 24th of March, I find Mrs. Maitland, Kae, Wilkie, Wauch, Lawrie, Cant, Alison, McGachan, and Smith, ' Being called, compeared personally, and being severally examined upon their Obedience to the late Acts of Parliament and Council, anent their Obedience and Submission to the Government of the Church, as the same is presently established by Law, declared, They were not yet clear to give Obedience thereunto; but they were ready and willing, likeas they then judicially promised to obey the said Acts, for removing from their Manses and Parishes, and desisting from Preaching, conform to the same in every Point. In Consideration whereof, the Lords declare, that they do continue * to insist against them for their former Carriages, while they be of new cited.

i. e. delay.

The others who did not compear, were obliged to leave the Manses and Kirks; and I find no more about them this Year in the Registers. We shall meet with Mr. Samuel Arnot, Mr.
 John Park, and Mr. Thomas Warner, and some others of them, under new Hardships, in the Progress of this Work.

Ministers in Dunkeld cited before the Council.

At that same Diet the Council cite another considerable Number of Ministers before them. ' The Lords of His Majesty's Privy Council being informed, that several Ministers in the Diocese of Dunkeld, who not only contrary to the Order of Council, dated at Glasgow, October 1st last, do continue at their former Residence and Churches; but in manifest Contempt thereof, and contrary to the Indulgence granted to them by the late Act, December 23^d, do persist in their wicked Courses, still labouring to keep the Hearts of the People from the present Government of Church and State, by their pernicious Doctrine; and more particularly, That Mrs. Patrick Campbel Minister at Kilinnie, John Anderson at Auchtergavan, Francis Pearson at Kirkrauchael, David Graham at Forgondenny, George Halyburton at Duplin, Richard Ferret at Ava, John Miniman at Abernytie, David Camp-bel at Minnimore, Thomas Lundy at Rattray, Robert Campbel at Mullen, John Cruikshanks at Rogertoun, Thomas Glassie at Little-Dunkeld, Andrew Donaldson at Dalgety, and Thomas Black at Lesly, are chief Instruments in carrying on these wicked Courses: Therefore the Lords of Council ordain Letters to be directed to charge the forenamed Persons to remove (as above, with relation to the Galloway Ministers) and that they take not upon them to exercise any Part of the Ministerial Function, either privately or publicly.
 As also command them and every one of them to compear before the Council the --- Day of ----- to answer for their former Disobedience. With Certification.

I find no more about those Ministers in the Registers. I am ready to think, that they obeyed the Charge to remove from their Kirks and Manses, and their compearing before the Council was not insisted upon. The Bishops at present were pressing to have the Churches vacated of those who did not wait on their Synods; and we have heard, that by the Acts of Parliament and Council this Year, a general Course was taken with the whole Non-conformist Ministers, and they removed at such and such Distances from their Congregations.

It hath been noticed already, with what Reluctancy a great many Parishes in the South and West, permitted the Curates to enter among them, when Presbyterian Ministers were turned out. In some Places open Opposition was made to them, especially in Irongray near Dunfriess, and Kirkcudbright. The Tumults in those Two Places, as they were the first of this Kind, so they were severely noticed by the Council; and I shall give as distinct an Account of this as I can, from the Registers; if once I had set down an Abbreviate of it, I find in the Papers of a worthy Minister who lived at the Time.

1663.

Resistance made to the Curates in Irongray and Kirkcudbright.

The first open Opposition to the Settlement of the Curates, I have heard of, was at Irongray, where Mr. John Welsh was Minister. The Curate at first not finding peaceable Access, returned upon them with an armed Force. None ventured to appear openly save Women, and those of the meaner Sort. However, the Women of Irongray, headed by one Margaret Smith, opposed a Party of Soldiers who were guarding the Curate, and fairly beat them off with Stones. Margaret was afterwards brought in to Edinburgh, and banished to Barbadoes: But when before the Managers, she told her Tale so innocently, that they saw not fit to execute the Sentence. In April 1663. or about that Time, Ten Women were brought in to Edinburgh from Kirkcudbright, for a Tumult there, and were for some Time kept in Prison, and afterwards pilloried, with Papers on their Foreheads signifying their Fault. But I come to give the Detail of this Matter, as I have it in the Council-books.

May 5th, the Chancellor having written a missive Letter to the Magistrates of Kirkcudbright, for finding out the Persons most guilty of the Tumult lately there, and ordained them to be cited before the Council this Day; and if any Women be guilty, that their Husbands, Fathers, Masters, or such as have the Charge of them, be cited. In Obedience thereunto, at the Magistrates Instance, appeared Adam Gumquhen, John Halliday, John MacStaffen, Alexander Maclean, ----- Renthoun, John Carsan, Alexander MacKey, Indwellers in the said Burgh, who being examined, denied any Hand in the Tumult. MacStaffen and Maclean are ordained to find Caution to produce their Wives before the Council, and the rest to enter their Persons in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, till they exhibite their Wives who were present at the said Tumult; and ordain James Hunter in Kirkcudbright, cited and not appearing, to be denounced: But the Council, in their great Zeal in this Matter, go further, and appoint a Committee to go and enquire into that Affair in the South, and send in Part of the Army with them. The Act and Commission is as follows.

Account of the Council's Procedure about this, from the Registers.

THE Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, being certainly informed of the very great Insolencies committed in the Burgh of Kirkcudbright, and Parish of Irongray, by the tumultuary Rising of divers Persons within the same, and in a barbarous Manner opposing the Admission of certain Ministers who were appointed and came to serve there, and their offering and committing several Abuses and Indignities upon the Persons of the said Ministers, to the high and great Contempt of his Majesty's Authority, and the disquieting of the Government both of Church and State; as also that there is no settled Magistracy and Government within the said Burgh, as has been within the same, and that several who have been chosen to exercise the Office of the Magistracy, do refuse to accept of the same; whereby the said Town is left desolate of Civil Policy, and the Inhabitants at Liberty to do what they please: The said Lords of Council, in Consideration thereof, and of the great Trust reposed in them by his Majesty, do appoint and commissionate the Earls of Linlithgow, Galloway, and Annandale, the Lord Drumlanerk, and Sir John Wauchop of Niddry, or any Two of them, to repair to those Places, at such Times as they shall think fit, and to call all the Persons who have been either Plotters of, Committers, or Assisters to, or Connivers at the Insolencies and Abuses foresaid; and after hearing of them to examine Witnesses, and receive all other needful Probation for proving what shall be laid to their Charge; and if thereafter, the said Commissioners, or Quorum foresaid, shall find just Ground, that they secure their Persons, and send such of them to Edinburgh, as they shall think fit, to that Effect, or take sufficient Caution from them, to answer before the Lords of Council, the ----- Day of ----- under such Penalties as the Commissioners shall think fit. And also, that they examine and try upon what Account, and for what Cause there are, not Magistrates in the said Burgh, who exercise their Offices as formerly; and if they see it meet and just, that they either incarcerate, or take Bond under Caution and Penalty, of such as they shall find to have been Obstructors of a Civil and lawful Government, as formerly, within the said Burgh, or such as have been lawfully chosen, and refuse to accept and exercise their Offices without just Cause. And likewise, that they see a formal and legal Election, according to the Custom of the said Burgh, of others loyal and faithful Persons, for supplying the Places of such as are wanting, or who refuse to accept: Otherwise, by the Advice of such as are well affected within the said Burgh, to nominate such Persons as they shall think fit, for discharging the Office of Magistracy, and ruling the People within the said Burgh, till further Order. As also, that the said Commissioners, if they shall see Cause, Commission on Earl Linlithgow &c. to enquire into the Tumult at Kirkcudbright and Irongray.

call for the Charters, Rights and Securities, made and granted in favours of the said Burgh, and concerning their Privileges and Liberties, to the Effect they may be secured and exhibited before the Parliament or Council. And likewise, to be aiding and assisting to the Bishops of the respective Dioceses, for settling such Ministers in those Places, as they shall ordain and appoint.

And for the more exact Performance of the Premises, that the said Earl of Linlithgow cause march alongst with him, an Hundred Horse, and Two hundred Foot of his Majesty's Guards, or such other Number as he shall think fit, to the Effect such as will not willingly submit and give Obedience, may be forced thereunto. And for the entertaining the said Horse and Foot, the said Earl is hereby impowered, either to take free Quarters with in the said Burgh and Parish of Irongray, or then, with Concourse of the Magistrates of the said Burgh, or such others in the said Places as he shall call for, to raise so much Money off the Burgh and Parish, as will satisfy the said Horsemen and Footmen, at Thirty Shillings Scots to each Horseman, and Twelve Shillings to each Footman per diem, during their Abode there, by and attour the paying the Officers their ordinary Pay. With Power also to the said Commissioners, by Force of Arms, to suppress all Meetings or Insurrections of the People, if any shall happen. And, if Need be, that the said Commissioners shall call to their Aid and Assistance, the Sheriffs, Stewarts, heritable Bailies, and others within the Sheriffdom of Galloway, and Stewartry of Kirkcudbright, and all Noblemen, Gentlemen, Stewarts, heritable Bailies, and others his Majesty's good Subjects within those Bounds, with Command to them readily to answer, obey, assist, and concur with the said Commissioners, to the Effect foresaid, as they shall be required. And that the said Commissioners make Report to the Council or Parliament of their Diligence in the Premises, betwixt and the — Day of June next to come.

Glencairn Chancellor,
Morton,
Sinclair,
J. Gilmor,

Primrose,
Jo. Fletcher,
Geo. Mackenzie,
Sir Rob. Murray.

When this Commission is granted, the Council joyn with it an Order, that Five hundred Pounds Sterling be advanced by the Receivers of the Excise to the Soldiers, as Part Payment of their Pay; with One hundred and twenty Pounds Sterling to the Earl of Linlithgow, and Fifty Pounds to the Laird of Niddry, for bearing their Charges.

Observes on
this.

That such a Sputter should be made, because a few Women in Two Parishes had put some affronts upon the Curates, when forced in upon them, may seem odd enough, and could not fail to increase the Dislike the People in the Southern Shires had against them. I scarce know what could have been done further, if the highest Acts of Treason had been committed: But the general Averfation of that Part of the Country from Prelacy, and the Complaints of the Bishops upon that Score, put them on those harsh Measures; and we shall after this meet with a constant Tract of Oppression and Devastation in that Corner, till they were forced to the Rising in Pentland. And for about Twenty four Years, the West and South of Scotland were the continual Scene of such Severities: But I go on to the Procedure of these Commissioners.

June 9. the Commissioners make Report.

June 9th, they make their Report to the Council, and 'tis very large; I shall give as short and distinct an Abstract of it as I can, that we may have some View of this first publick Step of heavy Oppression of Country People, for their Adherence to their Principles, and Averfion to Prelacy. Their Report was given in in Writ, and is in short.

At Kirkcudbright, May 25th, 1663.

Report from Kirkcudbright.

IN Obedience to our Commission, we having met at sundry Diets, and caused convene before us such Persons as were Committers of, or Assisters at the Tumult at Kirkcudbright, to wit, Agnes Maxwell, and about Thirty two Women, (most of them Widows and Servants, who need not be named here) with John Lord Kirkcudbright, John Carsan of Sennick, and John Euart; and after hearing Depositions and Confessions, find Agnes Maxwell, Christian McCavers, Jean Rennie, Marion Brown, and Janet Biglaw, are guilty of, and have been most active in the said Abuse, and ordain their Persons to be carried Prisoners under a Guard to Edinburgh, to answer before the Council. And Bessie Lawrie, with Thirteen others, have been accessory thereto; and ordain them to be imprisoned till they find Caution to appear before the Council, under the Pain of a Hundred Pounds Sterling each. Helen Crackin, and some others are found absent, and left to the Sheriff of Wigtoun and Magistrates of Kirkcudbright, to apprehend and imprison. And finding by John Lord Kirkcudbright's own Confession, and the Depositions of Witnesses, that he said, 'If the Minister came in there, he should come in over his Belly, and that he should lose his Fortune, ‘Fortune, or some such Words, before he should be Preacher there; and that by his own 1663.

‘Confession, he acknowledges the Receipt of my Lord Chancellor’s Letter before the Tu- ‘mult, and that he refused to compesce the same; and that he declared, If the Minister had ‘come in by his Presentation, he should have commanded as many Men as would have compesced
‘the Tumult, and bound them Hand and Foot; and therefore we declare him guilty of the ‘Insurrection, and ordain him to be carried Prisoner to Edinburgh by a Guard. The said
‘John Carsan of Sennick, being lately Provost of the said Burgh, and having great Interest ‘therein, and being with the Lord Kirkcudbright in the Town in the Time of the Tumult,
‘and desired by James Thomson Commisary to go with the rest to compesce the Tumult,
‘said scornfully, By what Authority could he go? and when the Commisary offered his Au- ‘thority, he said, His Authority was more over the dead than over the living: As also, That ‘he being a Commissioner of the Assize, refused his Advice or Concurrence to compescing
‘the Tumult; therefore we declare him to have had Accession to the Tumult, and ordain
‘his Person to be carried Prisoner to Edinburgh under a Guard. And finding by Deposition ‘of Witnesses, That John Ewart, late Provost of Kirkcudbright, being desired to give his ‘Advice for compescing the Tumult, he refused the same, alledging he was not a Counsel-
‘ler. We find that at the last Election he was chosen Provost, and without any just Cause ‘refused to accept of his Office, whereupon we declare him to be the chief Cause why the ‘Magistrates did not exerce their Office for the said Burgh: And finding, that notwithstanding ‘of his foresaid Refusal, he has sitten as a Commissioner of the Excise, and having ten-
‘dred to him the Declaration of Parliament, he refused to subscribe it; wherefore we ordain ‘him likewise to be carried to Edinburgh under a Guard. They add, That, according to the ‘Set of the Burgh, a new Council was chosen, and Magistrates, Mr. William Ewart Provost, ‘John Newall and Robert Glendonyng Bailies, and John Livingstone Treasurer, who accep- ‘ted in Terms of Law; and they signed a Bond in their own Name, and of the haill Inha- ‘bitants of the Place, binding and obliging them, and ilk one of them, conjunctly and sever-
‘rally, during their publick Trust, That they and all their Inhabitants within their publick ‘Liberties, should from the Day and Date thereof behave themselves loyally and peaceably,
‘and in all Things conform to his Majesty’s Laws made and to be made, both in Civil and ‘Ecclesiastical Affairs; and that they should with all Diligence execute any Commands that ‘are or should be directed to them, during the said Time, that flow from any Authority de- ‘rived from the Sacred Majesty of our dread Sovereign: As also, That they should protect
‘the Lord Bishop of Galloway, and the Minister of their Burgh, who should be established
‘there, and any other Ministers that are or shall be established by Authority; and that they ‘should fulfil all the above Particulars, under the Penalty of Eighteen thousand Merks Scots,
‘to be paid by them, or any of them, within a Month after they shall be declared guilty by
‘the Lords of his Majesty’s Privy Council. Which was subscribed in our Presence, and the ‘Presence of the Community of the said Burgh, and delivered to us.’

At Dumfries, May 30th, 1663.

‘IN pursuance of the foresaid Commission, as to the Trial of the Abuse lately at Irongray, Report from Irongray.
‘we caused cite before us William Arnot of Littlepark, George Rome of Beoch, and sever- ‘al other Persons said to be concerned therein; and after we had examined Witnesses, we ‘found that there had been several unlawful Convocations of the People of that Place, for ‘the opposing of the Admission of Mr. Bernard Sanderson to be Preacher at the said Parish, ‘especially against the serving of his Edict, and thereafter hindring Mr. John Wisheart to ‘preach, who was to have admitted the said Mr. Bernard. By the said Depositions we find, ‘that the said William Arnot did keep several Meetings before the Tumult; and that, when ‘he was desired and required by the Messengers who went to serve the Edict, to assist to ‘hold the Women off them, he declared, he neither could nor would do it; that he drew
‘his Sword and set his Back to the Kirk-door, and said, Let me see who will place a Mini- ‘ster here this Day. Therefore we find him guilty of the said Tumult, and ordain him to ‘be sent into Edinburgh under a Guard. We find George Rome of Beoch accessory, as being ‘present upon the Place, and not concurring for compescing of the Tumult, and ordain him ‘to go to Prison until he find Caution, under Five thousand Merks, to appear before the ‘Council when called. And as to the rest of the Persons, we find there hath been a great ‘Convocation and Tumult of Women; but, by reason there is no special Probation of any ‘Persons particular miscarrying, more than their being there present at the Tumult, we ‘thought fit to ordain the whole Party of Horse and Foot to be quartered upon the said Pa- ‘rish of Irongray, upon free Quarters, until Munday next; and that the whole Heritors of ‘the said Parish give Bond, upon the Penalty of One hundred Pounds Sterling, for their fu- ‘ture loyal Behaviour, conform to the Bond given at Kirkcudbright: And recommended to ‘the Sheriff of Niddale, to apprehend and try some who had not compeared, and report to ‘the Parliament or Council, twixt and the 28th of June. And they order Ten Pounds Ster- ‘ling

1663. 'ling to their Two Clerks, as much to Three Messengers, and Twenty Shillings to an Officer who waited on them, to be paid by the Heritors of Irongray, if the Council think fit.'

Annandale,
Drumlanerk,
Linlithgow,

Galloway,
J. Wauchop.

This Day the Council do no more upon the giving in of this Report, save the appointing of a Committee to examine the Earl of Linlithgow's Accounts of his Charges in the said Commission. And Five of the Inhabitants of Kirkcudbright, who had been imprisoned, when appearing for their Wives, as we heard, are set at Liberty by the Council, their Wives having found Caution at Kirkcudbright, after they had found Caution in the Council-books, 'To live peaceably and submissively to the present Government in Church and State, and give all due Deference to the Bishop of the Diocese, the Magistrates and Minister of the Place, and keep their Parish-kirk, and if any Tumults be, that they shall endeavour to compesce the same.'

No more offers about this Matter till July 14th. The Council having considered the Report, and the Instructions of the Earl of Linlithgow and the Commissioners, find, 'That they have proceeded diligently and legally in Execution of the Trust reposed in them, performed good Service to his Majesty and the Kingdom, and approve and ratify what they have done, and render them Thanks; particularly to the said Earl, who has by the Troops under his Command, ended the Tumults, and left a Party of Guards at the Town of Kirkcudbright to keep the Peace, and recommend him for his Expences to the Exchequer; and add the Earls of Montrose and Eglinton to those formerly appointed, to consider of the Business of Kirkcudbright and Irongray, to consider the Temper and Disposition of the Prisoners, with Power to call before them the Laird of Earlstoun, who is under Bond to compare, and report.'

August 13th, the Lords having considered several Petitions of the Prisoners from Kirkcudbright and Irongray, and the Report of the Commissioners sent to that Country, do find, 'John Carsan of Sennick, John Euart late Provost of Kirkcudbright, and William Arnot of Littlepark in Irongray, to have been most guilty of the Abuses and Disorders there, and fine John Carsan in the Sum of Eight thousand Merks, and the said William Arnot in the Sum of Five thousand Merks; and them to find Caution before they depart from Prison, to pay the said Sums to his Majesty's Exchequer 'twixt and Martinmas next, with Certification on if they fail, they shall be banished out of the Kingdom: And ordain and command the said William Arnot, betwixt and the 25th of October next to come, to make publick Acknowledgment of his Offences Two several Sabbaths at the Kirk of Irongray, before that Congregation. Likeas the said Lords do banish the said John Euart forth of this Realm for his Offence, and ordain and command him forth of the same 'twixt and this Day Twenty Days, not to be seen therein at any Time hereafter, without Licence from his Majesty or the Council, at his highest Peril.'

'And the said Lords finding Agnes Maxwell, Marion Brown, Jean Renny, Christian McCavers, and Janet Biglaw, to have been most active in the said Tumult, do ordain them, 'twixt and the 15th Day of September next to come, to stand Two several Market-days at the Market-cross of Kirkcudbright, ilk Day for the Space of Two Hours, with a Paper on their Face, bearing their Fault to be for Contempt of his Majesty's Authority, and raising a Tumult in the said Town; and ordain them before they depart out of Prison, to enact themselves in the Books of Council, to give Obedience to this; and the Magistrates of Kirkcudbright to execute the Sentence; and if they fail or delay so to do, that they cause whip them through the said Town, and banish them forth of the same, and the Liberties thereof.'

August 25th, John Euart petitions the Council that his Sentence may be mitigated, by reason of his ill State of Health, after Twelve Weeks Imprisonment, the Circumstances of his Wife and Family; and that the only Ground of his Sentence was his keeping his House in the Time of the Tumult. The Lords prorogate the Execution of his Sentence while the first Day of March next to come, and give Warrant for his Liberation, on his giving Bond to keep his Majesty's Peace in the mean Time.

The same Day John Carsan supplicates for a Mitigation of his Fine, seeing he was not present at the Tumult, nor had his Residence for a long Time in the Burgh of Kirkcudbright; and that he being in no publick Employment for many Years, did not conceive himself concerned to meddle in that Particular; and such a Fine would be the Ruin of his Family. The Council mitigate the Fine to Four thousand Merks, and ordain him to be liberate upon his giving Bond to pay the same at Martinmas next.

William Arnot of Littlepark petitions for a Mitigation, in regard he has not so much in all the World as the Fine, and his acting in the late Disorders at Irongray, was not from any Disloyalty to his Majesty, for whom he had appeared and suffered not a little in his worldly Interests under the Usurpation, as the Noblemen and Gentlemen about him know. mitigate the Fine to a Thousand Merks, and continue his publick Appearances after Divine Worship in the Church of Irongray, as above.

This is all I meet with in the Registers upon this Head. The rest of the Men, who were imprisoned for their Wives alledged Accession to the Tumult, after Sixteen Weeks Imprisonment at Edinburgh, were liberate, upon giving Bond to live peaceably. I find nothing further about the Lord Kirkcudbright, neither know I what Course was taken with him.

I find my Lord Kirkcudbright joyning with the Lord Waristoun, Mr. Andrew Cant, and others, 1652. in giving in Reasons why they could not own that Assembly till they had a Conference, even before the Choice of a Moderator; and his being among the Protesters, probably made it fare the worse with him now.

It was when those Commissioners from the Council were in the South, that the Troubles of that worthy Gentleman, the Laird of Earlstoun, began. All I have upon this, save what follows afterwards from the Registers, I shall give from the original Papers communicated lately to me by his Grandchild the present Laird of Earlstoun. The Commissioners knew Earlstoun's Firmness to Presbyterian Principles, and were willing to bring him either to comply in settling an Episcopal Minister at Dalry, where he was Patron, or if he refused, which they had Reason to expect he would, to bring him to Trouble. Accordingly they write the following Letter to him, which I give from the Original.

Earlstoun's Traube from the Communiquers.

Kirkcudbright, 21. May 1663.

Sir,

WE doubt not but you heard, that the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council have commisionate us to come to this Country, as to take Course with the seditious Tumult raised in this Place, so to do every Thing that may contribute to the settling of the Peace here, and to be assisting to the Bishop for planting of other vacant Churches, by the withdrawing of the respective Ministers: And finding the Church of Dalry to be one of those, and that the Bishop hath presented an actual Minister, Mr. George Henry, fit and qualified for the Charge, now being, according to the Act of Parliament, fallen into his Hand, jure devoluto, and that the Gentleman is to come to your Parish this Sabbath next, to preach to that People, and that you are a Person of special Interest there; according to the Power and Trust committed to us, we do require you to cause his Edict be served, and the Congregation convene, and to countenance him so as he be encouraged to prosecute his Ministry in that Place. In doing whereof, as you will witness your Respect to Authority, so oblige us to remain,

Their Letter to him.

Sir,

Your loving Friends and Servants,

Linlithgow,
Galloway,
Annandale,
Drumlanerk.

Earlstoun presently gave them a Return, which I transcribe from the Copy he kept, under his own Hand.

For the Right Honourable, and his very noble Lord, my Lord Linlithgow, and remanent Nobles at Kirkcudbright.

Earlstoun, May 22^d, 1663.

Right Honourable,

AND my very noble Lords, I received this Day an Express from your Lordships, by Mr. George Henry; whereunto for Answer, as to what relates to the Bearer, I humbly intreat your Lordships will be pleased to look upon me as one who has been educated from my Youth hitherto, to know my Duty to God, and all such whom he has placed in Authority over his People. I am not ignorant, my Lords, that my Allegiance obligeth me (beside other Engagements) to serve the King's Majesty with my Person and Fortune, and I trust your Lordships will permit me (because it is my Duty) to keep in all Things a good Conscience towards God: Yet, if these should thwart in any Case, I have ever judged it safest to obey God, and stand at a Distance with whatsoever doth not tend to God's Glory and the Edification of the Souls of his scattered People, of which that Congregation is a Part. And besides, my Lords, 'tis known to many, that I pretend and lay Claim to the Right of Patronage of that Parish, and has already (before the Time appointed, 1663. 'ted by the last Parliament did prescribe) determined therein with Consent of the People, to a truly worthy and qualified Person, and an actual Minister, if he may be admitted to exercise his Gift among that People; and for me to condescend to countenance the Bearer of your Lordships Letter, were to procure me most impiously and dishonourably to wrong the Majesty of God, and violently to take away the Christian Liberty of his afflicted People, and enervate my own Right. Wherefore, please your Lordships, believe me it is grievous to me that I am not in Capacity in the present Case to give your Lordships that hearty Obedience and real Observance, that otherwise I am most free to perform to the meanest in whom any of your Lordships may be concerned, seeing I have ever hitherto made it my Study to testify my Duty to your Lordships, as my Superiors whom God has established as Judges over me, under his Majesty, to whose Authority I shall (as hitherto) be most ready to witness all due Respects, as doth become,

His Answer;

My noble Lords,
Your Lordships. most real Friend, and humble Servant.

Upon this he is cited before the Council; and we shall afterward see what unprecedented Hardships he met with there, from the Council-books. I now return to the Sufferings of other Persons this Year.

We have seen by the former Acts, that the Ministers who were not reached by the Act at Glasgow, were restricted and confined to their own Parishes, as a large Prison; and many others confined to particular Places, which was very uneasy to them. They behaved, upon every Civil Affair, to apply to the Council for Liberty to come out of their Confinement. An Instance or Two of this will suffice.

Petition of Mrs. James, and John McGill.

May 24th, 'Anent a Petition presented by Mr. James McGill, late Minister at Largo, shewing, That umquhile James Viscount of Oxenford has nominated him with several others, Tutors Testamentary to his Children; and a Meeting of the said Tutors is appointed at Edinburgh next Week, and Letters are come to the Petitioner to keep that Meeting precisely, which he cannot do being under Restraint, and therefore craves Warrant for that Effect. The Council allows him to repair to Edinburgh, or any where else, for doing of his necessary Affairs, for the Space of one Month, and hereby take off his Restraint during that Time.'

That same Day, 'The Lords of Council having considered a Petition from Mr. John McGill, late Minister at Cowpar, and now Doctor of Medicine, desiring, That the Restraint put upon him not to return to this Kingdom for a Year, might be taken off: The Lords of Council take it off, and grant the said Mr. John Liberty to return, he obliging himself to appear before them, and give them Satisfaction for his peaceable Behaviour.'

Mr. James Wood cited before the Council, July 23.

In July, I find the Council going on in their Prosecution of the Presbyterian Ministers, in several Corners of the Country, whom the Bishops behaved to berid of. July 14th, 'The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council taking to their Consideration, That Mr. James Wood, late Principal of the College of St. Andrews, did, without any lawful Call or Warrant, intrude himself upon that Charge, and as yet does continue to exercise the same, notwithstanding of all the Acts of Parliament or Council made thereagainst, do ordain Messengers to charge the said Mr. James to appear before them the 23^d Instant, to answer to the Premises, or what else should be laid to his Charge, under the Pain of Rebellion.'

His Character.

Mr. James Wood was Provost of the old College of St. Andrews, and Minister there, and one of the brightest Lights we had in this Church during this Period, a Person of eminent Learning, Piety, and Solidity, and his printed Books shew his Abilities. I have been informed he left some very valuable Manuscripts behind him, particularly a complete Refutation of the Arminian Scheme of Doctrine, ready for the Press. Mr. Sharp was indebted to Mr. Wood for any Reputation he had, and was under as great Obligations to him, as one Man could be to another. They had been more than ordinarily familiar, and now the Primate could not bear his continuing at St. Andrews, and so caused cite him before the Council.

His Treatment before the Council.

July 23^d, Mr. Wood compares. He was asked how he came to be Provost at St. Andrews. When he began to answer, he was interrupted in a very huffing Manner, and commanded to give his Answer in a Word. The Archbishop and some others present could not bear his telling them some Truths he was entering upon; and when he saw it was fruitless to insist, he told them, He was called by the Faculty of that College, at the Recommendation of the Usurpers, as some here, added he, meaning Bishop Sharp, very well know. Whereupon he was removed, and in a little called in, and his Sentence intimated to him, which thus stands in the Council-books.

Several Ministers in the West and South cited before the Council, July 14.

Mrs. Hardy, Mackail, and Livingstone compare, and are confined.

Committee of Council to consider the Case of the old Presbyterian Ministers.

Mrs. Ramsay, Walkinshaw, Smith, Hamilton and Blair, cited before the Council.

Occasion of their Trouble.

Mr. John Hardy removed from his Charge.

Mr. James Wood, being called to answer for intruding himself upon the Office of Principality of the old College of St. Andrews, without any lawful Call, and as yet continuing to exercise the same, compeared personally, and declared, That he had deserted that Charge upon Friday last. In respect whereof, and that it was found by the said Mr. James his own Confession, that he had no Right but a pretended Call from the Masters of that College, and an Act of the late Usurpers, for exercising that Office, The Lords of Council, for present, do declare the said Place vacant, and ordain and command him to confine himself within the City of Edinburgh, and not to depart forth thereof while further Order. When his Sentence was intimate to him, he told them, He was sorry they had condemned a Person without hearing him, whom they could not charge with the Breach of any Law.

September 30th, a Petition is presented by Mr. Wood, shewing, That in Obedience to the Council's Act, he had remained those divers Weeks at Edinburgh, and is content still to continue there; but by reason his Father is extremely sick, and that he hath several necessary Affairs to do at St. Andrews, humbly therefore desiring Liberty and Warrant for that Effect. Which Petition being read, with a Testificate of the Petitioner his Father's Infirmary, the Council grant Licence to the Petitioner to go to St. Andrews to visit his said Father, and performing his other necessary Affairs, he always returning when he shall be called by the Council. This is all I find about this worthy Person: Next Year, we shall hear, he gets to the Joy of his Lord, and some Bustle is made about him after his Death.

At the same Diet of the Council, July 14th, an Attack is made, at the Bishop of Glasgow his Instigation, against some worthy Presbyterian Ministers in the West and South. The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, being informed of the turbulent and seditious Carriage of the Persons underwritten, Mrs. Alexander Livingstone, late Minister at Biggar, Matthew Mackail at Bothwell, John Guthrie at Tarbolton, John Blair at Mauchlin, John Schaw at Selkridge, George Johnstoun at Newbottle, John Hardy at Gordon, Archibald Hamilton at Wigtoun, George Wauch at Kirkcinner, and Anthony Murray at Kirkbean; ordain Masters, or Messengers at Arms, to charge the said Persons to appear before them the 23^d Instant, to answer to such Things as shall be laid to their Charge, under the Pain of Rebellion.

July 23^d, I find Mrs. Hardy, Mackail and Livingstone compear, and are continued till next Council-day, and in the mean time ordained and commanded to confine themselves within the City of Edinburgh, and not depart therefrom without Licence, and that they do not presume in the meantime to keep private Meetings and Conventicles.

That same Day the Council appoint the Lords Archbishops of St. Andrews and Glasgow, the Marquis of Montrose, the Lord Secretary, and Register, to wait on the Lord Commissioner his Grace, to think on a general Course, what shall be done as well anent those Ministers that were admitted before the 1649. and carry themselves disobediently to the Laws of the Kingdom, as those who were admitted since; and to report their Opinion.

Whether it was from this Meeting that the following Prosecution came, or not, I know not; but July 30th, The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, being informed of the factious and seditious Carriage of several Ministers in the West, and particularly of Mr. Matthew Ramsay, late Minister at Old-Kirkpatrick, Mr. James Walkinshaw at Badernock, Mr. Hugh Smith at Eastwood, Mr. James Hamilton at Blantyre, or Eglisbam, Mr. James Blair at Cathcart, who, in manifest and open Contempt of the Laws and Acts of Parliament and Council, have taken upon them to convocate great Multitudes of his Majesty's Subjects, for hearing their factious and seditious Sermons, to the great Scandal of Religion, and Prejudice to the Government of the Church: Wherefore they ordain a Charge to be given them personally, and failing that, at the Head-burgh of the Shire and its Market-cross, where they live, and at their late Manses and Dwelling-houses, and at the Market-cross of Edinburgh, to answer for their Contempt, under Pain of Rebellion; with Certification they shall be denounced Rebels.

Many of those Ministers now cited, and Mr. Mackail formerly cited, lay pretty near the City of Glasgow, and the People flocked out to hear them, which grated the Archbishop and those he had put in under him, and so they resolved to have them banished at some Distance from them. This was the Case likewise of Mr. James Cuninghame Minister at Laswade, a little from Edinburgh, who, I find, was brought to Trouble at this Time, but I have not met with him in the Council-books.

July 30th, Mr. John Hardy Minister of Gordon, being cited to answer for his Contempt of the Law, in preaching after he was discharged (this is a good Commentary upon the factious and seditious Carriage of the Ministers now cited) compeared, and having, in Face of Council, acknowledged that he had done so: The Lords of Council find, that he hath highly contemned his Majesty's Laws and Authority; and therefore do declare his Place vacant, and ordain him within Fourteen Days to remove himself and Family Twenty Miles distant from the said Parish of Gordon, and discharge him to reside within Six Miles of a-

any Cathedral Church, or Three Miles of a Roval Burgh, in Time coming. With Certification if he fail, he shall be pursued and punished as a seditious Person, and Contemner of his Majesty's Authority.

This is a Prelude to the Mile Act we have formerly heard the Council passed next Council-day, August 13th, which pretty much spared them the Trouble of any more particular Prosecutions. And that Act would seem to be the Issue of that Meeting, just now narrated, of the Two Archbishops, Secretary, and Commissioner; however they go on with such as had been cited before them.

Council's Procedure with Mrs. M^cKail, Livingstone, and Cuninghame,

August 18th, Mr. Matthew M^cKail and Mr. Alexander Livingstone, late Ministers, confined within the City of Edinburgh, being called, compeared. The Lords after hearing of them, ordain the said Mr. Matthew to wait on the Lord Commissioner's Grace, and Mr. Livingstone on the Archbishop of Glasgow, for giving them Satisfaction as to their Behaviour and Carriage. I am told the Archbishop had vowed, Mr. M^cKail should never preach again in Bothwell, but it did not hold. I think the Bishop himself scarce ever saw Glasgow again; for in a few Days after his riding the Parliament, at its rising, he died. And Mr. M^cKail being remitted to the Commissioner, he went up to London without doing any Thing in his Affair; and Mr. M^cKail ventured back to Bothwell, and escaped for some Time. I hear, that Mr. Livingstone was confined to his Parish till further Orders. Mr. George Johnston and Mr. James Cuninghame were reached by the Act of Glasgow, yet connived at by the Influence of Persons of Note; but now with Mr. Blair are confined to the North-side of Tay. I have nothing further about them in the Registers.

and Mr. John Blair.

That same Day, Mr. John Blair, late Minister, compeared, and, being examined, acknowledged, that notwithstanding he had been admitted since the Year 1649. he had, contrary to the Law, exercised the Ministerial Function, by preaching, baptizing, and marrying. The Lords do discharge him to exercise any Part of the Ministry in Time coming, without Warrant from his Ordinary where he shall reside, and ordain and command him, within Twenty Days, to remove himself and his Family from the new Kirk of Manchlin where he did last preach, and to remove himself beyond the River of Nefs, 'twixt and the First Day of October next to come, and discharge him to transgress the Bounds of his Confinement, under the highest Peril.

Mrs. Ramsay, Smith, and Walkinshaw.

Mrs. Matthew Ramsay, Hugh Smith, and James Walkinshaw, compearing this Day to answer for their Contempt of Authority, in preaching and keeping Conventicles contrary to Law, the Council remit Mr. Ramsay to the Archbishop of Glasgow to give him Satisfaction, and intimated the late Act of Council of the 13th of this Month to Mrs. Smith and Walkinshaw, and ordain them to obey it at their Peril. This is all I find about Ministers this Year, and we shall meet with few of them after this before the Council, the Mile Act this Year comprehending them all, and the high Commission next Year take some of the Council's Work off their Hand.

Earlstoun cited before the Council.

This Year the Laird of Earlstoun his Trouble and Oppression begins. He was a religious Gentleman of good Parts, and a great Support to the Presbyterians in that Country, and we shall meet with him almost every Year till the rising at Bothwell, when he got to Heaven. July 30th, 'The Lords of Council order Letters to be direct to charge William Gordon of Earlstoun to compear before them the-----Day of----- next to come, to answer for his factious and seditious Carriage,' that is, His refusing to hear the Curates, and hearing and favouring outed Presbyterian Ministers. And November 24th, 'The Council being informed that the Laird of Earlstoun keeps Conventicles and private Meetings in his House, notwithstanding the Laws and Acts of Parliament and Council made in the contrary, do ordain Letters to be direct against him, to compear before the Council the-----Day of----- to answer for his Contempt, under the Pain of Rebellion.' We shall meet with him next Year.

The Forces sent to the West and South to uplift the Fines.

I shall end this Section with some Account of the sending the Forces to the West and South Country, to quarter there, and uplift the Fines for not keeping the Parish-churches, which was the Beginning of much Oppression to those Shires for some Years.

October 13th, 'The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council do hereby give Order and Warrant to George Earl of Linlithgow, with all Conveniency to cause so many of the Six Foot Companies under his Command to march to Kirkcudbright, as with the Foot there already may make up the Number of Eightscore Footmen with their Officers, and to quarter there till further Order.'

That same Day, 'The Council give Order and Command to Sir Robert Fleming, with all Conveniency, to march to the West Two Squades of his Majesty's Life-guard, and to quarter one Squad thereof at Kilmarnock, and another at Paisly, till further Order.'

Council's Letter of Thanks to Sir James Turner.

It seems Sir James Turner had the Command of the Forces in the South, and was very active in raising the Fines for Absence from the Parish-church, and I doubt not but the Guards sent to Kilmarnock and Paisly were abundantly active this Way: However, Sir James gets the Thanks of the Council for his Diligence. November 24th, 'The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council recommend it to the Earl of Linlithgow to write a Letter of Thanks to Sir

James

James Turner, for his Care and Pains taken in seeing the Laws anent Church-government receive due Obedience: And withal to acquaint him, that he advise with the Bishop of Galloway, and send a Note to the Council of the Names of such Ministers as are come in from Ireland to that Country, or others who transgress, by preaching or otherwise, the Acts of Parliament and Council anent the Government of the Church; to the effect that the Council may take such Course therein as they shall think meet. And that also Sir James acquaint those Ministers who are debarred from the Possession of their Churches and Manes, that they make their Address to the Lords of Privy Council or Session, who will grant them Letters of Horning, upon Sight of their Presentations and Collations, against the Possessors of the said Manes. And withal my Lord is to acquaint Sir James, that the Council have directed Letters to cite Earlstoun to compare before them. 1663.

Sir James Turner we shall frequently meet with in the Progress of this History. He had been in the late Times a great Servant of the Covenanters, and at the Restoration found it convenient to go over to the other Side, with the same Zeal. He was a Person of a forward active Temper, and had somewhat of Harshness mixed with it; but was endued with a considerable Stock of Learning, and very bookish. This Person was abundantly ready to execute the Orders here given him with Rigour; but was obliged to go even beyond his Inclinations to satisfy the Bishop of Galloway, who was severe and cruel, as all Apostates use to be, and the rest of the Prelates. The Council finding the Body of the West and South of Scotland most dissatisfied with the late Change in the Church, and having put the uplifting of the Fines in the Hands of the Army, send West a good Body of the Forces, and with them the strictest Orders, to oblige all Persons to Subjection to the Bishops and their Curates. Character of Sir James.

By this a large Foundation is laid for most grievous Oppression and Exactions, under Colour of Law. The Process was very short in Cases of Nonconformity. The Curate accused whom he pleased to Sir James, or any of the Officers of the Army, yea, many times to a private Centinel. The Soldier is Judge, no Witnesses are led, no Probation is sought, the Sentence is summarily pronounced; and the Soldier executes his own Sentence, and he would not see the less to this, that the Money, generally speaking, came to his own Pocket; and very frequently the Fine upon some Pretext or other, far exceeded the Sum liquidate by Law. The Army grievously oppressed the Country.

Vast Contributions were under this Colour raised in the West and South: The Soldiers really carried as if they had been in an Enemy's Country, and the Oppression of that Part of the Kingdom was inexpressible. If a Tenant or Master of a Family, was unwilling, or really unable to pay, the Soldiers are sent to quarter upon him, till it may be, he pay Ten Times the Value of the Fine; and indeed many were totally eaten up. And, as if this was not enough, when poor Families were no longer able to sustain the Soldiers, their Stuff and Goods were distrained and sold for a Trifle. Vast Sums exacted.

In those Quarterings the ruffian Soldiers were terribly insolent. Family-worship was mocked at, and People disturbed when at it, as if it had been a Conventicle and contrary to Law. Multitudes were cruelly beat, and dragged to Church or Prison with equal Violence. By such Methods Hundreds of poor religious Families in the West and South were scattered, and reduced to extreme Necessity, and the Masters of them were obliged either to lurk or leave the Country. Insolence of the Soldiers.

Sir George Mackenzie's Vindication of all this is, p. 10. 'That 'tis impossible to answer for all the Extravagancies of Soldiers, and Sir James Turner was laid aside, which was all the State could do.' We shall afterwards hear the Procedure of the Council against Sir James, and find it was upon other Grounds than his quartering his Soldiers at this Time: We shall just now find him put on the high Commission, and sent once and again to harass the West and South; and he himself made it out to the West-country Men, who made him Prisoner, that he was far from going the Length of his Commission, notwithstanding the Heights we shall see he ran to. And we shall afterward find, that when, April 17th, 1683. John Wilson Writer in Lanerk, was before the Council, and speaks of the Council's condemning Sir James for his Cruelty, he is answered in Face of Council, and none contradicted it, That Sir James went not the Length of his Commission. Sir George Mackenzie's Vindication of this, considered.

And as to the common Extravagancies of Soldiers, the Reader will easily judge whether this be a Defence for what now passed. Sir James understood the military Law sufficiently, and had Spirit enough to have limited his Men; and I should not reckon Sir James worthy of the Command he had, if he was not able to restrain his Soldiers from going beyond his Commission. And had he been guilty of this, as Sir George insinuates, his Masters should have not only displaced, but punished him, at least they did so with far better Men for less Faults. Even Cromwel's Officers were made to answer for the Extravagancies of their Soldiers, tho' Foreigners, Enemies, and Conquerors; and 'tis strange if the like could not be done in Time of Peace, and under a just Government, as Sir George calls that. But all this is an insufficient Defence; only no better offered, the Matter did not bear it.

In order to facilitate the Soldiers Work, the Curates formed in most Parishes a Roll of their Congregations, not for any Ministerial Work they gave themselves the Trouble of, but to instruct their Parishioners with Briers and Thorns by their Army; and in order to the Soldiers The Curates Share in this Oppression.

diers visiting their Families, and examining their People's Loyalty. Sermons were all the Curates Work, and these short and dry enough. And after Sermon the Roll of the Parish was called from Pulpit, and all who were absent, except some Favourites, were given up to the Soldiers; and when once delated, no Defences could be heard, their Fine behoved either presently to be paid, or the Houses quartered upon; and some who kept the Church were some Time quartered upon, because the Persons who last Term lived there, were in the Curates Lists as Deserters of the Church.

The Trouble many were brought to at the Churches of the old Presbyterian Ministers.

The Soldiers Way there.

Another Part of the severe Oppression of the Country, by the Soldiers at this Time sent West, was at the Churches of the old Presbyterian Ministers. Such of those who continued either by Connivance, or at their Hazard, or by the Interest of some considerable Person in the Parish, had very throng Auditories, which grated the Bishops and their Underlings; so Orders were sent to the Soldiers, to go to their Churches likewise.

The Method was, as a good many living Witnesses can yet testify, The Party of Soldiers sat drinking, revelling, and carousing in some publick House in the Parish, till publick Worship was near over; and then came armed to the Church-door, or Church-yard Gates, and guarded those, caused the People pass out one by one, and interrogate them upon Oath, If they were one of that Congregation? If they could not say they were Parishioners, tho' it may be the Congregation they lived in was vacant, and no Curate settled in it, the Soldiers immediately fined them, and any Money they had was taken from them. If they had no Money, or not so much as was required, then their Bibles, the Mens Coats, and Womens Plaids were taken from them. You would have seen the Soldiers returning on the Lord's Day, from one of these Churches, laden with Spoil, as if they had come from a Battle where they had stripped the Slain, or the sacking and plundering a City.

In some Places there was yet sadder Work, tho' this was not so common as the former. The Soldiers would come in Companies in Arms to the Presbyterian Ministers Churches, and without any Ceremony enter the same by Force, and interrupt divine Worship. One Party would stand at the one Door, and a Second Party at the other, and guard them so as let no Body get out; and a Third Party would enter the Church, and obliged the People to go out all by one Door, and these that would not presently swear they belonged to that Parish, they rifled them of all they had, and sometimes forced them to go with them to Prison.

Dreadful was the Confusion and Profanation of the Lord's Day, and several were wounded, and others sorely beat. Many Instances of those Abuses, in this and the following Years, might be given through the West and South, were there Need; particularly at the Churches of Eglisbam, Stewartoun, Ochiltree, Irvin, Kilwinning, and other Places, too long to be narrated here.

And after all, the Soldiers were so insolent and severe, as to force People, for Fear of worse, to declare under their Hand, that after all those and many other Outrages, they were kindly dealt with and used, and engage to make no Complaints; and when they had forced this from some People, they thought themselves secure.

Indeed 'tis but a lame Idea can be framed of the Nature and Severities of those Quarterings, now at this Distance: But from this short Hint 'tis evident, the Procedure of the Managers this Year, with that of the high Commission next Year, and the following Severities in the Year after, naturally paved the Way for all Confusions and Extremities the Country fell into afterwards, and may be reckoned the real Causes of them.

Occurrences this Year.

Bishop Mitchel dies, February this Year.

The Council's Procedure as to Mr. Dickson's Therapeutica sacra.

AS I have done upon the former Years, so I shall end this, by taking Notice of several incidental Things which may tend to clear the History of this Period, and yet come not in upon the former Sessions; and I shall run very quickly through them.

February this Year died Mr. David Mitchel, who had been Minister of Edinburgh before the 1638. and, as we heard, was made first Bishop of Aberdeen, after the Restoration, tho' his Character did not merit any Elevation in the Church; and he was succeeded by Bishop Buruet.

We heard before, that an Application was made to the Council for a Licence to print Mr. David Dickson's Therapeutica sacra, in English, and it was remitted to Mr. Fairfoul to revise. As he was a very unfit Hand to come after the reverend and learned Mr. Dickson, so I doubt, if, during his Life, any Application was further made; but now that excellent Person having got to his Reward, a new Application is made, March 24th. 'The Council having considered the Desire of the Petition presented by Mr. Alexander Dickson, Professor of 'Hebrew ‘ Hebrew in the College of Edinburgh, Son to umquhile Mr. David Dickson Professor of Divinity there, for a Licence to print his Father’s Therapeutica sacra, in English; do find it reasonable, and recommend to, and require the Bishop of Edinburgh, or such as he shall think fit, to revise the said Book and Translation thereof; and if he or they shall find it useful for the Publick, and give Testimony thereof under their Hand, the Lords give Warrant to his Majesty’s Printer to cause print the same.’

1663.

This excellent Book is upon a Subject the Managers needed not be afraid of, and did not in the least concern Politicks, or their Government in Church and State, but was entirely calculate for the promoting of real Godliness and practical Religion, and hath been singularly useful unto Thousands. Whether it was put into the Hands of the Bishop or not, I cannot say: But October 13th, I find there is a Licence granted for publishing it, without any Restrictions. ‘The Lords of Council do hereby licentiate and give Warrant to the Printing of a Book called Therapeutica sacra, translated out of Latin into English, by Mr. David Dickson, and discharge all Printers to print the same, except Christopher Higgins his Majesty’s Printer, as they will be answerable, without the special Licence of Mr. Alexander Dickson Son to the said Mr. David.’

It may perhaps be thought foreign to this History, and I shall but just name it, to notice, That the Duke of Monmouth and Dutcheffs of Buccleugh were married, April 24th, and in a few Weeks I find a Patent, creating them Duke and Dutcheffs of Buccleugh, read in Council and recorded: We shall afterwards meet with his Grace the King’s natural Son in the Progress of this History.

Duke of Monmouth married to the Countess of Buccleugh.

Upon the 26th of April, the Lyon King at Arms died, and Sir Charles Erskine, Brother to the Earl of Airly, succeeded him in that Post, who, September 26th, is crowned in Presence of the Parliament; but I don’t find the Formality of a Sermon used, as was at the Coronation of the former King at Arms.

New Lyon King at Arms

June 2^d, the Council pass the following Act with relation unto Quakers.

THE Lords of his Majesty’s Privy Council, taking to their Consideration the great Abuse committed by these People who take upon them the Profession of Quakers, whereby both Church and State is and may be prejudged, to the great Scandal of the Gospel; and being most willing to remedy the same, they do appoint the Lord Advocate, the Lord Tarbet, and Sir Robert Murray, to meet and call before them John Swinton, sometime of that Ilk, Anthony Hedges of Burnside, and Andrew Robertson, and examine them, and the Papers that have been intercepted, passing ’twixt them and some others, and what Correspondence they have had, either with those in England, or elsewhere, to the Prejudice of the Church or State; and for this Effect give Power to cite and receive Witnesses, and all other Manner of Probation, and to report to the Council. And because it is certainly informed, that there are several Meetings of Quakers in Edinburgh, both on the Week-day and Sabbath in Time of Divine Worship, who seduce many to follow after mischievous Practices; therefore, for preventing the same in Time coming, they do ordain and require the Magistrates of the Burgh of Edinburgh, to cause a strict Enquiry to be made after the Dwelling-places or Houses where those Persons resort, and that they call for the Landlords or Heritors of the said Houses, and cause them take such Course as there be no Meetings of such Persons any more within their Houses; and, if Need be, that they take the Keys of their Houses from them: And withal, that they take Care that no Heritor, Landlord, or others, let any House to such Persons, as they shall be answerable, in Time coming.

Act of Council, June 2d, against Quakers.

Had this good Act been prosecute with the same Vigour those against Presbyterians were, we might in this Land soon been freed from that dangerous Sect; but as soon as the Bishops come into Council, in a few Days after this, I observe little more done against them. They gave the Council so much to do against Presbyterian Nonconformists, that for some Years I meet with little further against the Quakers; and any Thing that was done was so little prosecute, that they spread terribly during this Reign.

June 9th, there is read a Letter from the King to the Council, relative to the Plot, commonly called, Bloods-plot, bearing, ‘That by an Express of the 29th of May, before this Time they had received his Majesty’s Letter, declaring his Pleasure for discharging the Two Commissions formerly granted to the Earl of Middleton, and requiring them to adjourn the Parliament to the 18th of June, and that they had received the Earl of Rothes’s Commission, that it might pass the Seals: But now having received Information of a damnable Plot in the Kingdom of Ireland, to surprize the Castle of Dublin, and raise a Rebellion, which is now in a good Measure prevented, and some of the principal Persons secured; yet because it is informed, Gilbert Ker was engaged in that treasonable Design, and escaped, and because there’s Reason to think he and some others, involved in that Guilt, may endeavour an Escape through the Kingdom of Scotland, the Council are required to give immediate Orders, that all Persons, come over in Ten Days before the Date of this, be strictly examined, and

‘ and dealt with as they deserve. ’ A Copy of the Irish Proclamation is sent inclosed. This Letter is dated the 1st of June. The Council gives Orders accordingly. For any Thing I can learn, no Accession to this Plot could ever be fixed on Colonel Ker.

June 15th, the Earl of Roths’s Commission, to be Commissioner to the Parliament, is read and recorded in Council, and likewise his Commission to be Lord High Treasurer, in the Room of the Earl of Crawford, who had demitted that Place, because he could not sign the Declaration formed by Parliament last Year, and ordered to be taken by all in publick Trust. I am told, that this noble Person was particularly in Middleton’s Eye, when the Declaration was penn’d, and he readily went into it at the Bishop’s Instigation, that he might have the Post for himself or one of his Friends. And ’tis said, He was put in Hopes that the Earl of Lawderdale might boggle at it: And the Earl of Lawderdale said to my Lord Crawford, That he wanted not some Difficulties as to the Declaration, and wished it had not been pass’d; but since it was pass’d, he would come over them, and be avenged upon his Enemy Middleton.

At the same Time a considerable Addition was made to the Council. The Earl of Lawderdale took his Place: His Brother Mr. Charles, Master and General of the Mint, was added to the Council, by a Letter from the King; we shall afterward meet with him under the Stile of the Lord Hattoun; and John Hume of Rentoun is, by another Letter, admitted Counsellor; as also the Two Archbishops. The Letter relative to them deserves a Room here, and follows.

bishops, to the Council.

‘ WE Greet you well. Being most confident of the Fidelity and Affection to Our Service, of the most Reverend Fathers in GOD, the Archbishops of St. Andrews and Glasgow, We have thought fit to add them to Our Council: These are therefore to require you to receive them to Our Privy Council, in the ordinary Way; for which this shall be your Warrant. Whitehall, June 4th. ’

That same Day an Order is given to liberate the Lord Lorn from the Castle of Edinburgh.

Lord Lorn liberate, June 24.

‘ THOSE are to require and command Robert Straiton, Captain of the Castle of Edinburgh, immediately upon Sight hereof to put at Liberty forth of the Castle of Edinburgh, Archibald Campbel eldest Son to the late Marquis of Argyle, for which these shall be a Warrant. ’ and restored to his Grand-father’s Estate.

Middleton’s Projects against the noble Family of Argyle were now at an End, and the Earl of Lawderdale had taken Care to convince the King, that the Sentence pass’d against the Lord Lorn was upon no solid Grounds, and had been procured from particular Designs of the Earl of Middleton. And so after the Parliament was up, in a few Days came down a Patent restoring the Lord Lorn to all his Grandfather’s Estate; and because his Father the Marquis died under a great Burden of Debt, it was ordained that the Lord Lorn should have Fifteen thousand Pounds per Annum paid to him out of the Estate, and the rest of the Estate was ordered to go to the Payment of the Debts and Creditors, of which the Lord Lorn and his Two Sisters were first to be satisfied. And the Restoration of this noble Person was indeed a Piece of Justice done him, as well as a grateful Acknowledgment of his Services to, and Sufferings for the King under his Exile.

Tweddale President of the Council.

At this Time likewise the Earl of Tweddale was made President of the Privy Council in Roths’s Room, and a Remission was pass’d for George Campbel Sheriff-depute of Argyle, Father to that great Light of this Church, the Reverend Mr. George Campbel, Professor of Divinity at Edinburgh since the Revolution, whom we shall meet with in the Progress of this Work.

Order of Council concerning the Prisoners from Kirkcudbright.

I omitted a pretty singular Order of Council, which might have come in upon the former Section, which no doubt came from the Bishops now in Council, with respect to the Prisoners from Kirkcudbright. June 23^d, ‘ The Lords of Council being informed, that Ministers and other Persons visit the Prisoners for the Riot at Kirkcudbright, now in the ‘booth of Edinburgh, and not only exhort, but pray for the said Persons to persist in their wicked Practices, affirming that they are suffering for Righteousness Sake, and assure them God will give them an Outgate; recommend it to the Keeper to notice who visits them, and what their Discourse and Carriage is when with them. ’ Those idle Censures of the Prayers of such as visited the Prisoners, were unworthy of the Notice of the Council. John Ewart and some of the Prisoners were eminent Christians, and no doubt suffering for their Regard to

to the Gospel. However, 'tis well the Council went no further, and discharged all Visits to them.

This Summer, as we heard, a great many were vexed and harassed for not subjecting to the Ministry of the Episcopal Clergy, and not waiting upon Ordinances dispensed by them. Some had Freedom to hear the conformist Ministers, yet, when they had Opportunity, they choosed far rather to joyn with the few remaining Presbyterian Ministers, especially in the Dispensation of Sacraments. And some had no Freedom to hear the Curates, or receive Sacraments from them, till they gave a Testimony or Protestation against what they judged wrong in them, for exonerating of themselves, that they did not by joyning with them approve of it.

Many brought to trouble for not joyning with Curates.

This was insisted upon by some, not only of the more common People, but even of better Rank. That worthy and learned Physician, Doctor Silvester Rattray, well enough known in the learned World, was, upon Thursday the 23^d of July this Year, called before the Meeting of the Episcopal Ministers at Glasgow, to receive a Censure for his taking one of his Children out of Town, to be baptized by a Presbyterian Minister; and having this Opportunity of exonerating himself, he gave in the following Paper signed with his Hand.

Doctor Rattray's Paper when he appeared before the Episcopal Ministers at Glasgow, July 23.

I Declare unto you, Sir, before this Meeting, that really I am of the Presbyterian Perswasion and Judgment; and that, not only because I was bred and brought up under it, but also being convinced by clear Evidence from Scripture, that it is the only Government Christ and his Apostles did leave behind them, whereby the Church should be ruled to the End of the World: As also, because of the many Obligations, Ties, and Vows yet recent upon my Spirit for adhering unto it: As also, I am convinced that Prelacy is an human Invention, which derives its Rise only from some antiquated Customs in the Church. And albeit the Lord, in his holy and sovereign Providence, hath suffered this Hedge of Presbytery to be broken down, wherein ye have born deep Shares to your Power, I do declare that I will not separate from the Church of God, but will participate of the Ordinances so long as they remain pure among us, only with this Proviso, that this my Participating of the Ordinances do not infer my approving any unlawful or unwarrantable Practice in you, or any other of the Dispensers of the Ordinances.

Doctor S. Rattray.

Afterwards, when the bloody and cruel Scheme of Oppression and Persecution opened out, such Declarations as this were not received, and tho' they had, could scarce have been a sufficient Salvo for joyning with the Courses and Defections of this lamentable Time. However, great Numbers, some upon one Pretext, some upon another, were brought to much Trouble for their Nonconformity with the Clergy now set up.

During the Sitting of Parliament, and I think by Order of it, Angus and Neil McLeods were denounced and put to the Horn, being, as was alledged, the Persons who had taken the Marquis of Montrose, May 1650. This was done August 17th this Year.

McLeods denounced for taking Montrose, 1650.

September 29th, Mr. Thomas Sideferf, Minister at Edinburgh, and Bishop of Galloway before the Year 1638. and now, as we heard, Bishop of Orkney, died at Edinburgh. He was buried honourably there, October 4th, being a Sabbath: His Corps lay in State in the Isle of the East-kirk, and Mr. William Annand had a Sermon before their Interrment, wherein he described, with Abundance of Parade, the Family, Birth, Piety, Learning, Travels, Life, and Sufferings for the Sake of the Gospel, of the deceased Prelate. This is the Second Bishop dies this Year, and just now we shall hear of a Third.

Bishop Sideferf's Death September 29.

In September the Council write to the King about some new Impositions put upon Scotsmen in France in their Traffick, as follows.

Most Sacred Sovereign,
WE are informed by several Merchants of this Kingdom who traffick with France, and some who reside there who are your Majesty's native Subjects, that there being of late some Impositions put upon the Vessels and Merchant-goods belonging to Foreigners, by the French King; the general Farmers of those Taxes upon that Pretext have incumbered the Goods and Vessels of your Majesty's Subjects belonging to this Kingdom, so that they are in Hazard to be reduced to the common Condition of Strangers, and lose the Benefit of those ancient Privileges which for many Years they have enjoyed during the Reigns of your Majesty's glorious Predecessors of Blessed Memory, until the Time of the late Usurpers, during which, your Majesty's Subjects of this Kingdom did exceedingly suffer in their Privileges and Immunities in France, and other foreign Kingdoms for want of your Majesty's Protection.

Council's Letter to the King upon the new Impositions upon Scotsmen in France, with an Account of the old League with France.

And seeing it can be made appear, that in the Year 787. by a Treaty betwixt Achaius then King of Scotland, and Charles the Great then Emperor and King of France, confirmed thereafter in the Time of Alexander II. many great Privileges were secured unto this your Majesty's 1663. ' Majesty's ancient Kingdom; and that in the Year 1558. when the Dolphin of France was married to Mary then Queen of Scotland, there was a reciprocal Naturalization of the Subjects of either Kingdom, ratified and recorded here in Parliament, and the great Council of France, which has been punctually observed; and that whensoever any of your Majesty's Subjects were troubled in France, for Taxes put upon Strangers, they were declared free by Sentences of those Judicatories, to which they were liable, conform to several Declarations of the French Kings from Time to Time, particularly in the Year 1639. by a Declaration and Arrest of the Council of State of France, whereby all Scottish Men living in France, and their Descendents, are declared free of all Taxes put upon Strangers. We found it our Duty humbly to offer the Condition of those your Majesty's Subjects, and their Sufferings and Hazard to your Royal Consideration, and take the Boldness to implore in their Behalf, that your Majesty would be graciously pleased to interpose with the French King, for Relief from their present Incumbrances, and the Security of their ancient Privileges for the future, and to put a present Stop to any levying of Taxes from them. And if your Majesty think fit to employ any of your Subjects of this Kingdom to negotiate that Affair, we shall be ready to furnish him Authorities and Originals fit for that Purpose. We are, &c.' I find no more of this till in King James's Reign, the Recovery of our Privileges in France is brought in to be a Bait to come into the Repeal of the penal Laws against Papists.

The Primate
impowered to supply Mr.
James Wood's Place.

That same Day the Council considering the Vacancy of St. Salvator's College in St. Andrews, recommend to the Lord Archbishop as Chancellor of that University, to name a Person to oversee the Masters, Regents, and Scholars, exercising Discipline, and enjoying the Privileges, and uplifting the Emoluments of the Provost of that College: And the Council require the Person named by his Grace to accept. We may see the Archbishop had some Reason for pushing the Removal of the Reverend Mr. James Wood, of which before.

As soon as the Parliament rose, a good many went up to Court. The Commissioner who was well received, Lawderdale, the Earl of Dumfries, Lord Bellenden, Treasurer-depute, Sir John Fletcher Advocate. The Primate goes not up at first, but in a little Time followed them, and brought down the Warrant for the High Commission next Year.

Archbishop
Fairfoul's Death
November 2.

November 2^d, Archbishop Fairfoul died in his Lodgings at Edinburgh. Since his riding the Parliament in Pomp and State, he was not well, and continued till this Time when he died. Upon the 11th Instant his Corps were carried to St. Giles's East Church, now the new Church in Edinburgh, and laid in Mourning before the Pulpit. The Bells rang for the funeral Sermon at Four in the Afternoon. Mr. John Hay Parson at Peebles, now Archdean at Glasgow, preached from Eccles. 12. 5. When Sermon was over, the Corps were put into a Mourning Coach, and carried to Holy-rood-house, with the Nobility and principal Gentry in Town; the Magistrates, the Lords of Session in Coaches, and the rest on Foot, with Trumpets sounding, and Two Heralds, and Two Pursevants with Coats displayed before the Corps, with great Numbers of Torches; the Chancellor with his Purse after the Corps, and the Archbishop of St. Andrews and other Bishops in Coaches; and the Body was interr'd in the east End of the Abbey Church. Thus Three of our Bishops are carried off, and Bishop Burnet from Aberdeen is translated to Glasgow. Doctor Scougal succeeds him there; and Mr. Andrew Honniman is made Bishop of Orkney, as we shall hear, next Year.

I shall end this Year with remarking, that the Council are very careful to supply the alledged Necessities of Bishops and their Clergy. The Bishop of the Isles was not satisfied with his Rent as Bishop, and so they allow him the Stipend of the Parish where he had been Minister, and they allow a good large Sum out of the vacant Stipends to Mr. Annand, tho' his Stipend was not despicable at Edinburgh. I shall give both as they stand in the Registers.

Council's Act,
giving the Stipend of Barnwel to the Bishop of the Isles.

November 10th, 'Anent a Petition presented by the Bishop of the Isles, shewing, That the Provision of the Bishoprick of the Isles is so mean, that unless his Majesty shall be pleased to take some Course for helping of it, the Petitioner shall not be able to subsist by it, by reason of the Distance of the Place, and the extraordinary Expences he is put to in visiting his Diocese; and seeing the Stipend of Barnwel, where the Supplicant served last Twenty two Years, is vacant this Year, notwithstanding of all Endeavours used for planting thereof; humbly therefore desiring, that in Consideration of the extraordinary Expences and Pains that he is put to, the said Year's Stipend may be allowed him for his present Supply, as the Petition bears. Whilk being at length read, heard, and considered, the Lords of his Majesty's Council give Warrant and Power to the Supplicant to uplift the Stipend of the said Parish of Barnwel the said Year 1663. and ordain the Heritors, Feuars, and Liferenters, and others liable, to make due and thankful Payment; and, if Need be, ordain Letters to be direct hereupon in Form as effeirs.'

Mr. Annand allowed 200
Pounds Sterling.

The same Day, 'Anent a Petition of Mr. William Annand Minister at Edinburgh, shewing, That whereas the Petitioner's Father, in Consideration of his Sufferings, was appointed Two hundred Pounds Sterling out of the vacant Stipends, notwithstanding whereof, his Father, during his Lifetime, received nothing thereof; humbly therefore desiring the same Locality might be assigned to the Petitioner, for Payment of the said Sum, or else that he may may be recommended to the Lord St. Andrews his Grace, for that Effect. The Lords of Council recommend him to the Archbishop of St. Andrews, to appoint a Locality for the said Sum, and ordain Letters of Horning to be direct upon the Localities so to be granted.' 1663.

CHAP. V.

Of the State and Sufferings of Presbyterians, during the Year 1664.

WE are now got through the most considerable Transactions of the Period 1664. which is the Subject of this first Book: We are to have no more Parliaments for some Years; and the extensive and large Acts of Council, with the severe Execution of them, already described, leave little Room for much further to be done by the Managers, until the Rising at Pentland is taken hold of for a Handle to further Severities.

However, the Laws made by the Three last Sessions of Parliament, now begun to be rigorously executed by the Army, did not satisfy the cruel Bishops. The People in Scotland, when Episcopacy was forced upon them, had ill enough Impression of them and their Curates; but the Barbarity of the Soldiers, hounded out by the Prelates, and under the Direction of the Curates, brought the West and South of Scotland, now mostly the Scene of their Severities, perfectly to lothe the Bishops.

Nevertheless, when they perceived that they could not be loved and esteemed as Fathers of the Church, they resolve to be feared, as Tyrants ordinarily do; and therefore they prevail to get an High-commission Court set up, effectually to bring this about.

This terrible Court is the chief and most remarkable Thing in this year I am now entring upon; and because very little, either as to its Nature or Proceedings, hath, as far as I know, been published, I shall give the larger Accounts of it in this Chapter.

The Work of the Privy Council was pretty much abridged by this frightsom Court; and yet we shall find them going on to put in Execution the Act of Middleton's Parliament concerning the Fines, and pushing the Declaration formerly spoken of, and, at the Intligation of the Bishops, making some new and very unaccountable Acts against Presbyterian Ministers, and others of that Perswasion.

Besides, they are going on against some more particular Gentlemen and Ministers, and putting them to new Trouble. Those, with some other incidental Matters that tend to clear the History of this Year, will afford Matter for Five Sections; and I begin with the High-commission Court.

SECT. I.

Of the Erection and Powers of the High-commission Court, with some Reflections upon the same.

WHEN the Plan of Prelacy was perfected and set up in Scotland, the King was made to expect, that his Prerogative would be strengthened in Scotland, and his Power and Pleasures every Way secured. No doubt somewhat as to both was done for him, but in Reality the Bishops were a dead Weight on his Authority, and a Clog upon his Actions; and as they dethroned him in the Hearts of the best of his Subjects; so they were perpetually teasing and vexing him with new Demands, dishonourable for his Majesty to go into, and very burdenson to his Subjects and the poor Country.

Thus the Archbishop of St. Andrews, in the End of December last Year, comes up to Court to make new Demands, and use his Interest for filling up the vacant Bishopricks, but especially for erecting the High-commission Court.

The Chancellor, and some other of our Noblemen here, were not for running altogether so fast as our Prelates would have them; and Glencairn, in particular, was highly dissatisfied with Bishops make still new Demands upon the King.

The High Commission owing to the Primate.

Difference falls out 'twixt the Chancellor and him.

1664.

with the Pride and Overdriving of the Archbishop and other Prelates. I am informed, he went so far as to say to the Earl of Rothes, before his going up to Court last Year, That it was Noble mens Interest and Concern to bear down the growing Power of Bishops, otherwise they were like to be treated now by them, as they had been before the 1638. This coming to the Ears of Bishop Sharp, I am told he treated the Chancellor with Indiscretion abundance, and plainly threatned to disgrace and discount him.

The Primate
gains his Point at Court.

When he got up to Court, he made heavy Complaints of the Backwardness of many Noble men in executing the Laws made for the Interest of the Church; and prevailed with the King, by the Help of the English Bishops, and the High-fliers, to grant a Commission for erecting an High-commission Court in Scotland, made up of Churchmen and Laymen, to execute the Laws concerning Church-affairs; and it was in every Point modelled according to his Mind. The Nature of this Court will best appear from the King's Commission brought down by the Archbishop; which is as follows.

Commission for executing the Laws in Church-affairs.

King's Commission for this Court.

OUR Sovereign Lord ordains a Commission to be passed and expedite under his Majesty's great Seal for the Kingdom of Scotland, making Mention, That in Consideration of the Multiplicity and Weight of the Affairs of the State incumbent upon the Lords of Privy Council, so as they cannot attend the due Execution of the Laws against Popery, Separation, and Disobedience to Ecclesiastical Authority; and to the effect that the Disorders and Contempt of Authority and the Laws in the Provinces of St. Andrews and Glasgow, may be timeously suppressed, and the Scandalous and Disobedient may not through Impunity and Connivance be emboldned to violate and affront the Laws, create Disturbances, foment Sedition and Disaffection to the Government of the Church and State, under Pretence of any Engagements: His Majesty by Virtue of his Royal Prerogative in all Causes, and over all Persons, as well Ecclesiastick as Civil, has given and granted, likeas by the Tenor hercof gives and grants full Power and Commission to the Archbishop of St. Andrews, the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Treasurer, the Archbishop of Glasgow, Duke Hamilton, the Marquis of Montrose, the Earls of Argyle, Athol, Eglinton, Linlithgow, Hume, Galloway, Annan-dale, Tweeddale, Leven, Murray; the Bishops of Edinburgh, Galloway, Dunkeld, Aberdeen, Brechin, Argyle, and the Isles; the Lords Drumlanerik, Pitligo, Frazer, Cochran, Halkertoun, and Bellenden; the President of the Session, the Register, the Advocate, Sir John Hume Justice-clerk, Mr. Charles Maitland, the Laird of Philorth Elder, Sir Andrew Ramsay, Sir William Thomson; the Provosts of St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Glasgow, Air, and Dumfries; Sir James Turner, and the Dean of Gild of Edinburgh, or any Five of them, an Archbishop or Bishop being one of the Number, to use their utmost Endeavour that the Acts of Parliament and Council, for the Peace and Order of the Church, and in Behalf of the Government thereof by Archbishops and Bishops, be put in vigorous and impartial Execution against all and every one within the Kingdom of Scotland, who presume to violate, contemn, or disobey those Acts and the Ecclesiastical Authority now settled; to summon and call before them, at whatsoever Time and Place they shall appoint, all Popish Traffickers, Intercommuners with, and Resettlers of Jesuits and seminary Priests, all who say or hear Mass, all obstinate Contemnners of the Discipline of the Church, or for that Cause suspended, deprived or excommunicated; all Keepers of Conventicles, all Ministers who, contrary to the Laws and Acts of Parliament or Council, remain or intrude themselves on the Function of the Ministry in these Parishes and Bounds inhibited by those Acts; all such who preach in private Houses, or elsewhere, without Licence from the Bishop of the Diocese; all such Persons who keep Meetings at Fasts, and the Administration of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, which are not approved by Authority; all who speak, preach, write, or print, to the Scandal, Reproach, and Detriment of the Estate or Government of the Church or Kingdom, as now established; all who contemn, molest, or injure the Ministers who are orderly and obedient to the Laws; all who do not orderly attend Divine Worship, Administration of the Word and Sacraments, performed in their respective Parish-churches, by Ministers legally settled for taking Care of these Parishes in which those Persons are Inhabitants; all such, who, without any lawful Calling, as Busie-bodies, go about Houses and Places, for corrupting and disaffecting People from their Allegiance, Respect and Obedience to the Laws: And generally, without Prejudice to the Particulars above-mentioned, all who express their Disaffection to his Majesty's Authority, by contravening Acts of Parliament or Council in relation to Church-affairs. With Power to the said Commissioners, or any Five of them, an Archbishop or Bishop being one of the Number, to appoint Ministers to be censured with Suspension or Deposition, and to punish by fining, committing to Prison, and incarcerating them and all other Persons, who shall be found Transgressors, as aforesaid, according as they shall judge the Quality of their Offence to deserve, they always not exceeding the Fines and Punishments enjoyned by the Acts of Parliament and Council. Commanding the Captains of his Majesty's Guards, the Officers of

of the standing Forces and Militia, Sheriffs, Deputes, Bailies of Regalities, Justices of the Peace, and Provosts and Bailies of Burghs, to search, seek, take, and apprehend all such Delinquents, and present them before the Commissioners, upon the Warrant of any Five of them, as aforesaid. Commanding likewise the Constables and Commanders of his Majesty's Castles, Keepers of Prisons, and other Places of Firmance, to receive and detain those that shall be directed to them by the Commissioners, upon the said Warrant, as said is, as they will answer upon their Obedience, or utmost Peril. Ordaining further the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, upon any Certificate subscribed by the said Commissioners, or any Five of them, as aforesaid, to direct Letters of Horning for Payment of the Fines imposed by the said Commissioners, in case of the Delinquents Disobedience and Refusal to compare before them; of which Letters of Horning, no Suspension or Relaxation shall be granted without the Certificate of the Archbishop or Bishop, bearing their Obedience to the said Commissioners, and Satisfaction to the Laws. And his Majesty doth make, constitute, and ordain Mr. Thomas Young, Clerk to the Commission for Plantation of Kirks, to be Clerk to this Commission, with Power to him to appoint Officers, and other Attendants necessary, and to direct Summons and Precepts in his Majesty's Name, for citing whatsoever Parties or Persons, in any of the Cases aforesaid; whilk Precepts shall be sealed by the Signet, and subscribed by the said Clerk; with Power to summon Witnesses, under the Pains prescribed by Law and Practice; and if the said Witnesses refuse to compare, or the said Persons decerned in any Fine, refuse or delay to make Payment of the same, His Majesty ordains the Lords of Secret Council to direct Letters and Charges upon the Certificate of the said Commissioners, as is above specified. Of the which Fines, to be collected and uplifted by Alexander Keith Under-clerk to the Council, one Half shall be employed for defraying the necessary Charges of the said Commission, at the Sight of the said Commissioners; and the other Half shall be employed for pious Uses, as his Majesty shall appoint. And generally the Commissioners aforesaid are authorized and empowered to do and execute what they shall find necessary and convenient for his Majesty's Service in the Premises, for preventing and suppressing of Schism and Separation, for planting of vacant Churches, and for procuring of Reverence, Submission, and Obedience to the Ecclesiastical Government established by Law. And to the end that a Business of so much Importance to the Peace and Well-being of the Church and Kingdom, may take a speedy and successful Effect, as his Majesty hath thought fit to make Choice of such Persons, in whose Judgment and Affection to his Majesty's Service and the Church's Good he doth repose special Trust, so it is his Pleasure that this his Commission shall endure to the First of November 1664. and after, until it be discharged by his Majesty: And that the First Meeting thereof be kept at Edinburgh, the First Wednesday of March next to come; and After-meetings shall be appointed in such Places, and as often as shall be found necessary for obtaining the End of the said Commission. And his Majesty doth expect an exact Account of their Proceedings from Time to Time, as of a Service whereof he will take special Notice, and it succeeding well will be very acceptable to him. Commanding lastly, all his Majesty's Lieges who are or may be concerned, to answer and obey the said Commissioners, or any Five of them, an Archbishop or Bishop being one of the Number, under all highest Pains that may after follow. And ordains these Presents to be an effectual Warrant to the Director of the Chancellery, for writing the same, to the great Seal, and to the Lord Chancellor for appending the Seal thereunto, without any further Order or Warrant. Given at our Court at Whitehall, January 16th, 1664. and of our Reign the 15th Year.

This Commission is so very extensive and large, that it affords Matter for many Remarks. The Ground alledged for appointing of this new Court, by many termed the Crail Court, being the Contrivance of the Primate, once Minister there, with the best Advice he could have in Scotland and England, is the Multiplicity of Affairs lying before the Privy Council. But it is well enough known, the Council spent much of their Time before this in maintaining the Prelates, and bearing down such as would not subject to them, and, bating Church-affairs, their Business was not so very great; besides, when the High Commission sat, the Council could not sit, at least ply any Business of Moment, since the leading and managing Members were on both these Courts. So this Reason is a mere Pretext.

Remarks upon this Commission.

The real Grounds of erecting this Court, were, That there might be Room for the Members, deriving immediately from the King's Supremacy, to act with larger Powers, in a more severe and general Way than even the Council it self could well do. The Quorum picked out by the Bishops, would go greater Lengths, than the Council would in their full Meetings. By this Means the Bishops had Occasion to rid themselves of some Members of Council, who were not altogether for their Heights. They were empowered to meet in Places where the Council was not easily to be called; their Influence this Way was more diffusive, and a small Quorum of this Commission would effectuate the Bishops Business more quickly, and in a more extensive Way, by travelling up and down the Country for harassing and persecuting the Presbyterians, than could be done in the former Chancel.

Grounds of erecting this Court.

Its Design is against Presbyterians,

It is pretended in the Commission, the Design of this Court in the first Place, is, Against Papists, and to execute the Laws against Popery: But in reality, Popery in this Case is a mere Cypher to fill up the current Stile. Presbytery was levelled at, under the Name of Separation; whereas strictly speaking, and according to the natural and ordinary Signification of Words, the Prelatick Party were in Scotland the Separatists, our Reformation-establishment being undoubtedly by Presbyters, and Contemners of the Ecclesiastical Authority, that is, such as refused to subject to Bishops. The Actings of the Prelates is the best Commentary on this Grant, and it is notour, never one Papist was called before them, or prosecuted before this Court. Their Designs lay not that Way, and indeed all Things were ripening for the Introduction of Popery to these Lands.

and some Gentlemen and Ministers in Fife and the West.

The Dioceses of St. Andrews and Glasgow are named; both to extend their Power through the whole Kingdom, and, as their present particular Level was, against some Ministers and Gentlemen in Fife and the West Country.

The Covenants are made a special Ground of Prosecution before this Court, under the Stile of pretended Engagements. The Prelates had a particular Grudge against these, as what they themselves had broken scandalously, and they could not well bear that their Obligations should be owned by any.

King's Prerogative and Supremacy the Basis of this Court.

His Majesty's Royal Prerogative is made the Basis of this Court, and by virtue of his Supremacy over all Persons and Causes Ecclesiastical and Civil, this rampant Commission is granted. Indeed nothing else could be the Parent of so monstrous a Birth. This being their Foundation, and their being of such a Constitution, made severals to scruple to appear before them, who could not homologate this Supremacy.

The Primate at the Head of it.

The Archbishop of St. Andrews is put in the Front of this Commission, and placed before the Chancellor and other Officers of State, by virtue of a Letter from the King, of which notice shall be taken afterwards, giving him the Precedency.

Its Members and Quorum.

In this Commission there are Nine Bishops to about thirty Five Laymen: But the Bishops are made necessary Members, and Four with any one Prelate are to be a Quorum; and they might be sure enough to find Four in three Dozen, who would do as they pleased. This was a very small Quorum of so numerous a Meeting, and so much the fitter for the Purposes now in Hand.

Its Work to maintain the Bishops, who take all Hands to support them in Scotland.

The chief Work of this High Commission, is to maintain the Bishops, and to use the utmost Endeavours that the Acts of Parliament and Council be executed. What an untowardly and ill-thriving Weed was Prelacy in this Kingdom! And what Pains and Force must be used to plant and maintain it! The Authority of Parliament, it seems, is not enough, the Executions of the Privy Council do not suffice, even when supported with the Quarterings of the Army: The Prelates must have this new Court set up for their Support, and to put the Laws, made in their Favour, to Execution.

Its excessive Powers.

In Proportion to the Difficulties justly expected in the Maintenance of Bishops in Scotland, the Powers of this Commission are extended. Every Man in the Nation may be called before this high and mighty Court, at any Time or Place they shall please to appoint. The Bishops of Brechin, Dunkeld, Argyle, and the Isles, with Sir James Turner, or to put the Matter a little otherwise, three Provosts of Burghs, a Dean of Gild, and the inconsiderable Bishop of Brechin, may bring the greatest Peer in the Land to their Bar, fine, confine, incarcerate at their Pleasure.

The Persons against whom those Powers are directed.

I need scarce go through the List of Criminals against whom this Commission is directed. Papists and Popish Recusants are made a Cover for their rigorous Powers against the Presbyterians: Mean while Jesuits, Sayers and Hearers of Mass, and all good Catholics are very easy under our Protestant Bishops, and never one of them molested. After the Clause about Papists, all that follows points at the poor Whiggs: Beside the ordinary Crimes of Conventicles, and Presbyterian Ministers their continuing at their Master's Work, all such are cast in who keep Meetings at Fasts, and the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, which are not approved by Authority. It was a strange Opposition to serious Religion that brought People this Length, as to arraign Persons meeting together for Prayer on Fast-days and about Communion-times, when so much Wrestling ought to be about all the Members of Christ's mystical Body. No doubt, private Fasts in Families, and private Societies, at this Time so very necessary, are by this Clause made Faults. The Bishops had no mind to have their Guilt, Apostacy, and Oppression, mourned over by others, and complained of before the Lord; some of their Consciences probably smote them, and they were afraid, and not without Ground, of the joyful Prayers and Supplications of the Lord's People.

The next Class of Criminals is extensive with a Witness. All who write, speak, preach, or print to the Detriment of the Government of the Church. It is Pity they took no notice of the Dissenters in England, and Protestants abroad, for their excellent Books against Prelacy and Popery. Nevertheless, it was good they put not in thinking likewise; but this was reserved till some Years afterwards, when they examined and interrogate People upon their Thoughts, Opinions, and inward Sentiments of disputable Matters: Yet without this they have Rope enough allowed them to make most of the Subjects in Scotland Offenders.

Just

Just now I took notice of the Smalness of the Quorum, for so great a Work, and such vast Numbers of Offenders ; Five only, whereof a Bishop must be one, and all the Five might be Bishops for any Thing I see ; and it was proper, at least safest for them, since the Work was theirs, and it was their Interest and no Body's else was carrying on. Well, the Four Laymen and one Bishop have Power Ecclesiastical and Civil lodged in them, Censures of Suspension and Deposition, as to Churchmen, and Fining, Confining and Imprisonment, for them, or others who shall be made Transgressors. Indeed they are limited to the Acts of Parliament and Council, and the Penalties there ; but it will be just now evident they exceeded those Boundaries, tho' pretty wide.

The whole Army and inferior Magistrates through the Kingdom, are to be their Terriers, and to search for, seek, take, and apprehend all they shall give Orders about ; yea, the Privy Council it self is in some Sort subjected to this exalted Court, those mighty Five, and must direct Letters of Horning, and other Diligence, for paying the Impositions laid upon poor People by them ; and no Relaxation or Suspension must be granted without Warrant from a Bishop.

A very surprising Clause is added in the Commission, whereby the Five are made their own Carvers, and impowered to do and execute what they shall find necessary and convenient for his Majesty's Service in the Premises. And what will the Prelates not find convenient for securing themselves and their Underlings, if we may judge by what they ventured on already ? The poor Country found to their sad Cost, how extensively such general Clauses were executed in this Period. A Clause of this Nature, making the Bishops absolute Tyrants, and such as were Parties supreme Judges in their own Cause, is such a Stretch against Equity and Reason, as none but Bishop Sharp would have proposed, and a Parallel cannot be given, unless it be some posterior Acts in the following Years I am to describe.

His Majesty is next made to give an high Encomium to the Members of this Court, as Persons to whom he could well commit such important Matters, and in whom he put entire Confidence : And so he might, as to the Bishops, the Cause was their own, and undoubtedly they would look after it with Care enough. Thus the Wolf gets the Wedders to keep, and will give a good Account of them ; and yet they are encouraged to this Work as a Service the King will take special notice of. And in the last Place, all the King's Lieges are required to submit to every Thing done by this Commission, under the highest Penalties, without any Appeal, or reclaiming to any other Court.

From those Things, the Reader may have some View of this extraordinary Court of the Primate's Contrivance ; and cannot but observe the Affinity of the Hierarchy in the Church, and arbitrary Impositions and Burdens upon the Subject.

It may be indeed strange, that the King granted such exorbitant Powers, or that Persons of Honour ever joyned with the Prelates in such a Court : At present the Bishops Cravings were a Rule, but our Noblemen in a little Time wearied to follow them in their Heights. Perhaps this was an Experiment of what was projected for the whole three Kingdoms, in State and Church. Things were fast working to bring Matters in Britain up to the Pattern the King saw, and kept his Eye upon in France, where the King was turning Tyrant, and made Use of the bigotted high-flying Clergy to help this on, and every Thing was modelling plainly enough, towards the Eastern absolute Prerogative and Power.

Let me finish this Subject with some more general Remarks upon the Erection of this Court. We have seen the Powers and Constitution of it from the King's Warrant. Every one must see that this High Commission in its very Erection, casts a Slur upon the Privy Council, either as remiss in the Execution of the Acts of Parliament expressly committed to them, or wanting Power or Inclination to execute them to the Satisfaction of the Bishops. It is certain the Council were not blame-worthy as to any Thing proper for them to do, yea, they really exceeded their Powers in some Cases, to gratify the Bishops. But these behaved to have more, and the Council generally sat at Edinburgh, and so were alledged not to be a sufficient Bridle upon the Presbyterians up and down the Country : And therefore an itinerant Sort of Court, made up of a few Zealots, whom the Bishops should at their Pleasure pick out to travel up and down, and overaw the People who disliked the Church-settlement, was reckoned a better Expedient, especially when clothed with the highest Power the King could put in their Hand.

This High Commission in former Times of Prelacy, had been the last Resort and Plight-anchor of Bishops in the Reigns of James VI. and Charles I. Whenever the Nobility, Gentry, and Commons in Scotland came to have any Sense of Liberty, and awaked out of their Sleep, this Court was complained of, and petitioned against, as most arbitrary and oppressive, and one of the greatest Grievances Subjects could be under.

But the Truth of the Matter was, such Measures as those were still found absolutely necessary to support the Hierarchy in Scotland. What is contrary to the Constitution and Inclinations of a People, must still be maintained and carried through by violent, rigorous, and illegal Methods. However, in a Year or Two, our Nobility and Gentry fell into a Dislike of this arbitrary Court, and Matters again returned to their old Chancel, the Secret Council, which indeed was a Judicatory abundantly severe and arbitrary.

The English Nation, who, when at themselves, are vigorous Asserters of the Liberty of the Subjects, at the Restoration, in the Heat of their Loyalty, run to great enough Lengths in the Surrender they made to the King; and yet when they gave back the Whole of the Dignities and Prerogatives possessed by their Sovereigns formerly, some of which had been reckoned not very agreeable to the Liberty of the Subject, and Constitution of England, some few Years before; yet they could not hear of a High Commission: And, as far as I have observed, it was never allowed, tho' sometimes attempted, during the Reign of King CHARLES II. Indeed when a Papist mounted the Throne, and all Things pointed towards Popery, and consequently Slavery, this Court was set up there; but any Thing was welcome now to our Managers in Scotland, which came from the Royal Prerogative, and was demanded for the Support of Prelacy.

Remarks upon its Members and their Powers.

Somewhat has been already said as to the Members of this Court; and from the List of them in the Commission, the Reader will have remarked, That it is of a heterogeneous Nature: Most of the Members were Laymen, by their Commission empowered to judge of Ministers Doctrine, and suspend and deprive of both Benefice and Office. The Churchmen in the Commission had Power of corporal Punishment, and cognoscing upon Civil Matters. Thus it was a very native Product of the Royal Supremacy, which works Wonders in Scotland: It confounds, yea alters the co-ordinate Power of the State and Church, and makes a Layman of a Churchman, and a Churchman of a Layman, without any Difficulty. What can be more agreeable to so mighty a Parent as a Civil Pope? Thus his Holiness at Rome commits the Sword and the Keys to the High Court of the Inquisition, who yet are so discreet as to make the Fashion of turning over their Pannels to the Secular Arm, a little before their Death.

Their Severity.

An ingenious Writer compares this Crail Court unto the old Lion in the Cave. There were Abundance of Footsteps, and Traicts of Beasts Feet going to the Cave, but none returning; which when cunning Reynard observed, he stopped at the Entry, and went no further. Thus many came to this Court, but very few returned; all almost were devoured who came within their Clutches. I cannot so much as find one who appeared before them, that came off without Punishment; so exact were they in their Citations of guilty Persons, or else made all guilty who came before them.

The Manner
of their Procedure.

Indeed their Procedure was abundantly summar. When a Pannel came before them, they used not the Formalities of a Libel, or Witnesses; whoever the Prelates pleased were cited, and upon their Appearance, a captious Question or Two was asked, and upon their Silence or answering, for both were much the same before this Court, who were determined to punish all that appeared, they presently judge him. It was but seldom they troubled any Witnesses. The taking the Oath of Supremacy was the only Thing that could save such as appeared; but I hear of few before them whose Throats were wide enough for that.

They go beyond the Penalties imposed by Law.

Frequently they doubled the Fine imposed by the Act of Parliament, upon some Pretext or other; and not satisfied with the Punishment appointed by Law, added somewhat of their own, further than what the King and Parliament had annexed to the alledged Crimes before them, such as Confinement, Relegation to some of the Plantations, or some remote Place of the Kingdom, some Hundred Miles distant; and some were gifted away, and actually sold for Slaves, which is against scriptural and natural Law and Light.

I find it remarked by a Minister who lived at this Time, that although their Powers were very ample and wide, and they had Abundance of Room to make many Offenders, yet their Powers and Commission were more than once enlarged, and that with an Eye to particular circumstantiate Cases, and many of their Sentences exceeded the largest of their Powers. I have not seen any other Copies of their Commission than that insert, and 'tis very large.

Their rigorous Procedure makes the Lay-members weary of this Court, and in Two Years it comes to an End.

In short, their arbitrary and tyrannical Procedure frightened People from coming before them, and it was found more eligible to undergo a voluntary Banishment, than to be sold as a Slave. And in some Time, the violent Procedure of the Prelates made the Noblemen unwilling, and some way ashamed to sit with them; and in about a Year and an Half's Time, our Bishops could neither find Judges to joyn with them, or Parties to appear before them, and so were constrained to give over: And after near Two Years, this Contrivance of Bishop Sharp's came to an End, and those heavy Harassings, joyned with the Oppressions of the Army, opened the Door to the Country to rise in Arms, as we shall hear in the Beginning of the next Book. It remains I now give some more particular Account of the Actings of this Inquisition now set up.

S E C T. II.

Of the Actings of the High-commission Court, and the Persecution of Gentlemen and others before them, 1664.

IN this Section I do not pretend to give any full Account of the Actings and Procedure of this terrible Court. I have been at some Pains to enquire for their Records, if they kept any, but cannot fall upon them: If these could be recovered, or a particular and distinct Account now had, it would make a dismal Figure, and afford a large Heap of Materials for this History. Their Records cannot be found.

It is only a very few Instances of their Procedure with Gentlemen and Ministers, some of which I have from the Persons themselves, that I can set down as Proofs of the Iniquity and Severity of this Court; and from those some Judgment may be formed of the rest of their Procedure. Some more Hints of what they did next Year, may fall in on the following Chapter. Some Instances of their Procedure.

Their Commission bears them to sit down in March this Year. Whether the Primate came down by that Time or not, I know not, but I don't meet with him in the Sederunt of Council till April; and I find they sat down at Edinburgh, April 15th. And I have it observed by one who writes at this Time, 'That they ordered Mr. James Wood, Professor of Divinity at St. Andrews, his Declaration to be burnt, and some Ministers, accessory thereunto, were put in Prison in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, and the West Country Recusants were fined in a Fourth Part of their Rent and yearly Income.' We shall afterwards meet with the Trouble Mr. Carstairs and some others were brought to, upon the score of a Paper left by the Reverend Mr. Wood, upon another Section, since I cannot give any distinct Account of the Procedure of this Court on this Affair: And the West Country Recusants, here spoken of, were the Gentlemen who refused to give full Conformity to the Church-government now set up. But I come forward to some particular Instances of the Hardships several worthy Persons were brought to this Year, probably at different Meetings of this Court, as I have them very well attested. They sit down at Edinburgh, April 15, 1664.

James Hamilton of Aikenhead, near Glasgow, yet alive, at a good old Age when I write this, and attesting the Account I am giving, was among the first brought before the High Commission; and I shall give the whole Detail of his Sufferings at this Time here. We shall meet with him more than once under Hardships in the Progress of this History. The Hardships of James Hamilton of Aikenhead, from this Court.

All that could be laid to this Gentleman's Charge, was his not hearing Mr. David Hay Curate in Catcart Parish, where Aikenhead hath his Estate and House. The Occasion of his deserting his Parish-church was this. Mr. Hay was extremely rigorous in exacting his Stipend, and particularly hard upon Aikenhead's Tenants in Langside, and violently pressed some of them to joyn with him in his Session; upon which, one Day a Squabble fell in 'twixt Hay and some of them, wherein the Curate threatned them, and gave them ill Names; and they did not spare to give him some Returns of the same Nature. Mr. James Blair, the Presbyterian Minister of the Parish, happened to be upon the Place, and by his Interest with the People protested Mr. Hay, else Matters had gone further. When the Fray was over, Mr. Blair dealt with Mr. Hay, and shewed him how far it was contrary to his own Interest, to inform against his Parishioners for their Disorders; and Mr. Hay promised to him, with more than ordinary Assurances, to follow his Advice, and never to delate any of them, and thanked him for his Help and Advice. Yet, notwithstanding his Promise, in a little Time he went in to Glasgow, and delated them to the Bishop, who ordered out Sir James Turner, at this Time in the West, with a Party of Soldiers, who came and apprehended some of the Country People. Aikenhead was abroad at the Time, and when he came home, and was informed of Mr. Hay's Carriage, his Cruelty and Prevarication, after that, he for ever disowned him as unworthy to be a Minister, and indeed never called to that Congregation.

When he comes before the High Commission, he is fined in a Fourth Part of his yearly Rent. Some Time after, he is again called before them, to liquidate his Rent; which he did, and gave in an Account of it, and frankly acknowledged he heard not, and never designed to hear Mr. Hay, and gave the Court so pointed and well vouched an Account of the Injuries done him and his Tenants by the Curate, as the Archbishop of Glasgow promised, in open Court, he should be removed from that Parish.

The Commission then urged the Gentleman to engage judicially to hear and subject unto the Minister whom the Bishop should plant there in Mr. Hay's Room. Aikenhead thought it soon enough to engage when he had heard him, and knew what and who he was, and peremptorily refused all such previous Contracts. Hereupon, tho' he had some Relations in the Court, he is fined in another Fourth Part of his yearly Rent, and remitted to the Archbishop of Glasgow to give him Satisfaction as to his loyal and peaceable Behaviour.

It seems Bishop Burnet was not satisfied, and therefore, by a new Information from him, he is cited, and actually compeared before the High-commission Court at Edinburgh, November 8th, this Year. There he was charged with keeping up the Session-book of Cathcart, and the Utenfils of the Church, from the Curate; which he knew nothing about, and offered to depone he knew not where they were. He was further charged for refusing to assist his Minister in Session, when called, and suffering some of his Family to absent from the Church. The Earl of Rothes told him, That he had seen him before several Courts formerly, and never for any Thing that was good and loyal, and therefore required him now to testify his Loyalty, by taking the Oath appointed by Law.

Aikenhead answered, His Loyalty was never questioned before, yea, it was so well known, that he could not but reckon it was a Tath upon him to put him to declare it by Oath; That for his Part he had no Difficulty to take the Oath of Allegiance, but he knew there was mixed with it an Oath of Supremacy. Bishop Sharp interrupting, said, That was the common Cant, but it would not do. He added, That he was willing to take it, as it was an Oath of Allegiance, providing they allowed him to declare against the Clause relative to the Supremacy. The President took him up very sharply, and told him, He ought to be hanged.

Upon Aikenhead's refusing the Supremacy in the Oath, and because he would not presently enter himself Surety in the Books of the Court for all his Tenants, that they should subject to Ordinances, and live regularly, the Court fined him in the Sum of Three hundred Pounds Sterling, and ordered him to go to Prison till he paid it; and then to transport himself to the Town of Inverness, which is about One hundred and fifty Miles from his own House, and there to remain under Confinement during Pleasure, which was about a Year and an Half.

He paid the Half of his Fine, and his Estate was sequestrate for the rest of it; and, according to his Sentence, in Three Weeks presented himself to the Magistrates of Inverness, and continued there till his Confinement was taken off. And to give all his Sufferings in this Period together, when at length he was allowed to come Home, he was confined a new for Six Months, to his own House at Aikenhead, and a Mile round it. And before these were elapsed, brevi manu he was one Day carried in to Edinburgh Tolbooth, without any Reason or Libel given him, and there he lay Prisoner Nineteen Weeks. After he had been in Prison some Weeks, he found all they had now to lay to his Charge, was his harbouring and lodging some Rebels, as they were called, at the Break of Hamilton, about Fourteen Years ago, when some Soldiers laid down their Arms, and would not fight till they had some Satisfaction given them as to what was then termed the Remonstrance. He could not depone that none of them had been lodged in his House, and so was continued in Prison, till, by the Payment of Eighty Guineas, he at length got out.

Another Instance of the Injustice of this Court I have in the Case of John Porterfield Laird of Douchall, in the Shire of Renfrew, which is attested by his Successor and Grandchild the Laird of Porterfield of that Ilk, an ancient and honourable Family in the said Shire. We shall frequently meet with this worthy Person in the following Parts of this History, and find him dealt with in a Way peculiar to this Period; I only here notice his Treatment before the High Commission.

This excellent and religious Gentleman was brought before that Court in July this Year, for his not hearing the Curate in the Parish of Kilmacomb, where his Dwelling-house and his Estate lay. He had very good Grounds to withdraw from him as his Pastor, since, besides the ordinary Blemishes of those of his Gang, his intruding himself without, yea, contrary to the Inclinations of the People of that Place, he had abused Douchall with groundless, base, and injurious Reproaches.

The Court could not well get by the sustaining of this Defence as relevant, and at his Desire admitted it to Probation. The very first Witness he adduced, deponed all the Gentleman alleged, and much more. The Court finding he would vindicate himself, if Law and Equity took place, interrupted the Examination of Witnesses, and required Douchall to take the Oath of Allegiance, well enough knowing the Supremacy in it would choke him. This he peremptorily refused, unless they would allow him to give in an Explication before his taking of it.

Whereupon they proceeded straight to a Sentence, and fine him in the Sum of Five hundred Pounds Sterling, and ordered his Estate to be sequestrate until it should be paid, and confined him in the Town of Elgin in the Shire of Murray: There he continued about Four Years.

Reflections upon such Procedure are almost needless. Here was plain Injustice, in refusing to permit the Gentleman to vindicate himself, after they had allowed his Exculpation. They go beyond the Acts of Parliament and Council, which allow of no such exorbitant Fines for Non-Nonjurancy. Those Hardships for simple Nonconformity did very much prejudice his Estate and Family, and yet we shall find he met with heavier Things afterward.

But their Procedure with the Reverend Mr. Alexander Smith, Minister at Cowend, was perfectly tyrannical, antichristian, and barbarous. We heard before that he was turned out of his Charge, and at present he was residing at Leith. This worthy and religious Person is called before them, and charged with preaching privately in his own House, or, in the present Stile, for keeping of Conventicles.

Their barbarous Procedure with Mr. Alexander Smith.

He compared before them; and when charged with Conventicling, his Examination was oddly enough interrupted. In answering some Interrogators Bishop Sharp put to him, Mr. Smith did not give him his Titles, and called him only Sir. The Earl of Rothes asked him, If he knew to whom he was speaking? Mr. Smith answered, Yes, my Lord, I do, I speak to Mr. James Sharp, once a Fellow-minister with my self.

This was reckoned an high Crime, and without any further Enquiry into the Affair of Conventicles, Mr. Smith was immediately ordered to be laid in the Irons, and cast into that nasty Place, commonly called, The Thieves Hole, where he had for his Company only a poor furious distracted Man. There he continued for some Time, until the Kindness and Respect of the People of the Town of Edinburgh to Mr. Smith, made the Bishops ashamed of this unaccountable Step.

So he was removed to another Room in the Prison, where, through Cold and other Pieces of harsh Treatment, he sickned, and was in the Hazard of his Life; yet, such was their Cruelty, he could not get a few Days Liberty from Prison. In some Time, by another Sentence, he was banished to one of the Isles of Shetland, where he continued many Years. I am told, That for Four Years he lived alone in a wild desolate Island, in a very miserable Plight; he had nothing but Barley for his Bread, and his Fuel to ready it with was Sea-tangle and Wrack, and had no more to preserve his miserable Life.

Their Treatment of some of the Parishioners of Ancrum, deserves likewise our Notice. When worthy Mr. Livingstone, as above we have heard, had been taken from them, one Mr. James Scot, who had been excommunicated about twenty Years ago, and continued still under the Sentence, was presented to that Charge, although he possessed two Benefices elsewhere. Upon the Day named for his Induction and Settlement at Ancrum, a great many People convened to give him that Welcome lothed and forced Ministers use to receive.

Their Treatment of some of the Parishioners of Ancrum.

A Country Woman desired earnestly to speak with him, hoping to dissuade him from engaging in the Charge of that Congregation, who were so averse from him; but he would not stay to speak with her. She in her course rude Way pulled him by the Cloke, praying him to hear her a little; whereupon, not like one of Paul's Bishops, who were not to strike, he turned and beat her most cruelly with his Staff. This Treatment provoked Two or Three Boys to cast some Stones at him, which touched him not, nor any of his Company. This was presently found to be a treasonable Tumult, and the Sheriff and Country Magistrates thereabout fined and imprisoned some of them. This, one would think, might have atoned for a Fault of this Nature.

But our High Commission behaved to have those Criminals before them: So Four Boys, and this Woman, with Two Brothers of hers, of the Name of Turnbul, are brought into Edinburgh Prisoners. The Four Boys are brought before the Court, and confessed, that upon Scot's beating the Woman, they had thrown each their Stone. The Commissioner told them, Hanging was too little for them. However, the Sentence of this merciful Court was, That they should be scourged through the City of Edinburgh, and burnt in the Face with an hot Iron, and then sold as Slaves to Barbadoes. It is a Question, if the Spanish Inquisition would have gone further.

That excellent Lawyer Sir John Gilmor told them, They had no Law for this cruel Sentence; but when they wanted Law they resolved to make a Practick, which would be as good as a Law to them in their After-procedure against Presbyterians. The Boys endured their Punishment like Men and Christians, to the Admiration of Multitudes.

The Two Brothers are banished to Virginia, for no other Crime I can hear of, but their protecting their Sister, tho' they had small Families to subsist by their Labour. The poor Woman was, in great Clemency, ordered to be scourged through the Town of Jedburgh. Bishop Burnet was applied unto that she might be spared, seeing perhaps she might be with Child. The Answer he was pleased to give was, That he would cause claw the Itch out of her Shoulders.

Several Presbyterian Ministers were before them, of whom I have but short and imperfect Accounts. Mr. George Hamilton, since the Revolution Minister at Edinburgh, and some other Ministers in Fife, were cited, and, when they appeared, were discharged to celebrate the Sacrament of the Supper in their Parishes. I know no Account can be given of this, save that when the holy Communion was celebrate, great Numbers gathered from other Places to participate in that Ordinance; which fretted the Bishops.

Mr. George Hamilton before them.

Mr. John Scot Minister at Oxnam, Mr. James Donaldson, and other Two Ministers were brought before them, being of the Number of Six or Seven who had been at a Communion, which was reckoned contrary to Law. What was done with them I have not learned. Some who were cited to appear before this Court, had no Freedom to compear, unless it had been to have declared their Authority. Others reckoned it a mere Civil Court, and, in Civil Things merely, not to be declined.

When this Court sat at Glasgow, I find Sir William Cunningham of Cunninghamhead before them. He was obliged to produce his Chaplain Mr. John Hattridge, since the Revolution an able and useful Gospel-minister for many Years in the North of Ireland. This excellent Person, when he came before them, intended to say somewhat by Way of Testimony against the Nature and Constitution of that Court, and addressed himself thus to them. 'My Lords, I hope none of you will take it ill, that I declare before you some Things that are Pressures to my Conscience.' At this the Primate started, and interrupted him, saying, What have we to do, Sir, with the Pressures of your Conscience? go to the Door presently. And as he was removing, he called to him, without ever consulting the Court, Sir, you are discharged to preach without the Archbishop of Glasgow's Licence, and so he was no more called.

Ker of Green-knows.

At one of their Meetings at Edinburgh, they had Ker of Greenknows before them, merely for Nonconformity; and when they could prove nothing against him, the Oath of Allegiance was tendered to him. He told them, he had no Difficulty as to it, except in the Clause relative to the Supremacy, and offered to take that according to Bishop Usher's Explication, approved by King JAMES VI. But because the Gentleman would not instantly take it in the Terms offered, without any Explication, they fined him in some Hundred Pounds Sterling.

Act of Council about the Fines imposed by this Court,
July 7.

I find nothing in the Council-registers for a good while as to this Court; and indeed it was not so consistent with their Credit, as hath been noticed already. At length, July 7th, no doubt, upon Application made to them from the High Commission, 'The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council ordain Letters of Horning to be direct for Payment of all Fines imposed, and to be imposed by Decrees of the Commission for Church-affairs, upon Sight of Production of the said Decrees to the Clerk of Council.'

Another, November 9.

And, November 9th, 'The Lords of Privy Council ordain Letters of Poinding to be directed upon all Decrees pronounced, or to be pronounced by the Commissioners for regulating Church-affairs, whereby any Persons are, or shall be fined in liquidate Sums of Money, whereanent thir Presents shall be a sufficient Warrant to the Clerk of Council.' Through this Year and the following, I observe but little in the Council-books relative to the Subject of this History; and the Two Archbishops are still present in the Sederunts, when any Thing of this Nature comes in.

'Tis observed in some Papers before me, That towards the End of this Year the Primate got the Powers of this High-commission Court, termed likewise, The Commission for Church or Ecclesiastical Affairs, enlarged, and full Powers to them to banish, stigmatize, and inflict all Kinds of Punishment, save Death. However, it seems, they have assumed those Powers before they were conferred upon them.

These short Hints of the Procedure of this Court, are all I have met with. From them we may easily guess, what a black Figure a full History of this tyrannous Inquisition-court would make, could it be now at this Distance recovered; and the Reader is left to form a Judgment of their Cruelty from this Taste of their Procedure, though indeed those are but the smallest Part of their Actings.

S E C T. III.

Of the more general Acts and Procedure of the Council against Presbyterians, this Year 1664.

The Council
not altogether idle when the High Commission sit.

ALTHOUGH the High-commission Court, during this Year, took a good Part of the ordinary Work of Persecution out of the Hands of the Council, yet we shall meet with several Things before them, which call for a Room in this History. The great Thing before them is the pushing the Declaration, and putting the Act about Fines in Execution. We shall likewise meet with some further new and severe Acts passed against Presbyterians.

We have seen, upon the last Year, how Matters stood as to the Declaration appointed by the Parliament to be taken by all Persons in Office and Trust: This Year the Council go on in pushing it. January 5th, a Letter from the King upon this Subject, directed to the Chancellor, is read, the Tenor whereof follows.

Right Trusty, &c.

King's Letter
on the Declaration, Jan. 5.

WE Greet you well. We have been informed, that the Lords of our Privy Council, and the Senators and other Members of our College of Justice, have readily signed the Declaration, viz. concerning the Covenant. And tho' we are well pleased that those who who were present, gave Obedience to the Law; yet lest any should shift that Duty, by absenting themselves, and so delay their Subscription, we thought fit to require you to acquaint our Privy Council, that it is our Pleasure, that with all convenient Speed they do return us an Account of the Subscription or Refusal of their absent Members, and of all Sheriffs, Magistrates of Burghs, Justices of the Peace, and all others who by the Act are required to subscribe. You shall also in our Name require the Senators of our College of Justice, to appoint a set Day on which the absent Senators and other Members may either subscribe or refuse, to the end we may take Care for supplying the Places of such as shall on that Account forsake their Station, and that both the Lords of Council and Session respectively do declare the Places of the Refusers void; and that upon no Terms, neither of them admit any written Explication or Declaration upon the Subscription of any; which would look so like the stating of a Party, that we shall never endure it. So expecting an Account of these our Commands, we bid you farewell.' Given, &c. December 19th, 1663.

LAWDERDALE.

These Caveats and Commands, no doubt, refer to the Scruplers at this Declaration we heard of before. Upon this Letter, the Earl of Linlithgow is required to see the Earl of Wigton subscribe, because at present he is indisposed; and the Council order a Letter to be writ to the haill Shires and Burghs through the Kingdom, 'Acquainting them with his Majesty's Letter above, and requiring an Account of their Diligence in this Affair 'twixt and the 18th of February next to come, or sooner if possible; adding, that if they be not punctual in discharging their Duty in this Particular, the Council will look on them as Neglecters of his Majesty's Service, and proceed accordingly; and requiring them presently to deprive all Refusers of their Offices, and punish them otherwise conform to the Act of Parliament.' And, January 19th, the Council ordain the Magistrates of Edinburgh to make a formal Report anent their subscribing the Declaration in Manner prescribed by Act of Council, and to give in a List of their Names, to the Council, who refuse to subscribe 'twixt and the 26th Instant peremptorie.

The Council's Procedure upon it.

The Council, February 23^d, when they had waited for Returns from the Shires and Burghs to whom they wrote, come to give the King an Account of their Diligence, in the following Letter.

Council's Letter to the King, February 23.

Most Sacred Sovereign,

WE have delayed hitherto to answer your Majesty's Letter of December 19th, till we should be able to give an Account of our Obedience to your Majesty's Commands concerning the Declaration. We did order all Sheriffs and Magistrates of Burghs to offer the same to all within their Jurisdictions, and have sent herewith to your Majesty's Secretary, a Paper, bearing their particular Returns. It will thereby appear, that all the Royal Burghs have given Obedience, except some few who are not considerable. And upon the Desire of some of their Magistrates, we have given Warrant to make a new Election of their Magistrates, consisting of such as are willing to subscribe; whereof we expect a good Account. As for the Shires, many of them have excused themselves for not returning so good an Account of their Obedience at present, by reason that the Justices of Peace are not yet settled, which will now be done in a very short Time. We believe, the Lords of Session will make their own Return to your Majesty, for themselves and all the Members of the College of Justice. As for us of your Majesty's Privy Council, all who reside in this Kingdom have subscribed. We have issued a Proclamation in your Majesty's Name, discharging all in publick Trust, who shall not subscribe betwixt and the 14th of April next, to exercise any Place of Office, under the Pain to be proceeded against as Usurpers of your Majesty's Authority. And in all other your Majesty's Concerns, we shall be most willing to give such Obedience to your Majesty's Royal Commands, as may witness us to be,

Most Sacred Sovereign,

Your Majesty's most humble and faithful Subjects and Servants,

Glencairn Chancellor,
Hamilton,
Linlithgow,
Dumfermling,

Southesk,
Kincardin,
Halkertoun,
Bellenden,

J. Gilmor,
A. Primrose,
J. Hume,
J. Lockhart,
Sir Robert Murray.

The Proclamation they speak of follows in the Registers, which being in Print, and the Substance of it narrated, needs not be insert.

Those peremptory Letters and Proclamation, produced a pretty general Giving in to this Declaration: A great many in Burghs through the West and South, demitted their Offices, and this brought the Managers under new Difficulties how to get a Council and Magistracy in several veral Places, who would take the Declaration, when those who had been brought in to it, were to go off. That the Reader may have all which relates to this Head together, I shall subjoyn the Council's Acts as to this, with relation to the Burghs of Air and Irvine.

Council's Act
about the
Burgh of Air,

September 14th, the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council being informed of the Prejudice that the Burgh of Air is like to sustain, by reason that many Persons within the same have not taken the Declaration appointed to be subscribed by Persons in publick Trust, and so cannot be elected Magistrates and Counsellors this ensuing Year; as also, that they want a Town-treasurer: Therefore do ordain the Magistrates and Town-council to elect Persons, who have subscribed the said Declaration, to be Magistrates and Counsellors this ensuing Year: But if they shall not find fit Persons who have taken it, the Lords ordain the present Magistrates and Council, to continue in Place for the Space of two Months, and longer, during the Council's Pleasure, and until they consider what Course to take anent the said Burgh: And in the mean Time give Power to them to choose a Treasurer.

and that of Irvine,

The same Case almost falls before them from the Town of Irvine, and they take much the same Method, only order a Prosecution against the Recusants. November 3^d, 'Anent a Petition presented by Robert Cunningham, Provost of the Burgh of Irvine, and Henry Lynn, one of the Bailies of the same for the last Year, in Name of themselves and the said Burgh, shewing, That having met on the last Day of September last, and conform to the Order observed in that Burgh, elected the Persons following to be of the Council, to wit, John Porter, Gilbert Wylie, John Reid elder, John Gray, Alexander Gardiner, Ninian Holmes, and some others who were out of the Kingdom; the forenamed Persons who were presented, did all refuse to accept, because they were not clear to subscribe the Declaration appointed by Law, as Instruments taken thereupon, and produced, bear; so that thereby the said Burgh is like to be altogether disappointed of Magistrates for the ensuing Year: Humbly therefore desiring Warrant to the Effect underwritten. The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, having heard and considered the foresaid Petition, do hereby give Warrant to the said Magistrates and Counsellors, to continue in the Exercise of their Offices, till the Council give further Orders. And in the mean time ordain Letters to be directed for citing the above named Persons, who refused to accept as Counsellors, to compare before the Council, the ----- Day of ----- next to come, to answer therefore, and to cite Witnesses.'

Council's Procedure this Year, upon the Act of Fines.

I find no more about them this Year in the Registers. Some of those cited, I know, were worthy and religious Persons, and stuck at the Declaration from a real Scruple of Conscience. Thus we may see how this Affair of the Declaration stands during this Year. I go on now to give some Account of the Council's Procedure this Year, upon the Act of Fines.

King's Letter
upon them,
February 16.

February 16th, a Letter is read in Council from the King, upon this Subject; which is as follows.

Right Trusty, &c.

WE Greet you well. Whereas, about a Year ago, We did, by Our Letter, appoint a Proclamation to be issued for suspending of the Payment of the Fines imposed by the Second Session of Our Parliament, until We should declare Our further Pleasure, suspending also the Penalties for Nonpayment in the interim: These are therefore to require and authorize you to issue a new Proclamation, in Our Name, in due and ordinary Form, requiring and commanding all such fined Persons, as shall be charged in the Name of Our Treasurer, or Treasurer-depute, or Advocate, betwixt the Date of the Proclamation, and the First Day of August 1664. to make Payment to such as We shall authorize, of the First Half of the Fines imposed by the Act of Parliament for Fines, betwixt and the Feast and Term of Martinmas next, this Year 1664. under the Pains and Penalties contained in the said Act: As also, the same Persons who shall be charged to pay the Second Moiety of the Fines, at or before the Term of Candlemas next following, in the Year 1665. under the same Pains. For the which Proclamation this shall be your sufficient Warrant. Given, &c. February 16th.

LAWDERDALE.

Proclamation
thereupon,
Feb. 18.

Next Council-day, February 18th, the Draught of a Proclamation is brought in, approved, and ordered to be published at the Cross of Edinburgh, and declare the same to be as sufficient as if Proclamation were made at the Head-burghs of this Kingdom. 'Tis sustained in Terms above mentioned, and printed, so it needs not be added.

July.

July 30th, the Payment of the Fines is prorogate a little longer. The following Letter from the King is read, and recorded.

1664.

The Payment of the Fines prorogate by a Letter from the King, July 30.

Right Trusty, &c.

‘WHEREAS, by Our Letter dated the 6th of February, We gave Order, that such of the fined Persons who should be charged, were to pay in their First Moiety of the Fines, betwixt and the Term of Martinmas next, and the Second betwixt and Candlemas 1665. and because none are yet charged, We do, by these Presents, authorize and require you to issue out a Proclamation in due and ordinary Form, requiring such as shall be charged betwixt and the last Day of August next, to make ready their First Moiety at or before the 11th of December next, under the same Certifications contained in Our former Proclamation, and the Second Moiety at or before the 2^d of March 1665. Also declaring in this Proclamation, That Citations at the Market-crosses of the respective Shires where the fined Persons reside, shall be a sufficient Citation. For all which this shall be your Warrant, Given, &c. July 26th, 1664.’

LAWDERDALE.

Accordingly, that Day, a Proclamation is issued out in the Terms of the Letter, and ordered to be printed. What the Reason was of this Delay, I cannot tell. It may be the Courtiers were not yet agreed about dividing the Spoil, to be raised from many good Persons by the Execution of this Act of Fines. Indeed the West and South were sufficiently drained by the Army now among them: But what is delayed is not forgiven, and the Fines are coming on slowly, but surely.

Proclamation in the Terms of it.

At length, when Matters are fully concerted at London, and in Scotland also, as we may gather from the long Delay of the producing the following Letter, near Seven Weeks after its Date, this Matter of uplifting the Fines is brought to an Execution. Accordingly, the following Letter is read and recorded in Council. November 3^d, ‘His Majesty’s Letter directed to the Council, anent the Fines, is read, and ordered to be registrate; the Tenor whereof follows.’

King’s Letter Sept. 17. read in Council Nov. 3.

Right Trusty, &c.

‘THE Calling in of the Fines being upon some Considerations hitherto for born, We have now thought fit, that without further Delay they be called for; and for that end have signed the inclosed Warrant for a Proclamation, which you shall cause speedily to be published, in due and legal Form, at the Market-cross of Edinburgh; or if you find not that Proclamation sufficient, We do allow and require you to cause send a just Double thereof to the Market-cross of the Head-burgh of every Shire, with the Names of the Persons only which belong to that Shire, and the several Sums they should pay, to be with all Diligence published there: And so We bid you heartily farewell. Given at Our Court at Whitehall, September 17th, 1664.’

LAWDERDALE.

Follows the inclosed Warrant.

‘CHARLES, by the Grace of GOD, King of Scotland, England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith; To Our Lovits, ----- Messengers, or Sheriffs, in that Part specially constitute, Greeting. Forasmuch as, during the late Troubles, divers of Our Subjects of that Our ancient Kingdom, have fallen under and involved themselves in many great Crimes, Faults, and Offences of Omission and Commission, did thereby become obnoxious to the Law, and rendered themselves liable to the Pains of Treason, and other high Pains: Yet we being desirous to reclaim, if it were possible, the worst of Our Subjects to their Duty, by Acts of Mercy and Grace, did resolve to grant a general Act of Indemnity, Pardon, and Oblivion. But considering, that by their troublous and rebellious Courses, many of Our good Subjects have been under great Sufferings, and liable to great Losses for their Loyalty and Affection to Us, and Our Royal Father, of blessed Memory: Therefore, in order to their Reparation, and for divers important Considerations of State, We, with Advice and Consent of Our Estates of Parliament, convened at Edinburgh upon the 9th Day of September 1662. thought fit to burden Our Pardon and Indemnity with the Payment of some small Fines, and so far to except the Persons after mentioned from the Benefit of Our Royal Pardon, with this express Certification, That whoever of the Persons foresaid should not deliver and pay the Sums respectively imposed on them, to any Person or Persons who should be appointed by Us to receive the same, King’s Warrant for uplifting the Fines.

and that and betwixt the Terms appointed in the said Act; and when bypast, they should from thence forfeit and lose the whole Benefit of Our Pardon and Indemnity, and should have no Share therein, but be excepted therefrom, and their Estates, Rents and Goods forthwith to be sequestered and raised for Our Use, their Persons to be secured, and themselves further punished, as Persons guilty of Usurpation and Rebellion. Likeas, for the Assurance of such as should duly make Payment of the Sums thus imposed upon them, it was declared by Us, with Advice of Our Parliament, That upon due Payment of the Sums aforesaid, the Payers thereof were from thenceforth to enjoy the Benefit of Our Pardon and Indemnity, to all Intents and Purposes. And albeit, upon divers good Considerations, We have hitherto forbore to require the calling in of those Sums, so that the Persons liable in Payment thereof, have had Two Years to provide themselves; yet, now considering the great Burdens and Pressures many of Our best Subjects are lying under, and the Extremities they and their Families are reduced unto, by their Sufferings for their Loyalty and Service to Us and Our Royal Father, We find Our selves obliged in Conscience and Honour to be zealous and careful of any Means offered for their Supply and Relief; And therefore, in Pursuance of those Courses, which, in order to their Reparation, have been condescended and agreed to by Our Parliament, We have thought fit that the Sums imposed by the foresaid Act, should now be called for, and paid in to the Persons appointed by Us to receive the same. OUR WILL IS HEREOF, and We charge you strictly, That incontinent, thir Our Letters seen, you pass to the Market-crofs of Edinburgh, and other Places needful, and there, by open Proclamation, you do make Intimation unto, and charge the Persons particularly named in the List underwritten, and the Heirs and Executors of such of them as are dead, to make Payment to Sir William Bruce Knight, Clerk of the Bills, whom we have appointed Our Receiver for that Effect, of the several Sums of Money after mentioned, imposed upon each of them by the said Act; the one Half of the said Sums to be paid betwixt and Candlemas next to come, in the Year 1665. and the other Half in full and complete Payment of the Whole, betwixt and the Term of Whitsunday thereafter, in the said Year 1665. under the Pains, and with Certification above mentioned, contained in the said Act, which shall be inflicted and executed without Favour, upon such as shall fail in due Payment of the said Sums, at the Terms foresaid.

By His Majesty's Command,

LAWDERDALE.

The List spoken of here, is that which formerly upon the Third Chapter was insert; and I take the First and greatest Part of this Warrant to be just a Resumption of the Act of Parliament about Fines, and therefore tho' many Remarks might be made upon it, yet I shall only make an Observe or Two, to set Matters, which seem here misrepresented, in their due Light.

Remarks upon it.

This Warrant, or the Act narrated in it, supposes the Persons fined to have been guilty of great Crimes; whereas the Matter of Fact is, they were guilty of no other Thing than what the Managers themselves and the whole Nation was guilty of, a necessary Subjection to the English; here they are represented as liable to the Pains of Treason. 'Tis hard indeed to define what Treason is in this and the following Reign, when every Thing almost is made Treason: But this I affirm, That nothing treasonable could be charged on them, save their Compliance with the Usurpers, when forced to it, and it was nationally come in to. Besides, even this ought to have been proven upon them, and some Acts of it produced, wherein they had exceeded others who were not put into this List; and not in a partial clandestine Manner, a Set of the best People in the Nation called out, without any Probation or Reason, and dealt in another Way with than others: While in the mean Time it was certain, a great many of them were less involved with the English than those not put in this List, yea, a good many of them were remarkable for their steadfast Adherence to the King's Interests, when at the lowest. But whatever is pretended here, the true Reason of marking out those Persons named in the Act of Fines was, They were esteemed firm Presbyterians, and averse from the Change in Church-government now established, as hath been observed.

Again 'tis alledged, many of the King's Subjects were brought to Sufferings for their Loyalty to the King and his Father, and their Losses were to be made up out of those Fines. This is mere Allegation without Proof. Had an open and legal Process been raised, and the Fact fairly proven, that the fined Persons by their Disloyalty had brought those Hardships upon those who were to share in the Fines, there might have been some Colour of Reason for this Procedure; but nothing of this was done. Neither was this in the least the Rule Middleton and his Agents went by in drawing up the List. Besides, 'tis well enough known, that the Fines were neither distributed, nor ever designed to be distributed to such as were Sufferers for their Adherence to the King, otherwise Presbyterian Ministers would have come in for their large Share. Middleton designed them for himself and his Creatures; these who suc-succeeded him would willingly enough have shared them among themselves: But unforeseen Things fell in their Way, and they were applied to Uses quite different from the Projectors Design, as we shall afterwards see; so that all this is mere Grimace, and it was a bitter Satyr upon the King to make him say, He found himself obliged in Conscience to uplift those Fines.

Many Things further might be noticed here, but I shall not enlarge. It was a Jest to call them some small Fines, and one needs only look back to the List of them to see their Exorbitancy. The Pretext is as groundless, that Two Years Delay made them easier to be paid. The People concerned might rather, from the Delay, conclude, the Managers were so far convinced of the Unreasonableness of the Imposition, as they would be dropt altogether. But I come forward to what the Council do on this Letter and Warrant.

The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, in Obedience to his Majesty's Letter of the 17th of September last, commanding a Proclamation to be published, for calling in of the Fines, at the Head-burghs of the several Shires, Stewartries, and Regalities, where any of the Persons to be charged do reside, the said Persons Names and several Fines being first insert conform to his Majesty's Warrant and Order, and a particular List to be given to the Clerk of the Council; for that Effect give Power and Warrant to the said Clerk to fill up the Names of such Persons as are to be charged, with their particular Fines, conform to the said List, in the several Proclamations to be sent to the several Shires, Stewartries, and Regalities, and to subscribe the Doubles thereof, and to signet the same with the Signet of the Privy Council, which is declared to be a sufficient Warrant to Messengers or Macers, for making Publication thereof at the Head-burghs, and to subscribe the Doubles thereof, and signet the same: And that the said Proclamation at the Head-burgh of every Shire, Stewartry and Regality, shall be a sufficient Intimation to all Persons therein named, for making Payment of their respective Fines and Proportions therein contained; and in case of their Disobedience, to make them liable to the Certification, Penalties, and Pains contained in the same.

The Council's Proceeding
upon it.

This was put in Execution, as we shall hear afterwards, with the utmost Severity. And thus we have a View of this oppressive Step of uplifting so many Fines, imposed upon great Numbers of the best of the Nation, in the most arbitrary Manner. I return now to some other Acts of Council this Year, gravaminous enough.

In such a Time as this, Presbyterian Ministers and others used frequently to meet together for Prayer in private Houses: And Information being given of this by the Bishops and their Underlings, who could not well bear the Prayers of the People of God, the Council emit the following Act. 'Tis indeed only with respect to Edinburgh, but no doubt it was designed for a Check upon them in other Places likewise. February 23^d, 'The Lords of Council being informed, that there are several private Meetings and Conventicles within the City of Edinburgh, by some late Ministers, and others, contrary to Law; these are to give Warrant to the Magistrates of Edinburgh, to cause Search be made anent the keeping of any such Meetings; and that they acquaint the Lord Chancellor with what they discover, and the Persons Names, that Order may be taken about the same.'

Council's Act
February 23. against private Meetings.

April 29th, the Council publish an Act discharging the giving Charity, and making Contributions in favour of suffering Ministers and others, the Parallel of which, I believe, we shall meet with no where. I give it as it stands in the Registers.

Their Act
April 29. against giving Charity to suffering Min-
sters.

The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council being informed, That without any public Warrant or Authority, some disaffected Persons to the present Establishment, presume and take upon them to require Contributions from such Persons as they please, and do collect Sums of Money, which are or may be employed for carrying on of their private Designs, prejudicial to the Peace of the Kingdom and his Majesty's Authority; and considering that such Courses and underhand Dealing may strengthen seditious Persons in their Practices and Designs to disturb the Peace, if they be not timely prevented: Therefore in his Majesty's Name they do prohibit and discharge all Persons whatsoever, to seek or demand any Contributions or Supply, or to receive any Sums of Money. As likewise discharge all Persons to grant or deliver any Contributions to any Persons, whosoever shall require the same, unless it be upon such Occasions as have been publicly allowed and known, and heretofore practised; and that they have a special Warrant and Allowance of the Lords of Privy Council, or Lords of the Clergy within whose Dioceses these Collections are to be made. With Certification, that, if they contravene, they shall be proceeded against as Persons disaffected to the present Government, and Movers of Sedition. And ordain these Presents to be Printed and Published at the Market-cross of Edinburgh, and other Places needful, that none pretend Ignorance.

Glencairn Chanc. I. P. D.

Observes upon it.

This Proclamation is a full Evidence of the Virulence and Malice of the Prelates, and how little of the Spirit of Christianity and Compassion was in them, when they proposed and pushed such an Act. The Pretext, that they are disaffected Persons to the Government, who were employed in those Contributions, is a mere Blind. They might be disaffected to the Government in the Church, but they were not to the State; and 'tis a mere Jest to say, that such Contributions might be prejudicial to the Peace of the Kingdom, unless the preserving the Lives of the Presbyterian Ministers and Families, now by Oppression and Violence brought to a starving Condition, could endanger the same. 'Tis a hard Pass poor Sufferers are brought to, when they are discharged to meet together, and pray to God in their Distresses, and all Subjects are expressly discharged to relieve them in their Distresses, without the Bishops Warrant.

Soldiers sent to force the Parish of Dregborn to comply with the Curate.

June 23^d, the Council send a Party of Soldiers to compel the Parish of Dregborn, in the Shire of Air, to comply with the Episcopal Minister who had been thrust in upon them. I know no more of this, but what is contained in the Act. 'The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council being informed, That the Heritors and whole Inhabitants of the Parish of Dregborn, do, in manifest Contempt of his Majesty's Authority, and the Government of the Church established by Law, withdraw themselves altogether from the said Parish-church, for hearing the Word, and receiving the Sacraments, to the Scandal of the Christian Profession; do therefore ordain a Party of Soldiers to be forthwith sent to quarter upon that Parish, with Power to them to uplift the Penalty of Twenty Shillings Scots, conform to the late Act of Council, toties quoties, from every Person residing in the said Parish, who shall withdraw from the said Kirk, and recommend it to the Chancellor to name the Number and Commander.'

Remarks upon it.

This Method of dragooning People to the Church, as it is contrary to the Spirit of Christianity, so it was a Stranger in Scotland, till Bishop Sharp and the Prelates brought it in. If the Party uplifted the Fines for Bygones, since the Date of the Council's Act last Year, how terrible a Sum must they exact from that Parish; or if they stayed there some Weeks, and we suppose them to be Eight hundred in Number, even as to the Time to come, they shall uplift more every Week than is yearly paid to the Minister. But such Procedure wants no Reflections.

Proclamation discharging Ministers to live in Burghs.

I shall end this Section with another Proclamation of Council, of a Piece with those we meet with now so frequently: And, because I have not seen it in Print, I give it here from the Registers, November 17th this Year.

I DRASMACH as it is notour, That divers Ministers, who have gone off their Charges, or are outed by Law, do ordinarily repair to Edinburgh, and other Burghs and Places expressly forbid by Acts of Council, and do there, in open Contempt of his Majesty's Authority and Acts of Parliament and Council, hold their Meetings, and keep seditious Correspondences, and use Contrivances for seducing and debauching his Majesty's Subjects, from the Duty and Obedience they owe to the Laws and Authority established, to the Scandal of Religion, and endangering the publick Peace and Quiet: Therefore the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council ordain a Wacer to pass to the Market-cross of Edinburgh, and, in his Majesty's Name and Authority, to command and charge all those Persons who have been removed from the Charge of the Ministry since the First of January 1661. to remove themselves forth of the Burgh of Edinburgh, within Forty eight Hours after the Publication hereof, and not to remain or reside therein, or in any other Places prohibited by Act of Council, dated August 13th, 1663. unless they ask and obtain Licence to go about their lawful Business, from the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, or from the Bishop of the Diocese. With Certification, that if, after the Publication hereof, they be found to repair to, or reside in Edinburgh, or other forbidden Places foresaid, they shall be seized upon, and put in sure Firmance, until they receive the Punishment provided by Law against the Movers of Sedition. And ordain these Presents to be Printed and Published, that none pretend Ignorance.

Observes upon it.

I cannot but observe here, and it holds in a good many Acts of this Time, That the Managers not only lay the severest Hardships upon Presbyterian Ministers, hinder them to pray to God, to get Relief from Men, and see to the Education of their Children at Schools, unless they will own the Bishops so far as to take a Warrant from them; but, in their Acts, load them without any Ground and Reason, or permitting them to answer for themselves, and charge them with Crimes of a very deep Nature, of which they were entirely innocent; or at best, misrepresent Things, so as they might be reckoned seditious and scandalous Persons. Their reasonable repairing to Edinburgh and other Burghs, for overlooking their Children at Schools, and other necessary Business, is pretended to be for seditious Correspondencies and Meetings, for Purposes not named. I know no Correspondence they entertained, unless it was in Letters, for strengthening one another in their suffering Lot, and these they might write without without being in Burghs. They were all of them loyal in their Practices, and never had any Share in any Thing seditious.

1664.

This was another punishing Proclamation for one, or rather no Fault, mere Nonconformity in Presbyterian Ministers: And the Number of Punishments inflicted for this one Reason is now growing so great, that I do reckon it up. Some at this Time remarked, That all the former Proclamations proceeded from the Prelates Fear of, or Hatred to Presbyterian Ministers; but this proceeds from pure Envy: And the true Reason of it was, The Bishops and their Curates were uneasy at the Respect and Kindness evidenced to Ministers in the Streets of Edinburgh. When Mr. Douglas, Mr. Hutcheson, or other known Presbyterian Ministers, were in Town, they had so many Salutations and Caps, that it galled those of the other Side, who were but little regarded, except from Fear. And no great Wonder, for their Practice, Conversation, and Doctrine, the great Things which ought to create Respect to a Minister commanded but very little to them.

In short, it was evidently hard and unreasonable to banish Presbyterian Ministers from the Town of Edinburgh, and other Burghs. Popish Priests, and professed Papists were entirely at their Liberty, while some of the King's Subjects, who had done no Fault, but stood to their known Principles against Bishops and Prelacy, are discharged to be seen in Royal Burghs, and within Six Miles of a Bishop's House, however necessary their Affairs were. The Reader must conclude without my remarking it, That as the taking away of Civil Liberty, paves the Way, and makes Room for Church-tyranny, so this Ecclesiastical Tyranny, like a kindly Child of such a Parent, encourages Slavery, and removes the small Remains of any Thing like Liberty. I go on to the Hardships of particular Persons this Year.

S E C T. IV.

Of the Sufferings of particular Presbyterian Ministers, Gentlemen, and others, this Year 1664.

THE Actings of the High-commission Court this Year, were the most considerable Branch of the Church of Scotland's Cross; and, together with the Acts of Council with their Procedure, have, in some Measure, been laid before the Reader upon the former Sections; and it remains that I give the Accounts come to my Hand, of the Trouble some other particular Persons were brought under; and I begin with that of Ministers.

Since the general Ejection of the younger Presbyterian Ministers, by the Act of Glasgow, the Bishops endeavoured to weed out the elder Presbyterian Ministers, one after another gradually, that they might possess the House alone. Indeed those worthy aged Men were, upon many Accounts, Eye-fores to them.

The elder Ministers gradually attacked.

Wherever an old Minister, settled before the 1649. was found, Summons was sent him to appear before the Bishop in his diocesan Meeting. I find none who obeyed the Citation after the first diocesan Meetings, when, alas! more than might have been expected, both elder and younger, did conform. When Ministers did not obey, and remained at their Charge, the Bishops, piece by piece, as they best might, without disobliging Noblemen and other Heritors concerned; deposed the Minister in Absence.

The Manner of the Prelates Procedure against them.

In some Places the Prelate made the Fashion of calling the Roll of his Curates at their Meeting, that they might give their Assent unto the Presbyterian Minister's Deposition, which they were not backward to; but this was only a Form they used, or not, at their Pleasure. In the Dioceses of St. Andrews and Edinburgh, the Curates were told, without any Ceremony, That they had no Share in the Government. And when some of the inferior Clergy began to grumble, they were reprimanded by the Bishop of Edinburgh, and made to know, that the Power of Jurisdiction was lodged in his sole Person.

The Number of old Ministers, this Way cast out of their Churches, was but small in comparison of such who were laid aside, as being ordained since the Year 1649. and so the Instances of their Sufferings must be fewer. The Hardships of Two of this Kind offer themselves this Year, with pretty singular Circumstances, and they were both very great Men, on different Sides in the former unhappy Breaches; Mr. James Wood, Divinity-professor at St. Andrews, and Mr. William Guthrie, Minister of Finwick, in the Shire of Air and Presbytery of Irvine. The Account of them will let us understand somewhat more of the Methods, Temper, and Spirit of the Time I am describing; and then I shall give the Hardships of some other particular Persons, and their Sufferings, from the Council-books.

Instances in the Sufferings of Mr. James Wood, and Mr. William Guthrie.

Mr. Wood's Death, March this Year.

Towards the Beginning of this Year, the learned, grave, and singularly pious Mr. James Wood, exchanged this present Life for the Crown of Righteousness. We have had somewhat of him before. Under Presbytery he had been Colleague to Mr. James Sharp, and as, after the Restoration, he lamented much that he had been deceived by this unhappy Man, so he regretted that he had been led into some Heights on the Side of the publick Resolutions; for which, when Things opened out, and appeared in their true State, he was much grieved. The Bishop at first did not much harass Mr. Wood; he was an old dying Man, and his Heart broken with the Change brought in upon this once beautiful Church, and the Primate expected to be soon rid of him; yet he behaved to be turned out, as we have seen.

The Primate visits him on his Death-bed.

But if Mr. Wood suffered not in his Body, as some of his Brethren did, yet the Archbishop, it seems, was resolved he should be wounded in his Name and Reputation after his Death, if not sooner. In order to this, the Primate saw good once or twice to give Mr. Wood a Visit, when on his Death-bed in St. Andrews. He was now extremely low in his Body, and spoke very little to Mr. Sharp, and nothing at all about the Changes made, or the State of publick Affairs.

A Report is spread as if Mr. Wood had altered his Sentiments as to Church-government.

However, the Consequent of those Visits was, the Primate spread a Report, That Mr. Wood, being now under the Views of Eternity, and near to Death, professed himself very much indifferent as to Church-government, and declared himself as much for Episcopacy as Presbytery. The Bishop talked in all Companies, That Mr. Wood, in Conversation with him, had acknowledged Presbyterian Government to be indifferent, and alterable at the Pleasure of the Magistrate, and other Falshoods of this Sort; yea, he had the Impudence to write up Accounts of this to Court, even before Mr. Wood's Death.

Mr. Wood vindicates himself.

When the Knowledge of these Reports came to Mr. Wood's Ears, they added Grief to his Sorrow; and he could find no Rest till he vindicated himself, by a solemn Testimony against such wicked Calumnies, subscribed, as well as dictated, by himself, and that before Two Witnesses and a publick Notar. It deserves a Room here, and follows, as taken off the Original written from his Mouth.

St. Andrews, March 2. 1664.

His dying Testimony, March 2.

‘ I Mr. James Wood, being now shortly, by Appearance, to render up my Spirit to the Lord, find my self obliged to leave a Word behind me, for my just Vindication before the World. It hath been said of me, That I have, in Word at least, refused from my wonted Zeal for the Presbyterian Government, expressing my self concerning it, as if it were a Matter not to be accounted of, and that no Man should trouble himself therefore, in Matter of Practice. Surely any Christian that knows me, in this Kirk, will judge that this is a Wrong done to me. 'Tis true, that I being under Sicknels, I have said some times, in Conference about my Soul's State, That I was taken up about greater Business than any Thing of that Kind; and what Wonder I said so, being under such Wrestlings anent my Interest in Jesus Christ, which is a Matter of far greater Concernment than any external Ordinance? But for my Estimation of Presbyterian Government, the Lord knoweth, that since the Day he convinced my Heart, which was by a strong Hand, That it is the Ordinance of God, appointed by Jesus Christ, for governing and ordering his visible Church, I never had the least Change of Thought concerning the Necessity of it, nor of the Necessity of the Use of it. And I declare before God and the World, That I still account so of it; and that however there may be some more precious Ordinances, yet that is so precious, that a true Christian is obliged to lay down his Life for the Profession thereof, if the Lord shall see meet to put him to the Trial. And for my self, if I were to live, I would account it my Glory to seal this Word of my Testimony with my Blood. Of this my Declaration, I take God, Angels, and Men, to be my Witnesses; and have subscribed thir Presents at St. Andrews, the 2^d Day of March, 1664. about Seven Hours in the Afternoon, before Mr. William Tullidaff Minister at Dumbog, and Mr. John Carstairs my Brother in Law, and John Pitcairn Writer here of.’

Mr. William Tullidaff,
Mr. John Carstairs,
John Pitcairn.

Mr. Ja. Wood.

I have in my Hands a pretty large Account of the dying Words and Exercise of this eminent Saint of God, drawn up by several worthy Persons at this Time with him, which contains some further Hints of the Bishop's Injustice to him, and a large Vindication of himself; but the Substance of it being insert in the above Testimony, I shall not swell this Work

Work with it. It contains many sweet Parts of his Attainments and Experiences, when drawing near the End of his Race, till he came to make a pleasant, happy, and glorious Exit, 1664.
March 15th, this Year.

When Mr. Wood's Testimony came to be propaled, the Primate raged terribly, and caused summon Mr. Carstairs, Mr. Tullidaff, and the Notar, before the High-commission Court. The Bishop alledged, yea, spread the Report pretty publickly, That the Notar had informed himself, that when Mr. Wood was in great Weakness, Mr. Carstairs had imposed upon him, and made him subscribe that Paper he had formed for him.

The Witness fessed before the High Commission.

We have heard some Ministers were in Prison some Time upon this Account, and brought before the High Commission. I have not seen any large Account of their Procedure with them, only I find, That when Mr. Tullidaff and the Notar came before them, both of them declared, That Mr. Wood had dictated the above written Testimony, Word by Word, and that the Notar wrote it at his Desire, and attested it, as was his Office to do. Here the Primate once more got the Lie given him to his Face; and when they had continued in Prison some Time, and nothing worthy of Death or Bonds could be fixed upon them, the Bishop was forced to dismiss them without any further Punishment, having shewn his Malice, and got Shame for his Reward.

Mr. Tullidaff, and the Notar's Declaration
before them.

Mr. Carstairs thought fit, on many Considerations, to abscond, and did not compear; only that his Noncompearance might not wrong the Cause, nor be imputed to his Disloyalty, or Contumacy against any who bore Commission from the King, he wrote a Letter to the Chancellor at this Time, a Copy of which is before me, too long to be insert here: However, I shall give some Passages of it, because they will set the Circumstances of Presbyterian Ministers, and this Affair, in some further Light.

Mr. Carstairs does not appear, but writes a Letter to the Chancellor.

After an Apology for his taking upon him to write to the Chancellor, he says, 'Some Days ago I received a Citation to appear before the Commission, designing no particular Day or Place, to answer for some Misdemeanors, as keeping Conventicles, and disturbing the publick Peace. As for keeping Conventicles, I suppose it will be difficult, if not impossible, for my Accusers, to prove me guilty of any Contravention of the Law, even in their Sense of Conventicles: And for disturbing the publick Peace, I hope none who know me will look upon me as so disposed; whereof this may be some Evidence, that since I was outed of my Ministry at Glasgow, which is now Two full Years, I have had so little Pleasure to see any Person, or to be seen, let be to meddle towards the disturbing the publick Peace, that I have been sometimes Three, sometimes Six Weeks, sometimes Two full Months, that I have never come out of Doors ---- So abstract have I been from meddling, That famous Mr. Wood, my Brother in Law, now at his Rest, was sick some Ten or Twelve Weeks before I did certainly know how it was with him, as your Lordship may know from the Incloied from him to me. When he earnestly importuned me to see him, considering our near Relation, and the Concerns of my only Sister, and her Six Children now to be Orphans, I could not refuse to satisfy him, being under no Interdiction to the contrary. Mr. Wood finding himself under a Necessity to leave a Testimony behind him, I did with some others, subscribe a Witness to the Truth of this Deed, as done by him; which, being present at the Time, I could neither in Conscience nor Ingenuity refuse, especially since it was so well known to all the World who knew him, that that was his fixed Judgment, and that when a dying it did so much afflict him, that any Report to the contrary should have gone of him. And whereas 'tis like it will be said by some, that it is Forgery, and not his own Deed, or at best extorted from him when he knew not what he did or said, I shall for my own, and especially for the worthy dead Man's just Vindication, beg Leave to say a few Things.' Here Mr. Carstairs enlargeth at a considerable Length, upon all the Circumstances of Mr. Wood's forming that Testimony, and declares, the Motion of it was not suggested to him by himself or others, but he formed it most spontaneously, sedately, and deliberately; That he at that Time was ordering his other Affairs, and the Physicians did not despair of his Recovery; That in Conversation he did more than once express himself at large upon the Head of Presbyterian Government, and more fully than in his Testimony; That he dictated it, and caused scroll it, and read it over, and transcribe it; and after he again heard it read, signed it; and that he was most distinct and edifying after that, and to his Death, as to his Soul's Exercise and State. After this Mr. Carstairs adds, 'So that if it were otherwise convenient for me to appear before the Commission, it would be no Difficulty humbly to justify my Carriage all the Time I was at St. Andrews. Neither doth my necessary not compearing proceed from any the least Contempt of his Majesty's Authority, which I desire highly to reverence, and wish his Sacred Person to be every Way most eminently blessed of God; nor out of Disrespect to your Lordship the Lord High Chancellor of the Kingdom, nor to the Lord Treasurer, nor to any of the meanest under his Majesty, called to rule over me, nor to any of his Courts of Judicature, to which, notwithstanding of the greatest apparent Hazard, I have always on the first Call, as it well became me, come; and on which I have patiently and submissively waited, Days, Weeks, and Months, as your Lordship well knoweth: But 'tis for other Reasons, which I hope will not offend your Lordship. I shall only presume to add, as to these reverend Brethren cited with me, that Mr. Henry Rymer was not at St. Andrews with Mr. Wood, all the Time I was there, neither did I see Mr. Alexander Wedderburn with him, neither did any of the rest, to my best Knowledge, desire him to write this Testimony. Hoping your Lordship will pardon this Trouble, I am,

My noble Lord,

Your Lordship's very humble
Servant in the LORD,

Mr. JOHN CARSTAIRS.

By this Letter we find, some other worthy Ministers were brought to Trouble in this Matter; but I have seen no Accounts concerning them. We shall just now meet with Mr. Carstairs cited before the Council. This is all I have met with as to the reverend Mr. Wood, who stands entire in his Reputation, notwithstanding of all the base Artifices of the Primate to darken it.

The other Instance I promised as to the Sufferings of old Ministers this Year, is that of the reverend, and singularly useful Mr. William Guthrie, Minister of the Gospel at Finwick. This extraordinary Person I have particular Opportunities to have certain and distinct Accounts of. I heartily wish some proper Hand would give the Publick a just Narrative of this great Man's Life, which might, I persuade myself, be very useful. The broken Hints we have, before the last Edition of his excellent Saving Interest, at London, 1705. are lame and indistinct, and were writ without the Knowledge of his remaining Relations, who could have given more just and larger Accounts: I shall therefore here give the more particular History of his Suffering at the Time, and his being forced to part with his dear Flock.

By the Interest of several Noblemen and others, to whom Mr. Guthrie was very dear, he enjoyed a Connivance, and was overlooked for a considerable Time, when he continued at his Master's Work, tho' in his Sermons he was more than ordinarily free and plain.

But soon after Doctor Alexander Burnet was brought from the See of Aberdeen to that of Glasgow, he and the few remaining Ministers about him were attacked; such as, Mr. Livingstone at Biggar, Mr. McKail at Bothwell, Mr. Gabriel Maxwell at Dundonald, Mr. Gabriel Cunningham at Dunlop, and Mr. Andrew Hutcheson and Mr. William Castledaw, Ministers at Stewarton; and perhaps the Chancellor's Death about this Time, helped to pave the Way for the greater Severity against these worthy Persons.

The Archbishop had been addressed by some of the greatest in the Kingdom, in behalf of Mr. Guthrie, and treated them very indiscreetly: By no Importunity would he suffer himself to be prevailed upon to spare him any longer. When Means and Intercession could not prevail, Mr. Guthrie was warned of the Archbishop's Design against him, and advised by Persons of Note, his Friends, to suffer no Resistance to be made to his Dispossession of the Church and Manse; since his Enemies wanted only this for a Handle to process him criminally for his Zeal and Faithfulness in the former Times: Such was their Spite against this useful Man of God.

Under the Prospect of parting with his beloved People, Wednesday the 20th of July this Year, was set apart by him for Fasting and Prayer with his Congregation. The Text he preached from was, Hos. 13. 9. O Israel! thou hast destroyed thy self. His Sermon was afterwards printed very unfairly and indistinctly, from an uncorrect Copy. From that Scripture, with great Plainness and Affection, he laid before them their Sins, and those of the Land, and of that Age; and indeed the Place was a Bochim.

At the Close of that Day's Work, he intimate Sermon upon the next Lord's Day very early, and his own People and many others met him at the Church of Finwick, 'twixt Four and Five in the Morning, where he preached twice to them from the Close of his last Text, But in me is thine Help. And as he used upon ordinary Sabbaths, he had Two Sermons, and a short Interval betwixt them, and dismissed the People before Nine in the Morning. Upon this melancholy Occasion, he directed them unto the great Fountain of Help, when the Gospel and Ministers were taken from them; and took his Leave of them, commending them to this Great GOD, who was able to build them up, and help them in the Time of their Need.

His People would willingly have sacrificed all that was dear to them, in Defence of the Gospel, and adhering to him. Indeed Mr. Guthrie had some Difficulty to get their Affection to him so far moderated, as to keep them from violent Proceedings against the Party who came to dispossess him: They would have effectually prevented the Church its being declared

Mr. William Guthrie.

He continues longer at his Work than many others.

When Bishop Burnet comes to Glasgow, he and some other Ministers are attacked.

Nothing prevails with the Archbishop to spare Mr. Guthrie.

Wednesday, July 20. kept as a Congregational Fast with his People.

He preaches next Lord's Day early in the Morning, and takes Leave of his People.

No Violence used against the Party who came to dispossess him.

clared vacant, and were ready to have resisted even to Blood, striving against Sin, if they had been permitted: But Mr. Guthrie's peaceable Disposition, his great Regard to lawful Civil Authority, with his prudent Foresight of the Consequences of such a Procedure, both as to the Interests of the Gospel, his People, and himself, made him lay himself out, and use the Interest he had in the People, which was very great, to keep the Peace; and there was no Disturbance which could be made a Handle of by Adversaries.

When the Archbishop of Glasgow resolved upon dispossessing him, he dealt with several of his Curates, to intimate his Sentence against Mr. Guthrie, and as many refused it. There was an Aw upon their Spirits, which scared them from meddling with this great Man; besides, they very well knew it was an Action would render them for ever odious to the West Country, and they feared the Consequences. At last he prevailed with one who was Curate of Calder, as I am told, and promised him Five Pounds Sterling for his Reward: But poor Man! it was the Price of Blood, the Blood of Souls, and neither he nor his had much Satisfaction in it.

With much Difficulty the Archbishop gets one to intimate his Sentence against Mr. Guthrie.

Upon the 24th of July, this Man came with a Party of Twelve Soldiers to Finwick Church on the Lord's Day, and, by Commission from the Archbishop, discharged Mr. Guthrie to preach any more at Finwick, declared the Church vacant, and suspended him from the Exercise of his Ministry.

The Curate of Calder intimates it, July 24 to the Church of Finwick,

The Commanders of the Party and the Curate, leaving the Soldiers without, came into the Manse. The best Account I can at this Distance give of what passed in the Manse, is by inserting a short Minute of this, left among the small Remains of a valuable Collection of Papers belonging to Mr. Guthrie; which were taken away, as we shall afterwards hear, some Years after this, by Violence, and against all the Rules of Equity, from his Widow, and fell into the Hands of the Bishops. The Paper was drawn up at the Time to keep up the Remembrance of this Affair, without any Design of its being published, and I give it in its own native and plain Dress.

And to himself in the Manse.

The Sum of the Curate's Discourse when he came and intimated Mr. William Guthrie his Sentence of Suspension, with Mr. Guthrie's Answer to him.

THE Curate shewed, That the Bishop and Committee, after much Lenity shewn to him for a long Time, were constrained to pass the Sentence of Suspension against him, for not keeping of Presbyteries and Synods with his Brethren, and his Unpeaceableness in the Church; of which Sentence he was appointed to make publick Intimation to him, for which he read his Commission under the Archbishop of Glasgow his Hand.

An Account of what passed in the Manse.

Mr. Guthrie answered, I judge it not convenient to say much in Answer to what you have spoken: Only, whereas you alledge there hath been much Lenity used towards me, be it known unto you, that I take the Lord for Party in that, and thank him for it; yea, I look upon it as a Door which God opened to me for preaching this Gospel, which neither you nor any Man else was able to shut, till it was given you of God. And as to that Sentence passed against me, I declare before those Gentlemen (the Officers of the Party) that I lay no Weight upon it, as it comes from you, or those who sent you; though I do respect the Civil Authority, who by their Law laid the Ground for this Sentence: And were it not for the Reverence I ow to the Civil Magistrate, I would not surcease from the Exercise of my Ministry for all that Sentence. And as to the Crimes I am charged with, I did keep Presbyteries and Synods with my Brethren; but I do not judge those who now sit in these to be my Brethren, but Men who have made Defection from the Truth and Cause of God; nor do I judge those to be free or lawful Courts of Christ, that are now sitting. And as to my Unpeaceableness, I know I am bidden follow Peace with all Men, but I know also I am bidden follow it with Holiness; and since I could not obtain Peace without Prejudice to Holiness, I thought my self obliged to let it go. And as for your Commission, Sir, to intimate this Sentence, I here declare I think my self called by the Lord to the Work of the Ministry, and did forsake my nearest Relations in the World, and give up my self to the Service of the Gospel in this Place, having received an unanimous Call from this Parish, and been tried and ordained by the Presbytery; and I bless the Lord he hath given me some Success, and a Seal of my Ministry upon the Souls and Consciences of not a few that are gone to Heaven, and of some that are yet in the Way to it. And now, Sir, if you will take it upon you to interrupt my Work among this People, as I shall with the Lord may forgive you the Guilt of it, so I cannot but leave all the bad Consequences that follow upon it, betwixt God and your own Conscience. And here I do further declare before these Gentlemen, That I am suspended from my Ministry for adhering to the Covenants and Work of God, from which you and others have apostatized.

Here the Curate interrupting him, said, That the Lord had a Work before that Covenant had a Being, and that he judged them Apostates who adhered to that Covenant; and that he wished that not only the Lord would forgive him (Mr. Guthrie) but, if it were

‘lawful to pray for the Dead, (at which Expression the Soldiers did laugh) that the Lord would forgive the Sin of this Church these Hundred Years bygone.’

‘It is true, answered Mr. Guthrie, the Lord had a Work before that Covenant had a Being; but it is as true, that it hath been more glorious since that Covenant, and it is a small Thing for us to be judged of you in adhering to that Covenant, who have so deeply corrupted your Ways, and seem to reflect on the whole Work of Reformation from Popery these Hundred Years bygone, by intimating that the Church had Need of Pardon for the same.’

‘As for you, Gentlemen, added he, directing himself to the Soldiers, I wish the Lord may pardon you for countenancing of this Man in this Business. One of them scoffingly replied, I wish we never do a greater Fault. Well, but said Mr. Guthrie, a little Sin may damn a Man’s Soul.’

Mr. Guthrie’s Civilities to the Soldiers.

When this had passed, Mr. Guthrie called for a Glass of Ale, and craving a Blessing himself, drank to the Commander of the Soldiers; and after they had been civilly entertained by him, they left the House. I have it confidently reported, that Mr. Guthrie at parting did signify to the Curate, that he apprehended some evident Mark of the Lord’s Displeasure was abiding him, for what he was now a doing, and seriously warned him to prepare for some Stroke a coming upon him very soon.

The Curate died in a little after.

Mr. Guthrie’s Relations, and a worthy old Minister yet alive when I write this, who was that Day at Finwick with him, from whom I have Part of this Account, do not mind to have heard any Thing of this Denunciation; but it might have been without their hearing, since none of them were present at Parting. Whatever be in this, I am well assured the Curate never preached more after he left Finwick. He came into Glasgow, and whether he reached Calder, but Four Miles from it, I know not; but in a few Days he died in great Torment of an iliack Passion, and his Wife and Children died all in a Year, or thereby; and none belonging to him were left: So hazardous a Thing it is to meddle with Christ’s sent Servants.

The Kirk declared vacant.

When they left the Manse, the Curate went into the Church of Finwick with the Soldiers his Guard, and now his Hearers, and preached to them not a Quarter of an Hour, and intimated from Pulpit the Bishop’s Sentence against Mr. Guthrie. No Body came to hear him, save the Party who came with him, and a few Children and Boys, who created him some Disturbance, but were chafed off by the Soldiers.

Mr. Guthrie continues in the Parish till October 1665. when he died in Angus.

Mr. Guthrie continued in the Parish, but preached no more in the Church, where, as far as I can learn, there was no Curate ever settled. Upon the 10th of October next Year, this excellent Person died in Angus, whither he went to settle some Affairs relating to his Estate of Pitforth there. Thus by the Malice of the Prelates, this bright and eminent Light of the West of Scotland was put under a Bushel, yea, extinguished.

Mr. Andrew Donaldson Minister at Dalgety, his Character.

I shall only add here, That the Procedure of the Prelates was of a Piece in all the Corners of the Church, and give another Instance from the Diocese of Dunkeld, relative to Mr. Andrew Donaldson Minister at Dalgety. Many yet alive have a most favourable Remembrance of this worthy Person; and a Minister at present in that Neighbourhood, who had the Happiness of his Acquaintance for some Years before his Death, writes to me, ‘That he was singular for a heavenly and spiritual Temper, and very much of a holy Tenderness and ardent Love to Jesus Christ at all Times, discovered themselves in every Thing he did: That many religious Persons, since the Revolution, in that Country, at their Death, owned, That Mr. Donaldson was the Mean of their Conversion and Edification. In a Word, he was not only eminent in Holiness, and the faithful Discharge of his Office, but likewise a Person of a very solid Judgment, and great Wisdom and Prudence.’

Such a Person as he was, could not well escape the Malice of the Bishops at this Juncture, and therefore I shall here give a Hint of the Trouble he met with from attested Accounts, and an original Letter of the Bishop of Dunkeld sent to him, October this Year, lately come to my Hand. We shall have some other Hints concerning this good Man in our Progress, but here I shall give a general View of his Sufferings altogether, from Narratives before me very well vouched.

Mr. Andrew Donaldson was admitted Minister at Dalgety, in the Year 1644. and continued in the Exercise of his Ministry there Twenty Years. He had the Favour of remaining longer at his Master’s Work than many of his Brethren, by the Interest of Charles Earl of Dumfermling, then Lord Privy Seal. This Year 1664. when the Earl was called up to London, the Primate in his Absence pushed the Bishop of Dunkeld, within which Diocese Dalgety lies, to deprive him.

Bishop of Dunkeld his Letter to him.

Accordingly the Bishop wrote to him to attend the Presbyteries, under Pain of Suspension: Which Mr. Donaldson did not regard, but continued at his Work till the diocesan Meeting in October, when the Bishop deposed him, and wrote the following Letter to him, which the Reader hath from the Original in mine Eye.

Sir,

1664.

THESE Five Synods past, your Brethren of the Synod of Dunkeld have waited upon your Presence to have concurred with them in all Ministerial Duties that relate to Discipline, according to the strict Acts of Parliament and Council enjoying the samen, and the Acts of your Synod requiring your Presence, and enjoying your keeping of Session, Presbytery and Synod. Notwithstanding, you have still seditiously contemned the Laws of the State, in not keeping your Synod, tho' you knew the ordinary Diets as well as others; and against the Law and Practice of the Church, and your peaceable Brethren, has still schismatically divided your self from your Brethren, in Session, Presbytery and Synod: And well considering their own Patience and Slowness to proceed against you, having formerly suspended you, and yet unwilling even to intimate that, causing it only come to your Ear, hoping that their kindly Forbearance should in End gain your Submission to an Union with them; Yet still meeting with nothing from you, but obstinate and ungrate Continuance in your seditious and schismatick Way, they unanimously, at the last Meeting of the Synod, holden at Dunkeld, the 4th of October, 1664. did think and vote you worthy of Deposition from your Ministerial Function. Likeas, I did in the Name, and by the Authority of Jesus Christ, and in the Name, and with the Consent of all my Brethren, actually at that Time depose you; which I now do declare, you Mr. Andrew Donaldson, sometime Minister at Dalgety, deposed from all Charge, not only there, but from all the Parts of Ministerial Function within any Diocese, or the Kirk of Scotland: Assuring you, if you shall insist in that Charge, either at Dalgety, or elsewhere, after you shall be acquaint with this Sentence, that immediately, with the Consent of my Synod, we will proceed against you with the highest Censure of this Kirk. In Verification of all the Premises, I have subscribed them, and sent them express to you for your Warning, that you may not pretend Ignorance, but may yield Obedience, and not contravene. Perth, 10th October, 1664.

GEORGE DUNKELD.

So careful was the Bishop of Mr. Donaldson's knowing this Sentence, that another Letter in the very same Words, only dated October 11th, came to his Hand likewise. But more effectual Methods were taken, and the Primate procured a Party to be sent to eject him from the Kirk of Dalgety, who came on a Lord's Day when the People were gathered to hear him. It was Mr. Donaldson's Prudence which prevented a Scuffle; and, upon the Government their Orders to remove, he compromised the Matter with the Soldiers, and got Leave to preach that Day, upon his Promise to leave that Place.

His Election from Dalgety.

When my Lord Dumfermling, now at London, got Notice of this, he procured a Warrant from the King, reponing Mr. Donaldson to Dalgety during Life; which his Lordship brought down very soon, and shewed it to the Primate, complaining he had taken the Occasion of his being absent, to deprive him of his Minister whom he valued so much. The Archbishop knew well to dissemble, and professed a great Regard to the Earl, and said, The King behoved to be obeyed, but craved, as a Favour, that the Earl would do nothing for Three Weeks in it, till he considered how to provide a young Man now settled at Dalgety: Which my Lord yielded to. Mean while the Primate, by his Interest at Court, in the Earl's Absence, procured a Warrant under the King's Hand, and got it down per Express before the Three Weeks elapsed, discharging all outed Ministers to come back to their Charges. This galled the Earl sufficiently, but there was no Help for it.

For many Years Mr. Donaldson continued to preach, with very great Success, at a Gentleman's House in that Country where he lived, till, through the Instigation of the Prelates, he was about the 1676. as we shall hear, intercommuned. When he removed, and had no small Difficulties, and very remarkable Preservations, and singular Communications from his Master, in the Year 1677. he was seized when he came to visit his Family, and carried Prisoner to Linlithgow Tolbooth, where he continued till the general Liberation of Presbyterian Ministers, after the Defeat at Bothwell. I have before me an attested Account of a very observable Judgment of God upon the Commander of the Party who seized him, and his dying under Horror for his Hand in this worthy Person's Persecution; and of a very singular Warning the Lord led Mr. Donaldson to give the Earl of Argyle in April, or May 1679. of his After-sufferings and Death, for the Cause and Interests of Religion, which was exactly fulfilled; which that noble Person told to severals when in the Castle of Edinburgh, a little before his Martyrdom. The circumstantiate and well vouched Accounts of those are too large here to be insert. Mr. Donaldson continued under Trouble, till, with many other worthy Persons, he was freed by the Toleration in the Year 1687.

I shall conclude this Account of the Bishops Treatment of Ministers this Year, with the Trouble another old worthy Minister met with at this Time, Mr. Robert Maxwell Minister at Monkton, in the Presbytery of Air. Being settled before the 1649. he continued in the Exercise of his Ministry, till he was suspended by the Presbytery, February, 14th, 1665. He was a grave, pious, useful Minister in that Place for near Twenty five Years, and very much beloved of his People; but there was no continuing longer among them, when armed Force put in Execution those Sentences. His Suspension was intimate to him, February 18th, being Saturday, and next Day he preached his Farewel-sermon, from Eccles. 5. 4. and had a very moving Discourse to them at this sorrowful Parting, which is before me, but too large to insert here.

In the diocefan Meeting, October this Year, Archbishop Burnet pushed and carried his Deposition, for nothing less than the utmost Rigour would satisfy him. From the original Extract of the Sentence in my Hands, I give here the Tenor of it.

Glasgow, October 11th, 1665.

Sentence of his Deposition.
October 11.
1665.

‘THE which Day, the Archbishop and Synod taking to their serious Consideration the Process led and deduced by the Presbytery of Air, against Mr. Robert Maxwell Minister at Monktoun, and finding by the said Process, that the said Mr. Robert Maxwell continues obstinate in refusing to joyn with the rest of his Brethren, to sit in Presbytery and Synods for the Exercise of Discipline, censuring of Scandals, and other uncontroverted Duties; notwithstanding that the said Mr. Robert has been frequently conferred with by his Brethren of the Presbytery of Air, in order to his Satisfaction, and that he either shuns all Debating, or refuses to receive Satisfaction when offered by them, shewing them positively that he is fully resolved not to submit; as likewise, that he confessed that he had married other Persons in other Parishes without Testimonial from their several Ministers: And finding by the said Process, that he has been thrice lawfully summoned to compear before the Presbytery, and that he never compeared; and being by the Presbytery referred to the Archbishop and Synod for Censure: As likewise for these Crimes he was formerly suspended from the Office of the Ministry, by the Presbytery of Air, the 13th of February last; and finding by the Execution of the Summons produced and read in Synod, the said Mr. Robert is legally cited to this Day; and he being called at the most patent Door of the high Church, compeared not, but absolutely refused either to give Satisfaction for those Crimes, or to give any Reason why he cannot or will not concur with his Brethren, and so finding there is no Hopes of gaining him: Wherefore the Archbishop and Synod think fit that the said Mr. Robert Maxwell be deposed, and by these Presents do depose him from the Office and Function of the Ministry, at the said Church of Monktoun, or in any Place else; and ordain the Presbytery of Air to intimate his Sentence to him with their first Convenience, and make Report thereof to the next Committee.’ Extracted by

LUD. FAIRFOUL, Cl.

We see he was proceeded against for mere refusing to subject to the Bishop, by Power from whom their Presbyteries and Synods met. His baptizing and marrying complained of, was only such Persons as were in their Consciences straitned to joyn with the Curates. We shall afterwards meet with this good Man under more Trouble.

Many other Accounts might be given of the Maltreatment of Presbyterian Ministers at this Time, had they been carefully preserved; but these Two are what I have particularly vouched, and they may serve as a Specimen of the Manner of the Treatment, these worthy Servants and Witnesses of Christ met with.

The People of the Presbyterian Perswasion were now every where harassed, and the Methods I hinted at on the former Chapter continued. Every Day the Soldiers grew more and more insolent at the Churches where any old Presbyterian Ministers ventured to continue. And through the West and South Multitudes of Families were scattered, and the Soldiers acted much in the same Manner, as the French Dragoons did some Years after, among the Protestants there.

Sir James Turner, I find this Year, is acting a very severe Part in the Western and Southern Shires; and next Year also he is sent by the Managers a Second or Third Time to force People to comply with the Church-government, and Ministers now established; and he executed his Orders exactly enough. I do not enter upon Particulars, since they fall in so much with what has been narrated; and Accounts of the Detail of the Actings of those booted Apostles, would be endless.

I come now to a few more Accounts of the Sufferings of particular Persons this Year, as they ly in Order of Time in the Council-registers. We have had the Reason formerly why we meet with so little of this Nature in them, this and the following Year. January 26th, 'tis recommended to the Chancellor to write to Sir James Turner; which he does as follows.

‘Sir,
‘UPON Information given to his Majesty's Privy Council, of some treasonable Speeches uttered by one John Gordon Burgefs in Stranrawer, for which he is now Prisoner in that Burgh, they order you to send him in Prisoner, with as many Soldiers as may be be sufficient for that Purpose, that the Council may take such Course with him, as they shall think fit. I am, &c. 1664.

The Lords of Justiciary were proper Judges in this supposed Case. Whether this Information, as many which were now given by the Clergy, was found groundless, I know not. No more offers about him in the Registers; and I am ready to think, that all he could be charged with, was some Reflections upon the Change now made in Affairs, by the establishing Bishops by the Supremacy.

March 1st, the Council pass an Act against the worthy Gentleman formerly mentioned, the Laird of Earlstoun.

Council's Act
March 1, against the Laird of Earlstoun.

THE Lords of His Majesty's Privy Council, having considered several Accusations exhibited against Mr. William Gordon of Earlstoun, for keeping of private Meetings and Conventicles, contrary to the Laws and Acts of Parliament, with his own Judicial Confession, that he had been at Three several Conventicles, where Mr. Gabriel Semple, a deposed Minister, did preach, viz. one in Corsack Wood, and other Two in the Wood of Airds, at all which there were great Numbers of People; and that he did hear Mr. Robert Paton, a deposed Minister, expound a Text of Scripture, and perform other Acts of Worship, in his Mother's House; and that Mr. Thomas Thomson, another deposed Minister, did lecture in his own House to his Family on a Sabbath-day; and that being required to enact himself to abstain from all such Meetings in Time coming, and to live peaceably and orderly conform to Law, he refused to do the same: Do therefore order the said Mr. William Gordon of Earlstoun, to be banished, and to depart forth of the Kingdom within a Month, after the Date hereof, and not return under Pain of Death; and that he enact himself to live peaceably and orderly during the said Month, under the Pain of Ten thousand Pounds, or otherwise to enter his Person in Prison.

We shall afterwards, in the Detail of this History, have Occasion to speak more of these Conventicles now a beginning, and to give the Reasons why Gentlemen and others could not bind themselves to abstain from them, and I shall not anticipate it; neither shall I make any Remark upon the Council's making the Expounding of a Place of Scripture, a Part of Divine Worship; the Bishops now with them ought to have rectified such a Blunder. It was much worse in them to banish so excellent a Gentleman, for mere hearing of Presbyterian Ministers, and, for what I can observe, exceeded any Laws yet made.

Reflections
upon it.

April 29th, 'The Council ordain Letters to be directed to a Macer, to cite Mr. John Cairns before the Council, to answer to the Crimes for which he was convened before the Parliament, and all other emergent Crimes by him sensyne committed.' I find no more in the Registers this Year about him. I imagine, when he declined appearing before the High-commission Court, by his Letter to the Chancellor, he had this Citation sent him to appear before the Council; but the dropping the Affair of Mr. Wood's Testimony, and the Chancellor's Death falling in within a little, perhaps made him to be dropped.

Mr. John Cairns cited before the Council.

June 23^d, 'The Council being informed of the seditious and factious Doctrine and Practices of Mr. John Crookshanks, and Mr. Michael Bruce, pretended Ministers, Fugitives from Ireland, and of their Preaching in several Places of this Kingdom, without Licence, contrary to the Laws, ordain Letters, charging them at the Market-crofs of Edinburgh, and Pier and Shore of Leith, to appear the 27th of July next; and give Power to the Officers and Commanders of the Forces to seize them.' Those were Two worthy Presbyterian Ministers come from Ireland. This is the First Time that I have observed the Phrase of pretended Ministers used by the Council. I do not find they appeared upon this Charge. All their Fault was Preaching the Gospel, and 'tis a Question, if they got Notice of this Citation. We shall afterward meet with Mr. Bruce, who was a very useful Minister, and did much Good, by his awakening and rousing Gift, in many Places.

Letters given out against Mr. Crookshanks and Mr. Michael Bruce.

August 9th, I find, that upon a Desire given in to the Council, they prorogate John Swinton, once of that ilk, his Liberation out of Prison for a Month longer, and order him to return to Prison, September 9th. I find no more about him for some Time, and at length he came to be overlooked, though he was a very active Quaker.

Swinton the Quaker overlooked.

November 3^d, William Dobbie Weaver petitions the Council, That whereas by an Act of Council, August 18th, which I do not observe in their Books, he was allowed to go out of Prison from Eight in the Morning till Eight at Night, to his Work; that now having been so long in Prison, he may be relieved. The Council order his Liberation, Six Burgeses in Glasgow, formerly his Cautioners, being Caution for his Re-entry when called. Middleton was now removed, and they did not think him worth any further Notice.

William Dobbie liberate.

That same Day, Mr. Thomas Wylie, formerly spoken of, presents a Petition to the Council, 'That whereas the Petitioner being confined by Act of Council, October 1662. to reside benorth the River of Tay, with his Family, to which Sentence he hath submitted in all

Mr. Thomas Wylie permitted to come South.

‘ Humility, as becometh ; and ever since hath behaved himself peaceably and inoffensively, becoming a loyal Subject, as a Testimony herewith produced, under the Hands of the Magistrates and Ministers of Dundee, will testify ; and that seeing now for a long Time it hath pleased the Lord to visit the said Petitioner his Bedfellow with great Sickness and Impairment of Body, often to the endangering her Life, which, according to the Opinion of her Physicians, is judged to proceed from the Climate of the Place, where she and the Petitioner hath been living, as will appear by a Testificate under the Hands of the Doctors and Chirurgeons of Dundee, herewith produced ; and that the Petitioner is purposed, wherever your Lordships shall order his Residence, that he and his Family shall continue in a peaceable and inoffensive Behaviour. May it therefore please your Lordships, in Consideration of the Premises, to take off the said Restraint from him, and grant him Liberty, with his Wife and Family, to reside besouth the River of Forth, in any Place of Lothian, which is more than Fifty Miles from the Place where the Petitioner had Charge as a Minister, and he shall ever pray.’ The Council order his former Bond to be given up, and that he give a new Bond, for his peaceable Behaviour where he is now confined.

Council
about Mr. John Spreul Town-clerk of Glasgow.

December 18th, the Council pass an Act about Mr. Spreul, formerly mentioned in the First Chapter, which I shall insert as I find it, knowing no more about this good Man.

THE Lords of Council considering, That Mr. John Spreul, late Town-clerk in Glasgow, having been cited before the Commission for Church-affairs, to answer for his Disobedience to the Laws, and Disaffection to the Government thereby established, he, for evading the Sentence of the said Judicatory, did for some Time withdraw himself forth out of the Country, and having privately returned, did carry himself most suspiciously, by travelling secretly from Place to Place, in the Night-time ; for which being apprehended and brought before the Council, and the Oath of Allegiance being tendered to him, he refused the same, alledging he had not Freedom to sign the same, by reason of the Tie that lay upon him by the Oath of the Covenant : Wherefore the said Lords judging it unjust, that any Person should have the Benefit of the Protection of His Majesty, and enjoy the Liberties of a free Subject, who refuse to give their Oath of Allegiance, ordain the said Mr. John Spreul to enact himself under the Pain of Death, to remove out of the Kingdom against the 1st of February next, and not to return without Licence, and find Caution to behave peaceably till then, under the Pain of Two thousand Pounds, and not to go within Six Miles of Glasgow.

This good Man was forced to wander from his native Country for some Years ; and we shall afterward meet with him in this History.

Mr. Alexander Moncrief allowed to come to Edinburgh.

That same Day, the Reverend Mr. Alexander Moncrief, formerly spoken of, in Reddy, petitions the Council, ‘ That in regard he hath an Action of Count and Reckoning, which needs his personal Presence at Edinburgh, as is attested by Two of the Senators of the College of Justice, and by the late Act, the Supplicant cannot come to Edinburgh without Licence, he humbly craves it. The Council grant him Licence till the 24th Instant, upon Bond to live peaceably and loyally during that Time.’ This is what I have observed most remarkable as to particular Sufferings this Year.

S E C T. V.

Of some other Remarkables, and incidental Matters, this Year 1664.

I Shall end the History of this Year with some few Incidents that fall in, some of which relate directly enough to the History of the Sufferings ; and others of them falling in in the Papers which have come to my Hand, and tending to clear the State of Things in this Period, I thought they deserved a Room here.

King's Letter
ordering the Archbishop of
St. Andrews to have the Pre-cedency of all the Officers of State.

January 26th, the King's Letter comes down to the Council, ordering the Archbishop of St. Andrews to have the Precedency of the Chancellor, and all other Nobility and Officers of State. It is dated the same Day with the Warrant for the High Commission, and came down at the same Time ; but the Council-registers take no Notice for some Months of the High Commission, for Reasons above narrated : Nevertheless, they record the King's Letter about the Primate's Precedency ; the Tenor whereof follows.

1664.

WE Greet you well. Whereas Our Royal Father of blessed Memory, did, by his Letter, dated at Whitehall, July 12th, 1626. signify to his Privy Council, That having considered, according to the Custom of all Civil and Christian Kingdoms, what Place and Dignity is due unto the Church, the Precedency of whose chief Ruler should procure the more Respect thereunto; to the end that the Archbishop of St. Andrews, Primate and Metropolitan of that Our Kingdom, may enjoy the Privileges belonging to his Place, We were pleased to name him First in the Commission of Our Council; and Our Pleasure is, That he have the First Place both at Our Council, and at all other publick Meetings before Our Chancellor, and all other Our Subjects within that Our Kingdom; as one from the Eminency of whose Place, We will have none to derogate in any Way, but shall ever contribute what We can to the Advancement thereof, in so far as is lawful and expedient. And We being also desirous to maintain the Honour of the Church, and that Dignity, in the Person of this Archbishop of St. Andrews, and his Successors, have thought fit to renew Our Blessed Father's Command; and to the end it may be punctually observed, We command you to registrate this Our Letter in the Books of Council; and so We bid you heartily farewell. Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the 16th of January 1664. and of Our Reign the 15th Year.

LAWDERDALE.

Thus Mr. James Sharp arrived at the very utmost of his Ambition, and higher he could not desire to be. This was the verifying of what Lawderdale threatened to Glencairn Three Years ago, That since he and Middleton would have Bishops, they should have them with a Vengeance: And agreeable to what a worthy Presbyterian Minister said to the Earl of Glencairn, when he pressed him to come in to Prelacy, and made some Insinuations, as if he might be Archbishop of St. Andrews. My Lord, said he, if I be Archbishop of St. Andrews, I will be Chancellor too; alluding to the last Archbishop, who enjoyed both Offices.

Remarks upon it.

This Letter did not a little chagrine our Nobility, especially the Chancellor. In King CHARLES I. his Reign, I find the Earl of Kinnoul then Chancellor would never yield the Precedency to Primate Spotiswood; but now Matters are changed, and all behaved to sloop to Mr. Sharp; and, fore against his Mind, the Chancellor yields the Door and Table-head, lest he should get the Purse too.

Former Chancellors did not yield the Precedency.

The curious Reader will be satisfied, that I add in this Place a Passage from Sir James Balfour, Lyon King at Arms, his Annals in King CHARLES I. his Reign, relative to this Precedency of the Archbishops of St. Andrews to the Chancellor, p. 653. of the Manuscript before me. 'July 12th, 1626. The King by his Letter commanded, That the Primate of Scotland, the Archbishop of St. Andrews, should take place of the Chancellor: But Chancellor Hay would never suffer him to do it all the Days of his Life, do what the King would. Sir James adds, That at the King's Coronation, 1633. that Morning the King called me, as Lyon King at Arms, and sent me to the Earl of Kinnoul, at that Time Chancellor, to shew him that it was his Majesty's Will and Pleasure, that only for that Day he would cede and give place to the Archbishop. The Earl returned by me this brisk Answer, "That since his Majesty had been pleased to continue him in that Office, which by his Means his worthy Father, of happy Memory, had bestowed upon him, he was ready in all Humility to lay it at his Majesty's Feet; but since it was his Royal Will, he should enjoy it with the known Privileges of the same, never a St---d Priest in Scotland should set a Foot before him, as long as his Blood was hot." When I had related this Answer to the King, he said, Well, Lyon, let us go to Business, I will not meddle further with that old cankered goutish Man, at whose Hands there is nothing to be gained but sower Words.'

Passage from Sir James Balfour's Annals, relative to this.

That same Day, January 26th, another Letter is read from the King to the Council, acquainting them he had made Choice of the Persons who were to be Commissioners for Plantation of Kirks, and ordered the Register to insert them in the Commission of Parliament past thereupon, and requires them to advertise them to attend the Diets of that Commission, which he will have kept every Week during Session-time: Whereupon the Council write to all the Members, to attend.

Commissioners named for Plantation of Kirks.

Some Notice hath been taken already of the new made Bishops this Year. In January, Mr. Alexander Burnet is admitted to be Archbishop of Glasgow, in room of Mr. Fairfoul deceased; and Mr. Scougal is his Successor at Aberdeen, who was reckoned among the devoteest of that Order; and Mr. Andrew Hounnyman is made Bishop of Orkney, in room of Sideserf deceased.

Changes among the Bishops this Year.

April 29th, by a Letter from the King, the Archbishop of Glasgow and Archibald Earl of Argyle are added to the Council, and take the Oaths, and their Places at that Board.

Archbishop of Glasgow, and Earl of Argyle, added to the Council.

Proclamation
against Buchanan, De jure
regni apud Scotos.

The same Day a Proclamation is published against that known and celebrated Treatise of the great Ornament of Scotland, Mr. George Buchanan, De jure regni apud Scotos, which deserves a Room here.

FORASMUCH as, notwithstanding it hath pleased the almighty God, to restore the Kingdom to the great Blessings of Peace and Prosperity, under the Protection of his Majesty's Royal Government, after the late grievous Sufferings and Bondage under Usurpers; yet some seditious and disaffected Persons endeavour to infuse the Principles of Rebellion in the Minds of many good Subjects, of purpose to dispose them to new Troubles; and for that end have endeavoured to translate into the English Tongue, an old seditious Pamphlet, Entituled, De jure regni apud Scotos, whereof Mr. George Buchanan was the Author, which was condemned by Act of Parliament 1584. during the Reign of his Majesty's Grandfather of blessed Memory, and have dispersed many Copies of the said Translation, which may corrupt the Affections of the Subjects, and alienate their Minds from their Obedience to the Laws, and his Majesty's Royal Authority, and the present Government, if it be not timely prevented: Therefore the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, in his Majesty's Name and Authority, command and charge all Subjects of what Degree, Quality or Rank soever they be, to bring and deliver to the Clerk of Council, all Copies they have of the said Pamphlet or Book, translated, as said is, and that none presume hereafter to double any of the said Copies, or disperse the same: With Certification, that the Contraveners shall be proceeded against as seditious Persons, and disaffected to Monarchical Government, conform to the Laws, with all Rigour: And ordain those Presents to be Printed, and Published at the Market-cross of Edinburgh, and all other Places needful, that none pretend Ignorance.

GLENCAIRN Chanc. I. P. D. Con.

Remarks upon
it.

This Proclamation is every way singular: For any Thing that appears, this Translation of that known Piece of the celebrated Buchanan, was not printed, but only, it seems, handed about in Manuscript; while in the mean Time Thousands of Copies of it, in the Latin Original, were in every Body's Hands. It had been more just to have ordered an Answer to have been formed to the solid Arguments in that Dialogue, against Tyranny and arbitrary Government, and the Courses at this Time carrying on; and more reasonable, than to make such a needless Noise about a Paper we must suppose to be in the Hands but of a very few.

Earl of Glencairn dies, May 30.

Upon the 30th of May this Year, the Earl Glencairn, Lord High Chancellor of Scotland, died at Boltoun in East Lothian, of a high Fever, in a few Days Sickness. He was reckoned a wise Statesman, and a brave Soldier, and had made gallant Appearances for the King, and the Freedom and Liberty of his Country. In several Things since the Restoration, he was driven beyond his Inclinations by the Prelates.

We have seen that he was abundantly active in the Establishment of Bishops; and it was evident enough that he had no Satisfaction in this Part of his Conduct, when he came to die. The Pride of the Archbishop of St. Andrews, and his getting himself into the Precedency of the Chancellor, and the other Officers of State, were no way agreeable to this Nobleman, who was of a very ancient Descent, and could not well bear the Heights of our Scots Prelates: And indeed it may appear strange, that our ancient Nobility could so easily bow their Necks to the Yoke and Tyranny of Bishops.

I am well informed from the Person, to whom the Chancellor had the Expression, upon the Rumours of Middleton's Fall, that he was pleased to say, 'If Middleton fall, People will infer that 'tis an accursed Thing to bring in Bishops to Scotland: For Captain James Stuart, who set up the Tulchan Bishops, died a lamentable Death; the Earl of Dumbar, who brought them in upon the Union of the Crowns, was the first and last of that House; and now if Middleton fall, People will comment upon it.

Some hot Words, as hath been noticed, were said to have passed 'twixt the Chancellor and the Primate, which stuck to the Earl, who still declared himself to be only for a moderate Episcopacy: But he felt to his sad Experience, the Prelates now brought in to be very far from Moderation.

At his Death, my Lord inclined much to have Presbyterian Ministers with him. He earnestly desired Mr. Robert Douglas, but he was in Fife when the Earl sickned: Some others were sought in Edinburgh, and could not be had. And before Mr. Robert Ker could be brought from Haddingtoun, my Lord was so low, that he could not speak to him. I have been likewise well informed, that the Chancellor shewed a great Concern to have a Meeting with the Primate before he died, that he might have dealt plainly with him; and an Express was sent, but the Archbishop had no Mind to meet with the Earl.

The Earl of Rothies, afterward Duke, and the Earl of Annandale, and many others of our Noblemen and Gentlemen, how much soever in their Life they had been hard upon Presbyterian Presbyterian Ministers, yet at their Death they fought to have them with them, and got them; which made the Duke of York one Day say, He believed that all Scotsmen, be what they would in their Life, were all Presbyterians at their Death. 1664.

July 28th, the Earl of Glencairn was buried with a great Deal of Pomp and Solemnity, in St. Giles's Church in Edinburgh. He had done great Services to the King, and he was pleased to be at the Charges of the Funerals. Doctor Burnet, Archbishop of Glasgow, was the Preacher of his funeral Sermon. And August 1st, the Great Seal was deposite in the Archbishop's Hands, till a Chancellor should be named.

This Year, June 3^d, the Earl of Tweeddale, now President of the Council, was made one of the extraordinary Lords of Session: And the Earl of Argyle, as we heard formerly, was restored to that Earldom, and to all and fundry the Lands, Lordships, and Baronies thereunto belonging, fallen into the King's Hands by the Forfeiture of his Father, and to all and hail the Mails, Farms, and Entries of all Crops and Years bygone and coming, and to all Debts and Sums of Money pertaining to the late Marquis, and contained in his Predecessors Infeftments. Tweeddale and Argyle restored.

And, June 8th, the excellent Marquis's Head was taken down from the Tolbooth, early in the Morning, about Five of the Clock, by a Warrant from the King, and was conveyed to his Body. Thus the Earl continued in Favour, till his noble Appearance for the Protestant Religion, at the Duke of York's Parliament, as we shall afterward hear. The Marquis of Argyle's Head taken down.

This Summer, Sir John Fletcher, King's Advocate, was obliged to quit that Post, not much the richer for all he had got in it. He was a Creature of Middleton's, and went up to Court in the End of the last Year, but did not succeed in his Endeavours to keep his Post, when his Patron was discarded. July 14th, I find a Letter from the King to the Council read, giving Licence to Mr. Patrick Oliphant Advocate, to pursue his Majesty's Advocate before the Council; and they order the said Mr. Patrick to exhibit and give in his Acculation the 26th. I find no more about him in the Registers, till September 14th, when, 'The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, in Obedience to his Majesty's Commands, signified to them by the Lord Treasurer, do discharge any further Procedure in the Process at Mr. Patrick Oliphant's Instance against Sir John Fletcher; and ordain either Party's Part of the Process to be delivered back unto them, and his Majesty's Letter, which was the Ground thereof, to be taken to his Majesty by the Lord Treasurer, the same not being as yet booked.' Sir John Fletcher obliged to quit his Post of Advocate, and is procecded.

By other Papers of this Time, I find this Process before the Council was long and litigious. The Advocate was libelled for Bribery, Partiality, and Malversation in his Office. The Lords who tried him did not find his Answers and Defences relevant or satisfying; and finding Matters going thus, he signified his Inclinations to demit in the King's Hands, and so the Matter was transferred to London, and Sir John permitted to go up; and there, not being able satisfyingly to vindicate himself in several Points, he demitted, and Sir John Nisbet succeeded. People could not but observe, That the Earl of Middleton, the Chancellor, and Sir John Fletcher, who had been so active in the Introduction of Prelacy, did not long continue in their Posts, neither had the Satisfaction Mr. Sharp proposed to them, in that lamentable Change made in this Church. The Process long, and dropt upon his Dimission.

August 9th, I find an Act of Council against the venting and spreading the excellent Lord Waristoun's Speech. The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council being informed, That there is a seditious Pamphlet, called Waristoun's Speech, published in Print, and publickly printed and sold by Booksellers and Boys in the Streets, do therefore give Power and Warrant to Sir Robert Murray of Cameron, to try and examine how these Pamphlets come to be sold without Authority and Warrant, where the same has been printed, who have been the Printers, Importers, or principal Venders and Dispersers thereof; and for that Effect to call before him and examine all Booksellers and Boys; and, if he shall see Cause, to commit them to Prison, till they discover the true Way and Means by which the said Pamphlets are so published and sold, and what Persons have had the chief Hand therein, and report. I find no more about it: The Reader hath seen that there was no Sedition in this Speech; and the selling of it in Publick was soon slopt. Act of Council against venting the Lord Waristoun's Speech.

In August this Year, the Earl of Rothes, and the Archbishop of St. Andrews, by a Letter from Court, go up to London. The Matter of the Fines, the Chancellor's Post, and the Advocate's, were to be concerted. Accordingly they went up; and, October 22^d, the Earl of Rothes returns to Holy-rood-house, loaden with Posts and Offices. November 3^d, I find the Patents for some of them read and recorded in Council. Rothes and the Primate go up to London in August.

His Commission to represent the King in the National Synod, to sit May next Year, being what the curious Reader may be desirous to see, I have insert, App. N^o. 43. That Synod did not indeed sit, but was put off Time after Time, by the Influence of the Primate, of which I cannot give so distinct and particular Accounts, as I could wish, and so say no more of it. Some Years after, we shall find a Struggle of a good many of the Clergy, for the Sitting of this Synod, but in vain. Rothes Commissioner for a National Synod, with his Commission, App. N^o. 43.

After the reading of this Commission, 'His Grace his Majesty's High Commissioner nominated and appoints the Lord Archbishop of St. Andrews his Grace, to be Preles of the Council. The Two Archbishops named Preles of the Council.

1664. Council for the Time.' And, November 24th, in the Primate's Absence, the Lord Commissioner 'nominates the Lord Archbishop of Glasgow to be President of the Council.

Then a Letter from the King in Latin, approving the Lord Commissioner his Conduct in the last Session of Parliament, is read and recorded; and after this a Letter from the King, appointing him Keeper of the Great Seal, and to enjoy all the Profits thereof till his Majesty nominate a Chancellor. The Council give Warrant to append the Seal to both those.

Other Posts conferred upon Roths.

By other Papers, I find that he had Twenty Pounds Sterling a Day, as King's Commissioner, till the Synod should sit, and Fifty Pounds per Day while it sat. He continued Lord High Commissioner for a good while; besides, he was Lord High Treasurer, General of the Forces by Sea and Land, and extraordinary Lord of Session, Commander of his Majesty's Life-guard, and principal Collector of the Fines; and Sir William Bruce, as we heard, was under him. But I imagine this last came to his Share as Lord Treasurer. About this same Time I find it observed as a singular Thing, That the Archbishop of Glasgow was made an extraordinary Lord of Session.

Sir John Nisbet
King's Advocate.

That same Day, November 3^d, Sir John Nisbet's Patent to be King's Advocate, is read and recorded in Council. He was reckoned an able Lawyer, and we shall frequently meet with him afterward.

Those Changes among the Managers, and Alterations of Hands, made little Change in the Sufferings of Presbyterians. They were all as yet hearty enough Supporters of the Bishops, and by them put on the Severities we shall hear of. This Year the Plague raged in Holland, and the Council take great Care about Ships from thence. A purple Fever was common in Scotland, and all Things were ripening for a War with Holland.

CHAP. VI.

Of the State and Sufferings of Presbyterians, during the Year 1665.

1665.

Sum of Matters this Year.

WITH this Chapter I am to shut up this Book, which hath swelled upon my Hand far beyond my first Design; and I shall not increase it further by subdividing this into Sections, but give what hath come to my Hand this Year, all together as shortly as may be. The former Courses were carried on up and down the Country, and People harassed for their Nonconformity. The High Commission had some Persons before them, but were now in the Wane, and the Council pass some more Acts against Presbyterians. I shall give what I have, just in the Order of Time, as much as I can.

Roths chief Manager.

We have seen the Earl of Roths loaded with Places of Trust and Power; and under the Direction of Lawderdale he is chief Manager in Scotland. He was much milder than Middleton, and scarce ever severe, except when in the High-commission Court, where he did not act like himself. During this Year of his Management, we shall not find so much Severity as afterwards he and the rest of the Managers were pushed into by the Prelates.

Proclamation
for a National Fast for the Dutch War.
App. N^o. 44.

The first Accounts I find in the Council-books of a War with the States General, is in a Proclamation published by them, May 3^d, for a National Fast, which I have insert, App. N^o. 44. The Copy of the Proclamation comes down from London, with an Order to the Commissioner to publish it, which is accordingly done.

Remarks on the War with Holland.

What Cause the English had to engage in a War with Holland, I shall leave to other Historians; but this I may venture to say, They had no great Honour by it in the Issue. In Scotland some private Persons made themselves rich by Caping or Privateering upon the Dutch, but the Publick had no great Cause of boasting. I find it observed by a Friend of the present Administration, That our Seamen were pressed, and our Trade almost ruined, and the Poverty of the Country very much increased by this Dutch War.

Presbyterian Ministers keep the Fast.

It may be more proper to the Design of this History to observe, That I find none of the few remaining Presbyterian Ministers who kept their Churches, had any Difficulty to keep this Fast appointed by the Council: Their Proclamation was not burdened with any straitning Clauses. They found much Ground for publick Fasting, and did not dip into the Justice or Injustice of this War: But in the Intimation of this Fast, they condescended upon a great many ny Grounds of Humiliation, which were not named in the Proclamation, and kept the Day 1665.

named.

I have before me the Form and Words in which Mr. James Fergusson, yet connived at in his Church at Kilwinning, intimated this Fast appointed by the Council, too long here to be insert; I shall only give a short Abstract of it, that the Reader may have some View of the Manner he used in this Case.

Mr. Fergusson begins his Intimation: "Beloved, you see there is a pressing Necessity of a Fast, in respect of the threatened Judgments; and therefore since 'tis appointed by the secret Council, let us go about it. But we missed one Thing in the Proclamation, which is a very considerable one, to wit, The mentioning of the particular Sins which have procured those Judgments. I shall put this favourable Construction upon it, That they left it to the Discretion of Ministers to intimate the Causes of the Fast; and I shall give you some Passages of Scripture. He names Hos. 4. 1--4. Levit. 26. 23--27. Jer. 34. 13--18. Zech. 5. 1--5. Esa. 5. 8--13. Then he adds, The Sin of all Ranks is so multiplied, that a Minister can hardly know where to begin. I shall reduce them all to this one General, The Contempt of the glorious Gospel. And he runs out upon the Streams that run out from this Fountain, Lukewarmness, and Indifferency, rough Handling of the Messengers of Christ, laying desolate Multitudes of Congregations, Contempt of the Sabbath, atheistical Contempt of Ordinances, gross Profanity of all Kinds, aggravated by a wonderful Delivrance from the Usurpation; and yet, immediately upon the Back of it, we have done contrary to what we had vowed with a high Hand to the Lord: The Lord make us sensible of the Hand you and I have in the Provocation.' Then he particularly insists upon the Pestilence they were threatened with, and before Prayer directs them what they are to be most concerned about in wrestling on their Fast-day. And in his Sermon, from Jonah 3. 8. he insists at great length upon those Sins and Strokes he had pointed at in this Intimation.

Mr. James Fergusson's Intimation of this Fast.

Towards the Beginning of this Year the Pestilence broke out in England; and many remarkable Signs were observed to precede and accompany that awful Arrow of the Lord. In the End of the last Year, appeared a very large Comet. This Winter there was so violent a Storm of Frost and Snow, that there was no Plowing from December till the Middle of March. In March another Comet appeared in the Heavens. Whatever natural Causes may be adduced for those alarming Appearances, the System of Comets is yet so uncertain, and they have so frequently preceded desolating Strokes and Turns in publick Affairs, that they seem designed in Providence to stir up Sinners to Seriousness. Those Preachers from Heaven, when God's Messengers were silenced, neither Prince nor Prelate could stop.

Pestilence breaks out in England, with several concomitant Signs.

I find it noticed, That May 3^d this Year, the Planet Venus appeared most clearly all the Day long, to the Amazement of many at Edinburgh. Much about this Time the Pestilence broke out at Westminster. I find it taken Notice of, in several Papers written at this Time, That the Appearance of a Globe of Fire was seen above that Part of the City where the solemn League and Covenant was burnt so ignominiously by the Hand of the Hangman. Whatever was in this, it seems certain that the Plague broke out there, and it was observed to rage mostly in that Street, where that open Affront had been put upon the Oath of God, and very few were left alive there.

The Raging of the Plague in England, which put many to wander from their Houses and Friends, as some Thousands of Christ's faithful Ministers in England and Scotland had been forced to do a little before, the Dutch War, and some other Things which fell in, made our Managers in Scotland not quite so violent against Presbyterians as formerly. Our Nobility began to be weary of the Prelates Cruelties, and their own Drudgery to them. And the Prelates began to jealous some of our Noblemen, as not quite so hearty in their Interests as formerly.

Severities on Presbyterians slacken a little;

Some little Favours now and then are granted to Presbyterian Ministers and Gentlemen. Thus, May 3^d, 'Anent a Petition of Walter Pringle of Greenknows, shewing, That since the 10th of March last, the Petitioner hath been imprisoned within the Tolbooth of Elgin, by virtue of an Act of the High Commission; and seeing he is a Person most valetudinary, and if detained in Prison, his Life will be undoubtedly in Hazard; humbly therefore desiring Liberty and Warrant to the Effect underwritten: The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, having considered the above written Petition, do grant the Petitioner the Liberty of the said Town of Elgin, and the Bounds of a Mile round about it, during the Council's Pleasure; and for that Effect ordain the Magistrates of Elgin to set him at Liberty out of Prison, he finding Caution to remain within the said Bounds during the Time of his Liberty, under the Pain of Ten thousand Pounds Scots.

Greenknows has the Liberty of the Town of Elgin allowed him.

That same Day, Liberty is granted to Mr. Smith, Minister, I suppose, of Edinburgh, to come to that Place. 'Anent a Petition presented by Mr. John Smith Minister, shewing, That the Petitioner being exceedingly diseased, and troubled with Cholick, Gravel, and a Complication of other Diseases, and in so dangerous a Condition thereby, that his Physicians

Mr. John Smith permitted to come to Edinburgh.

' think it necessary he come to Edinburgh for Counsel and Assistance; the Lords of Council grant him Liberty to come to Edinburgh, and reside there for the Space of Three Months after the Date of this.'

Towards the End of May, there fell out a Mutinee in the West-kirk Parish of Edinburgh. I give it in the Words of a Writer, who was no Enemy to conformist Ministers. ' May 28th, there fell out a Mutinee betwixt the Parishioners of the West-kirk and Mr. William Gordon Minister there, who, they alledged, was for keeping of Festivals, and had been the prime Author of the Removal of their Minister Mr. David Williamson, a good and able Teacher. The People railed on him, and closed up the Kirk-door. Some of them were put in the Thieves Hole, and a Man and a Woman were scourged through Edinburgh.' No more about this hath come to my Hand.

Several Persons in Dumfries, were about this Time imprisoned, for not hearing the Ministers put in by the Bishops, and refusing to give Obedience to the Bishops Orders sent them; but I have no particular Accounts who they were.

This Summer, I find Orders are given for disarming the West and South of Scotland; and Sir James Turner and others, with a good many Soldiers, are raging up and down that Country, pressing Conformity, and assisting the Uplifting of the Fines. That Part of the Nation, having every Day more and more Reason to be dissatisfied with the Changes in Church-government, behoved to be oppressed and born down, and now, to satisfy the idle Fears of the Prelates, disarmed.

For what I remember, this is the First Time our Scots History affords us an Instance of a Scots King's disarming his Subjects in the Time of profound Peace at Home. Perhaps the King might be made to apprehend, the Affections of his Subjects in those Shires bore some Proportion to his, or rather the Managers their Actions, and the Obligations they had put upon them. Indeed had this been the Rule, their Respect would have been smaller for his Majesty, than really it was: But under all their Hardships and Oppressions, Presbyterians continued to have all due Regard to the King.

The violent Seizure of their Arms, was a very great Loss to the Country. Formerly our Sovereigns reckoned it their Safety to have good Subjects, in Case to defend themselves and the Government, upon Attacks made or threatned; and till of late, the Method of standing Forces, and Armies in Time of Peace, were Strangers in Scotland. There were few Families but had some Arms; and the forcible taking those away, without a Fault, and without Payment, was unprecedented and arbitrary. The silly Pretext was, That the Phanatics, now the modish Way of expressing the Presbyterians, and all who would not renounce the Covenants, were to rise and joyn the Dutch against the King. --- Credat Judeus apella! This was another of the Primate's Fetches, and mightily pleased the Prelates, who now thought themselves secure, and at Liberty to do as they would. Those Oppressions, with what followed, did but further irritate the Country, and tended to expole them and their Curates, to what, without Ground, they pretended to be afraid of.

June 1st, 2^d, and 3^d, the Engagement happened 'twixt the English and Dutch Fleets, of which a very favourable Account, upon our Side, was printed. And June 20th, the Council publish the King's Proclamation sent them from London, for a Thanksgiving; which not having seen in Print, I shall give the Abstract of here.

CHARLES, &c. Forasmuch as Our Royal Navy, under the Command of Our dearest Brother the Duke of York, hath, upon the 3^d Instant, obtained a glorious Victory of the Fleet set out by the States of the United Provinces: And We finding it suitable, That a solemn Return of Praise be paid to Almighty God, by whose special Hand, in a signal Appearance for Us and the Justice of Our Cause, this great Salvation hath been wrought; have judged fit, by this Our Proclamation, to indite a general Thanksgiving for the aforesaid Cause. OUR WILL IS HEREOFRE, and We straitly command and charge, That the said Thanksgiving, and solemn Commemoration of the Goodness of God, manifested by the Conduct and Management of this late Action, be religiously and solemnly observed through this Our whole Kingdom, upon the 2^d Thursday of July next, being the 13th Day thereof. Given at Whitehall June 10th.

The Bishops are required to intimate the same to the Ministers in their respective Dioceses, and cause this Proclamation to be read from the several Pulpits, with Exhortations to all loving Subjects, to a cheerful and devout Performance of so becoming a Duty, owing to the Name of the Lord God, who has done those great and auspicious Things for us.

I think I have somewhere read, That a Thanksgiving was also appointed in Holland, the States apprehending the Victory was upon their Side. I shall only further remark, That Mrs. Trail, Wife of Mr. Robert Trail, who, we heard, was banished, and now is in Holland, was imprisoned about this Time, for writing to her Husband, and receiving Letters from him, though they concerned nothing but their mutual Health, and Family-concerns.

June

June 22^d, the Council grant Liberty to Mr. John Stirling, late Minister, to come to Edinburgh, and stay about his necessary Affairs for Twenty Days. And, July 20th, upon a new Petition he is permitted to continue in Edinburgh for his Health, till September 1st. We see what unnecessary Trouble and Charges those worthy Ministers were put to, in so frequent Petitioning for a Thing no Subject ought to be restricted in, without a Crime proven against them.

1665.

Mr. John Stirling allowed to come to Edinburgh.

July 6th, Anent a Petition presented by Mr. John Cameron, shewing, That in the Year 1662. he was confined to the Bounds of Lochaber, under which Confinement he hath been ever since; and seeing his Wife, for several Weeks, hath been afflicted with a most dangerous Disease, and, without the Comfort and Help of the Petitioner and Physicians is in Hazard of losing her Life; humbly therefore desiring he may be liberate of his Confinement for some Space: The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council discharge him of his Confinement in Lochaber, and, in place hereof, do hereby confine him to the City of Glasgow, and Two Miles about the same, till the 1st of November next, he finding sufficient Caution to live peaceably and legally in the mean time, and to retire to the Place of his Confinement, whenever he shall be required by the Archbishop of Glasgow.

Mr. John Cameron confined to Glasgow.

August 2^d, a Convention of Estates meet at Edinburgh, by virtue of a Proclamation published for that end June 22^d, which needs not be insert here. The Design of this Meeting was, to raise Money for his Majesty to support him in the Dutch War. Those Conventions, merely to raise Money from the Subjects, had been but very little used in Scotland; and indeed it was scarce worth the King's while to insist upon it. What this poor and oppressed Nation could advance, was but little, and it was but an insignificant Part of it that ever was applied to the Ends for which it was imposed. And because Rothies was Keeper of the Seal, and there was no Chancellor, the Archbishop of St. Andrews was chosen Preses, and had a long Harangue to them; and, in his cold Way, urged, that People might contribute willingly and cheerfully for the King's Service. The King's Commissioner was present, and could have delivered a Speech of this Nature, with a far better Grace; but, it seems, this was also for the Honour of the Church, that a Bishop should be at the Head of this Convention. By other Accounts I find a Taxation was laid upon the Kingdom, of about a Million of Merks Scots, as it was calculated.

Convention of Estates meet August 2.

Archbishop of St. Andrews Preses.

I find, that this Summer an Order was issued by the Council, but I have observed nothing of it in their Books this Year, appointing all Scholars who have University-degrees conferred upon them, to take the Oath of Allegiance and Supremacy, otherwise that they be not admitted to receive their Degrees. We shall afterwards meet with Acts of this Kind.

All who receive University-degrees to take the Oath of Allegiance.

The Design of the Prelates in this is plain enough, and in the After-addition that was made of the Declaration, imposing it upon all who should receive their Degrees, to corrupt the Youth of the Kingdom, and secure Episcopacy to after Generations. In this Point, as well as many others, now Scotland must be of a Piece with England, where the Youth are most unreasonably clogged with Party-oaths, before they can well understand the Importance and Weight of an Oath.

Remarks on this Order.

This is a base Bar upon Learning, and what no Universities in Europe, as far as I can hear of, save those under the Influence of Prelates, do burden Students with. The honorary Degrees ought certainly to be bestowed according to the Progress Students make in Learning, and not as they are addicted to such a Party and Opinion. However, by this and subsequent Acts, a great many of the most deserving Youths of the Nation were excluded from their Degrees; and some were involved in Perplexities of Mind, when afterward they came to reflect upon what they had done hastily, and without Consideration. It appears to me every way unaccountable, to put Boys of Fifteen or Sixteen Years of Age, to attest the Great God in Matters of this Kind, which they could not fully understand. And it gradually disposed the rising Generation to swallow down the Multitude of Declarations, and dubious and self-contradictory Oaths, which, in the Progress of this spiritual Tyranny over Consciences, came to be imposed.

Conformity was pressed with the greatest Warmth by the Bishops this Summer, through the West and South; it was in Galloway, where some of the outed Ministers preached, most openly. This galled the Bishops, and that Country was sorely harassed by Sir James Turner and the Soldiers at their Instigation. I find likewise, several Persons in the Parish of Stewarton are brought to Trouble about this Time, for hearing a Presbyterian Minister: Some were fined, and others imprisoned; but I have not a particular Account of their Trouble.

Conformity very pressed.

Great Numbers of Persons, almost every where upon the South of Tay, were cited before the High-commission Court; but very few now appeared, choosing rather to live under an uncertain Outlawry, than to be certainly ruined; and this mighty Inquisition-court, from which the Prelates expected so much, gradually weakned, and scarce lived out this Year.

Many cited before the High Commission, but few appear.

Yet some were necessitated to appear before them. This Summer, Mr. Hugh Peebles, Minister at Lochwinnoch in the Shire of Renfrew, was cited before the High Commission. He was a worthy, pious, and prudent Person, and all the Crime he was charged with, was, That he preached one Sabbath-night in his own House, to some People who came to hear him.

Mr. Hugh Peebles's Process before them.

When he came before them, he used as much Freedom, as might have probably sent him to Banishment at least, had they not been a little upon the Decline. Very frankly he told them, He did not know what to make of their Court, he could reckon it scarce either Civil or Ecclesiastick; yet since his Majesty's Commissioner had commanded him, and Self-defence was juris naturalis, he had appeared innocently to defend himself, and to give Accounts of plain Matter of Fact. He told them, That ever since he was a Minister, he had exercised in his Family upon the Sabbath-evenings, and the People who lived near him, generally came to hear him. He alledged, that the Law did not militate at all against this, if the Reason of the Law be considered. The Reason of their Law behoved to be, either to prevent People's leaving the publick Worship, which could have no Place in this Case; or, to prevent People's being alienated from the Minister of the Congregation, which could have no Room either, since there was no Minister settled where he lived: And since his preaching to his Neighbours, whom he could not exclude from his House, did not thwart with the ratio legis, it could not be said to thwart with the Law it self.

He is confined to the Town of Forfar.

After all he could say, though never so reasonable, the Archbishop of Glasgow was resolved to be rid of him; and so he was ordered to leave the West Country, and to confine himself to the Town of Forfar, which is, I suppose, near a Hundred Miles distant from the Place where he lived, and had an Estate.

Order from the King in September, for imprisoning some West Country Gentlemen.

When the High-commission Court came to fall short of answering the Designs of the Prelates, they fall upon other Measures, and give in groundless Suggestions, Innuendo's, and Insinuations, against a great many excellent Gentlemen, mostly in the West Country, to such who found Means to procure an Order from the King to imprison them. And towards the Beginning of September, an Order comes down to the Commissioner, to seize, imprison, and confine several of the most considerable and best Gentlemen in the Kingdom.

Their Character.

Such were pitched upon who were suspected to have greatest Aversion to the Prelatical Way, and indeed no other Thing could they be charged with, and were as peaceable and loyal Subjects as the King had. There were few in the Kingdom equalled many of them, in Piety, Peaceableness, and good Sense; and, generally speaking, they were Persons of ancient and opulent Estates, and very great Influence and Interest where they lived. It seems the Prelates and their Supporters reckoned it their Interest to have them out of the way.

Ground of their imprisonment not shewn them.

Many of themselves could never learn the Ground of their Imprisonment, and 'tis no Wonder I cannot account for it any further than I have just now said: And I shall not determine, whether the Prelates, and others now in the Government, inclined to have their Estates, or whether they were attacked just to terrify the Country. I find nothing about their Imprisonment in the Council-books; and several Things were now done by direct Orders from Court, without communicating them to the Privy Council. 'Tis pity we have no more distinct and particular Accounts from those who can give them, of the unjust and illegal Treatment those excellent Persons met with.

Their Names.

They were, without the least previous Notice, seized by a written Order from the Commissioner, and had not the least Reason given them. Their Names, as far as I can now recover them, were, Major General Robert Montgomerie, Brother to the Earl of Eglintoun, Sir William Cuninghame of Cunninghamhead, Sir George Maxwell of Nether-pollock, Sir Hugh Campbell of Cesnock, Sir William Muir of Rowallan, Major General Holburn of Menstrie, Sir George Monro, Colonel Robert Halket, Brother to Sir James Halket of Pitcairn, Sir James Stuart late Provost of Edinburgh, Sir John Chiesly of Carswell, James Dunlop of that ilk, William Ralston of that ilk.

I find some others named in some Papers, as imprisoned at this Time, such as Sir Patrick Hume of Polwart, and others; but not being certainly informed about them, I have omitted them. Those excellent Persons, when brought into Edinburgh, without any Libel, Accusation, or Cause given them, were most arbitrarily imprisoned in the Castles of Edinburgh, Stirling, Dumbarton, and other Places, where a good many of them lay for many Years. We shall in the Progress of the History have some further Accounts of their Hardships and frequent Removes.

Proclamation, October 3. about the Fines.

The Matter of the Act of Fines hath been pretty largely accounted for in the former Part of this Book. It was all Mystery at first, and took several Turns, as we have seen; and now it takes another Shape, when October 3^d it comes before the Council. I am not so well acquainted with the secret Springs of this Affair, as fully to account for it: But I shall set down the Proclamation published by the Council this Day; and the rather, because it does not appear to have been printed.

CHARLES by the Grace of God, &c. to Our Lovits, &c. Greeting: Forasmuch as by an Act of the Second Session of Our late Parliament, of the Date of the 9th Day of September 1662. Entituled, Act anent Persons excepted forth of the Act of Indemnity; several of Our Lieges were fined in the particular Sums of Money therein expressed, and as to those Sums were excepted out of the said general Act: And albeit, We did not only suspend the Payment of the foresaid Sums for some Time, but did propogate

gate the Terms of Payment thereof, until the 11th of December, 1664. for the First Moiety, and the 11th of March last, for the Second Moiety: With Certification, that such, as being charged at the Instance of Our Treasurer, Treasurer-depute, or Advocate, should not pay in their respective Sums, should incur the Pains contained in the said Act of Our Parliament, as Our Proclamation of the 13th of July 1664. bears: And notwithstanding that both the said Terms of Payment are long since elapsed, and that many of those who have been charged, have failed in Payment of their First Moiety; nevertheless, such is Our Royal Goodness and Clemency, that We resolve only to put in Execution the said Act of Parliament, in Manner, and upon Condition following. OUR WILL is, and We charge you straitly, and command, that incontinent these Our Letters seen, ye pass to the Market-cross of Edinburgh, and other Market-crosses of the Head-burghs of the Shires of this Kingdom, and there in Our Name and Authority command and charge all Persons who are charged by the said Act of Parliament, excepting such to whom We have been graciously pleased to grant a Suspension, as also such as have not been charged heretofore, for paying any of their said Moieties, to pay in their respective Proportions of the First Moiety, in case it be not already paid, to Sir William Bruce Collector, betwixt and the First Day of December next to come, which is the Diet appointed for those that live belowth the North Water of Esk, and the First Day of January, which is the Diet appointed for those who live benorth the said Water: With Certification, if they fail, they shall for ever forfeit the Benefit of Our said Act of Indemnity and Oblivion, and incur all other Pains therein contained, to be executed with all Rigour: As also, that ye make publick Intimation at the Market-crosses foresaid, to all concerned, that it is Our gracious Will and Pleasure to remit and forgive the Second Moiety of the said Fines, to all Persons nominate in the said Act, of whatsoever Quality or Degree they be of, the First being paid by such as are ordained to pay the same, who shall come in and take the Oath of Allegiance in the ordinary Form, and shall subscribe the Declaration as 'tis set down in the 5th Act, Session 2^d, and Act 2^d of the 3^d Session of Our late Parliament, in Presence of Our Commissioner, or such of the Lords of Council as he shall call, or in the Presence of the Lords of Our Council met together; and that betwixt and the respective Days foresaid, according to their Residence: As also, that ye in Our Name and Authority make lawful Proclamation, as said is, to all Persons to whom We granted a Suspension of their Fines, or who have not hitherto been charged for Payment of any Part thereof, to come in and take the said Oath of Allegiance, and subscribe the Declaration the foresaid Days respective, according to their Residence: With Certification, if they fail, they shall be liable for both the Moieties of the said respective Fines; and that, immediately after the running out of the said respective Days, they shall be charged for Payment thereof to Our said Collectors, under the Pains contained in the foresaid Act of Parliament anent Fines. Given under Our Signet at Edinburgh, the Third Day of October, 1665. and of Our Reign the Seventeenth Year.

1665.

Remarks upon this Proclamation I shall not stay upon. Who these were who had their Fines suspended, I know not. Some few up and down had paid the first Moiety; but, it seems, there were but few. The King and some of the Managers were willing enough to have waved this Matter of the Fines, but the Prelates and others of them had no Mind to part with so fat a Morfel; and so the Blind is fallen upon, which might expose the Refusers in the King's Eyes, and the View of those who knew not how Matters stood, and effectually secure them in the Fines of such who were really Presbyterians.

Remarks upon it.

I need scarce observe, that this is a new Proof that the Fines were designed principally against Presbyterians; and it was no Ease to them at all to have the Second Moiety forgiven them, upon their paying the First Half, and taking the Oath and Declaration, since both were flatly against their Principles: And therefore it was but very few named in the Act of Fines, who embraced the Terms offered; and that the Primate and others expected.

This, as the Reader will have more than once Occasion to observe, was one of the unhappy Methods of this Reign, first, to lay on illegal and oppressive Impositions, and then to require absolute Conformity to the Church-establishment, as an alledged reasonable Thing to get rid of those Impositions. This Presbyterians found in many of the Turns in those Two Reigns.

The Council, November 23^d, make some further Regulations as to the Fines. 'And considering, That several Persons, through Age and Infirmary of Body, and other necessary Impediments, may not be able to come in to Edinburgh, to take the Oath and Declaration, in the Terms of the Proclamation, give Warrant to the Clerk to issue out Commissions under his Hand, to such Persons as shall make Address for that Effect, to the Sheriffs of the respective Shires where they live, or Privy Counsellors, to administrate the same to them, providing his Majesty's Commissioner be first acquainted with their Names, and satisfied with the Reason wherefore they are craved.'

Some further Regulations as to the Fines, in November.

1665.

‘ And further, considering several of the said fined Persons are dead, they order the Heirs and Executors of the said defunct Persons, claiming the Benefit of the said Proclamation, to take the Oath of Allegiance, and subscribe the Declaration, if of lawful Age, and willing to do the same.’

‘ And several of the fined Persons being under Captions for Civil Debts, and so cannot repair to Edinburgh, as the Proclamation requires; the Council grant Warrant to the Clerk to subscribe personal Protections to such as shall make Addressees for that Effect, to continue till January next.’

Few pay the Moieties of Fines, and the Army is sent on the rest.

Act of Council about the Election of Magistrates at Air.

After all those Baits, to pay at least one Moiety of the Fines, it was not very many who paid it, and then Sir James Turner and the Army were sent to uplift them by military Force, which brought much Trouble to many, as we shall see, next Year.

The Pushing of the Declaration brings new Difficulties this Year in the Election of Magistrates in some Burghs; and so I find Two Acts of Council, October 4th, and December 7th, about the Magistracy of Air. By the First, the present Magistrates, and Eight or Nine others who have signed the Declaration, are impowered to elect the Magistrates and Council for the ensuing Year, providing William Cunningham continue Provost; and the Earl of Eglintoun, with Advice of the Archbishop of Glasgow, is to see this Act put in Execution. By the other, the Matter is left to the old Magistrates, and such of the Council as have taken the Declaration.

Mr. William Guthrie dies, October 10.

By this Time many of the old Presbyterian Ministers, who had seen the Glory of the former Temple, were got to their Rest. The 10th Day of October this Year, brought the Reverend Mr. William Guthrie to his Father's House: I shall only add the Remark made upon his lamented Death, by the worthy Minister his Contemporary, whom I cited before, when I spoke of him. ‘ This Year the Presbyterians in Scotland lost one of their Pillars, Mr. William Guthrie Minister of the Gospel at Firwick, one of the most eloquent, successful, popular Preachers, that ever was in Scotland. He died a Sufferer, for he was deposed by the Bishop, but in Hope, That one Day the Lord would deliver Scotland from her Thralldom.’ Many others of the old Ministers of this Church died about this Time in Peace, being taken away from the Evil to come, and fast coming on in great Measures, and departed under the solid and firm Hope of a glorious Deliverance coming to this poor Church.

Mr. Matthew Ramsay deposed by the Bishop, as also Mr. Robert Mitchell suspended.

Others of them were harassed by the Prelates. This Year, in October, Mr. Matthew Ramsay Minister at Kilpatrick Wester, in the Presbytery of Dumbarton, a Person of the most shining Piety, flayed Gravity, of the greatest Eminency of Gifts, extraordinary Sweetness of Temper, and of a most peaceable Behaviour, was by the Bishop in Synod deposed at Glasgow, without any other Cause so much as alledged, but his not attending their Prelatical Synods and Presbyteries. Together with him, Mr. Robert Mitchell Minister of Luss, in the same Presbytery, a Person of most eminent Ministerial Qualifications, was for the same Crime suspended, in order to be deposed next Year.

Provosts Forster and Graham declared Rebels and Fugitives.

October 14th, I find George Porterfield and John Graham, late Provosts of Glasgow, were cited, as usual in such Cases, to appear and answer before the Council, to what should be charged against them, upon Pain of Death. They were Two excellent Persons, who had been singularly active in the late Work of Reformation; and after they had been brought to some Trouble by the Committee of Estates, in the Year 1660. retired to Holland, where they were living peaceably, under a voluntary Exile: And, December 19th, they were both, upon their Noncompareance, declared Rebels and Fugitives. It was pretended, without the least Proof, That they were guilty of treasonable Practices in Holland, merely because they continued there during the War; when indeed, whether there had been Peace or War, they would not willingly have come Home, to involve themselves in unnecessary Trouble, and the Persecution now so much raging against all Presbyterians.

The Commissioner makes a Tour to the West Country.

In the Beginning of November this Year, the Earl of Rothies Commissioner, made a Tour to the West Country, in great Pomp and Splendor, with the King's Guards waiting on him, and a great Train of Attendants. He was at Hamilton, Glasgow, Eglintoun, Paisly, Dumbarton, and Mugdock. That Part of the Country behoved to be overawed, if possible, from their Aversion to the Courses now carrying on. Whether Information was taken of the Circumstances and Estates of the excellent Gentlemen in that Neighbourhood, now in Prison, in order to some following Designs, I cannot say; but as some severe Acts against Presbyterian Ministers accompanied Middleton's Circuit, so we shall just now meet with some more of that Kind. The Commissioner returned to Edinburgh towards the End of the Month.

Council's Act against Quakers.

November 30th, the Council having considered the Report made by the Committee, appointed to consider what Course should be taken with Quakers, ‘ Find, that they are guilty, and may be reached as Contraveners of the Acts of Parliament against Separation, the 1st Act of the 3^d Session of the late Parliament, and the Proclamation emitted by his Majesty, and Parliament, against Quakers, January 22^d, 1661. and that they be punished by Finings, Confining, Imprisonment, and such other corporal and arbitrary Punishments as the Council think fit; and that these now in Prison, Anthony Hodges, and Andrew Robertson, be brought "brought before the Council, and a Libel be given them by his Majesty's Advocate to see and answer." The Laird of Swinton is dropped, and I find very little effectually done as to others of them: So that in this Reign they got deep Rooting, especially in the northern Shires.

The Council go more closely to Work against Presbyterian Ministers and People; and next Council-day, December 7th, pass some severe Acts and Proclamations against them. The High Commission was now expiring, and the Privy Council return to their former Work.

Their First Act at this Diet extends their former Acts, chiefly pointing at the younger Presbyterian Ministers, unto all of them, as may be seen in the Act it self, App. N^o. 45. The Act begins with a Declaration, That the Council, after a long and tender Forbearance, (after what we have now seen in the preceding Part of this Book, some Readers will be ready to say, The tender Mercies of the wicked are cruel) Find it necessary their former Acts, December 23^d, 1662, and August 13th, 1663, be extended to the Ministers who entred in before the Year 1649. and have relinquished their Ministry, and been deposed by their Ordinary.

There was no new Fault pretended, and nothing charged, but a firm Adherence to their Principles; and yet these worthy old Men are sent a wandering from their Flocks and Friends. The Hardships put on them by this Proclamation, have been above considered, as they relate to the younger Ministers; and they are very much accented, and the Barbarity of the Prelates pushing this, aggravated, in extending them to a very few old dying Men, living most quietly and peaceably, of whom, in the ordinary Course of Nature, they would very quickly have been rid without this Cruelty.

Remarks upon
it.

A Door is left open to the Council, the High-commission Court, or any one Bishop, to tolerate them; which was not sought, at least from the Two last, as far as I hear of. All Heritors and Housholders are forbid to give them any Countenance in their Preaching, or exercising any Part of the Ministerial Office; and all Magistrates, and other Executors of the Law, are impowered to imprison them, if they keep not within the Bounds appointed by this Proclamation.

Some interpreted the Clause with relation to Heritors and Housholders, as discharging all to set a House to any Presbyterian Minister; but I cannot see so much in the Letter of the Act, without stretching it. However, it was improved by their Adversaries, so as they had no small Difficulties in many Places where to fix, and it was really impossible for all of the Presbyterian Ministers in Scotland, to continue in it, if they kept precisely to the Terms in those Acts, as hath been noticed.

All this Severity against those worthy old Men, was according to Archbishop Burnet's Maxim, which he openly enough propaled as his real Sentiments, That the only Way to deal with a Phanatick, was to starve him. I am told, That the Earl of Kellie, no great Friend to Presbyterians, upon the Publishing of the Acts and Proclamations agreed to this Day, said, 'It was his Opinion, Presbyterian Ministers ought to be obliged to wear a Badge of Distinction from other Men, that every Body might know them, otherwise he might ignorantly set them some of his Houses and Lands, and so fall under the Lash of the Law.' This is another persecuting Proclamation against Presbyterian Ministers, for the old Fault of bare peaceable Nonconformity; I have forgot their Number, but they are near a Dozen new, and every new one hath some severe Clause added. Thus the Wicked wax worse and worse.

Bishop Burnet's Maxim, and
the Earl of Kellie's Observe upon those Acts.

In the next Place they order a Proclamation to be published and printed against Conventicles, and Meetings for religious Exercises; which I have insert App. N^o. 46. It speaks for it self, and is so plain as it scarce needs a Commentary.

Proclamation against Conventicles
App. N^o. 46.

The former Acts since the Year 1660. against Subjects convening without the King's Authority, are narrated; and this is termed a very dangerous and unlawful Practice. Thus the Heathen Writers and their Emperors use to talk, during the First Three Centuries after Christ; and yet the primitive Christians met at their Hazard, notwithstanding of such Edicts as this.

Remarks upon
it.

In a little we shall find it the ordinary Cant of this Period which follows, That these Meetings for religious Exercises are the Seminaries of Separation and Rebellion. That they were a Separation from Prelates and their Curates, every Body perceived; but still the Question remains, Whether these had not sinfully separated from the Reformation of the Church of Scotland, and given just Ground to Ministers and People to withdraw from them? And in the Determination, Scripture, Reason, and the Practice of this Church, since we came out from Babylon, must come in; and not the King and Council's Laws and Acts. Whatever Extremities might be afterward run to, at some Conventions for religious Exercises, if any such were, the unparalleled Severity and Oppression justly lodged at the Prelates Door, forced People into them: Yet there was nothing now at them, that in any native Way of speaking, can be termed Rebellion; the Covenants indeed were owned, and their Obligation attested sometimes, and other Truths, the owning of which was now made Treason and Rebellion, by Iniquity established by a Law.

1665.

As to the Doctrine taught by Presbyterian Ministers at those Meetings, termed in the next Clause of the Proclamation, infusing poisonous and pernicious Principles; I wish the World had a Specimen of the ordinary Doctrine preached by the Curates, and a Parallel 'twixt it and that of Presbyterians at Conventicles, and they would soon perceive on which Side the Poison lies. If smoothing over Oppression and Tyranny, weakning the very common Principles of Morality and natural Religion, gross Pelagian Errors, and plain Popery, be poisonous, many Instances can be given in the Ministers established by Authority, as now the Stile goes.

Those Meetings are discharged under the Pains of Sedition, Fining, Confining, and such other corporal Punishments as shall appear fit to the Council, or any having the King's Authority, whether he be Officer of the Army, Bishop, or even a private Centinel; every Body present at them, are thus to be treated: But Ministers, or any who have a Hand in contriving and enticing People to such Meetings, or suffer the same to be kept in their Houses, are made liable to the highest Pains due unto, and which by Law may be inflicted upon seditious Persons. And all Magistrates and others, are required presently to apprehend the Contraveners, and imprison them. Here is a broad Foundation for the Army to act upon, and they did it to Purpose next Year.

Observations
upon the English Writers
Account of this Proclamation.

Upon this Proclamation we have another Instance of the Ignorance of the English Writers in our Scots Affairs. The Author of the Complete History of England, Vol. III. says, This Year 1665. the Parliament of Scotland issued out a severe Proclamation against Conventicle Preachers, as Movers of Sedition. Being much a Stranger to the Methods of our Scots Parliaments, it is not to be wondred that he knew not, that save in some extraordinary and temporary Cases, Proclamations were never issued by Parliament, and were ordinarily the Deed of the Executors of the Law: But one would have expected, that from our printed Acts of Parliament, he might have noticed there was no Scots Parliament sat from the 1663. to the 1669. From his mistaking the Parliament for the Council, we may guess how far he is out in the Reason he gives for the Proclamation, which very justly he terms severe, being provoked by the Insolence of Mr. Alexander Smith, a deposed Minister. His Story of Mr. Smith's Carriage before the High Commission, is quite misrepresented, and was no ways the Reason of this Proclamation. Mr. Smith was before the High Commission many Months before this Proclamation: His Crime there, as we have heard, was only his refusing the Primate his Titles; and the barbarous Treatment of this good Man, is one of the black Stains upon this Administration. Mr. Eachard copies here again after the former, and follows him in all his Mistakes.

In the Papers of a Reverend Minister, who understood well how Matters went, I find that this same Day an Act was passed in favour of the Curates, and for the constituting Presbyteries; tho' that Word must not now be used, yet the Curates continued it in many Places for their own Credit among the People. But not finding this Act in the Council-books, though I know several Things of Importance are now done, and that sometimes by Order from the Commissioner, and sometimes by Advice of the Council, which are not booked, neither having seen the Act at large, I shall not insist much upon it.

The Council's Order about Meetings for Exercise.

The Abstract of this Act or Order before me, falls much in with what we have had formerly, and perhaps this Day the Council recommended their former Acts and Proclamations to be observed: And 'tis declared, 'That his Majesty, with Advice of his Council, by virtue of his Supremacy, allows the Bishops to depute such a Number of their Curates as they judge qualified, to convene for Exercise, and to assist in Discipline, as the Bishop shall direct them. But the whole Power of Ecclesiastical Censures is reserved to the Bishop, except Parochial Rebukes, and he only must suspend, deprive, or excommunicate.'

Observations
upon it.

In short, those Meetings in effect were nothing else but the Bishops Spies, and Informers up and down the Country: And this seems to have been the Shape and Make of the Prelatical Presbyteries. The Bishop under his Hand granted a Deputation to so many of his Curates as he pleased, to meet in such a Precinct, and gave them their Instructions and Limitations, beyond which they must not go. The Number of those Meetings for Exercise, was but small in many Places. Elders and Inspectors of the Manners of the People, must not be now named in this Kind of Presbyteries.

At this Time the Church of Scotland might grone out that, How is the Gold become dim, and the most fine Gold changed! Alas! what a poor Shadow and Skeleton was this of the Judicatory Christ himself instituted, and the Presbyteries the Apostles themselves joyned in! This Plant had for its Root the King's Supremacy, its Stock was the Bishop acting as the King's Servant and Depute, the Curates were its Branches; and its Fruit certainly could not be Holiness, Reformation, or the Edification of the Body of Christ, but Destruction, Wormwood, and Gall to the Bulk of the religious People in Scotland. And I find very little they did, but consulted how to inform against, and promote the Work of Persecution upon Presbyterians.

This same Diet the Council grant a Commission for Discipline, and impower Ministers in each Congregation to choose Persons, whom they will not call Elders, that may joyn with them for suppressing of Sin. Of this and the Consequents of it, for further Trouble to Presbyterians byterians who could not joyn with the Curates: I shall give some further Account upon the next Year, when it came to be put in Execution:

And to end the Account of this remarkable Sederunt of Council, the same Day they pass an Act concerning the Prisoners among their Hands. 'The Privy Council considering, that there are several Prisoners within the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, who of their own accord are desirous to be transported to Barbadoes, ordain the Magistrates to set all at Liberty who are content of their own free Will to go to Barbadoes, and ordain them to be delivered to George Hutcheson Merchant in Edinburgh, in order to Transportation.' Who they were is not specified, nor the Crimes for which they were incarcerated; but by other Papers I find they were the Remains of such who had been imprisoned by the High-commission Court, and sent in Prisoners for their Nonconformity and Opposition to the Curates: And several of them chose rather to go to the Plantations, than to abide for ever in Prison at Home. In the Progress of this Work we shall afterwards find, that Transportation was not left to Prisoners Choice.

Little further remarkable offers this Year. March 1st, the Bishop of Argyle petitions the Council, 'That whereas by an Act of the last Session of Parliament, dated September 17th, Eight Expectants who have passed their Course of Philosophy, and Eight Scholars to be trained up at Schools and Colleges, are to be entertained out of the vacant Stipends of that Diocese, each of which are to have Two hundred Merks yearly for their Subsistence, a Collector be named, and Letters direct at his Instance.' The Council empower the Bishop to name a Collector, and grant the Desire of the Petition.

October 3^d, the Council having received his Majesty's Commands, ordain the Lord Marquis of Huntley to be educated in the Family of the Lord Archbishop of St. Andrews, to whose tender Care they recommend him, and that no Person Popishly inclined have Liberty to attend him or serve him: And ordain the Earls of Linlithgow and Tweddale, to acquaint his Mother and himself, and call a Meeting of his Curators, to provide all Things necessary and suitable to one of his Rank; and that he enter the Archbishop's Family against the 27th of October Instant. We shall afterwards meet with this Nobleman created the Duke of Gordon, and living in the Profession of Popery. What Care the Primate took to prevent this, I know not.

November 30th, a Proclamation is published, ordering a voluntary Collection to be gathered through all the Churches of the Kingdom, for the Relief of the distressed Churches in Poland and Bohemia, to be delivered to Paul Hartman their Commissioner. It comes down from London, and is ordered to be published.

I find it further remarked, That Tule was not so solemnly kept this Year, as during the former; and at Edinburgh there was no Proclamation by the Magistrates discharging the opening of Shops, and going about People's ordinary Work; only Mr. William Annand preached a Sermon suited to the Occasion.

Thus I have gone through the lamentable Circumstances of Presbyterians, during the First Six Years of their Furnace, in as far as what Papers I could have Access to, would carry me. 'Tis indeed but a very lame Account can be given at this Distance; and yet from the original Papers, and Acts of Parliament and Council, with the vouched Instances of their rigorous Execution, the Reader may form some Notion of the Severities of this Period: And harder Things are coming upon Presbyterians in the succeeding Years.

There is not much further Matter offers, as the Subject of this History, till the End of the next Year, when the Rising and unsuccessful Attempt made by some Presbyterians for recovering of their Liberty, and shaking off the heavy Yoke of Oppression they groined under, brought upon them a new and very dreadful Scene of Sufferings. Any Thing noticeable as to their State and Sufferings, during the former Part of the Year 1666. I shall leave to the Second Book, where it natively falls in, to prepare the Way for the Account of the Rising, which was dissipate at Pentland.

THE
SUFFERINGS
OF THE
Church of SCOTLAND.

BOOK SECOND.

From Pentland to Bothwel-bridge.

THE Condition and Circumstances of suffering Presbyterians, it must be owned, alters a little under this Period, from what it was during the former. For near Six Years after the Restoration, that Body of religious and loyal Scotsmen, underwent as much Oppression and Injustice, as would have put any almost but themselves, upon quite other Methods than they took. Their legal Securities for their Reformation, and religious Rights, were removed, their Civil Liberties taken away, their Ministers scattered, and a Company of Men forced into their Churches, whose Practice and Morals, as well as their Doctrine, made them publick Nusances. The Prelates are brought in to lord it over their Consciences; Piety and serious Religion is openly discountenanced, and all its Followers almost put under the Cross: In short, a very barbarous military Execution is made 1666.

The Circumstances of Presbyterians change in this Period.

Use of, to force all down their Throat; and all Liberty of petitioning and addressing against those Evils, is discharged under the highest Pains.

Yet Presbyterians silently bear all, and groan and mourn in secret, waiting and hoping, that Providence would open some Door or other for their Relief; and humbly praying, That the Cry of their Oppression might come up to Heaven, and the Lord would please to appear in their behalf. Their Adversaries themselves being Judges, nothing hitherto of Rebellion

Their Patience under this, or Disloyalty can be laid to their Charge; yea, it may be affirmed, That scarce a greater Instance of Patience and Moderation, can be given in any Party in Britain. With the greatest Temper they bore the most arbitrary Finings, with the illegal and military Exaction of them; the Outing and Confinement of their worthy Ministers; the calumnious and invidious Declarations, that their Worshipping God was Sedition, and the bitter Prosecution, even unto Death, of some of the best of their Nobility, Gentry and Ministers. Under all this they offered not to stir, till abused with military Violence; and even then, only sought Redress of these Grievances from their Persecutors, whom they owned as lawful Magistrates. True it is, they petitioned in Arms; but then it was under a Government, where Petitioning, as well as defensive Arms, were discharged as seditious.

and Loyalty.

How little Reason the Advocates for passive Obedience have, to charge Presbyterians with the Guilt of Rebellion, and resisting the King, in this Period I am now entering upon, will best appear from the true and unbiassed Accounts of Matter of Fact, now to be given; where it will be evident, the Rising which ended at Pentland, was both a plain Fruit of the horrid Oppression of the Country, and a gathering in Arms merely for Self-defence, at first neither premeditated nor designed; and all they had in View was a fair and just Hearing of their Grievances, as to their religious and civil Concerns. I shall then begin this Book with an Account of that successful Attempt for these good Ends, which is best known by its Name, taken from its tragical End at Pentland.

C H A P. I.

An Account of the Rising at Pentland, and the Sufferings following thereupon, 1666.

The Subject-matter of this Chapter.

So far as I know, there hath been no full and distinct Narrative of this Business published as yet to the World; and therefore I shall be the larger in mine, and touch at some Things which preceded this Rising, and fell out the former Part of this Year. Then I shall essay as particular a Relation as I can, of the Rising it self, in its Beginnings, Progress, and Dispersion, and end this Chapter with as distinct Accounts, as I can now give at this Distance of Time, of the Persons put to Death upon this Score, and their Carriage and Christian Behaviour, waving very much what hath been already published to the World upon those Heads.

S E C T. I.

An Account of the State of Affairs during that Part of the Year 1666. immediately preceding the Rising at Pentland.

Presbyterians very much oppressed.

IN the former Book I have brought down the Accounts of the State of this Church, to the End of the Year 1665. and one would think Matters are so managed this Year following, as if there had been a formed Design to force Presbyterians into violent Measures, and by Oppression to make them mad.

An Act and Commission of Council, Dec. 7 1665. for Discipline.

An Act of Council, December last, was hinted at, which I may here take in, as the Occasion and Foundation of some of the smaller Branches of Trouble not a few fell under this Year. Beside the Two severe Proclamations already noticed, which were emitted December 7th, 1665. I find another Act in the Registers, of the same Date, which they term, Commission for Discipline; and I insert it here.

• The

THE Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, considering how necessary it is for suppressing Sin and Disorder, that some fit Persons be assisting to the Minister in every Parish, in the Exercise of Discipline; do therefore recommend to the several Ministers of this Kingdom, that they make Choice of such a Number as they shall think meet, of the most grave, sober, and discreet Persons within the Parish, to be assisting unto them in the Exercise of Discipline: Commanding all Persons, who shall be required by the Ministers for that Effect, to give their ready Concurrence and Assistance, as said is. And in case of Refusal or Delay, That the Minister, after he hath acquainted the Bishop of the Diocese therewith, and has received his Order, require, or cause require them to make their Appearance before the Brethren of the Exercise; and in case they refuse or delay to compear, or compearing refuse to give their Assistance, as said is, That the Brethren of the Exercise present their Names to the Bishop of the Diocese, to be by him transmitted to the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, to the Intent they may be proceeded against, according to their Demerit, and as the Case requireth. And for the better Maintenance and Supply of the Poor, they recommend to the Minister of every Parish, and those assisting him in the Exercise of Discipline, where any such are or shall be, that they be careful to collect, and uplift the Fines and Penalties, formerly used to be uplifted by Kirk-sessions, from scandalous Persons.

1666.

Several very obvious Reflections will offer themselves to the Reader, from this Act of Council: The Necessity and Usefulness of that Officer of Christ's Institution in the Christian Church, the Ruling Elder, very much opposed by the Prelatists, is tacitly acknowledged, and a Kind of Equivalent is here erected, at the Request of the Prelates, though every Way, like themselves, a Creature of the Civil Power. Here is likewise a direct Attempt upon our Redeemer's Prerogative, in bringing in new Officers of their own framing, as Assistants in Discipline, one of the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven; and they are not pitched upon consentiente plebe sacra, according to the primitive Institution of these Representatives and Overseers of the Christian People, but to be pitched upon by the Minister; and every one who refuseth, is to be forced into this Work by the Secular Power of the Privy Council.

Remarks upon it.

Which brings me to add, That the refusing to joyn with the Curates in Discipline, was Matter of much Suffering to Presbyterians. I could make it evident, that, in several Places, Gentlemen and others were pitched upon, and the Episcopal Minister is not tied up from any by the Act, not from any Desire that they should joyn with them, but with an Eye to bring them to Trouble. They knew real Presbyterians would never fall in with them; for it had been a Renouncing of their Principles, and falling in with the Prelatical Constitution. 'Tis plain the Act of Council orders a Kind of Ordination by the Prelatical Presbytery; and a subjecting unto this was a Sort of Incorporation with the Hierarchy, and a great deal more than a simple Prefence at Ordinances dispensed by the Curates; and some who submitted to the last, choosed to suffer before they would do the First.

Presbyterians their refusing to joyn with the Curates in Discipline, a new Occasion of their Persecution.

In the former Book, some Instances of Persecution upon this Account, have been pointed out in the Laird of Aikenhead's Case, and that of others; and I might now add James Maxwell of Williamwood, whose Sufferings will come to be narrated in the Progress of this History. A few more Instances of Hardships upon this Head, may suffice in a Case that was very general.

Instances of this in Even before this Act was made, in the Year 1664. John Corsbie in Easter-cotes, in the Parish of Cambuslang, was required by Mr. Cunningham Incumbent there, to assist him in Discipline; and when he refused, upon the general Laws about Conformity, and Encouragement of Orthodox Ministers, he was summoned before the Council; and, upon his Noncompearance, was harassed by Messengers, with Caption against him, for many Months, and forced to hide, and frequently to withdraw from his own House. Robert Hamilton in Spittal, in the same Parish, was this Year 1666. persecuted on the same Account; and from this to Bothwell-bridge, he could scarce keep his own House with Safety. He was put to the Horn, and his House frequently searched and spoiled. William Alexander and William Baird in Drips, in the Parish of Carmonnock, were fined in an Hundred Pounds each, because they would not assist the Curate in Discipline, in the Parish of Cathcart. Gasper Tough in the Parish of Kilmarnock, was much troubled upon the Account of his Refusal to joyn with the Curate there. In the same Town, Andrew Taylor Wright was fined in Twenty Merks, upon the same Score.

John Corsbie,

Robert Hamilton,

William Alexander, William Baird,

Gasper Tough,

It was upon this Account, amongst other Things we have heard already, that the Laird of Aikenhead, with some other Gentlemen, were confined to Inverness, Elgin of Murray, and other Places, at a vast Distance from their Houses and Families. And it may not be amiss here to take Notice of a Letter, a Copy of which lies before me, from Mr. John Paterson Bishop of Ross, to his Son, afterwards Archbishop of Glasgow, then Minister at Edinburgh. It is dated this Year, without the Month. The Bishop, among other Things, desires his Son, Several Gentlemen confined at vast Distance from their Houses, upon this Score.

1666.

The Bishop of Ro's his Letter to his Son Mr. Paterson, upon this Confinement.

' To acquaint my Lord St. Andrews, That he looks upon the Temper of the Country about him to be very cloudy like. He complains of a Friendship made up between Seaford and Argyle, and of a Change in many who pretended to be Friends to Prelacy when it was set up. He adds, That it is certain the Westland Gentlemen, who are confined to Elgin and Inverness, have done more Evil by their coming North, by Two Stages, than they could have done in their own Houses: They have alienated the Hearts of many who were of another Principle before; they have Meetings with our great Folks, adds he, and are better respected nor any Bishop in Scotland would be. He begs these Gentlemen may be recalled, that they spread not their Infection any more; and adds, They are the Staple of Intelligence between the West and North, among the Phanatick Party; and desires, That the Primate may be acquainted of this, and make his own Use of it, without his being seen in it.' This Letter discovers to us, That these Hardships put upon Presbyterians, were ordered in Providence for the Good of their common Interest. I have many a Time heard it observed, That Mr. Bruce, Mr. Dickson, and others, their Confinement in the North, during the former Times of Prelacy, was no Service done to the Prelates: And those Gentlemen's Confinement, and that of several Ministers since the Restoration, was of no small Use to the Interests of Liberty and Presbytery there; and the good Effects of their Confinement are not yet at an End, and I hope never shall.

Council's Letters, Jan 25.
against Mr.
Welsh, Semple, Blackader, and others.

As this Council-commission about Discipline was Matter of Trouble to not a few Presbyterians, so the other Proclamations emitted with it formerly, were a continuing Fund of Distress to the Ministers lately turned out. Thus I find, towards the End of January, at the Instigation probably of the Bishop of Galloway, the Council direct Letters against the Reverend Mr. John Welsh, Mr. Semple, Mr. Blackader, and others. And that the Reader may see the Grounds they went upon, and know the Form of these publick Citations, which in a little Time turned very common, I shall give them here from an Original before me.

' CHARLES, &c. To Our Lovits, &c. Greeting. FOR AS MEIKLE as it is humbly meant and shewn to Us by Sir John Nisbet of Dirleton Knight, Advocate for Our Interest, and Sir William Purvis Our Solicitor, Agent for Church-affairs, That where, notwithstanding of several Laws and Acts of Parliament, the Assembling and Convening Our Subjects without Our Warrant, is prohibited and discharged, as a most dangerous and unlawful Practice, under the Pains against such as unlawfully convocate Our Lieges; and that Conventicles and unwarrantable Meetings and Conventions, under Pretence and Colour of Religion, and Exercise thereof, being the ordinary Seminaries of Separation and Rebellion, are altogether unlawful; and, by several Acts of Parliament and Privy Council, prohibited and discharged: By the 1st Act of the 3^d Session of the late Parliament, it is declared, That the withdrawing from, the not joyning with the publick ordinary Meetings for Divine Worship, is to be counted seditious; by an express Clause of the said Act, all such Ministers as have not obtained Presentations and Collations conform thereto, and all such as would be suspended or deprived, and yet should dare to presume to exercise the Ministry, are to be punished as seditious Persons: Likeas, divers Acts of Parliament, viz. the 134th of Our Grandfather JAMES VI. of worthy Memory, Parl. 8th, it is statute and ordained, That no Person of whatsoever Function, or Degree, or Quality, shall presume to take upon Hand, privately or publickly, in Sermons, Declamations, or familiar Conferences, to utter any scandalous Speeches to the Reproach of Us, Our Privy Council, and Proceedings; or to meddle with the Affairs of State, or to deprave Our Laws and Acts of Parliament or Council, or to traduce or reproach Our Royal Estate and Government, under the Pains contained in the Acts of Parliament against Makers or Tellers of Leafings. And by the 1st Act of Our Royal Grandfather King JAMES, Parl. 8th, Mr. George Buchanan his Book (de jure regni) is condemned, as containing sundry offensive Matters worthy to be delete; and the Havers of the said Book are ordained to bring in and deliver the same, under the Pains therein mentioned: Nevertheless, true it is and of Verity, That the Persons after mentioned, viz. Mr. John Welsh late Minister at Irongray, Mr. Gabriel Semple late Minister at Kirkpatrick of the Muir, Mr. John Blackader late Minister at Traquair, Mr. Robert Archbald late Minister at Dunfcoil, Mr. Samuel Arnot late Minister at Kirkpatrick Dunham, Mr. John Douglas late Minister at ----- Mr. Alexander Padan late Minister at ----- Mr. William Reid late Minister at ----- Mr. John Wilkie late Minister at ----- Mr. John Crookshanks and John Osburn in Keir, having been formerly Ministers at the respective Places above mentioned, and not having obtained lawful Presentations and Collations, conform to the said Act of Parliament; and they or either of them being suspended or deprived, at least pretending to be Ministers, and not authorized and lawfully admitted by publick Authority, to any Charge within this Kingdom, at least being Persons disaffected to Our Royal Authority and Government, and the Government of the Church as it is now established by Law; and in main Contempt of Our Authority, and the Laws and Acts of Parliament

foresaid,

And particularly the ſaid Mr. John Welſh does preſume frequently, at leaſt once every Week, to preach in the Pariſh of Irongray, in the Presbytery of Dumfries, and himſelf, and theſe who frequent his Conventicles, do convene together, armed with Swords and Piſtols; at the which Meetings he alſo baptizes Children that are brought to him by diſaffected Perſons; and at ſome Times he comes into the Sherifſdom of Air, eſpecially at the latter End of July laſt, and did keep a Conventicle at Gaſton-muir, where he baptized many Children, namely, a Child of Andrew Boyes Merchant in Kilmarnock, and of Alexander Mitchel — Likeas, the ſaid Mr. John did keep another Conventicle at Shirraland, in Plimnick Pariſh, about the 1st of November laſt, where he baptized the Children of James Morwat in Kilmarnock, John Claig in Dibland, James Gall, and many other Perſons. As alſo, upon the 11th of July laſt, he kept another Conventicle in the ſame Place, where he baptized the Children of John Chalmers, John Dickie, and David Currie. And alſo the ſaid Mr. Gabriel Semple did keep a Conventicle at Achmannock, where, amongſt many others, he baptized a Child to John Guthrie in the Pariſh of Newmills; and ſiklike, kept another Conventicle at Labroch-hill, in October laſt; as alſo does frequently ride to the Country in Diſguiſe, with Sword and Piſtols, and calls at the Houſes of diſaffected Perſons, to ſee what Children there is to be baptized, and ſo appoints a Place for their Meeting: And this he does, not only in the Sherifſdom of Air, but alſo in many Places of the Shire of Nithſdale, within the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright. Alſo, the ſaid Mr. John Blackader has oft times convened great Numbers of the Pariſh of Glencairn, and the neighbouring Pariſhes, ſometimes to the Number of a Thouſand and upwards, and continues ſo to do every Lord's Day; at which Meetings he frequently baptizes the Children of all diſaffected Perſons. And ſiklike, the ſaid Mr. Robert Archbald does frequently keep Conventicles and Meetings in ſeveral Places, and thereat did baptize Children. And alſo, the ſaid Mr. John Crookſhanks does not only frequent, keep, and hold Conventicles, contrary to the foreſaid Laws and Acts of Parliament, but does avowedly keep by him that Book called Buchanan de jure regni, which he has tranſlated out of Latin into Engliſh, intending thereby to inſuſe and poiſon the People with treaſonable and ſeditious Principles, contained in the ſaid Book. As alſo, the ſaid John Osburn does preſume to take upon him to be an Officer for giving Notice to the People of the ſaid unlawful Meetings, and accordingly, from Time to Time, doth acquaint them herewith. By which whole Deeds, generally and particularly above written, the ſaid Perſons, and each one of them, having incurred the Pains and Penalties preſcribed by the Laws and Acts of Parliament above ſpecified, which ought and ſhould be inflicted upon them, to the Terror of others to commit the like in Time coming: OUR WILL IS HEREFOR, and We charge you ſtraitly, and command, that incontinent, thir Our Letters ſeen, ye paſs, and in Our Name and Authority command and charge the Perſons particularly above complained upon, at the Market-croſs of Kirkcudbright, Dumfries, Market-croſs of Edinburgh, Pier and Shore of Leith, in regard they are latent, and keep themſelves out of the Way, that they may not be apprehended, and have no certain conſtant Reſidence or Dwelling, but do travel and walk up and down the Country from Place to Place; to compear perſonally before the Lords of Our Privy Council, at Edinburgh, or where it ſhall happen them to be for the Time, the — Day of — to answer to the Premiſſes, and to hear and ſee ſuch Order taken thereanent, as appertains, under the Pain of Rebellion, and putting of them to the Horn: With Certification if they failzie, Our other Letters ſhall be direct, to put them ſimpliciter thereto. Remarks upon them.

Those Letters were formed upon Informations taken at random, and therefore must not be reckoned Proof of Matters of Fact advanced in them; and what I remark here would be carried along by the Reader, to many of the general Charges against suffering Ministers, and others which follow: Such of them as could with Safety appear, disproved most of what was informed against them. ' In the Case before us, I only notice, that it was a Falshood here insinuate, that Mr. Welsh, or any of those Reverend Ministers preached or declared against the King's Authority. Such Declarations were yet Strangers in Scotland for many Years: When and how they came in, will afterwards come to be declared.

Council's Procedure against Quakers and Papists.

About this Time the Council come to some good Resolutions against Quakers and Papists, who, as hath been observed, increased mightily since the overturning of Presbyterian Government in this Church. We have seen, that a good while ago Orders had been given about them, and Letters writ to the Bishops; and, February 1st, the Council agree to the Report of the Committee made that Day, and renew their Appointments on the Clergy. The Substance of what I find in the Registers, is, ' That excommunicate Quakers be proceeded against conform to Acts of Parliament: That in order to a Libel's being formed against Andrew Robertson, and Anthony Haggat, Quakers in Prison, Orders be direct to such Ministers as can bring in Information against them, to bring in the same to the King's Advocate; and that particularly Mr. Thomas Donaldson bring what Informations, Writings, Books, or Papers they have anent the said Quakers, or any others: That-----Radburn, and Charles Ormiston, Merchants in Kelfo, be brought in Prisoners to Edinburgh.'

' As to Papists, That the Laws and Acts made against them be put in Execution; and in order thereto, that a List of the whole Papists be taken up by the Minister in every Parish, and an Account given who are excommunicate, who not, who have Interest in the Parish, and who are vagrant and trafficking Papists: That the Lords Archbishops recommend it to the Bishops, that they cause the Minister of every Parish, or Moderator of the Presbytery where Churches are vacant, to send in their Lists with all Diligence: That the Magistrates of Edinburgh search after any Meetings kept by Papists in Edinburgh, Canongate, or any of their Liberties, and delate their Names to the Council: That a List of all excommunicate Papists be given to the Lords of Session, that they may affix in the most patent Place a Roll of their Names, that they may be debarred from defending or pursuing any Cause before them.' All this, as far as I can find, came to nothing; Quakers and Papists still increased, and it was only Presbyterians whom the Clergy were in earnest about, during this Reign, and they are born down with the greatest Violence.

Council's Proclamation against the Apologetical Relation, February 1st. App. No. 1.

Thus, upon the 8th of February this Year, the Council emitted a Proclamation against a Book published by one of the banished Ministers in Holland last Year, entituled, An Apologetical Relation of the particular Sufferings of the faithful Ministers and Professors of the Church of Scotland, since August 1660. I have added it App. No. 1. This Book is ordered to be burnt by the Hand of the Hangman, in the high Street of Edinburgh. All who have any Copies, are ordered to give them up to the next Magistrate by such a Day; and after that, if any have them in their Possession, they are to be fined in Two thousand Merks. This Method now so common, did not answer the End proposed, for People ran the more greedily after such prohibited Books; but the Managers who could not permit their evil Works to be brought to the Light, and were not in Case to answer plain Matter of Fact, had no other Way but this of the Papists left them.

Mr. James Guthrie's Widow and his Daughter, brought to Trouble for having that Book.

The same Day I find-----Ramsay, Relict of the Reverend Mr. James Guthrie, and Sophia Guthrie her Daughter, are brought before the Council, merely because the foresaid Book was found in their Custody, although as yet no Law was against it; and one needs not wonder they should have a Book in their Hands, which gives so just an Account of so near a Relation of theirs as Mr. Guthrie. Upon their refusing to declare upon Oath, what they knew as to the Author of the Book, and to discover from whom they received it; the Council sentences them both to be sent to Zetland, there to be confined during Pleasure, and to be kept close Prisoners till they were sent there. The next Council-day, March 2^d, I find the Members so sensible of the Harshness of this Sentence, that, upon a Petition presented from those Two Gentlewomen, craving their Confinement may be altered to some Place upon the Continent, the Matter is referred to the Commissioner, to do as he finds Cause.

Few Field-sermons as yet.

In the Beginning of this Year, Presbyterian Ministers had some Connivance, and were permitted to live in their hired Houses, when turned out of their Livings. The Call of the importunate Multitude, was not yet so great as afterwards, and generally they only preached to their own Families, and a few Neighbours who now and then stole into their Houses. Field-preachings, Preachings, unless it were in some few Places in the South, where the People would not hear the Curates, were but very rare. The Meetings of the Episcopal Ministers in Cities and Town, except where they were openly profane and vicious, were as much frequented as they could well expect. Indeed Evils grew among them, and their impertinent and reproachful Sermons, their open Share in the Cruelties and Oppression, which we shall hear of, with their lewd Lives, quickly after this altered Matters. At this Time, if they could have been satisfied with the Numbers of Hearers they had, many thought they might have enjoyed their Churches longer than they did: But they would have as throng Churches, as the Presbyterian Ministers formerly had; and if Regard to their Persons and Sermons could not procure Hearers, 'tis resolved, Terror, Force, and Fear shall.

The Episcopal Ministers Meetings pretty much frequented.

Mr. Alexander Burnet, at this Time Archbishop of Glasgow, was the great Manager of the West-country Persecution, and the better in Case for this, that last Year he was admitted a Privy Counsellor. To give every Man his due, he was certainly one of the best Morals among the present Clergy; yet his Simonical Compact for his Regress to his Bishoprick, after he had been turned out, as we may hear, was but little for his Reputation. He was a mighty Bigot for the English Ceremonies and Forms, and as forward to have all the Usages of that Church introduced to Scotland, as if he had been educated by Bishop Land; yea, to have his Fancy pleased with these Pageantries, he could have almost submitted to the old Claim of the See of York over the Church of Scotland. At his first diocesan Meeting, he put Five or Six of his Curates publickly in Orders after the English Pontifical, to inure the West of Scotland to these Novelties.

The Archbishop of Glasgow the great Manager to Persecution in the West at this Time, with his Character.

To make good the Remark I formerly made, That Imposition in Matters of Religion goes Hand in Hand with Oppression in Civil Matters; and Prelacy and Popery in Scotland, pave the Way for Slavery: He was so grievous an Oppressor of the City of Glasgow, that the greatest Malignants, as the Friends of Prelacy in Scotland were formerly called there, were obliged to protest against his Incroachments upon the Magistracy in that City. He turned out several of the Presbyterian Ministers, who had been connived at in their Charges before his Accession; such as Mr. William Hamilton Minister at Glasford, in the Shire of Lanerk, and others. His Underlings, especially those consecrated according to the foreign Forms, were vigorous Instruments in helping forward his Cruelties and Oppression of the Country; and many of the Severities this Year, were in the Bounds of his Archbishoprick.

He oppresseth the City of Glasgow.

This Spring Sir James Turner makes a Third Visit to the Presbyterians in the West and South, and it was the severest Visitation they yet felt. Now the Curate, with Two or Three of Sir James's Soldiers, fined whom they pleased, and made their Exactions as large as they would. Their Severities the former Years were mostly upon the common People; but now the Gentleman must pay, if his Lady, Servants, or Tenants, were not exact in their Attendance on the Incumbent's Sermons. The Tenant must be oppressed if his Landlord withdrew, though he and his Family attended closely. The Widow, the Fatherless, the old and infirm are not spared; the Poor must beg to pay their Church-fines. The Meat is snatched from the innocent Childrens Mouths, and given to the Soldiers Pleasure-dogs. Many Houses were quartered upon, till all the Substance was eaten up, and then the Furniture is sold or burnt.

Sir James Turner oppresseth the West and South, and his Soldiers exact Fines for Absence from the Church.

Thus Multitudes of poor Families were scattered, and reduced to the last Extremity. If any complained to the Officers, of the illegal and barbarous Procedure of their Soldiers, they were beaten; if to the Statesmen, they were neglected. It was said, some of our Noblemen at this Time, were so far wearied of the merciless Methods of the Prelates, that they appeared very little careful how odious they rendered themselves. Indeed, if the Bishops were formerly hated for their Perjury and Profaneness, every merciful and ingenuous Man now loathed their cruel and unrelenting Temper; and their own Practices did them a great deal more Hurt than all the Field-meetings, and Preachings in Houses privately, were capable of doing.

Multitudes thereby reduced to great Straits, and the Prelates rendered the more odious.

In a few Weeks the Curates and Soldiers gathered upwards of Fifty thousand Pounds Scots from the West Country, precisely for their Nonconformity. The prodigious Sums extorted in the South of Scotland about this Time, are set down in Nephtali, and I shall not resume them here: Only the Reader who hath Time to bestow upon those Things, will find a Letter from a Person of good Note in the South to his Friend at Edinburgh, with an annexed Account of the general Sums, and particular Instances of Oppressions. App. N^o. 2. I have some Ground to think the Copy I have may be an Original, taken by a worthy Person employed to draw this Account from the particular Parishes; and so I have annexed it, as that from which the Account in Nephtali is perhaps taken.

Fifty thousand Pounds Scots uplifted from the West, and great Sums from the South, with a Letter and general Account of these last. App. N^o. 2.

Another Kind of Fines exacted this Year, to complete the Misery of the poor Country, were those imposed by Middleton, in his Second Session of Parliament, of which above: The Payment of those was suspended from Time to Time, till Middleton was turned out. A little after, as we have seen, they were divided into Two Moieties, and a Day assigned for the Payment of the First. Some who were able, and well informed of the Hazard of Delays, paid the First Share, and got their Discharge; but a good many others did not. At length a Proclamation comes out, ordering all to pay the whole Fine imposed against the ---- Day of

The Fines imposed 1662. likewise exacted this Year.

1666. of this present Year; and the Council remit it to the Commissioner the Earl of Rothes, to take his own Way to collect the Fines.

The Method used to uplift them.

His Method was this: The Troopers of the King's Guard are ordered to different Parts of the Country, especially in the West and South, where most of the fined Persons were, with Lists of those from whom they were to uplift such and such Sums. The Gentlemen of the Guard were commanded to take free Quarters in the Houses of all in their Lists, till they had paid to the utmost Farthing. With these severe Orders, a new Snare was added further to corrupt the Country; any who would take the Oath of Supremacy, and subscribe the Declaration openly in any Court, had the Half of the Fine remitted, as had been concerted last Year; and such who had no Latitude for those, must have the whole exacted with the utmost Rigour.

Many pay these Fines, and Riding-money also to the Soldiers.

Through the West and South, Multitudes were obliged to pay the Whole, yea, much more. Noblemen, Gentlemen, and Commons, when the Troopers came to their Houses, if they had not the Money, went presently and borrowed it, and gave it them: But this was not all, they must go to Edinburgh, and report their Discharge, and when there, satisfy the Troopers over and above. This was called Riding-money; and sometimes the Riding-money was as much as the Fine it self to the common Sort. No Excuse was sustained, but the taking the foresaid Oath, and the subscribing the Declaration before the Day prefixed in the Proclamation. This few complied with, as contrary to their Principles and Conscience: So that the uplifting of these Fines, as well as those for precise Nonconformity, was undoubtedly Persecution for Conscience Sake, as well as a most arbitrary and illegal Imposition in its own Nature. Some offered to abide a Trial at Law, as being free from all Acts of Rebellion, which, as we have heard, was the Pretext of the imposing the Fines, and to renounce all Benefit by the King's Indemnity. This seems indeed to be allowed in the Act of Parliament, but would not be received by the Soldiers; all must pay.

Such who pay them not are imprisoned.

Such who could neither entertain the Troopers, nor command the Money required of them by the Act of Fines, were straightway haled to Prison, where not a few lay a considerable Time at the King's Charges: And so great was the Poverty many were reduced to by such Measures, that the Troopers, when they met with a Beggar in their Way, would ask in a Jest, If he were fined.

Most Part of the Sums imposed by the Parliament were fully exacted; and for them I refer the Reader to the List given in the First Book. I find Discharges under Sir William Bruce's Hand, for the Payment of Six hundred Pounds by Alexander McTier Merchant in Stranrawer, and Patrick Kennedy late Provost there, yet remaining, of the Date of April 1666. And that the Reader may see their Form, I have insert a Copy of Sir William's Discharge to Walter Stuart in Linlithgow, a pious and good Gentleman, Father to the present Walter Stuart of Pardivin, from the Original, communicated to me by the last named worthy Gentleman.

Form of the Collector's Discharge to such as paid.

I Sir William Bruce of Balcaskie Knight, Clerk to the Bills, and by the King's special Warrant appointed his Majesty's Receiver of the Fines imposed by the Parliament assembled at Edinburgh the 9th Day of September, 1662 Years, grant me by thir Presents to have received from Walter Stuart in Linlithgow, the Sum of Six hundred Pounds Scots Money, and in complete Payment of the Second Half; and in full and complete Payment of his whole Fine laid on him by the said Parliament, and discharge him thereof: Consenting thir Presents, &c. In witness whereof I have subscribed thir Presents at Edinburgh the 5th Day of March, 1666. before thir Witnesses, &c.

The Fines applied to pay the Army.

Vast were the Sums exacted at this Time; and the Collector of the Parliamentary Fines, though formerly a Person of a broken Fortune, came to buy an Estate, and build a sumptuous House. Our Managers thought to have divided these Spoils among themselves, each Party, when in Power, looked on them as theirs; first Middleton and his Dependents, who imposed them, and then Lawderdale and his Party, who uplifted them: Nevertheless, both missed their Aim, and Bishop Sharp out-witted them both; and within a little, they were by the King's Orders applied to the Payment of the Army, we shall hear, was raised at his Instance.

The Archbishop goes to Court, and prevails to get a standing Army.

When Things are thus ripening very fast towards Confusions in the Country, the Primate posts up to Court, and must have his Hand in bringing Matters to an open Rupture. The High Commission was now dissolved, and in room of that, some other Method must be fallen upon to advance his odious Designs. No Way was now left, but that of Violence, which was not disagreeable to his haughty and proud Temper. Accordingly he proposeth a standing Army in Scotland, to bear down Presbyterians, and cut their Throats, when many of them were were now impoverished as much as was possible: At least he hoped, this would force them to Extremities, and then, under the Colour of Law, he would see his Desire upon them.

The King is prevailed upon to fall in with his Proposal, and gives Orders to levy an Army for guarding the Prelates, executing arbitrary Commands, and suppressing the Phanaticks. Thomas Dalziel of Bimms is made General, a Man naturally rude and fierce, who had this heightened by his Breeding and Service in Muscovy, where he had seen little but the utmost Tyranny and Slavery. William Drummond Brother to the Lord Madertie, a Person some more polite, and yet abundantly qualified for the Work in Hand, being many Years in the Muscovite Service with the former, was made Lieutenant-general. Two Regiments of Foot, and Six Troops of Horse are raised. The First is given to the General, the other to the Lord Newburgh; the Troops are bestowed on Duke Hamilton, Earls of Annandale, Airly, Kincardin, and others.

Those, with the Guards, and the Earl of Linlithgow's Regiment, made up about Three thousand Foot, and Eight Troops of Horse, a sufficient Number to serve the Prelates violent Designs. All were ordered to obey the General, without asking Questions: And this Army is to be maintained from the Fines collected, and to be collected, and the General is to count with the Exchequer for every Farthing of them. Thus the Scheme is laid above.

The War with the United Provinces continuing, as likewise with France and Denmark, upon the 8th of June the Council issue a Proclamation for a Fast; which, being much in the same Form we have already seen, I do not insert. It was penned by the Bishops, and has this remarkable Turn in it. 'We having great and eminent Experience of the Assistance of Almighty God, whose Protection and Favour, after keeping a solemn Day of Fasting and Humiliation, we have implored, and upon this great Occasion, finding that the renewing of the same may move Almighty God to continue his Favour.' Which some at that Time thought too great a Compliment paid to the last Fast, considering the Nature of the Victory obtained, as also to this, which was observed the Second Wednesday of July, in the South, and the Third Wednesday, in the North-side of the Water of Esk.

At that same Diet the Council are importuned by the Bishops, to do something further in order to corrupt the Youth. Accordingly I find this Act in their Books.

THE Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council considering, That before the Beginning of the late Troubles within this Kingdom, no Scholars were admitted to Colleges or Universities to receive Degrees, or the Name of the Master of Arts, till they first took the Oath of Allegiance, and that the Practice of that necessary Duty, hath not for many Years been in Observance; yet it may be of most dangerous Consequence, that any should be admitted to receive Degrees, whereby they may be fitted and qualified to serve in Church or State, except they be such as are content to give Evidence of their Loyalty: Wherefore the said Lords have discharged, and hereby do discharge all Masters, Regents, and Teachers in Universities and Colleges, to laureate, or admit to Degrees, any of their Scholars, till first they take the Oath of Allegiance: And recommend it to the Archbishops and Bishops to see this Act receive due Obedience within their respective Bounds.

Remarks have been made formerly upon Acts of this Nature; and I shall only now add, That I can find no Instances of this Oath's being imposed in Scotland, but when Prelacy was in the Church.

Unto this Incroachment upon Universities, I may add another upon the Royal Burghs. Upon the 13th of September, the Council send a Missive to the Town of Air, signifying, It is their Pleasure, That Provost Cunningham be continued this Year also, as he was, by their Orders, the last; and 'tis signified to the Town, that Obedience is expected. The Letter is signed St. Andrews, who now almost always presides in the Council.

The Royal Burghs have likewise a Letter sent to each of them, ordering them to send in to the Clerk of Council the Declaration appointed by Parliament, signed by all the Members of their Town-council and Magistrates, since the last Returns were made: And Letters of the same Nature are writ to the Sheriffs and Justices of the Peace in each Shire.

A Letter is sent down from the King to the Council, dated October 1st, no question procured by Bishop Sharp, if not formed by him. It deserves a Room here, and it is as follows.

Right Trusty, &c.

WE Greet you well. Upon Complaint made to Us of the great Disorders in the Church, and of the insolent keeping of unlawful Conventicles in that Our Kingdom; after Advice from these to whom We thought fit to refer the Consideration of these growing Evils, and fitting Remedies to them, We think now it necessary to require you, Incroachments made on the Royal Burghs.

Letter from the King, and Proclamation for procuring Obedience to Ecclesiastical Authority, Oct. 11.

‘to take special Care that the Laws and Acts of State be vigorously prosecuted against all Contraveners, and with greatest Severity against those who are known to be most pernicious Adversaries to the Peace of the Church. As also, That by Act of Council you enjoyn, That all Heritors and Landlords be obliged, and made answerable for their Tenants and Servants living orderly, and not withdrawing from Ordinances, and not keeping Conventicles; and that for that end, they be impowered and required to remove them, if Need be, and that a Remedy may be provided where they have Tacks, or are Rentallers; and Magistrates of Burghs to be answerable for their Inhabitants, who reside within their respective Liberties for the Space of Six Months and upwards. So expecting an Account of this from you, We bid you heartily farewell.’ Whitehall, October 1st, 1665.

LAWDERDALE.

Upon this is bottomed the rigorous Proclamation published the 11th of the same Month, entituled, Proclamation for procuring Obedience to Ecclesiastical Authority, which I have inserted, App. No. 3. as being unreasonable in the statutory Part of it, and what was a Pattern for most Part of their Acts and Proclamations afterwards, and a great Foundation of violent Persecution; yea, it was so far beyond the Council’s Power, that afterwards it was found needful, ex post facto, to confirm it by a Parliamentary Authority.

App. No. 3.

Remarks upon it.

In the Narrative it is alledged, The Parliament, by their Act against Separation, give the Council Power to do all in this Proclamation; but it will be evident, by a Comparison of the Two, the Council go beyond the Power committed to them. All Masters are charged to see that their Servants give Obedience to all Acts anent Conformity, and keep none in their Service but such as do so: All Heritors, &c. are to see to their Tenants Conformity, and their abstaining from Conventicles, and cause them give Bond for this Effect; and in case of Refusal, raise Letters of Horning against them, and the Escheats thereby falling into the King’s Hand, are given to the Heritors; and if the Tenants who refuse be moveable, that they be ejected, and no new Tacks be given, without Security for Conformity. Magistrates of Burghs are to take the same Method with Inhabitants; and, in case of Contravention, Masters, Heritors, and Magistrates are made liable to all the Penalties of the Contraveners. The unreasonable Hardships in all this need not be exposed; ’tis an excellent Footing for a standing Army to act upon.

Convention of Estates called to support the Army.

Besides the Fines which were anticipated for other Uses, and pretty much pocketed before they came to the General’s Hands, it was found necessary new Burdens should be laid upon the Country for the Support of the Army, in executing this and the former severe Acts obliging to Conformity: And so I find, November 8th this Year, a Proclamation issued out for calling a Convention of Estates, to raise Money for maintaining the Soldiers in the Defence of the Kingdom. Their Sitting was, for some Time, prevented by the Confusions which just now fell in.

All this paves the way for the Ruling.

By all these Impositions, Incroachments, and terrible Exactions, the Spirits of many came to be embittered, and the common People turned almost desperate. They had been imposed upon dreadfully as to their religious Concerns; and the Civil Government now joyn Issue with the Bishops and their Underlings. Scotsmen have ever been impatient under Tyranny, and the Wonder is not great, that after so much Patience, less than they were under did drive them to Extremities. The common People, being glad of any Thing that looked like a present Respite, are soon moved to undertake, though many Times their Undertakings are as much unconstant as they are ill concerted.

However, they wanted not Provocation at this Time: As the religious Rights of the Church are overturned, so the Civil Liberties of Scotland are like to be well looked to by a standing Army in Time of Peace! and the best Part of the Kingdom oppressed, in order to maintain it. Our Reformation is broke in upon, and Liberty and Property taken away. The more knowing and prudent were silent in this evil Time, and yet under the greatest Fears and Apprehensions what would be the End of those Things. The common People were disposed to take any probable Course to get from under their sad Burdens; and yet all this Year, Things went on very smoothly till November, when fortuitously, and without any Concert, the Gathering of the oppressed Country began, which made so great a Noise, and afterwards proved a Handle of heightning their Miseries. The Account of this I come to give in the next Section.

ordinary Proclamation; and whether it was afterwards improven by the Primate, for justifying his Severities on the Persons who were taken Prisoners, I know not: But Sir George Mackenzie would from this palliate the Execution of those good Men, after Quarter given by those who took them. But the Terms given posterior to this Proclamation, by such who had the King's Power lodged with them, fairly remove any Thing that could be in this Deed of the Council: And if the Proclamation was emitted with Designs to be a Cover to such a Villany, it was not unlike the Temper and Cunning of him who was now at the Head of the Council.

The same Day they pass another Act, inserted App. No. 6. To put the Country in a Posture of Defence, and require all the King's Subjects to assist the General with all their Power. This was of some more Influence, and made many joyn the General, and some against their Light and Conscience; The Fear of Man causeth a Snare. And further, they discharge all Passage at the Six Ferries between Leith and Stirling, and order all Persons who pass Stirling Bridge to be narrowly examined. This was to prevent some Persons from Fife and the North, who were under sore Burdens, and ready to have joyned the People in the South.

Council's Act that same Day for Defence of the Country. App No. 6.

Next Day, the 22^d, the Council order all suspect Persons to be seized, and examined; and write to the General, acquainting him with what they had done, and desiring his Advice as to any Thing yet necessary to be done.

All suspect Persons ordered to be seized.

To return to the People who rose at this Time; after they had seized Sir James Turner, and were now determined to defend themselves, some were sent into Edinburgh, to see what Assistance they might expect thence; and I suppose Mr. Alexander Robertson, a Preacher, a zealous and resolute Man, was consulted, and his Son one of the Messengers: At least I find, it was in his Chamber a considerable Number of Ministers, Gentlemen, and others met that Night the Accounts came from Dumfries, to consider how far it was their Duty to joyn those now risen. Reasonings pro and con were so protracted, that no Resolution was come to the first Night. To Morrow at Seven of the Clock, they again met at Mr. Robertson's Chamber. When the Question was resumed, it was generally thought to be very hard to lie still, and do nothing at such a Juncture, when so fair a Door was opening; and they could not think of seeing their fellow Countrymen oppressed and born down for their Religion and Liberty, and in so much Hazard, without helping them, especially when all Methods of regular and orderly Application to the Government, were stopt and precluded. I hear Ferguson of Kaitloch, afterwards a very great Sufferer in his Person and Family, was at this Time unclear as to Rising in Arms: But the rest of the Meeting, generally speaking, were very clear to assist these People for recovering their Liberty; such as Colonel James Wallace, Mr. John Welsh, the said Mr. Robertson, and others.

The People who had taken Arms send some of their Number to Edinburgh, where, after Consultation, several Friends resolve to joyn them.

It would be tedious to go through all the Essays made up and down, to get Assistance to the People in Galloway. Colonel Wallace resolves immediately to go Westward; he was assured Forty well mounted Men and Horse would joyn him in the Parish of Libbertown, but they sunk to Seven or Eight. Indeed it was no Wonder People were not so very forward to joyn in this Undertaking, so suddenly entred into without any general Concert; especially if we consider, that the Spirits of People were sunk, generally speaking, under heavy and rigorous Vexations and Burdens.

Colonel Wallace goes West, and meets with few to go with him. The Reason of People's Backwardness.

With those the Colonel made the best of his Way to Lintoun, and from thence ordered off Mr. Robertson towards Leismahago, to dispose People to joyn with him when he came thither; but he met with small Encouragement. Thereabouts the Colonel came with his Men, and rested upon the Sabbath. Next Day they had Notice that William Lockhart of Wicketshaw, with a Party of Carlouck Men, and some others, were marched Westward to the main Army, and so they followed them. In the Road the Colonel called at Captain Robert Lockhart's House, expecting Mr. Alexander Robertson there, according to Appointment, but the Captain and he were gone forward. When they came to Evandale, they had the first Accounts of the Laird of Blackwood's desiring to meet with the Colonel, and to understand his Design and Motions. The Colonel being uncertain of his Character, did not wait, but went Westward; and in their Way to Mauchlin, he overtook Captain Arnot, Brother to the Laird of Lochbridge, and a few Men with him. They lodged all together at Mauchlin, on the Tuesday's Night.

Wicketshaw and some Carlouck People,

Captain Robert Lockhart,

and Captain Arnot go to the Army.

When there, they are informed their Friends were all gone forward to Air, and thither they resolve to go. Their Hopes were here mightily disappointed; they expected to have found all that Country in Arms for Religion and Liberty, but very few were stirring. They reckoned much upon Major General Montgomery, who had been harshly enough treated by the Government, and the Laird Gadgirth; but find they were both at Eglintoun House waiting upon General Dalziel. Several Ministers, they were made to hope would joyn them, were living quietly in their Families. This very much offended the Colonel and his Friends, and discouraged them, when they found many whom they judged Friends, as they reckoned the most Part of that Country, standing by unconcerned. Mean while, their Friends were likewise grieved and mourning for their Undertaking, looking upon it as very sudden, unad-

Many whom they expected to joyn, do not, particularly Major General Montgomery and Gadgirth.

Such was the Beginning of this Insurrection, an occasional Tumult upon a sudden Fray never thought of till it began. I am told, the Person who seized Sir James, was Andrew Gray Merchant in Edinburgh, accidentally in the Country at this Time about his Business: He left them very soon, as did many others; yet so many of them kept together with Sir James their Prisoner, as were the Beginnings of the little Army which was a gathering. Galloway had suffered most, and the Oppression there was the Beginning of the Quarrel; yet, while they continued there, their Numbers were very small, not exceeding Three hundred Men. Indeed divers worthy Gentlemen and Heritors joyned them.

By the Council-records I find, that upon November 16th, appeared before them at Edinburgh, Steven Irvine Bailie of Dumfries, and gave Information of 'an Insurrection by a considerable Number of armed Men; and declared he saw — Neilson of Corsack, Mr. Lellan of Barscob, Mr. Alexander Robertson a Minister's Son, ——— McCartney of Blaiket, and James Callum Glover in Dumfries.'

This surprizing Account put the Bishops, and Managers at Edinburgh, into a terrible Fright; and an Express is sent up to Court in all Haste. The Commissioner Rothes took Journey to London, to receive his Instructions with relation to the Convention lately indicted to meet at Edinburgh, a Day or Two before the Countrymens Attempt at Dalry. The Council's flying Packet reached the King before him. When the Earl had waited upon the King, and received from his Majesty the Account of what the Council termed a most horrid Conspiracy, he was perfectly stunned, and could scarce credit it.

Joynly with this Express to Court, the Council write Letters to the Earls of Annandale, Galloway, Kilmarnock, Glencairn, Cassils, and Lothian, the Lords Drumlanerk, and Newbattle, and Sir Gilbert Eliot, 'signifying, That upon an Information of a Rising in Arms, in or near the Places they were concerned in, they were to order the King's Forces to march towards the Rising; and in the mean time they expect they will do all they can to maintain the Peace, and concur with, and support the Forces, when they come.' Signed, St. Andrews.

Next Day, the Council meet again, and order General Dalziel, with as many of the Forces as he can, to march to Glasgow, and from thence to the Place at which he shall hear the Insurrection is come to any Head. And mean while, the Guards of the Town of Edinburgh are doubled, and the Names of all the Lodgers are ordered to be immediately given up. Likewise they write a Letter to the Commissioner, giving an Account of the Rebellion. I have inserted it from the Registers, App. N^o. 4.

The better yet to secure the Metropolis, upon the 19th of November, the Council make this Act. 'Considering the Necessity of securing the Town of Edinburgh, from all Attempts of rebellious Persons, ordain the Magistrates of Edinburgh, Canongate, and Leith, and other Places within their Liberties, to cause the Officers of the several Companies inroll all the Soldiers under their Command, and all of them, Officers and Soldiers, to give their Oath to be true and faithful to the King, and that they shall defend his Authority, and maintain the same against this Insurrection and Rebellion, and all others, to the Hazard of their Lives and Fortunes: And if any refuse, that they be presently disarmed, their Persons secured, and the Council acquainted with their Names.'

And as to the Country round the Place where the Rising was, the Council again write to the Earl of Annandale, Lord Drumlanerk, and several others, 'impowering them to convocate their Followers, and with them to preserve the Peace of the Country, and to attack the Rebels.' Likewise, upon the other Side, they send Letters to Fife, directed to the Earl of Weems, Lords Newark, Melvil, and Burleigh, 'to come in with their Friends and Followers, with Horses and Arms, to defend the Town of Edinburgh, that so the King's Authority may be defended from rebellious and disaffected Persons now in Arms.' Signed, St. Andrews. In the Commissioner's Absence it fell to the Primate to preside in Council; and being now a Time of War, several of the Lords grumbled very much, and spared not to say openly with Oaths, Have we none in Scotland to give Orders at such a juncture, but a Priest?

Upon the 21st, they issue forth a Proclamation against the Rebels in Arms in the West. It is inserted App. N^o. 5. and order the General to publish it, and see that it be executed with all Care.

This Proclamation contains no Promise of Indemnity in it, upon laying down of Arms, nor any Encouragement to People to do so; as is usual in such Cases. Whether this proceeded from Haste, or from the cruel Disposition and Designs of their President, I am not to determine: But 'tis evident enough, this was upon the Matter to command the People to come to the Scaffold, and to require them to submit to the Severities of the Prelates, who were the Fountain of all their Miseries, and to subject to the Cruelty of the Army, whom they had affronted: And such a Proclamation could have little other Effect, but to embolden the poor Men, and let them see they must either go through what they had begun, or die.

Twenty four Hours after the Date of the Proclamation are only allowed to them to submit, which was too short a Time for its reaching Galloway; and I think the Country-people were scarce come to Air Shire as yet. It is not improbable there were Views in this extraordinary encouraged them to this Enterprize, and promised Assistance should fail, they could not help it; they were in the Way of their Duty. And as for themselves, if their Design misgave, they could say, It was in their Heart to build a House to the Lord, and to act for the Glory of God, and the Cause of Religion and Liberty, and were not unwilling to die Sacrifices for these; yea, they reckoned a Testimony for the Lord, and their Country, was a sufficient Reward for all their Labour and Loss. Thus the Proposal was laid aside, though it came from Persons who were heartily Friends to their Cause and Designs.

The Council of War had other Two Questions before them: One was anent the renewing the Covenants these Lands y under, as soon as possible. Unto this all went in most unanimously: All of them, generally speaking, had taken them before, with Knowledge and Relection; and this Work was now burried, and scandalously treated. Indeed they could have wished for more Time to prepare for that solemn Work, and more Persons of all Ranks to joyn in it; but now they had not their Choice, and behoved to do Things as they best could, and not still as they desired. And hereby they inclined to give a Proof to the World, that their Cause and Principles were the very same with those of the Church of Scotland, before her Liberties were wrested out of her Hand: And they knew no better Preparation for Death, if called to it, than a solemn Resignation and Dedication of themselves to the Lord.

The other Matter under their Consideration they were not altogether so harmonious in; What to do with Sir James Turner? whom they still carried about with them since they left Dumfries, being Masters of no Prison to put him in. Some were for putting him to Death, as being notoriously guilty of Murder, and a bitter and bloody Instrument of Persecution: But the most Part were peremptorily against this. Those acknowledged Sir James had been a grievous Oppressor, and the Occasion of the Death of many; but then they would have it considered he was a Soldier of Fortune, and had his Commission for any Thing he did. Yea, I am told, That Sir James produced Letters from the Bishops and others, with his secret Instructions and Orders for a great deal more than he had done; and that he really appeared to have been pretty moderate even in his Severities, when his Actions were compared with his Orders which he produced, and repeated Letters from the Prelates. Whatever he in this, moderate Measures prevailed; he was spared, and carried forward with them.

Sabbath Morning they marched to Lanerk, through Leshnabago. In the Way, Knockbreck's Two Sons, with some few from Galloway, overtook them, and signified, No more were to be expected from the South. At Night they came to Lanerk, and set their Guards and Watch, and ordered their Men the best Way they might, and appointed Officers, of which they were very scarce, to every Company. This Night it was intimate to the People of Lanerk, that they designed to renew the Covenant in that Place to Morrow. It might have been expected this would have engaged the People thereabouts to joyn them; but such a Terror at this Time was upon the Spirits of the Country, that few or none of their best Friends durst or would appear.

To Morrow Morning they were alarmed with the Accounts, that General Dalziel was within a few Miles of them: Upon which some were for delaying the Renewal of the Covenants, but they were overruled; and so, after they had sent out their Scouts, and set Watches, the Work was begun. They could not easily, with the Townsmen, and Country about, be all in one Place, and so they divided into Two Companies. The Foot gathered together upon the high Street of Lanerk, and Mr. John Guthrie Minister at Tarbolton preached unto them. There is an incorrect Sermon of his printed, upon Breach of Covenant: The Title of it bears, It was preached in the 1663. Whether it may not be some Notes of the Sermon at Lanerk, as some conjecture, I know not. After Sermon he read the Covenants unto them, to which, with uplifted Hands at every Article, they engaged, with much Affection and Concern. The Horsemen met at the Head of the Town, and Mr. Gabriel Semple and Mr. John Crookshanks preached. In his Sermon Mr. Semple cited, and at some Length applied Prov. 24. 11, 12. If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto Death, and those that are ready to be slain; if thou sayst, Behold, we knew it not; doth not he that pondereth the Heart, consider it? and he that keepeth thy Soul, doth not he know it? and shall not he render unto every Man according to his Works? When he was insisting upon these Words, the Hearers were mightily affected, and several did afterward joyn the Army. After Sermons the Covenants were read and sworn, as above.

At this Time, as I suppose, the principal Persons among them drew up, and agreed to a short Manifesto, and Declaration for present Use, with a View to draw up a fuller and larger one afterwards. A Copy of this Paper lies before me; but, wanting a Date, I cannot be positive when it was drawn up: And it being but short, I shall here insert it.

vised, and unconcerted; and fearing, that in the Issue it might prove unsuccessful and hurtful.

However, the Colonel and his Men march on to Air, and find the Body of the Forces come from Galloway, and such who had joyned them since, rendezvousing near the Bridge of Dun; and when he is going towards them, a Messenger comes from Cunningham, with Accounts, bearing, that a considerable Body of Men were ready there to join them, if they had one to gather and head them. Whereupon he sent off Captain Arnot with Forty Horse, to encourage and bring them up; and he himself, with the rest, joyned the general Rendezvous.

Upon the Wednesday, there they had certain Accounts, that Dalziel and his Army lay at Glasgow, and so they resolved to Morrow to march to the Parish of Ochiltree, and have another general Rendezvous there, where Mr. John Guthrie Minister at Tarbolton came to them, with some Men from that Parish. When they were all come to the Place of Meeting, Mr. Gabriel Semple preached to them. And here they first modelled themselves into an Army, choosing their Officers, and disposing their Men to the best Advantage, and placing their Guards.

At Ochiltree they convene their first Council of War, and, after Application to God by Prayer, and reasoning upon their present Circumstances, it was resolved, That since they could expect little more Assistance from the South or West, except Captain Arnot's Company, that they should march Eastward to Edinburgh, especially since they were apprehensive the Enemy might attack them, if they continued much longer there, and that before they had got all the Assistance they expected.

So they marched Eastward upon the Friday to Cumnock, and there got the Accounts that one of their Friends John Ross, and a few Men with him coming to them, were intercepted and broken by Duke Hamilton's Troop, and that the Enemy was approaching them; and indeed the Council were not wanting in raising the Country, as well as sending the Army upon them.

Accordingly, I find one Act in their Register, November 23^d, Act anent the Shires of Renfrew, Lanerk, and Air. Its Tenor is, 'Forasmuch as the Insurrection at Dumfries and the western Shires, is grown to an open Rebellion, and the Number of desperate Rebels increaseth, these are to order out all fencible Men in Renfrew, Air, and Lanerk Shires; and all who are absent from the general Rendezvous are to be noticed, and apprehended.' The same Day Rendezvous are appointed in Midlothian, Eastlothian, and Teviotdale: And Colonel Hurry, and Major Thomson, with the Forces under their Command, are appointed to keep Guard in the Canongate.

Upon these Advices, the little Army marched from Cumnock that Evening, forward to the Muir-kirk of Kyle, in a most dreadful Rain, and through a long Muir miserably deep. They reached not their Quarters till Two Hours within Night. Great were the Hardships they came through, they were generally as wet as they had been dragged through a River: And wet as they were, their Foot behoved to lodge in the Church, without any Meat that Night, and little Fire to dry them.

Here Mr. Andrew McCormock, an Irish Minister of great Piety, commonly called the Good-man, came to Colonel Wallace, now chosen Commander in Chief, and acquainted him, It was the Opinion of Mr. Alexander Robertson, and Captain Lockhart, who it seems had been very unsuccessful in their Endeavours for Assistances to the Colonel, hat this Rising should be followed no further, but the People dismissed in the fairest Way that might be. The Proposal was communicated to Mr. Gabriel Semple, a Minister of very great Authority among them, and urged with all Earnestness. Nothing could be concerted that Night, and to Morrow, being Saturday, they marched to Douglas, and towards Lanerk. By the Way Captain Arnot, with his Cunningham Supply, came up with them. Two hundred had been promised, but they scarce amounted to Forty.

At Douglas, after they had set their Guards and Watch, they called a Council of War, anent the Proposal made by Mr. McCormock. After Prayer to the Lord for Direction in that Matter of great Importance, the Question was stated, Whether they should scatter, or continue in Arms? The Reasons offered for giving up this Enterprize, from the Strength of the Enemy, the Smallness of their Numbers, the Dispiritedness of the Country, and the present Unfitness of the Season for Action, were all considered; the Opinion of the Ministers they had with them was heard, and then the Officers gave theirs.

All of them, after Reasoning, agreed, That they had a clear providential Call to this Undertaking, and that they could not quit it till they had as plain a Warrant to desist, as they had to gather together. They were conscious to themselves, nothing was in their View, but the freeing themselves and their Country from the horrible Oppression they groined under, and to lay their Grievances before the Government, and humbly to crave Redress, which they had Access to do no other Way but in Arms.

They perswaded themselves, the Lord could work by few as well as by many, and hoped they were a Handful of Men in whom the Lord would concern himself; and if such as had encouraged

Mean while, all the Country was in Motion; every Sheriff mustered the Heritors and sensible Men, and all appeared ready to suppress this open Rebellion, as it was termed. Reports and Lies were spread to alarm the Country, and stir them up against the People now in Arms. It was pretended, Forty Ships with an Army from Holland, were landed at Dumbar to assist the Whiggs. Such senseless Stories were coined to render this small Handful odious to the Country, and especially to England, who at present were in War with the Dutch. However, as our Proverb runs, After Word comes Ward; the first Assistance ever this contending Party for our Religion and Liberty got, and their first Relief was from Holland, some Twenty two Years after this.

Let me now take a further View of the Council's Procedure at Edinburgh. Upon the 26th of November, they order some suspected Persons in Teviotdale to be secured; their Names are not in the Registers. Ten Pounds Sterling is ordered out of the Exchequer, for paying of Horses to be sent out Morning and Evening to get Intelligence. The Arms in the Castle of Edinburgh are put in Order, and some of them sent to Stirling. Cannon are brought down from the Castle, and fixed at the Gates of the Town. The Gates are ordered to be shut, and none permitted to come in or go out, but such as had a Pass; for which end, Guards are set at every Gate. No Horses are permitted to go off the Town; and Orders are issued out, that a great many Lances and Pole-axes be immediately made, for the Use of the Government, at Culross, Dumfermling, and other Places.

November 27th, a Letter, from the King to the Council, comes, approving their Diligence in what they had done, and promising further Instructions very quickly with the Communion, and suspending the putting in Execution an Order lately sent from Court, for taking and subscribing the Declaration; of which I know no further than what is expressed in the Letter, which I have added, App. N^o. 7. But it would seem the Court began to be sensible, that the violent Obtrusion of the Declaration, and other Impositions, had exasperated the Spirits of the Country, and put them upon rising in Arms; and were willing to desist from these, at least at this present Juncture.

The same Day the Council write a Letter to the Earl of Roths at London, signifying, 'That the Rebels are advancing to Edinburgh, and some of them come near Torphichen, and their whole Body not far off; that they are determined to maintain the Town. Their Numbers are said to be about Three thousand; their Commanders are Colonel Wallace, Colonel Gray, Major Lermont, and some others of no great Note; That by their last Letters from General Dalziel, they find the Rebels shun an Engagement; That the General thought to have attacked them in Mauchlin-muir, but they marched Eastward to Douglas Castle, near which they continued upon Sunday; That Yesterday they were at Lanerk, and the General was following them hard.' But they take no Notice of the King's Letter, which this Day they receive, and is recorded before theirs to him, being unwilling as yet to suspend the Declaration.

That same Day the College of Justice formed themselves into a Company, for Defence of the Town, and had Arms distributed to them out of the Castle; and for the further Security of the Metropolis, the Heritors of the Merse, Teviotdale, Tweddale, and the Forest of Eterick were called in.

Munday after Noon, Dalziel with his Army came up to Lanerk; ere Colonel Wallace and his Men left it, they were within View of Stone-byres. Now the poor Countrymen had little Time to deliberate: To march Eastward, looked like a plain Flight, the General following close upon their Reer; yet, chiefly upon the Suggestions of some of the common Soldiers among them, that West-lothian would joyn them, and some Hopes that the City of Edinburgh would receive them, they resolve to go Eastward, and to be at Bathgate that Night. A worse Step perhaps could scarce have been taken by them; this being plainly to run into a Net betwixt Two Armies, and on the Sword-point. No Friends were at Bathgate to meet them; Edinburgh was all up against them, and Sir Andrew Ramsay the Provost is mighty active, and scarce an Advocate but is armed Cap-a-pee, and every Thing there is secured. It is a fatal Thing in such Circumstances to lean to false Intelligence; thereupon groundless Hopes are entertained, and unhappy Measures run into.

That Night they came to Bathgate, through almost an unpassable Muir, and one of the worst Ways in Scotland. The Night was extremely dark, and they reached not Bathgate till Two Hours after Day-light was gone, neither was there any Accommodation to be had there for Men wet and weary, and almost spent with Fatigue. About Eleven at Night they had an Alarm of the Approach of the Enemy, and at Midnight were obliged to begin their March towards the New-bridge. When they came that length in the Morning, they looked rather like dying Men than Soldiers going to a Battle. It would have almost made their very Enemies themselves to relent, to have seen so many weary, faint, half-drowned, half-starved Men, twixt Enemies behind, and Enemies before.

It was reckoned, they lost that Night near Half of their small Army; and truly, considering the Way, Season, and Weather, it was a Wonder the Half of them got through: Yet, after all, they still entertained some Hopes from their Friends in the good Town; and so resolve

‘ since the Rise and Scope of Actions, if faulty, may render a Thing right upon the Matter, sinful.’

‘ It is known to all, That the King’s Majesty, at his Coronation, did engage to rule the Nation according to the revealed Will of God in Scripture; to prosecute the Ends of National and Solemn League and Covenants; and fully to establish Presbyterian Government, with the Directory for Worship; and to approve all Acts of Parliament establishing the same; and thereupon the Nobility, and others of his Subjects, did swear Allegiance; and so Religion was committed unto him as a Matter of Trust, secured by most solemn Indenture betwixt him and his People.’

‘ Notwithstanding all this, it is soon ordered that the Covenant be burnt, the Tie of it is declared void and null, and Men forced to subscribe a Declaration contrary to it; Episcopal Government, in its Height of Tyranny, is established; and Men obliged by Law, not to plead, witness, or petition against those Things: Grievous Fines, sudden Imprisonments, vast Quarterings of Soldiers, and a cruel Inquisition by the High-commission Court, were the Reward of all such who could not comply with the Government by lordly Hierarchy, and abjure their Covenant, and prove more monstrous to the Waiting their Conscience, than Nature would have suffered Heathens to be. Those Things, in part, have been all Scotland over, but chiefly in the poor Country of Galloway at this Day; and, had not God prevented, it should have, in the same Measures, undoubtedly befallen the rest of the Nation ere long.’

‘ The just Sense whereof made us choose rather to betake ourselves to the Fields for Self-defence, than to stay at Home burdened daily with the Calamities of others, and tortured with the Fears of our own approaching Misery. And considering our Engagement to assist and defend all those who entered into this League and Covenant with us; and to the end we may be more vigorous in the Prosecution of this Matter, and all Men may know the true State of our Cause, we have entered into the Solemn League and Covenant, and, though it be hardly thought of, renewed the same, to the end we may be free of the Apostacy of our Times, and saved from the cruel Usages Persons resolved to adhere to this have met with; hoping, that this will wipe off the Reproach that is upon our Nation, because of the avowed Perjury it lies under. And being fully perswaded, that this League, however misrepresented, contains nothing in it sinful before God, derogatory to the King’s just Authority, the Privileges of the Parliament, or Liberty of the People: But, on the contrary, is the surest Bond whereby all these are secured, since a threefold Cord is not easily broken, as we shall make appear in our next and larger Declaration, which shall contain more fully the Proofs of the Lawfulness of entering into Covenant, and Necessity of our taking Arms at this Time for the Defence of it, with a full and true Account of our Grief and Sorrow for our swerving from it, and suffering ourselves to be divided, to the Reproach of our common Cause, and sadning the Hearts of the Godly; a Thing we sorrowfully remember, and firmly resolve against in all Time coming.’

Observations upon it.

It is evident this Paper was drawn in Haste, and in the Midst of other manifold Confusions, and yet it contains a very plain and short Stating of their Cause, and a fair Owing of the King’s Authority. The larger Declaration which they promise, I have not seen, and question much if they got it perfected before their Defeat at Pentland.

At Lanerk their Numbers were largest, about Three thousand, and probably it would have been their Interest to have engaged the King’s Army here.

It was at Lanerk this rolling Snow-ball was at the biggest, all their Additions they could expect from the South and West being come up to them. Here their Number was judged to be near Three thousand, but indeed a Company of raw undisciplined Men, neither tolerably armed, nor in any Order. It was the Opinion of many, That if they were to engage with the regular Troops, it had been best to have done it here, since after this they melted away very sensibly; and, upon a Supposition of their Defeat, it would have been much their Advantage to have met with it here, where the Country was their Friends. Indeed further East they had very few, and this the Handful who remained felt afterwards. About this Time Major Kilgour, and Mr. John Scot Minister of Harwick, came from the East to have joined them; but, when they observed their Want of Order and Discipline, they quickly left them.

The Laird of Blackwood makes some Proposals to them at Lanerk, which were not much regarded.

While they were at Lanerk, William Lawrie of Blackwood came up to them. They hoped he was to have joined them, but he undeceived them, and signified he was come from Duke Hamilton to commune with them, and to know what they desired, and to prevail with them, if possible, to lay down their Arms. Whether this Message was real, or only designed for their Trial, I know not; but the Gentleman produced no Documents of any Proposals from the Duke, and he took not the Way to do Business, never applying himself to Colonel Wallace, or any of the Officers of the Army, but spoke only a little to Mr. Gabriel Semple, and quickly withdrew. The Council of War did not take this well, and afterwards wished they had made him Prisoner, since this Method he took, looked as if he had come to get Information of their Power and Numbers.

intreat them to lay down their Arms in Hopes of an Indemnity, which the Duke promised to endeavour to procure. This Gentleman concurred very earnestly with the Duke's Proposal. The Colonel, and these with him, did not think they were out of their Duty, and were much set upon presenting the Grievances they and the Country lay under, in order to have them redressed; and nothing of this being in the Overture made, they could not fall in with it, and dismissed Blackwood, signifying they hoped for other Things from him; and came to their next Stage at Collingtoun.

When it was too late, there they found, that none of their Friends in Edinburgh, or the East-country, would stir: Many were hearty Welwishers to them, but few had Clearness to take up Arms in such Circumstances; and those who had, found all the Avenues stoppt, and could not possibly appear.

Here both their Hopes and Counsels were at an End. When at this Pass, Blackwood comes a Third Time, and with him the Laird of Barskimming, to renew the former Proposal, withal signifying he had obtained the General's Word of Honour, for a Cessation of Arms till next Morning, and that he had undertaken as much for them.

Finding themselves now very much disappointed, and in a very ill taking, at length they condescend in their Council of War, to name a Commissioner to go back with Blackwood to the General, and treat with him in their Name. Their Commissioner being outlawed, Blackwood and the other gave it them as their Opinion, that the Gentleman proposed would not be acceptable; therefore they conclude to write to the General, by the Two come from him. The Letter was drawn, and signed by Colonel Wallace. I have not been able to come by a Copy of it, but am told it contained a Representation in short of their sad Oppression and heavy Grievances, a Declaration of their Design to apply to the Council for Redress, and their Desire of a Pais for one of their Number, that might represent their Grievances and Desires more fully. They concluded with a Request, that Blackwood might return to them with the General's Answer, as soon as might be.

Instead of this, Dalziel, upon receiving of their Letter, dispatches Blackwood in all Haste to Edinburgh, to lay the Letter before the Council, and writes with him his own Sentiments, and an Account of his present Circumstances. How this was received at Edinburgh, I have no further Accounts than the following Letter to the General, which I find in the Council-books, dated this Day. It appears to be writ after the Accounts of a begun Action, between the General and Colonel Wallace were reached Edinburgh: And I insert it here.

Right Honourable,

THE Letter dated at Killeith this Day, from the Earl of Newburgh, bearing the Letter sent from one Wallace to your Excellency, was read in Council, and the Proposals made in that Letter considered, wherewith they are no ways satisfied. And because they seem to ground themselves upon the Proclamation, they have sent one of the printed Copies, whereby it will appear there is no such Thing held forth, as they pretend unto: And all they can expect from it, is, That if they should lay down their Arms, and come in to your Excellency within the Time appointed, they might petition for Mercy. We are glad to hear your Excellency hath now engaged the Rebels, we hope in a short Time to have an Account of them, which shall be welcome News to November 28th, 1666.

Your humble Servant

St. Andrews I. P. D. C.

Whether the General, by sending this Letter to the Council, had any View of Favour to the Country-people, I shall not determine: But it would appear all was Trick and Amusement, till he should come up with the Colonel and his Men, since no Return was made to them, as they desired, nor the least Hint given them, of the sending their Letter to the Council; and so, notwithstanding of all the Assurances given of a Cessation of Arms, he marches his Army straight toward them.

Colonel Wallace and his Men, notwithstanding of this imperfect Sort of Treaty, resolve on the best Retreat they can, for their own Safety, and Sustenance in the mean Time; and turning by the East-end of Pentland Hills, they resolve on the Way to Biggar. From Collingtoun they march to the House in the Muir; and from thence to the fatal Spot called the Rullion Green, where they draw up the dispirited Remains of an Army, not exceeding Nine hundred weary spent Men. The Reason of their forming themselves there, was not any View of a Battle, for they were still in some Hope of a peaceable Conclusion, from Blackwood's Negotiation; but merely to review the State of their poor Companies, and to prevent straggling.

The Order Wallace put his Men in, was this: Upon the Back-side of a long Hill running South and North, he divided his Men into Three Bodies. Upon the South of the Hill there was a low Shoulder, upon the North a high and steep Shoulder. Upon the low Shoulder comes again with Proposals from Duke Hamilton, which are rejected. With the Reasons of this

At Collingtoun none of them findeth reason in them, and why.

A Third Proposal to them, with an Offer of a Cessation of Arms from the General, till next Day: Which is accepted, and Col. ncl Wallace writes to the General, and desires a Pais for some of their Number.

The General dispatches their Letter to the Council.

Their Return to the General

solve to march to Collingtoun, within Three Miles of it; though they should have known there was an Army at Edinburgh, and the General with his Army by this Time was come to Calders, within Five Miles of them. Mean while, all Gentlemen and others who have Horses in Edinburgh, are by the Council ordered to mount them, and march out, under the Command of the Marquis of Montrose, to joyn the General.

Mr. John Guthrie is extremely ill of the Gravel and is carried off.

At Bathgate, the 27th, or early on this Day the 28th, Mr. John Guthrie fell into a most violent Fit of the Gravel, to the greatest Extremity a Man could be in, no doubt occasioned by the Cold, and ill Accommodation he had got these Days bypast, and was carried off at the Desire of all present; and so he was not at the Engagement.

The Lairds of Caldwell, Kersland and Ralston and others, design to joyn Colonel Wallace, but are hindered.

This Day or Munday, a few Gentlemen in Renfrew Shire, and their Neighbours, had gathered together a small Company of Horsemen, some call them about Fifty, with a Design to joyn Colonel Wallace: But when they were gathering, and a little Way upon their Road, Information was given them, that Dalziel was betwixt them and their Friends; and upon this they saw good to retire, and dismiss. The Captain of this little Troop was William Muir of Caldwell, and with him were Robert Ker of Kersland, Caldwell of that Ilk, the Laird of Ralston, John Cunningham of Bedland, William Porterfield of Quarreltoun, Alexander Porterfield his Brother, with some others. They had with them Mr. Gabriel Maxwell Minister at Dundonald, Mr. George Ramsay Minister at Kilmarwers, and Mr. John Carstairs Minister at Glasgow. The last, I am told, came with them much against his Inclination, and engaged only to obtemperate the Importunity of his Friends, and not till he had reasoned, as far as was proper, against the Project, and very much dissuaded from it.

The Laird of Blackstoun at that Meeting, but afterwards a Witness against the rest.

The Laird of Blackstoun, in the Shire of Renfrew, was likewise with the foresaid Gentlemen, but, it would seem, very accidentally. I am informed, that when they were met at a Country House, one of them saw Blackstoun riding by, as was afterwards known, with a Design to have joyned Dalziel. Mr. Gabriel Maxwell went out to him, and, after some Communing, prevailed with him to joyn with them: But he was so far from being a Friend to the Cause they were appearing for, that, I am told, as soon as he heard of the Defeat at Pentland, he went to the Archbishop of Glasgow, and, upon a Promise of Pardon, discovered and informed against the rest.

I have the following Account from other good Hands in a different Turn, That Blackstoun came to that Meeting, not accidentally, but from a real Regard to the Cause Colonel Wallace was appearing for; That the Gentlemen were surprized when he came to them, as knowing his Head was not so fully poised, as were necessary for Consultations of that Nature they were engaged in, and therefore kept their Meeting apart from him; That he still hovering about the Door, unhappily spied a Footman of my Lady Rothes's, carrying Letters to Eglinton: He, out of his ungoverned Zeal, laid hold on him, opened the Letters, and after Perusal of them, and returning them, sent him off: That the other Gentlemen were highly offended at him for so doing, and thereupon broke up; and that he himself, afterwards reflecting in cold Blood on what he had done, thought fit to redeem his own Neck by accusing his Neighbours.

The Reader will find him afterward led as a Witness against the rest very early: And, December 1st, in the Council-registers I observe '----- Maxwel of Blackstoun, and --- Houston his Servant, compeared and delated the Laird of Caldwell, and several other Gentlemen, 'to have risen in Arms for assisting the Rebels.' The Council confine him to his Chamber in Edinburgh; and, upon the 6th of December, they take off his Confinement, upon a Bond of a Thousand Pounds Sterling, to appear when called. It was remarked, that after this Providence frowned very much upon him, and every Thing went cross. This he himself is said to have acknowledged, in a Paper he left behind him, when, a good many Years after this, he went for Carolina, but he died at Sea by the Way.

The Gentlemen and others of that Meeting, brought under fore Sufferings, particularly the Lairds of Caldwell and Kersland.

Some of the many Sufferings of those worthy Gentlemen concerned in that Meeting, may be hinted at afterwards; but I am sorry so few Accounts of them are come to my Hand: If they escape the Sword at Pentland, because not there, they did not escape the Persecutors Fury in a very little thereafter. Their Houses were rifled, themselves forfeited and exiled. The Estate of Caldwell, the best by far of any concerned in this Affair, is given to General Dalziel, upon a Sentence passed in Absence, forfeiting him for being upon the Road to joyn Colonel Wallace. The Times were so ill, the Gentleman durst not personally compear, otherwise very relevant Defences might have been proponed. This good Man died in Exile, leaving his excellent Lady, and Four Orphans, destitute of all visible Means of Subsistence: Some of their Hardships will offer afterwards: I only remark here, That the Lady Caldwell had a Dowry ensured to her according to her Rank, out of the Estate of Caldwell; but having neglected to take Infeftment upon her Contract, before the Forfeiture, she lost that, and was forced to live with her Children in great Straits. Kersland's good Estate was given to Lieutenant-general Drummond. In their Hands these Two Estates continued until the Revolution.

When the Country Army is near Collingtoun, Blackwood

But to return to Colonel Wallace and his decreasing Army, when they are in the Way to Collingtoun, the Laird of Blackwood came up again to them, as sent by Duke Hamilton to intreat

The Country-people who came to Dumfries, were commanded by Andrew Gray, and John Neilson of Corjick, and by a Surprise apprehended Sir James Turner in his Chamber in Baillie Finnie's. They soon after marched to the West Country, having Messages to their Acquaintances in the neighbouring Shires to assist them. 1666.

I took with me Major Lermont, Son in Law to the Laird of Annstoun, who lived near me, an Officer of Skill, great Resolution and Courage. We met our Friends on the Hills above Galsstoun. It was found necessary to halt a little in that Country, till we should see if Friends would joyn. Some went to Mauchlin, others to Tarboltoun: The Major and I went next Day with about Fifty Horse to the Town of Air to take up Quarters. The Magistrates fled, but we hearing where one of them was, obliged him to give Billets for Seven or Eight hundred Horse and Foot. Here worthy Mr. Hugh McKail turned sickly, but recovered. From Air we marched up the Water toward Douglas, and from that to Lanerck. Meanwhile, Dalziel and his Forces were come West, to meet us, the length of Stratheven; but hearing we were got twixt them and Edinburgh, they came close after us. When we came to Lanerck, I know not if we were much above Fifteen hundred Horse and Foot; several indeed were daily joining us.

There we had Accounts the General would be upon us that Night. Presently a Council of War was called, of Officers and Gentlemen, who communicate Advices with the Ministers. By the Generality it was thought safest to bide at Lanerck, the Rains having made Clyde unpassable, except by Boats, which were broken; and there was no great Probability of the River's falling, and a few Men might have prevented the King's Forces to come through it to us. But a Letter at this Time came to Mr. Welsh and Mr. Semple, from a Gentleman at Edinburgh, who was a real Friend, pressing us to come as near that Place as might be, and giving Hopes both of Assistance and other Necessaries. This altered the first Project, and the Army marched straight to Bathgate, under many Inconveniencies; and there being no Accommodation there, we went forward to Collingtoun.

There I was pitched upon to go in to the Town, and converse with that Gentleman, if possible. When I came thither, all the Roads were guarded, and my Lord Kingstoun, with some Forces, keeping the main Guard at Brandsfield-links. Having taken By-roads till I came to Libberton Way, I was stopped at the Wind-mill, and carried to my Lord Kingstoun. I made a Shift to satisfy him, by desiring Two Soldiers to go with me to the Dean of Edinburgh, Mr. Lawrie, and he would know me. My Lord was very civil, and told me, Mr. Lawrie and his Friends would be retired for Safety to the Castle, and dismissed me, which was a very providential Deliverance to me; for just as I was going off, I saw Mr. Hugh McKail brought in Prisoner to my Lord. I lodged in the Potter-row, but could have no Access into the Town, all the Ports being shut, and saw no Body that Night, save old Mr. Arthur Murray, a Minister turned out of his Charge in Orkney: His Wife essayed to get into the Town with a verbal Message to the Gentleman, but by no Means could be admitted.

Next Day, I went, through many Difficulties, to our Friends, who were now come from Collingtoun to Pentland-hills. When I had passed Roslin-muir, and was come to Glencorse Water, I fell in almost with an advanced Party of the King's Horse; but was relieved by the Reer of our Friends.

By this Time, November 28th, a fair frosty Day, after a fore Night of Frost and Snow, when Colonel Wallace got Intelligence, that General Dalziel was coming from Currie through the Hills, and a considerable Party of our Men were upon a Hill, commanded by Barmagachan, and Mr. Crookshanks, and Mr. McCormock, Two Irish Ministers were with them.

In about Half an Hour, Lieutenant-general Drummond, with a select Party, were sent against us upon the Hill, but were beat off with some Loss; though the General assured those about him, that his Party would do our Business, and the rest needed only stand and see fair Play. When the Lieutenant-general was driven back, there was no small Confusion among the Army, and not a few threw down their Arms; yea, Drummond himself owned afterwards to Mr. James Kirkstoun, from whom I have the Account, that if we had pursued the Chase, in the Confusion they were under, the General's Army might have been ruined. Mr. Crookshanks and Mr. McCormock were both killed in this Rencounter.

Major Lermont commanded the second Attack, when we beat the Enemy again, and Duke Hamilton narrowly escaped, by Dean Ramsay's warding off a Blow a Countryman was just giving the Duke. The General sent up a Party who relieved the Duke, beat back the Major: His Horse was shot under him, and falling, he stepped back a little to a Fold-dike, and killed one of the Four Horsemen who pursued him, mounted his Horse, and came safe off from the other Three.

The last Encounter was after Sun-set, when the General's Foot, flanked with their Horse upon all Hands, overpowered us, broke our Ranks, and we gave Way. Our Horses not being trained, was a great Loss to us. Many more had been killed and taken, had not the Night prevented it. I fell in with a whole Company of the Enemy, who taking me in the Dark for one of their Number, carried me down the Hill a little with them in the Pursuit,

Southward he placed a small Body of Horse, under the Command of Barfcob, and the Galloway Gentlemen: In the Centre were the poor unarmed Foot, under his own Command; and upon the Left stood the greatest Part of his Horse, under the Command of Major Lermont.

They are scarce settled there, till the General's Army come up to them.

This Handful were scarce well put in this Posture, when they were called to other Work than a Review. An Alarm comes, that a Body of Horse is approaching them. At first they pleased themselves, that it might be some Friends coming to joyn them: But quickly they found it was Dalziel's Van, who had cut through the Ridge of Pentland Hills, and come straight from Calder towards them, quite undiscovered till they were within a Quarter of a Mile of them, upon an Hill opposite to them. There was a great Descent and Hollow 'twixt them, so they could not meet on that Side.

They engage.

When they had viewed each other for some Time, Dalziel sends out a Party of about Fifty Horse, to squint along the Edge of the Hill, and attack their left Wing. Wallace orders out Captain Arnot with a like Number of Horse, to receive them. The Captain came up with the General's Detachment upon a Piece of level plain Ground. After both had spent their Fire, they closed upon the Sword-point, and fought it very stoutly for a good while. At length, notwithstanding all their Advantages, Dalziel's Men run; and had it not been for the Difficulty of the Ground, their Loss had been far greater than it was. Divers fell on both Sides; and of the Captain's Party Mr. John Crookshanks, and Mr. Andrew McCormock, Two Ministers who had come from Ireland, and had very much encouraged the People to this Undertaking.

Mr. Crookshanks and Mr. McCormock killed.

Upon this little Advantage, Wallace advanceth with a Party of Foot towards the Body of the Enemy's Horse, they being on a Ground, upon that Side inaccessible by Horse. This obliged them to shift their Station, and to draw up on a Bank or rising Ground a little more easterly; and there they continued till all their Foot came up.

These being arrived, the General advanced towards Wallace, and drew up his whole Army upon the Skirt of the same Hill, whereof the Colonel had the Ridge, which is called the Rullion Green. Being thus posted, the General orders out a great Body of Horse, attended with some Foot, to attack the Wing commanded by Major Lermont. To meet those, Wallace orders out another Party of Horse flanked with Foot. After firing on both Sides, they close one upon another, and Wallace's Foot force Dalziel's to give Way, and his Horse run also. A Second Party of Horse, the same Way, come from the General upon the same Wing, and a Second Party meet them with the same Success, and chase them beyond the Front of their Army.

The Country Army are defeated.

But a Third Body of Horse, for the General had Abundance to spare, coming up, made Lermont's Men retire up the Hill to their First Station: And thus the Dispute is mostly upon the left Wing of Wallace's Army. When they had acquit themselves so gallantly, Dalziel advances his whole left Wing of Horse, upon the Colonel's right, where he had scarce Thirty weak Horse to receive them. These were soon born down, and the General carried the Charge so briskly, that all Wallace's Companies gave Way, were put out of their Order, and never able to rally again.

The Slaughter not very great; about Fifty killed, and as many taken Prisoners.

The Slaughter was not very great. The Colonel had happily placed his Men, and most of them were upon the Top of the Hill, and got the easier off. It was almost dark Night before the Defeat; and the Horsemen who pursued, were most part Gentlemen, and pitied their own innocent and gallant Countrymen. There were about Fifty of the Countrymen killed, and as many taken Prisoners: A very few of Dalziel's Men were killed, but several wounded.

A further Account of this Rising and Engagement, from an old Minister present.

After I had formed the above Narrative of this Rising and Defeat, there came to my Hand a very distinct Information of this Affair, from an old Reverend Minister, who was present with Colonel Wallace's Army for the most part, and in the Action; which containing several Particulars I have not met with elsewhere, and being but short, I have insert it here.

Information sent to the Author of this History, as to the Rising in Galloway dissipated at Pentland, November 1666. by a Minister present with the Country Army.

I Was prevailed upon by Mr. Welsh Minister of Irongray, and some others, to joyn with that Party in Galloway, fore oppressed by the inhumane Cruelties of Sir James Turner, for their Nonconformity to abjured Prelacy. A little while after they had seized Sir James, that his Cruelties in that Corner might be stopt, and when they were resolving to march to Edinburgh, to represent their Grievances, you know, they were broken at Pentland Hills, many of the Prisoners were executed, and those of any Note who escaped, were forfeited in Life and Fortune in Absence, most illegally. In this Sir John Nisbet King's Advocate was most active, and fearing After-enquiries, he procured an Act of the First Parliament after, approving this Piece of Injustice.

The

commended their Gallantry and Courage; and yet under such Disadvantages as they had to wrestle with, they could not but give Way. Two Parts of their Company had deserted them; they were perfectly spent and wearied, and surprized under a begun Treaty, and overpowered with Numbers of fresh Horse and Men, many of them disciplined Troops, and none of them under their Difficulties and Discouragements.

They always protested and declared, Their only Design was to present their Grievances, and testify for their God and their Country, for Religion and Liberty; and herein holy and infinitely wise Providence accepted of them, and smiled upon them, albeit not in a Way of Victory and Success, yet in the Road of noble and unshaken Stedfastness and Suffering, which turned very much to the Advantage of the Interests they appeared and testified for.

This Account shall be concluded with the Letter the Council wrote to the King, the Day after this Engagement.

May it please your Majesty,

SINCE the first Notice we had of the late Insurrection in the West, we have from Time to Time given an Account of it, and the Proceedings against it, to the Earl of Rothes, to be communicated to your Majesty: And now we presume, by this humble and immediate Address, to make known to your Majesty, That Yesterday in the Afternoon, the General, and Noblemen with him, and your Forces under his Command, gave them a total Rout at the South-side of Pentland-hills, about Seven Miles from Edinburgh. Many of them were killed in the Field. There be several Prisoners, against whom there shall be speedy Proceedings, according to the Laws against Traitors: And if Night had not prevented your Majesty's Forces in the Pursuit of the Rebels, none of them had escaped. And although this Rabble be totally dissipated for the Time, yet we conceive our selves obliged, in the Discharge of our Duty, to represent unto your Majesty, That those Principles which are pretended as the Ground of this Rebellion, are so rooted in many several Places through the Kingdom, and there be such just Grounds of Apprehensions of Dangers, from Persons disaffected to your Majesty's Government, as it is now established by Law, as will require more vigorous Application, for such an Extirpation of it as may secure the Peace of the Kingdom, and due Obedience to the Laws: And we shall not be wanting in any Thing in our Power; and your Majesty's Commands shall be obeyed by

This Letter breathes forth a Spirit of Cruelty peculiar to the present President and Prelates. I make no Reflections upon it: They fairly own the Prejudice generally prevailing now against the Prelates for their Oppression, and Inclinations toward a Freedom from that Yoke; and seek further Severities, and a standing Army. But I come now to give Account of the Sufferings of those taken at Pentland.

Remarks upon
it.

1666. 'suit, till I got to a Side, and having a sturdy Horse, turned off from them, and was pursued, but happily escaped.'

The English Writers, their Accounts of this Engagement considered.

It is scarce worth while to take Notice of the Misrepresentations the English Historians give of this Rising and Engagement. That Party-writer of the Caveat for the Whiggs, published toward the Close of the last Reign, in order to corrupt the Commonalty of England, and dispose Matters for the present Attempt of the Pretender (1715) hath as many Lies as Words almost in his Account of this Matter. He pretends this Rising was in Concert with the Whiggs in England, and the Republicans in Holland; whereas it was entirely unconcerted. He talks of the Leaders of their Troops being Taylors, and outed Preachers; that Five Hundred of them were killed at Pentland, and near a Hundred executed. So gross Misrepresentations need no Reflections.

Remarks upon Mr. Eachard's Account of this Matter:

Mr. Eachard, Hist. of England, Vol. III. in his Accounts of this Matter, hath copied several of the Blunders formerly printed by his Countrymen. He insinuates a Correspondence 'twixt the Presbyterians in Scotland and those in England, without the least Proof; and indeed it was not capable of Proof, such a Correspondence not being practicable, considering the Circumstances narrated above. His Bite upon Major Lermont, That he had been formerly a Taylor, is not worth noticing. I know not what Truth is in the Fact; but I could give Instances of Tradesmen in their Youth, who have gone in to the Army, and proved eminent in the Art of War; and the Major's bitterest Enemies owned him to be a very good Officer. What follows is a plain Falshood, That most of their Officers were cashiered Preachers. And though several of the outed Ministers were in Company with the West-country Army, there was not one of them an Officer, or had any Command over the Soldiers. Presbyterian Ministers leave those Things to another Set of Clergymen, who claim the Privilege of a double Capacity, and act in it where they see it for their Interest; and, under Pretext of their Temporalities, can make a Shift to be Princes Palatines, Members of Parliament, Lords High-treasurers, Plenipotentiaries, Presidents of the Privy Council, and what not. Mr. Eachard has known very little of the Story, when he talks, They were met in the Height of their Power by the King's Forces. A third Part of those who had been together the Day before the Engagement, were not at the Battle; and, considering all Things, it was much so many of them kept together. Those Things indeed are scarce worth the observing, were it not, if possible, to prevent other subsequent Historians from copying after Mr. Eachard, as he has done from those that went before him, in our Scots Affairs, to which they have been very much Strangers.

And upon the Author of the Complete History of England.

Those Remarks upon Mr. Eachard, relate likewise to the Author of the Complete History of England, whom, in Scots Affairs, the Archdeacon pretty closely follows; only the Bishop hath an ill-natured Turn, The rigid Presbyterians, says he, were as mutinous as the Popish Tories in Ireland. This must be reckoned a spiteful, as well as an ignorant Comparison, since, as the Presbyterians were not as yet, with any Colour of Reason, to be divided into rigid and not rigid, they all, without Exception, owned the King's Authority, and submitted to every Thing save Episcopacy; so there was no Mutiny in the Case, but horrid Oppression from the Soldiers hounded out by the Prelates, which this Author might have known from Nephthali, and other printed Accounts, and so spared this odious Comparison.

The Country about very unkind to the discomfited Army.

After this Engagement, November 28th, 1666. the Country-people were very cruel to the poor fleeing Men. Many of them were killed, and severals taken Prisoners by the People in the Parishes round about. I am well informed, that some visible Judgments of God did come upon some of them for their Cruelty and Murder.

Colonel Wallace and Mr. Welsh escape, and the first retires to Holland.

Colonel Wallace and Mr. John Welsh fled over the Hill Northward; and when they had turned their Horses from them, entred into a Countryman's Barn that Night; and, after some very refreshing Rest, got off undiscovered. We shall afterwards meet with Mr. Welsh about his Master's Work. The Colonel, after some Wandrings, got over to Holland, and lived many Years there; but never returned to his native Country.

The Valour of the Country-people very remarkable in the Engagement.

Thus was this Body of good People broken and dissipated. It was next to a Wonder, and can scarce be accounted for, except from the Goodness of their Cause, that they were so brave on this Day of their Defeat, if either the Constitution or Circumstances of such an Army be considered. They were but a small Handful of untrained, undisciplined Countrymen, who had never seen War; they had very few Officers, and these had little Authority. Every private Man in such a Gathering, readily must either be let into the Secrets of the Council of War, otherwise he is in Hazard of clamouring his Neighbours in the Company into a Mutiny, and then of deserting upon a Scruple. So hard a Matter did Admiral Chatillon find it to command an Army of Volunteers. And the inexpressible Hardships the poor People had been under for some Time before their Engagement, heighten the Wonder.

Further Evidences of this.

The commanding Officer, Colonel Wallace, was a Gentleman, a good Soldier, bold and resolute; but such an Undertaking was for a Man of Miracles. Their Enemies very much commended

It may be of some more Importance to observe, That upon December 1st, the Council, without any previous Trial, give Orders to General Dalziel, 'To search for and apprehend all Persons and their Horfes, who have been in Arms with the Rebels, or are suspected since, or before the Defeat, or who have refect, or been aiding to them, and to intromit with their Goods; and require him to quarter upon their Lands with his Forces: And Duke Hamilton is appointed to feize all such in Lanerk Shire.' This is Three Days before the former Proclamation, which is pretended to be so much for the Good of the Lieges; and surely these Orders were either unreasonable, or the Proclamation very uselefs, unless it be to convey down to Posterity, the Names of those who made so gallant a Stand for their most valuable Concerns.

Together with this Proclamation, I find in the Council-registers an Act of the same Date, against Presbyterian Ministers, entituled, Act against deposed Ministers. It runs thus. 'The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council being informed, that there are many deposed Ministers who have transgressed the Act of Council, of the Date of August 13th, 1663. in not removing themselves and Families out of their respective Parishes, where they were Incumbents, and not residing within Twenty Miles thereof, Six Miles of Edinburgh, or a Cathedral Church, and Three Miles of any Royal Burgh, whereby they ought to be proceeded against as Movers of Sedition: Therefore they require the Archbishops of St. Andrews and Glasgow, to ordain all Bishops within their several Sees, to cause all Ministers within their respective Dioceses, give up a List of such Ministers Names, and of the Place of their Residence, and in what Manner they have transgressed the said Act, and report to the Archbishops, and they to the Council.' It hath been formerly remarked, that Obedience to this Act was next to impossible; and now the Primate reckons it a good Season to harass his (once) Brethren, and hound out the Army upon them, in order to throw the Odium of this Rising upon them, when mean while they were living peaceably.

I shall make one Observe further, before I come to give Account of the Severities upon such who were taken at Pentland; and that is, This Disaster, and the Cruelty following on it, not only was Matter of great Grief and Heartbreak to the most Part of any Piety and Seriousness through Scotland, but really hastned some to their Grave. One Instance shall suffice, of that worthy old Minister Mr. Arthur Murray, who was upon the Matter a Sufferer with those worthy Persons, unto Death. This good and aged Man was living in the Suburbs of Edinburgh, through which Dalziel's Soldiers marched in Triumph. When he opened his Window, and saw them display their Banners, and heard the Shouts of the Soldiers triumphing over the Prisoners, he was struck to the very Heart, took his Bed immediately, and died in a Day or Two.

But leaving those accessory Sufferers, I come to those who were taken in the Engagement it self. The Prisoners, about Fifty in Number, who were taken at the Battle, were brought in by the Soldiers to Edinburgh, and the Country-people brought in about Thirty more: They were all crouded together by the Magistrates of Edinburgh, in a Place near the Tolbooth, called Haddocks-hole, which of late is turned to a better Use. The late French King, I am told, turned the noble and capacious Church at Charenton, near Paris, to a Draught-house; and this Place out of which those Innocents were taken, as Sheep for the Slaughter, is since converted to a Church. Some of the better Sort were put into the Tolbooth, and, as the Council promise in their Letter to the King, very quick Dispatch was made of them.

Bishop Sharp the President, pushed violently the Prosecution and Execution of the Prisoners; and indeed, his blood-thirsty Temper at this Time made him very odious. I am well informed, that after some of them were condemned, and a few executed, a Letter came down from the King discharging taking any more Lives. This Letter came to the Primate as President, and ought to have by him been communicate to the Council; but the blood-thirsty Man kept it up, till as many, as he had a Mind should die, were dispatched. This foul Act of his he was very justly charged with, by the Persons, who some Years after this, took away his Life; and when he cried pitifully for Mercy, he was told, That as he never shewed Mercy to others, so he was to expect none from them.

This base Breach of Trust was of a piece with another Step he took about this Time. When the Country-people were rising in the South and West, he wrote up a Letter to Lawderdale or Roths, to be communicated to the King, wherein he signified, That all went well in Scotland, and that every Man was in his Duty, except the few Phanaticks who were in Arms, whom he feared not. At the same Time he wrote a Letter to another Nobleman at Court, wherein he asserted all was wrong, scarce any were faithful to the King, and they were all fold. Both the Letters, of the same Date, were read to the King, who now saw his Dishonesty and double Face, which he would never believe before, although he had several Hints of it given him. After this, I am told, the King never gave him that Credit he had with him before, and trusted him very little.

However, at this Time with a great deal of Willingness he presided in Council. When they met, the first Thing before them was, What they should do with the Prisoners. It seemed very natural to think they had their Lives spared by the King, in as much as they had

Of the Sufferings and Execution of such who were taken at Pentland, with some Reflections upon their Death.

HAVING given an unbiaſſed Account of this Riſing, as far as my Materials would carry me, I come next to offer ſome ſhort Narrative of the Cruelties exerciſed upon ſo many of this broken Party, as came into the Managers Hands. Many came to be Sharers with them in Sufferings, who had not been up in Arms with them, as may afterwards come to be noticed.

The Riſing which ended at Pentland, charged upon all Presbyterians.

Now the Prelates made a terrible Clamour, and took Care to load the whole Body of Presbyterians, Miniſters and People, as concerned in this Riſing; and miſrepreſented them as Rebels, Enemies to the Government, and what not: And a Handle was taken from this Appearance in Arms, which was very far from being any Concert among Presbyterians through the Nation, to violent and bear down all of that Deſignation, Miniſters and People, as common Enemies.

The Pains taken after the Engagement to prevent the Eſcape of any who had been at it.

The utmoſt Care had been taken, before and after the Battle, to prevent their Eſcape. Upon the Country-people's moving from Collingtoun, the Council ſent one Patrick Murray to Teviotdale, to acquaint the Heritors, the Rebels were moving Eaſtward, and all the Paſſes were appointed to be guarded. Immediately after the Engagement, they ſend Expreſſes to Berwick, to ſtop the Rebels who came to the Borders; and likewise order Earls Annandale, Niddſdale, and Lord Drumlanerh, and others in that Country, to keep the Forces together they had raiſed, in order to apprehend the Rebels upon their Return. Alſo the Forces at Linton-bridge, are ordered to keep together till Saturday's Night.

The Lord Treafurer appointed by the Council to ſecure the Goods and Rents of all who had been at Pentland.

Next Day, November 30th, the Lord Treafurer is ordered by the Council, to ſecure all the Goods and Rents belonging to any of the Rebels indicted or to be indicted, and to intromit with them; with a Reſervation of their Dues reſting to their Maſters: And all Hazard being now well nigh over, the Council give Liberty to all the Forces in the Merſe, Teviotdale, and the Foreſt, in Dumbarton and Stirling Shires, to diſmiſs.

Great Hardſhips ſuch who were in the Army underwent.

After all this Care in the Council, now managed by the Primate, I need ſcarce notice, that the Difficulties and Hardſhips of many who had got off from Pentland with their Lives, were very great: Not a few who had eſcaped the Sword at Rullion-green, were moſt cruelly murdered by the Country-people; the common People, in many Places about, wanted the Bowels of Men; not to ſay Chriſtians, toward the ſcattered Party. Yea, ſo inhumane were ſome, as to break in upon the Graves of thoſe who had been buried, that they might get the Linen ſome good People in Edinburgh had provided to bury them in; and Multitudes were forced for many Years to lurk and hide themſelves, and undergo inexpreſſible Hardſhips, having their Life, as it were, every Day in their Hand.

Proclamation, Dec. 4. againſt them. App. No. 8.

To render their Life more uneaſy, and to involve others who ſhould ſhew them the leaſt Favour, a Proclamation comes out, December 4th, which I have inſert, App. No. 8. There is a Reference made here to their former Proclamation, making it Treafon to aſſiſt, ſupply, or correſpond with any that had riſen in Arms; and that no Subject may harbour, reſet, hide, or conceal any of them, or they muſt be brought to Trouble therefore. The Names of about Sixty are ſet down; and the Proclamation adds, or any others who concurred or joyned in that Rebellion; with Certification, that all who fail herein, ſhall be reputed guilty of their Crime.

Remarks upon it.

The Hardſhips of this are plain, and likewise the Uſeſſneſs of inſerting ſo many of their Names; ſince Converſe, &c. with ſuch who are not named, runs a Perſon as deep in Guilt, as with ſuch as are named. I ſhall make no Reflections on the Liſt in the Proclamation. John Semple is named among the Miniſters; and every one was ready to take it for John Semple Miniſter at Carsphairn, whereas he was no way concerned in this Buſineſs. Accordingly, I find this pious plain Man, upon the 13th of December, petitioning the Council, 'That whereas one of the ſame Name with him, is inſert in the late Proclamation, as among the Rebels, whereby he and his Family living peaceably theſe Fifteen Months at Carsphairn, in their old Age, he being Sixty four, and his Wife Seventy Years, are brought to great Trouble, craving Redreſs.' Which being found true, the Council permit him to live ſtill there, and confine him to that Place, and Four Miles about it. The Laird of Caldwell, and his Neighbours before mentioned, had no legal Evidence againſt them, of their being up in this Rebellion. I have been informed, ſeveral here named were not concerned at all in the Riſing; and Mr. John Crookſhanks was killed, and no Body in Hazard of Reſet or Converſe with him.

up Arms, to be desperate and irreclaimable, and the Power of giving of Quarter is naturally inherent in all Soldiers as such: And as the Council, without express Remission from the King, upon Submission, might have secured their Lives, so might Soldiers by Quarter, for they have as much Power in the Field as the others at the Council-table. 2^{dly}, Lawyers are very clear that Quarter should be kept, tho' given to Subjects who are Rebels. Grotius lib. 3. cap. 19. where, after he hath fully treated that Question de fide servanda, concludes, That fides, data etiam perfidis & rebellibus subditis, est servanda. And this hath been observed in the Civil Wars in Holland and France; and by his Majesty and his Father at Home during the late Troubles. 3^{dly}, Quarter is advantagious to the King, and so should be kept; for these who are taken might have killed his Majesty's General and Officers, and by giving Quarter to his Enemies, he redeemed his Servants: And if the only Effect of Quarter were, to be reserved to a publick Trial, none would accept Quarter. I think no unbiassed Person can read this, but they must see how iniquous the Procedure against these good Men was.

These Ten were accordingly hanged, December 7th, and their Heads and Arms disposed of according to the Sentence. Their joynt Testimony, and the dying Speeches of some of them, have been more than once published in Nephtali, and other Prints that are not uncommon, and so they need not be inserted here. It will be more worth while, to give the Reader a Taste of the Hardships brought upon the Families of some of those Martyrs for Religion and Liberty, by the Managers, after they had done their utmost to the Persons of those Worthies, and I shall only instance in Two of them.

I begin with Major McCulloch, an excellent Gentleman of good Parts and great Piety. He never had Freedom to conform to Prelacy, and suffered considerably for his conscientious withdrawing from the Church. Before Pentland several Soldiers were quartered upon him for Thirty Days; and besides their Entertainment, he had Eight Pence a Day to pay each of them, and was forced to pay an Hundred Pounds of Fine to Sir James Turner. So good a Man as he could not escape his Share in the Fines imposed by Middleton's Parliament; and so in the Year 1665. he paid the whole Sum imposed on him, Twelve hundred Merks, and Three hundred Merks of Riding-money to the Soldiers who exacted it. His Estate lay under Forfeiture from Pentland to the Revolution. After Pentland, one Charles Campbell, without any Warrant, seized a Horse of his Son William McCulloch, who was not concerned in the Rising, worth Eight Pounds Sterling, and Clothes and other Things near to the Value of Five Pounds Sterling. His eldest Son was seized, and kept in Prison a full Year after his Father's Execution, upon no Ground I can learn, but his being Major McCulloch's Son. The Major's Lady was happily infest in a Part of his Lands, and she and her eldest Son lived upon these till the Year 1681. when, upon Noncompearance, they were forfeited, and given to Queensberry, who put John Sharp Clerk of Dumfries in Possession of them. Mr. McCulloch the true Owner of them was obliged to take them again from Sharp, and besides a considerable yearly Rent of Ten or Twelve Pounds Sterling, he had upwards of a Thousand Merks of Entrance-money, and other incidental Charges to pay.

The other Instance I mention is, The excellent Family of Knockbreck, in the Parish of Borg in Galloway. The Two young Gentlemen at this Time executed, I have it from Persons yet alive of their Acquaintance, that they were Youths of shining Piety, and good Learning and Parts. The Harassings and Losses of the Family cannot be estimate, they were so frequent and severe. Besides the Payment of their parliamentary Fine, and their common Losses, with others in Galloway, by Sir James Turner, in a little Time after Pentland, their whole Crop for that Year was seized, and the Household-furniture disposed of and destroyed. Six Soldiers continued quartered upon the House, from the 6th of March to the 9th of July, which comes to a great Sum: Besides, near Four hundred Pounds of Cess, and other Impositions, were uplifted from them and their Tenants. They had their Share in all the after Harassings of the Country; Particulars would swell this Account. In the 1684. Captain Strachan, with his Troop, came, and destroyed and took away the whole Household-plenishing. Next Year Glenlyon, with near Two hundred Highlanders, came and stayed at Knockbreck from Thursday to Munday and consumed and took with them all the Meal and Malt they found, and killed vast Numbers of Sheep; and at their Departure broke the Glass-windows, and carried off all the Horses about the House, to bear away the Spoil. And last of all, cruel Lagg came with a Company of Men, and carried off all within the House, to the very Trenchers and Spoons; and, with much Difficulty, was prevailed with not to burn the House. Any of the remaining Sheep they could not eat, Lagg carried with him, to the Number of about Fifty, besides many black Cattle. From these the Reader may guess at the Severities used to the Families and Relations of such who were executed at this Time.

While the Blood of these first Ten is scarce cold, the Advocate is ordered to intent a Process against other Five of the Prisoners, Mr. Alexander Robertson, Preacher of the Gospel, who was basely betray'd by the Laird of Mortoun his Friend, to whom he committed himself upon Promise of his Life. He points at this in his Speech at his Death, and forgives him. John Neilson of Corrack, George Crawford in Cumnock, John Lindsay in Edinburgh, and John Gordon in the Parish of Irongray. And, upon December 10th, the Two former Judges find them guilty.

Quarters given them, by such who had the King's Commission to kill or to save alive; and Grotius, De jure belli & pacis, determines, fides est etiam rebellibus servanda: But this reasonable and merciful Construction, agreeable to all the Rules of War, was too moderate for our cruel Bishops, and what their Party in Council would not hear of. And so in the first Letter writ when the Prisoners were brought in, the President, according to his cunning Way of doing Business, shuffled in the Clause we have seen in their Letter to the King, to premitte their Procedure, That they would prosecute them with all Dispatch.

When this Matter came to be reasoned at the Council-table, Sir John Gilmer the best Lawyer among them, declined peremptorily to give his Judgment, knowing, as was then said, that if he gave his Opinion for taking of their Lives, he would go against both Law and Conscience; and if he voted for sparing them, he would offend both the President and Prelates. It fell very unhappily to one of the best of the Counsellors, to give it as his Opinion, when others were silent, That though the Prisoners had their Lives given them in the Field as Soldiers, yet this did not pre-judge their Trial in Law as Subjects. This was greedily backed by the President, and insisted on as an Oracle, and gone into by the Council, such who were against it inclining to be silent; and the Council remitted them to the Criminal Court. They say, that General Dalziel, when he had the Accounts of this, cursed and swore terribly, and said, Were he to serve the King never so long, he should never bring in a Prisoner to be butchered.

Accordingly I find the Council, upon the 4th of December, order the King's Advocate to pursue a Process of Forfeiture against Eleven of the Prisoners, who were picked out for the first bloody Sacrifice: Major John McCulloch, a reverend old Gentleman, Captain Andrew Arnot, Brother to the Laird of Lochridge, Thomas Paterson Merchant in Glasgow, who was sentenced with the rest, but died of his Wounds in Prison; the Two Gordons of Knockbreck, John Parker in Busbie, Gavin Hamilton, James Hamilton in Kilmuir, John Ross in Mauchlin, John Shields in Titwood, Tenant to Sir George Maxwell of Nether-pollock, Christopher Strang Tenant in Kilbride. Those are to be indicted before the Criminal Court, or rather Two Criminal Judges, for Treason and Rebellion: And the Council allow them Sir George Lockhart, Sir George Mackenzie, Mr. William Maxwell, and Mr. Robert Dickson, for Advocates.

So upon the same Day, Sir John Hume of Rentoun Justice-clerk, one of the greatest Zealots for the Prelates in Scotland, and Mr. William Murray Advocate, Justice-depute, sit down as their Judges, in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh. They heard the Advocates plead a little for Form's Sake; but very quickly they came to Sentence, finding them guilty, and ordering them to be hanged at the Cross of Edinburgh upon the 7th of December.

That the Reader may have a full View of the Reasonings pro and con, and the Method taken with these worthy Persons, I have insert the Whole of their Process, extracted out of the Records of the Criminal Court, and the Council's Act as to the Disposal of their Heads and Arms, App. No. 9. This Extract is in Print in a begun Account of the Sufferings of these Times, Intituled, Sampson's Riddle. That Work being stopt in Holland, by the Gentleman's Death who was at the Charges of it; and that imperfect Part of which was got printed, being but in the Hands of a few, I have here in the Appendix taken several original Papers relative to the Sufferers at Pentland, from it, after I had collated them with the Justiciary Records.

In the mean Time, to satisfy the Reader's longing, he may here take a short Account of that Process from the unsuspected Hand of Sir George Mackenzie, in his Criminals, Part II. Tit. 16. Par. 2^d. 'The most considerable military Questions, saith he, which I remember in all the adjournal Books, are, first, That which was debated December 5th, 1666. the Case where- of was: Some West-country Men had formed themselves in an Army, and were declared Traitors by the Council, and being thereafter beat at Pentland Hills; Captain Arnot, Major McCulloch, and others, were taken by some of his Majesty's inferior Officers upon Quarter: But being pannelled before the Justices as Traitors, it was alledged for them, That they could not be put to the Knowledge of an Inquest before the Justices, because they having been modelled in an Army, and taken in the Field fighting as Soldiers, they behoved to be judged by the military Law, and by that Law such as get Quarter in the Field, are by that Quarter secured therein for their Lives, and cannot be hereafter quarrelled. To which it was replied, That there can be no Quarter but where there is a bellum justum, and it is not the Number nor Form of the Army, but the Cause that makes bellum justum; and publick Insurrections of Subjects against their Prince, are rather Sédition than bellum; and these Insurrections being Treason, none can remit Treason but the King, and therefore Quarter could not be equivalent to a Remission; but all the Effect of Quarter in this Case is, to secure these who get the same, from present Death. To which it was duplied, That all who get Quarter from any who are authorized to be Soldiers, are by that Quarter secured against that Authority from whom these Soldiers derive their Power; and these who get the Quarter, are not to dispute whether these Soldiers had a sufficient Power to give Quarter, or whether bellum be justum or injustum, for that were in effect to destroy Quarter in all Cases, and to make all such as take up Son, who had been intercommuned, and paid near an Hundred Pounds. In the Year 1680. 1666.

 her Son was forfeited, merely for Noncompearance; and in a Year or Two, by Claverhouse's Troop, and others, the lost and expended on vexatious Suits, upwards of Four hundred Pounds. Her eldest Son, for Three Years, was forced to wander and hide in Ireland. In the Year 1684. she and her Second Son being cited to a Court for not hearing the Curate, her Son was imprisoned for some Months, and fined in Two hundred Merks: And still forward, until the Liberty 1687. this excellent Gentlewoman was vexed with Parties of Soldiers, and Compearance before Courts, which put her to great Trouble, and much Charges. From these well vouched Accounts, the Reader will have some View of the Hardships wherewith the Families of such who appeared at Pentland, were distressed.

That Terror might be struck into the West Country, while the Blood of the Lord's People is running so fast at Edinburgh, a Commission is granted to the Persons named in it, or any Three of them, with a judiciary Power, to try and judge such who were concerned in Pent- land Riling: I have inserted it, App. N^o. 10. By virtue of this Commission, at Glasgow, De- cember 17th, the Earls of Linlithgow and Wigtoun, the Lord Montgomery, and Mungo Mur- ray, constitute themselves in a Court; and Mr. Thomas Gordon Writer in Edinburgh is chosen their Clerk. Sir William Purves, his Majesty's Solicitor, indicts Robert Buntine in Fin- wick Parish, John Hart in West-quarter in Glasford Parish, Robert Scot in Dalserf Parish, and Matthew Paton Shoemaker in Newmills. The Court finds them guilty of Rebellion and Treason, and sentences them to be hanged at Glasgow, upon Wednesday December 19th. Their Process I have not insert, as coinciding, mutatis mutandis, with App. N^o. 9.

They were accordingly executed that Day. The Men were most cheerful, and had much of a Sense of the Divine Love upon them, and a great deal of Peace in their Sufferings. It was here that abominable Practice was begun, which turned afterwards so common, of the Soldiers beating Drums when the Sufferers spoke to the Spectators before their Death. Reflections need not be made upon this barbarous unchristian Practice, scarce any where used, but by the Popish Inquisitors, and is a plain Evidence of an ill Cause, which cannot bear the Light. The Persecutors were afraid lest the Words of these dying Witnesses for Truth, would confirm and strengthen honest People in their Adherence to, and Appearance for Liberty and Reformation; and I cannot say they were mistaken in their Fears, for the Christian and manly Carriage of those noble Sufferers, had a mighty Influence upon Multitudes.
 Few, if any, were terrified by their publick Death, and many were convinced of the Goodness of their Cause, and fixed in their Resolutions to adhere to it.

To return again to Edinburgh: Upon the 18th of December, the above named Justice-clerk and Justice-depute, have before them Mr. Hugh McKail, Thomas Lennox, Umphrey
Colquhoun, Ralph Shield Clothier in Air, William Pedin Merchant there, John Wodrow
 Merchant in Glasgow, Robert McMillan, John Wilson in the Parish of Kilmawock, Mungo Kai- po in Evandale. The Judges pronounce Sentence of Death upon them, and order them to be hanged at the Cross of Edinburgh, December 22^d.

All of them, save Three, were executed that Day; and most Part of their Speeches are already more than once published. Upon the 21st of December, I find the Council supersede the Execution of the Sentence of Death upon Robert McMillan, William Pedin, Thomas Len- nox, and John Lindsay formerly reprimed, till further Orders. As far as I can guess, these Four got off, after some Imprisonment, and partial Compliances; probably the Reason of this was the King's Letter formerly mentioned, for sisting Execution. When the rest are dispatched, the Council order the Magistrates to take down the Gallows at the Cross to Morrow; and dispense with the cutting off the Heads and Hands of such as are to be executed.
 Now all were satiate with Blood except the Prelates, and they were forced to yield.

Before those Executions began, which I have put all together: Upon the 4th of December,
 I find the Council order Mr. Hugh McKail and John Neilson of Corsack, to be tortured with the Boots, a Practice not used before in Scotland, in the Memory of any now living; and I doubt if it was often practised since the Reformation. Now it was brought in, and violently urged by the Prelates, and afterward frequently used, as we shall hear. This, with other inhumane and barbarous Tortures made Use of in this Period, was justly complained of at the Revolution, and abrogated.

What moved the Council to pitch upon those Two, I do not know. Mr. McKail was a Youth of great Sense and Learning, and Corsack a Gentleman of excellent Parts, and probably from them they expected vast Discoveries. A Conspiracy was pretended, and they were to be examined by this Torture in Presence of the Council, and Interrogatories formed to be put to them, which I have not seen. But there was indeed no Plot to be found, and their Riling was merely for Self-defence, and unconcerted. Corsack was fearfully tormented, so that his Shreiks would have melted any Body but those present, who still called for the other Touch. Nothing was recorded, for all they said was what they had candidly signified before,
 That the Oppression of the Country had forced them to rise in Arms, and being up, they were obliged in Self-defence to stick together. The Sufferings of Mr. Hugh McKail are so singular, that though they are printed in Nephtali, yet being so proper for a History of this Nature, I have inserted them.

guilty. I do not find they gave themselves the Trouble of hearing Advocates but make short Work, and go upon their Confession, and condemn them to be hanged at the Cross of Edinburgh, on Friday the 14th of December; which was accordingly done, only John Lindsay was delayed. Their Testimonies are likewise printed in Nephtali, and elsewhere, so I do not insert them, or the Process about them, which falls in with the former. The Council being weary of disposing Heads and Arms, order the Magistrates of Edinburgh to affix their Heads on such Ports of the Town as they see fit, and bury their Bodies in the usual Place.

Observation
on Sir George Mackenzie's
Vindication.

Sir George Mackenzie's Vindication, pag. 8th, very confidently says; 'That generally no Man was executed in King Charles's Reign, who would say, God bless the King, or acknowledge his Authority.' The Falshood of this will appear from a vast Number of Instances in the Progress of this History. I only here ask, If any of these Persons now executed, had the Offer of their Life upon that Condition? If not, as certainly they had not, then Sir George's Vindication is a very false one, and a Covering of Cruelty with a Lie: For all of them that were put to Death on this Occasion, did both pray for the King, and own his Authority, though they could not justify his Administration.

The particular Sufferings of the Family of Corsock.

The Sufferings of one of those worthy Persons, John Neilson of Corsock, in the Parish of Partan in Galloway, and those of his Lady and Children, are so remarkable, that they deserve a Room in this Collection; and I see not where an Abstract of them can be more properly insert than here. Mr. Dalgleish, the Curate of Partan, had no small Hand in this Gentleman's Hardships. When Sir James Turner came first into Galloway, Corsock was soon delated by the Curate for Nonconformity, and Sir James exacted an Hundred Pounds Scots from him, and, contrary to Promise, he was sent Prisoner to Kirkcudbright. He suffered very much by Quarterings of Soldiers upon him; from the Beginning of March, to the End of May that Year, he had Troopers lying on him, sometimes Ten, sometimes Six, sometimes Four at once, and was forced to pay each Man Half a Crown a Day, which came to Eight hundred and nineteen Pounds Scots, and free Quarters besides to Man and Horse; which, moderately computing at Fifteen Pence a Day, amounts to Four hundred and eight Pounds, Ten Shillings. Next Year, Sir James Turner sent Six Foot-soldiers to quarter upon him, from March to the Middle of June. These had each of them Twelve Pence a Day, besides free Quarters, which amounts to Seven hundred and fifty six Pounds. By those Hardships, Corsock was obliged to leave his House, and wander up and down; and upon his hiding, he lost his Horse worth an Hundred Pounds, and was seized himself, and imprisoned for some Time. The Loss of his Household-stuff, Victual, and most Part of his Sheep, cannot be well reckoned. When they had turned his Lady and Children to the Doors, they fell next upon his Tenants, and obliged them to bring them in Sheep, Lambs, Meal, and Malt, till they were well nigh ruined. And last of all, they drove all his Oxen and black Cattle to Glasgow, and sold them. And all this for nothing else but precise Nonconformity.

Corsock very instrumental in saving Sir James Turner's Life, and when Sir James is endeavouring to get him spared, the Curate of Partan and Bishops prevail to get him executed.

After all this Oppression, of which I have before me an attested Account, the Reader can scarce wonder that he, and many others in the like Circumstances, took hold on the first Opportunity that offered to complain of, and relieve themselves of those Calamities. When saying this, he is taken at Pentland, and, when a Prisoner in Edinburgh Tolbooth, Sir James Turner used his Interest to get his Life spared, because Corsock, out of his truly Christian Temper, saved Sir James, when some were seeking to take his Life, both at Dumfries and afterwards, though few had felt more of his Severity than this Gentleman; Mr. Dalgleish the Curate, getting Notice of it, applied himself to some of the Bishops, and acquainted them, Corsock was a Ringleader to the Phanaticks in Galloway, and if he were spared, he needed not think of continuing in his Parish, and they might spare them all. This went further than Sir James his Interest could go, and so he was executed.

Maxwel of Milltown, and Sir William Bannantyne, heavily oppress Corsock's Family.

His Lady being in Edinburgh after her Husband's Death, Maxwel of Milltown came to the House of Corsock, with Thirty Men, and took away every Thing that was portable, and destroyed the rest, and turned the Family, and a Nurse with a sucking Child, to the open Fields. Some Time after, Sir William Bannantyne came and inventoried any Thing that was in the House, seized that Year's Crop, and arrested the Rents in the Tenants Hands. One of the Tenants, Arthur McGachie in Glenhead, with his Wife and a young Child, were carried off Prisoners, and kept some Weeks, merely because he had converted with his Master Corsock, before Pentland, a Day or Two after he had been at Dumfries. The same Sir William, a little after, came, and took Lodging with Thirty Horse in Corsock, till the Lady gave him a Bond, with Two Neighbour Gentlemen Cautioners, for Three hundred Merks. The Laird of Partan, a Papist, posselt himself of a Part of Corsock's Lands contiguous to his in that Parish, of about Eighty Pounds Scots yearly, and forced the Tenant to pay One hundred and twenty Pounds of Rent, due to Corsock before Pentland. And further, by virtue of the Forfeiture, the said Popish Gentleman defrauded the Lady Corsock of a Bond he had given to her Husband, of Four hundred and eight Merks Scots, and all the Interest. The said Gentlewoman had all her Moveables seized, for her Converse with her own Son.

All of them owned the King's Authority, and disclaimed any rebellious Designs, to set up against the Government, and still professed they were craving no more, but a Redress of the Church and Kingdom's Grievances in the only Way now left them. I hear, most, if not all of them, left their written Testimonies behind them, and it is Pity any of them are lost. Scarce the Half of them are in Nephthali!

Though some of them had lived long in Bondage through Fear of Death, and others of them had fore Anguish of Body through the Wounds received at Pentland, their Torture, and other Pieces of ill Treatment afterward, yet all of them died in great Serenity and peaceful Hope of Salvation. George Crawford was so pleased to die, that he pressed to be up the Ladder, and, when upon the Top of it, triumphed in Christ.

And as they had much solid Peace and Comfort as to their own eternal State, so many of them had a firm Expectation that God would deliver Scotland from the Bondage of Bishops, and their Influence upon the heavy Oppressions the Country was groaning under.

A few of them were Persons of Learning and great Knowledge. Major McCulloch, Corsock, Mr. Hugh McKail, have been spoken of already. When Knockbreck and his Brother were turned off the Ladder, 'tis said, they clasped other in their Arms, and endured the Pangs of Death. The most of them were illiterate Persons, of very common Education, and yet in their dying Speeches they discover a Greatness of Soul, much Piety, and good Sense. Their Friends who knew them before, could not but remark, it was given them what and how to speak in that Hour. John Wodrow Merchant in Glasgow, in his Testimony and Letter to his Wife, was observed to go far beyond one of his Education and Circumstances; and his very Style was noticed to be much above what it was formerly known to be. Humphrey Colquhoun when he died, spoke not upon the Scaffold and Ladder, like an ordinary Townsman, but like one in the Suburbs of Heaven; related his Christian Experiences, called for his Bible from one of his Friends, and laid it on his wounded Arm, and read some most apposite Passages, and spoke to the Admiration of all who heard him.

Unless it be the first Three Worthies mentioned in the former Book, never did Men in Scotland die more lamented by the Spectators; yea, the religious Part of the Nation, but most of all, when Mr. Hugh McKail suffered, there was scarce ever seen so much Sorrow in On-lookers; scarce was there a dry Cheek in the whole Street, or Windows at the Cross of Edinburgh. He was a Youth of Twenty Six Years of Age, universally beloved, singularly pious, of very considerable Learning. He had seen the World, and travelled some Years abroad, and was a very comely graceful Person. I am told he used to fast one Day every Week, and had frequently before this signified to his Friends, his Impressions of such a Death as he now underwent. His Share in the Rising was known to be but small; and when he spoke of his Comfort and Joy in Death, heavy were the Groans of these present.

Many Remarks might have been made upon the Process insert in the Appendix, and pleasant Observes from the Testimonies published in Nephthali; but this would swell this Work very much. When these good People were executed, such who were accustomed too much to Cursing, cursed the Prelates; and such as used to pray, prayed the Guilt of this innocent Blood might not be laid to their Charge, nor visited upon the Land.

I have met with several Accounts of Prodigies seen in the Air about this Time; and Persons who lived then, of good Information, have left behind them a very strange Passage, that several People about Pittentree made publick Faith upon, That the Night after the Battle, and after some of these publick Executions, they heard the Voice of a Multitude about Wellfoun Mount, praising and singing Psalms with the sweetest Melody imaginable: But I am unwilling to insert any Thing here save what is fully attested, and leave those Things to be enquired into by such as shall write a complete History of these Times.

It is not my Work in this Historical Essay, to insist upon a Vindication of these religious and excellent Persons who suffered at this Time. This hath been done oftner than once, and this Rising hath been proven to be no Rebellion, but a necessary and forced Appearance for Religion, Liberty, and Property: And yet, without ever attempting an Answer to what hath been said in Vindication of these Sufferers, it hath been the Way of the Prelatick Party to run them down as Villains and Rebels. This was the Cant of the Days before the late happy Revolution; and no great Wonder, since the then Laws and Governors were pleased to talk at this Rate: But this Treatment, I confess, is a little odd since that happy Turn, when Matters are much altered.

That Jacobites and Papists should continue in the Style of those Times, they would so willingly have us back to, is no great Wonder: But for any who own the Revolution, the Authority of King William of ever glorious Memory, and the Protestant Entail now so happily taken Effect and established, to rail at these Persons as Rebels, and what not, is every Way unaccountable and inconsistent.

The very same Reasons which vindicate the Revolution, 'As being an extraordinary Case, a Case of Necessity, and still implied, tho' not expressed in the general Rules of Loyalty and Subjection to Sovereigns, when the Sovereign, misled by evil Counsellors, endeavoured to subvert and extirpate the Protestant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of the King-

Nature, I would willingly have insert them here were they not very prolix, and therefore must refer my Reader thither, for a larger Account of this singular Person.

No Discoveries being made, or indeed further to be made from the Prisoners at Edinburgh, the Commissioner Roths, now come from Court, resolves upon a Progress through the West and South, that he might be at the Bottom of an imaginary Conspiracy and Plot, he would fain have landed upon some Body or other. He came first to Glasgow, and from thence to the Town of Air, with a Committee of Noblemen and others with him, having a Justiciary Power.

Prisoners
there.

At Air, upon the 24th of December, the Earl of Kellie, Lieutenant-general Drummond, Charles Maitland of Hattoun, James Creighton Brother to the Earl of Dumfries, sit in Judgment, and have Twelve more of the Prisoners before them, indicted by the Solicitor for Treason. They are found guilty, and ordered to be executed at Air, Irvine, and Dumfries; and the Sentence was put in Execution accordingly.

Seven of them hanged at Air, December
27.

Thursday, the 27th of December, was appointed for the hanging of Eight of them, James Smith, Alexander M'Millan, James M'Millan, George M'Cartney, John Short, John Graham, James Muirhead, and Cornelius Anderson, in the Town of Air. The Hangman of that Town being unwilling to imbrue his Hands in the Blood of those good Men, got out of the Way, and no other could be found to undertake this hateful Work. The Provost not being able to find one for this Office, proposed this Expedient, which was gone into: That one of the Eight who were condemned should have his Life, if he would consent to become Burrier to the rest; and with Difficulty enough Cornelius Anderson is prevailed upon. When the Execution-day is come, the poor Man's Heart being like to fail him, the Provost, to secure all, took Care to make him almost drunk with Brandy. Thus, with much Difficulty, they got their Sentence executed.

Other Two of them, James Blackwood and John M'Coul, were executed at Irvine upon Munday December last. When Mr. Alexander Nisbet Minister there, visited them in Prison, he found them ignorant, and very much discouraged and damped with the near Views of Death and Eternity. After he had bestowed some Pains upon them, and instructed them in the Way of Salvation by Faith in Christ; when the Day of Execution came, they died full of Joy and Courage, to the Admiration of all who were Witnesses. Anderson, as I am told, was likewise obliged to hang them, and in a few Days he himself died in Distraction and great Misery.

His barbarous Treatment.

The Courage and Behaviour of William Sutherland Hangman at Irvine, a Man very much Matter of the Scriptures, and blameless and pious, and the Carriage of the Persecutors to him, deserve a Room here. His own Declaration, which I am well assured is genuine, and formed by himself, and Account of his Examination, will set this Matter in its native Light; and therefore, tho' the Paper be rude, and in a very homely Dress, I have insert it, App. No. 11.

This poor Man, after the Hangman at Air fled, was by Force brought from Irvine to that Place, and boldly stood out against all the fair and foul Means used to bring him to execute the above named Persons there. When he had been put in the Stocks, and endured all the Hardships he himself gives Account of, and still persisted in his Refusal, Lieutenant-general Drummond ordered him to be taken out and bound to a Stake, and caused a File of Musketeers present their Pieces, assuring him he was a dead Man, if he yielded not to hang the condemned Persons. This moved him not. Then they covered his Face, and after a little the Soldiers were ordered to run in upon him with a Shout, and all the Noise they could make. Thus they resolved to make him feel the Fear of Death, though he escaped the Pain of it. And this was his Martyrdom, which he underwent with a great deal of Composure and Resolution.

Two more executed at Dum- fries, January
2, 1667.

John Grier and William Welsh, the remaining Pair of those condemned at Air, were executed at Dumfries, upon Wednesday January 2^d, 1667. Thither the Commissioner with his Company came; and after all the Pains he had taken in this Perambulation of the Country, to discover a supposed Plot, upon which the Rising was alledged to have been founded, only learned, that there was nothing to be discovered.

Thus I have given as full an Account, as I could gather, of the Sufferings unto Death of these Persons taken at Pentland. The following Persecution of the rest who escaped, and of some Gentlemen who never joyned them, by Forfeiture and otherwise, will come in in the Order of Time upon the succeeding Years.

The meek and magnanimous Carriage of the above named Sufferers in Prison, at their Trial and Death.

It is a Loss we have not preserved to us, a more particular Account of these excellent Persons Carriage, both in Prison and at their Death. By the short Hints I have met with, I persuade my self it would have been very useful and instructive. Their Behaviour all along was with the greatest Meekness and Magnanimity; and very much of the Spirit of the primitive Christians runs through many of their last Speeches. None of them would save their Lives by renouncing the Covenants, and taking the Declaration. None of them made any shifting Defences in their Process, but fairly and boldly owned what they had done, as Christians and Scotsmen, for the Cause of Religion and Liberty.

C H A P. II.

1667.

of the State and Sufferings of Presbyterians during the Year 1667.

HIS Affair of Pentland had no small Influence upon the Interests of Prelacy in Scotland: Some of the Bishops at least reckoned now their Enemies were buried, and that none would dare, after this, to move a Lip against them or their Procedure. Their Fears were much over, and they took Care to brand the Presbyterian Party, as a few inconsiderate rash Rebels, Enemies to Monarchy and them; but they came to see their Mistake, and Matters proved quite contrary to their Expectation.

The Influence of the Affair of Pentland upon the Interests of Prelacy.

The Bloodshed last Year, had an Effect not unusual in the Christian Church, really to encourage good People in their adhering to the Words of Christ's Patience. Since the Reformation there had been but few Executions for Conscience Sake; and now when these are turning common, by the cheerful and Christian Sufferings of so many, People are animated to their Duty, and hardened against Danger; as if now, and scarce till now, they had believed, that Torture and Death for Christ's Sake, can be gone through with Cheerfulness, by Divine Assistance; and that not only by eminent, but ordinary Saints.

The cheerful and steady Carriage of the Sufferers strengthened Presbyterians.

To blacken these noble Sufferers, Mr. Robert Lawrie, a little after their Death, declared from one of the Pulpits in Edinburgh, That they had gone down to the Pit with a Lie in their right Hand; but brought no Proofs of his uncharitable and unchristian Censure. There was indeed a Cause; he was hounded out to this bitter and unjust Reflection. Their Death, and the triumphant Nature of it, had left deep Impressions of the Righteousness of their Cause, and their own Innocence: And this publick Calumny only left the Speaker under a Blot, yea, the Hatred and Contempt of many, but did no Hurt to the Sufferers.

Mr. Robert Lawrie endeavours to blacken the Sufferers after their Sufferings, but in vain.

Indeed from the Time of these repeated publick Executions, the Episcopal Interest in this Kingdom, gradually and sensibly decayed, till the Prelates, the chief Instruments of this Bloodshed, were at length laid aside, as a publick Nuisance. The Nobility perfectly wearied to follow these severe Courses, and this Year the Persecution slackened, People began more generally to dishaunt the Churches, and the outed Ministers ventured to preach a little more publicly, particularly Mr. John Welsh, whose Labours were singularly and eminently blessed of God. Multitudes flocked to their Sermons, and much Love to the Gospel abounded in a Proportion to the Benefit People felt by it: And the poor honest People, who were in Railery called Whiggs, from a Kind of Milk they were forced to drink in their Wandrings and Straits, became Name-fathers to all who espoused the Interest of Liberty and Property through Britain and Ireland. If the Reader would have another, and perhaps better Origination of the Word, he may consult Burnet's Memoirs of the House of Hamilton.

The Interests of Prelacy decay after this Multitude of Executions.

A little after the Restoration, as hath been observed, Lawderdale had reasoned against the Establishment of Prelacy in Scotland, as what would raise Uneasiness to the Government there, being really contrary to the Inclinations of the most and best of the King's Subjects. He was over-ruled, and the general outward Quiet of the Country, for some Years after the Obtrusion of Episcopacy, seem'd to vindicate the Sentiments of such who had opposed him: But this Insurrection, together with the general and growing Contempt of the Bishops and their Clergy, and the great frequenting of Presbyterian Ministers Sermons, in Houses and the Fields, made the King to reflect upon what Lawderdale had assured him of; and being bent on his Pleasures, lazy in Business, and impatient of Disturbance, he was the more inclinable to mild and moderate Measures.

Lawderdale's Argument against bringing in Prelacy, now verified.

Accordingly, this Year, after a considerable Struggle with the Prelates and their Party, Lawderdale prevailed, and got an Indemnity for Pentland Insurrection, and in a little Time the first Indulgence came down.

Moderate Measures followed this Year with Presbyterians.

That the Reader may have a further View of the Severities after Pentland altogether, I shall first give some Account of the Methods taken by the Army in the West and South, on the Back of this Insurrection, and the Forfeitures passed under Form of Law; and then essay a more particular Narrative of the Procedure against Presbyterians this Year, the Bond of Peace offered them, with the Indemnity at length granted. These may be Matter for Two Sections.

dom, to borrow the Words of a great Lawyer, the same Arguments are of equal Weight in this Case. The Cause was indeed the very same, Religion and Reformation, Law and Liberty; and had the Attempt under the Prince of Orange miscarried, as, blessed be the Lord, it did not, no question it would have been branded with the same hard Names of Rebellion, and resisting the Ordinance of God, this was loaded with, yea, with worse.

We have seen the Declaration of these People who rose at Pentland, and I shall refer the Reader to Appendix No. 12 and 13. where he will see Two Associations or Covenants, if he please, entred into at Exeter, and in the North of England, while King JAMES VII. was upon the Throne, which in some Things go a greater length than our Pentland Men.

And if the Success of this Rising was not equal to that of the Revolution, these brave and gallant Men were not to blame: But the Lord's Time, set for the Delivery of this poor Church and Kingdom, was not come. And I must add, what hath been already hinted, That their Appearance was not concerted with that Caution the Difficulty of the Times required; and they too much depended upon Assistance from others in the same oppressed Circumstances with themselves; and when that failed them, they failed in their Attempt.

But leaving those Things to others who may handle them more fully, as a Historian I shall only lay before my Readers, the plain Matters of Fact as to this Undertaking, many of them scattered up and down in the former Account; that having the whole Circumstances under View at once, they may judge for themselves.

Pentland Attempt then was no premeditated, but a very accidental Rising some few Country-people were obliged to by the barbarous Oppression of the cruel Soldiers.

It was merely upon Necessity and Self-defence they took Arms, being morally assured they would be murdered by those merciless Men, had they not looked to themselves after their first Attempt.

When some were thus got together, others of better Note joyned them, as being under the same Grievances, tho' not so liable to military Execution as they; and knowing no other Method of getting Redress, but in this Posture, all Application to the King being discharged by Law, and the Bishops in Council effectually stopping any Thing like this; that they had no more in their View, appears plain enough, from their Treatment of Sir James Turner, when in their Hands.

When they came Eastward to make this Application, and had, at the Noblemens Desire, with the General's Concurrence, agreed to a Suspension of Arms, and had in part proposed their Grievances, and these were sent to the Council, and they some Way under a Treaty; they were attacked in a sudden and subdolous Way, and obliged then to resist Force by Force, when no Indemnity was allowed them.

When taken at the Engagement, they got Quarters, and a Promise of their Life; and it was contrary to all Rules to be dealt thus with after Quarter given and taken.

Several of those who were executed, were not in the Engagement, had not born Arms, and were only in the Company with the rest, when going through the Country.

Some of them, I know not how many, not having the Date of the King's Letter, nor the Time when the Primate received it, died to gratify Bishop Sharp's Cruelty, and contrary to the King's express Orders, That no more Lives should be taken.

All of them owned the King's Authority, and suffered really, if the Matter be narrowly considered, not so much for their rising in Arms, there was Grace to pardon that, as for their not renouncing their sworn Covenant, and refusing to take the Declaration, for which, it would seem, the Bishops would allow of no Mercy: So that they died not for Rebellion, but Religion and Conscience Sake.

In short, the Reader will notice, That these worthy Persons are fairly vindicated, as soon as the Nation recovered its Senses, by our Revolution-Parliament Act, July 4th, 1690. rescinding Forfeiture, where the forfeited Persons are restored, not ex gratia, but ex justitia; and all Decrees and Sentences pronounced by any Judges against them, are declared void and null from the Beginning. The good Men confessed they had risen in Arms, and the Thing was evident; yet our Parliament, in this circumstantiated Case, plainly judging it not to be treasonable, or Rebellion, pronounce, ex justitia, their Sentences void and null from the Beginning, and those excellent Persons innocent: And I have no doubt, but long before this publick Vindication from Men, these Sufferers had a very comfortable Sentence passed upon them by the righteous Judge of all Men.

saw a Man at some Distance, who, upon their Approach, fled into a Country-house near by, and both Doors being open, only passed through it, and got down into a Ditch full of Water on the other Side of the House, and stood up to the Neck; there he remained undiscovered, till he escaped. The Party, when they observed him flee, pursued hard, and came into the poor Woman's House, and searched it narrowly, but miss their Prey. All the poor Woman could say, was, That indeed a Man had run through her House, and she knew nothing about him: However, because she owned the Man had been in her House, and could not produce him, she is brought Prisoner to Kilmarnock, where she was sentenced to be let down to a deep Pit under the House of the Dean, full of Toads and other vile Creatures. Her Shreiks thence were heard at a great Distance; but no Body durst intercede for her, otherwise they would have been sent to bear her Company. Whether she died there, or what became of her, I know not.

Instances of such Severities might be multiplied. I add but one further. Sir Mungo Murray had the Command of some Soldiers, and was rummaging up and down for Intelligence, and to seize Wanderers. He gets Notice of Two Countrymen who had given a Night's Lodging to Two of the Pentland Men, when coming Home. The Men are brought in before him, and, without any further Probation than Hear-say, Sir Mungo orders the Two Countrymen to be bound together with Cords, and hanged up by their Thumbs to a Tree, there to hang all Night. 'Tis odd to think, how cruel Men fall upon such Methods to torment their Fellow-creatures, as this and others we shall meet with. The poor Men would in all Probability have died before next Day, through Pain and Torture, had not some of the Soldiers been so merciful as to cut them down to save their Lives, tho' this was at the Hazard of being dealt with themselves the same Way.

These are some Part of the unprecedented Methods taken by the Army in the West, and much more was done of this Sort. The Vexation, Loss, and Hardships the Country-people were put to, cannot be expressed. Mean while, the poor Whiggs either got off to wander in a strange Land, or lurked in some retired Corners under borrowed Names, or hid themselves in Caves and Coal-pits; and this was the forest Winter of Persecution Scotland had known of a long Time.

Sir William Bannantyne, much about the same Time, was sent into Galloway with a considerable Party of Soldiers under his Command. Some of his Cruelties have been noticed, and others of them will come to be narrated afterwards: I shall only set down here attested Accounts of his Carriage in Two or Three Parishes, upon the Back of Pentland. The Reader will find more of this Nature in Nephthali.

He was more than once harassing this poor Country. At his first Incoming after Pentland, he brought Four hundred Foot, and a Troop of Horse to Roger Gordon's of Holm, in the Parish of Dalry, against whom nothing could be charged; but wherever they pleased, they took free Quarters. At the Holm, he and his Horsemen ate up Sixteen Bolls of Corn, killed and ate vast Numbers of Sheep, and consumed Abundance of Meal and other Things, besides what they took away from him and his Neighbours.

From thence they went to the House of Earlstoun. Some of the Sufferings of the Family of Earlstoun, have been pointed at, and now the House is made a Garison. From this Parties were sent out through that Parish, and these about, and exercised inexpressible Cruelties upon any they were pleased to alledge had been at Pentland, or conversed with such.

One David McGill in that Parish, whom they came to apprehend, escaped happily from them in Womens Clothes; but dreadful was the Way taken with his poor Wife, whom they alledged accessory to her Husband's Escape. They seized her, and bound her, and put lighted Matches 'twixt her Fingers for several Hours: The Torture and Pain made her almost distracted; she lost one of her Hands, and in a few Days she died.

They pillaged the Country round about, as they pleased. Some they brought to their Garison, though under heavy Sickness, stripped them naked almost by the Way, bound them, and cast them into nasty Places, without the least Accommodation; and it was a great Favour to let them out when at the Point of Death.

Many were the Fines the Soldiers uplifted: From one Countryman in Dalry Parish, a Thousand Merks were exacted; another poor Man was fined in Three hundred and twenty Merks, a Part of it was paid, and his Bond taken for the rest, and that was afterward exacted in the Year 1684. Another Countryman in the same Parish had a Hundred and fifty Pounds imposed upon him, and another Four hundred Merks. These Fines were perfectly arbitrary, founded upon alledged Suspicions that the poor People had been concerned in the Rising, and so were laid on just as the Soldiers pleased, and as the Man was able to pay.

In the Parish of Carisphaun, Gilbert Monry in Marbrack, without any alledged fault, had Fifty Merks imposed upon him. When he asked Sir William Bannantyne for what he was fined; the other answered, Because you have Gear, and I must have a Part of it. Great Numbers of Sheep and Nots were taken in that Parish, and Gentlemen as well as others were ruined. Alexander Gordon of Knockbreck, for his Sons being at Pentland, suffered a great deal,

Of the Severities of the Army after Pentland, the Forfeitures and other Hardships upon such as were concerned in that Attempt.

General Dalziel marches Westward, and the Soldiers harass the Country.

A Little after the Victory at Pentland, General Dalziel, with a considerable Number of his Troops, marched Westward to improve his Success, in harassing all suspect of favouring Presbyterians. We have, upon the former Chapter, seen the Powers given him by the Council, December 1st. Here opens a Scene of Cruelty unheard of before in Scotland. Sir James Turner lately had forced Galloway to rise in Arms, by his Cruelty the last and former Years: But he was an easy Master, compared with the General his Ruffians, and Sir William Bannantyne this Year. The Reader cannot form any Notion of their Carriage, without some few Instances out of many which might be given.

The Soldiers take free Quarter where they come.

It was the smallest Part of those Hardships, that the Soldiers took free Quarter through the West and South, as if they had been in an Enemy's Country; though this went very nigh to destroy the Sustainance of that Country. In short, the Soldiers do what they will, without Controul.

The General takes up his Head-quarters for some Time in the Town of Kilmarnock. I have a well attested Account of many Sums extorted from the Inhabitants of that Country Town, by me, too large to insert here; but only remark from it, That their Loss, by quartering of Soldiers, and other Impositions, in a few Months after Pentland, at a very modest Calculation, was upwards of Fifty thousand Merks; a terrible Sum for a Place of their Poverty at that Time.

The Heritors and Country about called before him.

Hither Dalziel calls in the Country-people about, the Heritors, and whomsoever he pleases. Suspicion, without any Probation, is what he goes upon. If he or his Informers were pleased to entertain any Jealousy a Man had been in Arms, or harboured any who had been in Arms, this is Reason enough to sift him before him; and, as it was lately at the Commission-court, few came but were either guilty, or made so, if they had any Money. He not only examined privately, and endeavoured to expiscate Crimes, and then pronounced Sentence as he pleased, but threatened, and cruelly tortured whom he would.

Multitudes thrust into a Dungeon, upon mere Suspicion.

Not a few, yet alive, remember how he thrust so many into that ugly Dungeon in Kilmarnock, called the Thieves Hole, upon mere Suspicions of their being accessary to the late Rising, where they could not move themselves Night or Day, but were obliged constantly to stand upright. When in this Pin-fold, one of them, and it was God's good Providence there were not many more, fell dangerously sick: The General would not allow him to come forth, till Two compassionate Persons were Bail for him, to return him living or dead. The poor Man died in a little, and the Two Sureties were forced to bring the Body to the Prison-door, where it lay a considerable Time, till the General, in his great Humanity, permitted the Body to be buried. But somewhat worse follows.

David Finlay is instantly shot, for his being at Lanerk when Colonel Wal-lace was there, tho' he joyned not the Army.

David Finlay in Newmills Parish, not far from that Town, is by Order brought before him. When examined, he acknowledged he was accidentally at Lanerk, when Colonel Wallace and his Army came thither, but had not joyned them. Being interrogate further, Whom he saw there? he gave little Satisfaction; and because he would not, and indeed, being only transiently there upon his Business, could not give an Account of the rich Whiggs there, presently the General sentences him to die. He was no Soldier under Dalziel's Command, no Judge had passed Sentence against him, no Witnesses were adduced, no Council of War held, and yet the poor Man is summarily ordered to be shot to Death immediately. When he was carried off from the General, neither the Lieutenant who was to execute the Sentence, nor the Man-himself, took Dalziel to be in earnest; but they found otherwise. The Soldiers had positive Orders to execute the Sentence: When they signified so much, the poor Man begged, for the Lord's Sake, one Night's Time to prepare for Eternity. The Lieutenant was so affected, that he returned to the General, and earnestly intreated the poor Man might be spared but till to Morrow. His Answer was like the Man who gave it, That he would teach him to obey without Scruple. So the Man was shot dead, tripped naked, and left upon the Spot. The Sergeant who had brought him from his own House to the General, being wearied, had gone to his Bed, and slept a little; when he awoke, and was acquainted with this sudden Dispatch, he sickned, took his Bed immediately, and died in a Day or Two.

Barbarity exercised on a Country woman, merely because a Man pursued by the Soldiers, went thro' her House.

Another Instance of their tender Mercies, was towards a poor Country Woman in the Neighbourhood of Kilmarnock. A Garison was kept in the House of the Dean, nigh by the Town: The Soldiers who lodged there, used frequently to traverse the Country, to see if they could find out any of the Whiggs wandering or hiding. One Day a Party of them saw

Mr. ----- Orr, Mr. William Veitch, Mr. ----- Paton, Mr. John Crookshanks, Mr. Gabriel Maxwell, Mr. John Carstairs, Mr. James Mitchel, and Mr. William Forsyth.

What hath been remarked upon the Proclamation, December 4th, above narrated, discharging Refet and Converse with those above named, needs not be repeted here. Some here insert, as Mr. Crookshanks, were dead, and some others named had no Being: And we shall afterward hear, that the Council correct the Names of some of them, in the Indemnity which comes down this Year.

Upon Dittay given in against these Persons by the Advocate, which I have insert App. N^o. 14. the Court decerns them to be denounced Rebels, and their Lands to fall to his Majesty's Use, as Outlaws and Fugitives from his Majesty's Laws, upon their Noncompearance.

It seems a simple Forfeiture was not reckoned a good enough Claim for the Estates now to be disposed of, and therefore the Advocate urged to have a Sentence of Death passed upon as many of them as he saw fit to insist against. The Difficulty was obvious which lay against this illegal Proposal; the Persons were absent, and it had not been a Practick to put an Indictment to the Knowledge of an Assize, and examine Witnesses in Absence of Parties. To obviate this, the Advocate, having beforehand practised upon the Lords of Session, and obtained their Judgment in this Case, produceth in Court a Query to the Lords of Council and Session, with their Answer, which I shall here insert, as a Document of the Equity of those Times.

QUERY.

WHETHER or not a Person guilty of High Treason, may be pursued before the Justices, albeit they be absent and contumacious; so that the Justices, upon Citation, and sufficient Probation and Evidence, may pronounce Sentence and Doom of Forfeiture, if the Dittay be proven? The Reason of the Scruple is, That Processes of Forfeiture are not so frequent, and that in other ordinary Crimes, the Defenders, if they do not appear, are declared Fugitives, and that the following Reasons appear strong and relevant for the Affirmative, 1^{mo}, By common Law, albeit a Person absent cannot be condemned for a Crime, yet in Treason, which is crimen exemptum, this is a Speciality, that Absents may be proceeded against and sentenced. 2^{do}, By Act 1. Jam. V. Parl. 6. It is declared, that the King has good Cause and Action, to pursue all Summons of Treason, committed against his Person and Commonwealth, conform to the common Law, and good Equity and Reason, notwithstanding there be no special Law, Act, or Provision made thereupon; and therefore, seeing by the common Law, Persons guilty of Lese-majesty may be proceeded against and sentenced, though they be absent, it appears that there is the same Reason, that the Justices should proceed against, and sentence Persons guilty of Treason though absent, and that they are sufficiently warranted by the said Act so to do. 3^{to}, It is inconsistent with Law, Reason, and Equity that a Person guilty of Treason should be in a better Case, and his Majesty in a worse, by the Contumacy of a Traitor, the same being an Addition, if any can be, to so high a Crime; and that he should have Impunity, and his Majesty prejudged of the Casualty and Benefit arising to him by his Forfeiture. 4^{to}, The Parliament is in Use to proceed and pronounce Forfeiture, though the Party be absent; and in so doing, they do not proceed by a legislative Way, but as the supreme Judges: And the Parliament being the Fountain of Justice, what is just before them, is just and warrantable before other Judicatories in the like Cases. 5^{to}, By the above mentioned Act of Parliament, it is statuted, That Summons and Processes of Treason, may be intended and pursued, after the Decease of the Delinquent, against his Memory and Estate, for deleting the one and forfeiting the other, whereupon Sentence may follow to the Effect foresaid. And therefore, seeing Sentence may follow, where the Delinquent cannot be present, and is not in Being, it were against all Reason, that where they are wilfully and contumaciously absent, they should not be proceeded against, and sentenced if they be guilty: And it were most unjust, that his Majesty should be forced to call a Parliament for punishing and forfeiting of Persons being absent, or that he should wait until they die, especially seeing in the Interim the Probation may perish by the Death of the Witnesses.

This is the utmost so good a Lawyer could go, in reasoning for this Stretch against these worthy Gentlemen. I shall not pretend to answer the Reasons brought from an old and antiquated Law in Time of Popery, nor from the King's Interest, which seems fully to be answered by the simple Forfeiture, nor consider the Reasoning from Parliamentary Power to that of inferior Judges: I am well assured, that any Lawyer could very easily expose the Weakness of such Arguing; only it may be remarked, that as soon as a Parliament sat, it was found needful to approve ex post facto this Reasoning, and the following Answer.

The King's Advocate pursues criminally the Persons named.

deal, and his Family after him, as in part we have seen. Robert Gordon in Carnevel, had his whole Estate, being Sixteen thousand Merks, taken from him; another lost his Lands worth about Six hundred Merks a Year. Seven hundred Merks were taken by the Soldiers from Three Countrymen near Lochdun.

In the Parish of Balmagie, Sir William came into a publick House, and after calling for some Ale, he offered Wickedness, and attempted it on the Mistress of the House. Her Husband being present resisted him; whereupon Sir William struck him down dead in the Spot; and some Life remaining, when about to kill him outright, a Gentleman in the Parish being present, endeavoured to prevent him, and fell in Grips with Sir William, and being too strong for him, Bannantyne called in the Soldiers who were at the Door: They took the Gentleman, and bound him with his Head 'twixt his Knees, and his Hands behind his Back, with a Teather, and kept him lying on the Ground in that Pickle all that Saturday's Night, and Part of the Sabbath, till his Friends came and gave Bond for him. This Gentleman was no Whigg, but had been with the King's Forces at Pentland. Bannantyne and his Party drank in the House, most of the Lord's Day; and when they could drink no more, let what remained run upon the Ground, and rifled the House of all in it. In short it was known, that Bannantyne, in this Country, never refused to let his Men rob and plunder wherever they pleased.

His Oppressions, Murders, Robberies, Rapes, Adulteries, &c. were so many and atrocious, that the Managers themselves were ashamed of them; and we shall afterwards hear that he was called to some Account for them, and forced to flee the Nation; and when at London, made an Attempt upon Lawderdale, which obliged him to go abroad, where he died in Misery.

Those Hardships from the Army continued upon the West and South-country, till, towards the Beginning of June, a Squadron of Dutch Ships came up the Firth of Forth, to make Reprisals for the Hurt done to their Trade by our Privateers. They shot some Guns at Leith, and fired some Hours upon Burntisland, without doing any great Damage. The Army was then ordered to the East-country to guard the Coasts.

A great many other Hardships were put upon good People after Pentland, by others as well as the Army. Many were imprisoned upon mere Suspicion, and without any Ground put to a vast deal of Trouble. James Grierson of Dalgoner was imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Air; he was perfectly innocent as to the Rising in Arms, and earnestly craved a Trial, but was not allowed it: At length, upon giving Caution for Compareance, under a vast Sum, he is let out.

John Hamilton of Auldstain or Austane, was in January apprehended by the Council's Order, upon a Suspicion that Major Lermont his Son in Law, had been in his House after Pentland. Nothing could be proven, and with Difficulty he got out, upon giving Bond to compar when called, under Penalty of Ten thousand Merks. At the same Time I find the Council liberates one Carmichael, alledged to have been at Pentland, upon his signing an Obligation to serve at Sea in a Frigate.

But I come to end this Section, with some Account of the Procedure of the Government, in forfeiting such who were not caught at Pentland, and others who had not been there, in August this Year; and some Hints at the Sufferings of others upon the Account of that Rising, of which I have no particular Dates, but they come in natively enough here.

Upon the 15th of August, the Earl of Athole Justice-general, and Sir John Hume of Rentoun Justice-clerk, with the Two Assessors appointed by the Council, the Earls of Linlithgow and Dumfries, hold a Justice-court at Edinburgh. Their main Design was against the Lairds of Caldwell and Kerland, whose Estates were to be given to the General and Lieutenant-general, for their good Services.

Sir John Nisbet the King's Advocate, produceth a Commission signed by the Commissioner Rothas, to pursue criminally before the Justice-court, and for forfeiting these following Persons in their Lives and Fortunes, as being in the late Rebellion in the West. viz. ' Colonel James Wallace, Major Joseph Lermont, William Maxwell of Moncrief younger, John McClellan of Barscob, John Gordon of Knockbreck, Robert McClellan of Barmageichan, James Cannon of Burnshalloch younger, Robert Cannon of Montdrogat younger, John Welsh of Star, ----- Welsh of Cornley, ----- Gordon of Garrary in Kells, Robert Chalmers Brother to Gadgirth, Henry Grier in Balmaclellan, David Scot in Irongray, John Gordon in Middleton of Dalry, William Gordon there, John McNaught there, Robert and Gilbert Cannons there, Andrew Dempster of Carradow, James Grierson of Dargoner, (who was delayed) James Kirk of Sundaywell, ----- Ramsay in Mains of Arnistoun, John Hutchison in Newbottle, ----- Row, Chaplain to Scotstarbet, Patrick Listoun in Calder, Patrick Listoun his Son, James Wilkie in Mains of Cliftounhall, William Muir of Caldwell, the Good-man of Caldwell, Mr. John Cunningham of Bedland, William Porterfield of Quarreltoun, Alexander Porterfield his Brother, Robert Ker of Kerland, William Lockhart of Wicketshaw, David Pe in Pokellie, Mr. Gabriel Semple, Mr. John Semple, Mr. John Guthrie, Mr. John Welsh, Mr. Samuel Arnot, Mr. James Smith, Mr. Alexander Pedin, Mr.

a few Days he died, and escaped the Fury of the Persecutors, who were resolved to carry him to Edinburgh in a Litter. Great was the Trouble Mary Gordon of Robertoun was put to, after her Husband and Brother's Death, mostly from the Instigation of the Curate of the Place. After Bothwell-bridge she was very hardly dealt with, by frequent Quarterings of Soldiers, imposing of Fines for her Nonconformity. At one Time the Soldiers took Two good Horses from her; at another Time a Party of Dragoons carried off almost all in the House. They emptied the Feather-beds, and packed up the rest of the Household-stuff in them, and carried it off. She had almost nothing valuable left her. In a short Time they came again, and carried her, and her only Son John Gordon a Boy, to Prison, and Two of her Servants, who were both banished to America. She and her Son, for mere Nonconformity, continued some Time there, to their considerable Loss in Person and Purse. In the 1685. a Company of Highlanders quartered some Days in Robertoun, destroying every Thing. Her Tenants were sadly oppressed for the Sake of this good Family. One of them, John Sprat, was plundered, and fined in Twenty Pounds for speaking to his own Son, who had been at Bothwell. Horses and Cows were taken from others of them: But Particulars would be endless.

Kirko of Sundaywell.

I shall next consider the Sufferings of the Family of Sundaywell, in the Parish of Dunscore. We have already heard how this Gentleman James Kirko, was taken at Edinburgh in the Year 1660. with Mr. James Guthrie, and others, and put in Prison, where he was kept near Four Months. He could not escape Middleton's Fines, and paid of Fine, with Riding-money, Six hundred Pounds; at another Time, for Nonconformity, he was fined in Two hundred Pounds. In the Year 1666. Sir James Turner exacted from him Five hundred Merks of Church-fines, and he paid Two hundred Pounds for the Soldiers quartered on him. In October, by the Severities of the Soldiers, and their continual spoiling of his House, he was obliged to dismiss his Family, and betake himself to a wandering Lot. This gave Occasion to the Persecutors to believe he was at Pentland; but that could never be evinced. However, by the Severities after, he was forced to leave the Kingdom for Three Years; and then, to his dying Day, he was vexed by the Lord Lyon, with a Process of Forfeiture, in which he was forced to expend a great deal of Money: Before it ended, he got out of all his Troubles, by a comfortable Death in the LORD.

James McClellan, who succeeded him in what remained of the Estate of Sundaywell, had no small Share of the Hardships of these Times. Upon a mere Allegiance he had been at Pentland, when not yet Sixteen Years of Age, he was forced to flee to the Mountains, where he, with some others, lurked from November last, till February 15th this Year, when Mr. McClellan ventured nearer Home to get some Clothes and other Necessaries, with a Design to leave the Kingdom. That Day he was apprehended by a Party of Sir William Bannantyne's Men, and brought to their Garison at Earlstoun, and there put into a Vault with some other Prisoners. Sir William most cruelly tortured him with fiery Matches 'twixt his Fingers, and would force him to tell Matters he knew nothing about.

Years of Age.

After some Times, he was carried Prisoner to Glasgow, and from thence to Linlithgow, where General Dalziel, for a Fortnight, would not so much as allow the Prisoners a little Straw to ly upon; from thence to Leith, where he was in great Straits for Meat; and at length he was brought up to the Canongate Toll-booth, where the Prisoners had much Kindness from the good People in Edinburgh. There he continued till the Middle of September, when he was examined by the Council; and, upon his refusing the Declaration, with Fifteen others, was banished to the Plantations, but happily broke Prison, and escaped.

When he came to the South again, about Five Years after this, and was married by Mr. Robert Archbald Minister of the Parish, at the Instigation of the Curates, he was cited before the Council for clandestine Marriage; where, after much Trouble and Charges, he got off. Within a little, the Parish of Dunscore was fined, for alledged Robbery committed on the Minister, in Five thousand Merks, though, by the Curate's own Acknowledgment, the whole Parish was innocent. His Share came to Six hundred Pounds. In the Year 1678. for refusing the Bond when pressed, he was forced to leave his Family for Six Weeks, and hide. In the Month of April that Year, an Order came for Niddale Militia to go into Lanerk Shire, and oppress honest People there. James refusing to go, or send any in his Room, was fined in Eighty Pounds. Upon the 9th of May 1679. he was taken out of his House by Fifteen Dragoons, without any Reason given, and carried to the Prison of Dumfries, and from thence to Edinburgh, where he continued till the Middle of July. For Clerks and Jaylors Fees here, he was Two hundred and eight Pounds. He met with much Trouble in the 1672. for gathering some Money for the Necessity of some Prisoners, and was indicted before the Justiciary, and escaped with much Charges. At the Circuit held at Dumfries by the Lord Castlehill, Forrest, and others, he was indicted for Reset and Converse, because Two Ministers had lodged in his House one Night, and was imprisoned, and forced to take the Test the 2^d of August thereafter; which, in his signed Account, from which this is taken, he says, was the saddest Day ever he saw, and desires to mourn for this Fall all his Days.

THE Lords of Council and Session, having considered the Query presented to them by the Lord Bellenden his Majesty's Treasurer-depute, it is their Opinion, That upon the Justices Citation, and sufficient Probation taken before the Judges and Assize, they may proceed, and pronounce Sentence thereintil, and Forfeiture against the Persons guilty of high Treason, though they be absent and contumacious.

Matters being thus prepared to the Lords Hands, they declare their own Power, and go on to their Work, find the Dittay relevant, and refer it to an Assize. That Day the Advocate insisted against Colonel Wallace, Major Lermont, Barstow, Mr. John Welsh, Mr. James Smith, Patrick Listoun, his Son, and Quarreltoun. Their Process I have insert, App. N^o. 15. They had some Difficulty to get an Assize, but at length made a Shift; and 'tis made up of Officers in the Army, the General's Servants, and some Parists. Sentence was pronounced the same Day, and all the abovenamed were forfeited in Life and Fortune.

It may be remarked, That Sir James Turner was the first Witness who swore in this Process, though 'tis plain he could not well purge himself of Malice: Yea, the Privy Council it self, corrupt as it was, found him guilty, and condemned him afterwards, for oppressing them, as we shall hear.

Next Day, August 16th, the chief Part of the Process comes on; and the Advocate declares, that he insists against William Muir of Caldwell, John Caldwell of Caldwell younger, Robert Ker of Kerland, Mr. John Cunningham of Bedland, Alexander Porterfield, Maxwell younger of Moncrieff, Barmageichan, Montdrogat, Robert Chalmers, Mr. Gabriel Semple, Mr. John Guthrie, Mr. Alexander Pedin, Mr. William Veitch, Mr. John Crookshanks, and Mr. Patrick McNaught. Their Process being short, I have insert it, App. N^o. 16. and their Sentence is the same.

Mr. Gabriel Maxwell Minister at Dundonald, was upon the same Account forfeited in Life and Fortune, Four Years after this, December 22^d, 1671. by the Justice-court. What the Reason of this Delay was, I do not well know. His Process I have before me, but it needs not be insert; for the Depositions of James Cochran, John Stevenson, John Wilson, John Anderson, John Caldwell, and William Caldwell, in Process, App. N^o. 16. are just adhered to before the Assize, who bring him in guilty; and the Judges pronounce the ordinary Sentence.

The rest, in the Advocate's Commission above, are delayed till November, when I do not find they are insisted against, the Indemnity and Bond of Peace being before that Time upon the File.

Perhaps it was not so convenient, that General Dalziel and Lieutenant-general Drummond should come immediately to possess the Estates of Caldwell and Kerland, though I am informed they were now secured to them: And therefore at present the Rents of these Two, and other forfeited Persons in Renfrew Shire and the Neighbourhood, are put into the Hands of James Dunlop of Houshill, and he is countable to the Treasury for them, as appears by his Commission, October 12th, this Year, which I have insert, App. N^o. 17.

Some Time after, Caldwell's Estate is gifted by the King to Dalziel. I have inserted a Copy of the Gift, App. N^o. 18. Kerland's is given to Drummond; Major Lermont's Estate is given to Mr. William Hamilton of Woollshaw, Quarreltoun and his Brother's to Mr. John Hamilton of Hallcraig. The Copies of the Gifts are before me, but being all the same, mutatis mutandis, 'tis needless to swell the Appendix with them. I find the King is prevailed with to pardon Robert Chalmers, condemned at this Time, in the Year 1669. and I set down, App. N^o. 19. a Copy of his Pardon, that the Reader may have all the View I can give him of this Affair, all together.

Here I would put an End to this Section; but the Sufferings of several other Gentlemen and Heritors, upon the Account of this Rising at Pentland, offer themselves to me. Most of them were forfeited, but I have not the Dates, and so I shall cast them together in this Place, with some Hints at the sore Oppression of their Families in the succeeding Years.

The Sufferings of the Family of Robertoun, in the Parish of Borg in Galloway, deserve a Room here; and I give an Hint at them from an attested Account now before me. John Gordon of Largmore, with his Brother in Law William Gordon of Robertoun, joyned with other Gentlemen in the Attempt at Pentland, where the said William Gordon was killed, to the great Loss of the Country where he lived, and his own Family, his aged Father having no more Sons. John Gordon was very sore wounded, and lost much Blood; through this, and his lying in the Fields some Nights after the Engagement, when he came Home to his own House, in

Of the State of Things during the rest of this Year, the disbanding the Army, Bond of Peace, and Indemnity.

IT remains now that I lead the Reader in a little to the Reasons and Method of putting some Stop to such heavy Persecution. The Bishops and their Party, who had been the Occasion of the raising the oppressing Army, use all their Interest to continue and keep it up; and here joyned them, not only the Officers and their Friends, but also several others, hoping to share of the Spoil of Presbyterians in the West and South.

Accordingly they endeavour to persuade the King, that all the Whiggs and Presbyterians are Enemies to Monarchy, as well as to the Church established by Law, and therefore must be extirpated. The Execution of this, they hope, will be put into the Hands of their Friends; and all of them expected they might come to reap the Harvest of Money and Estates, they had been greedily looking for since the Restoration.

From the Letter to the King immediately after the Victory at Pentland, the Reader will have observed their Desire of a more vigorous Application of the King's Power for rooting out rebellious Principles now leavening the Nation. The plain Scots of this, as explained by private Letters sent up at the same Time, was a Desire, that the Council might have Power put in their Hands to press the Declaration upon all Presbyterians of Estates and Riches; and in case of Refusal, which they made no Doubt of, straight to forfeit them. It was likewise pressed that the Army might be continued, and being filled with their good Friends, the rest of the Nation would have been Providitors for them, and Tenants at Will.

At present there was very little Difference between the King's Secret Council and Dalziel's Council of War. Duke Hamilton was only Rit-master Hamilton, as the General used to call him, Rothes was Rit-master Lesly, Linlithgow was Colonel Livingstone, and so of the rest. Dalziel and Drummond were, quickly after the Disaster at Pentland, made Privy Counsellors; and had this Project gone down at Court, the Misery of this Nation had been very soon completed, and the Eastern Turkish Slavery introduced, or that of France, where the Nobility and Officers of the Army are much the same.

The Bishops used all their Interest, and made as great Efforts as they were capable of, to get this Project gone into in its full Latitude; and Lieutenant-general Drummond goes up to Court to negotiate this Affair. He endeavours to persuade the King, the Country was so averse from Prelacy, that they could not be kept in Quiet, without a good Army and military Force, and violently pressed the Continuance of a standing Army, and the harshest Methods against the Refusers of the Declaration. The Archbishop of Glasgow went likewise up to London, the Primate, as we have heard, not being at present so very acceptable, as once he had been. He was a Man of Cunning and Subtily enough, and by his setting up so very much upon the Lay of the English Forms, was in good Terms with the violent Churchmen and their Party, and hoped by their Assistance, to have Conformity crammed down People's Throats, by the rigorous pressing of the Declaration, and a standing Army.

While this Matter is in Dependence, a Convention of Estates meet at Edinburgh, January 23^d, and lay on a Subsidy for the Army, Sixty four thousand Pounds a Month for a Year's Time, as may be seen in the printed Acts of Parliament. When I looked to the Act of the Convention, I wondred to find so few hard Words upon the late and recent Rising at Pentland; and am apt to think, this hath not been looked upon as so black and atrocious a Crime, as some Prelatists and Jacobites have made it since; nor so frightful an Attack upon the Prerogative, otherwise this loyal Convention would have taken more Notice of it. It may be farther remarked, that in the Narrative of the Act, 'tis said, That the King hitherto had maintained the Army upon his own Charges, which I know not so well how to reconcile with the express Application of the Fines, to the Payment of the Army, above narrated. In short, the Convention, in the Excess of their Loyalty, humbly offer to maintain all the Forces the King shall please to raise: A Blank is thus put in his Hand, to raise and continue as numerous a standing Army, as his arbitrary Counsellors should for their own Ends advise him to.

It was happy for the Nation, that Lawderdale, who had very much of the King's Ear at this Time, was of other Sentiments. He smelled, the Design of a great many, who were for a standing Army, was to enrich themselves and Friends, and gratify the Prelates in Severities upon Presbyterians.

Several Things concurred to cross this Violence projected against them. Bishop Sharp's double Dealing had been lately discovered to the King, and his Interest at Court was considerably weakened; therefore the Archbishop of Glasgow went up to Court, and not the Primate, as had been in use these Years bygone. Chancellor Hyde and his Party were fast losing Ground 1667.

Indeed he gave sufficient Evidence of the Sincerity of his Repentance. At the next Circuit 1684. he appeared with the rest of the Heritors, apprehending no more Hazard: But when all were again made to renew that Oath, which, he says, had been to him as a Fire in his Bosom, he retired, and fled Home; but was soon apprehended, and with Difficulty got off, with giving a Bond of Five thousand Merks, to appear when called. After this, by Storhouse he was forced, with his Wife and Infants, to quit his House in the Middle of Winter, and wandred in Mosses and Mountains, without any settled Abode, until the Liberty. By Barscob's Forfeiture he left his whole Patrimony, and the Donator would never give him a Farthing. In the 1685. his House was plundered by the Garison of Dalswintoun. But I must leave this good Man, from whose attested Account of his Sufferings we may guess at the Severities many others were trysted with.

James Callane
Merchant in Dumfries his Sufferings.

James Callane, Merchant in Dumfries, was forfeited some Time after Pentland, but his being there was never proven: He was indeed present, being dwelling in the Town, at the taking of Sir James Turner; but no other Guilt was ever made out against him, but mere Nonconformity. In the Years 1662 and 1663. for refusing to hear the Curates, he paid for a Year's Space, Forty Pence every Munday for himself and Wife. He underwent much Trouble, and several Imprisonments, for his Parliament-fine Five hundred Merks, and paid the Half of it, and Fifteen Pounds Sterling Riding-money, and more by far than the other Half in Expences, and Clerks Fees, to get his Discharge. Sir James Turner, before Pentland, exacted considerable Sums of Money from him. When he was declared Rebel, most unjustly, after Pentland, he left the Kingdom, and was Seven Years in the East Indies. At his Return, he was taken by Claverhouse, and imprisoned at Dumfries Fourteen Months, and at Edinburgh a Year and a Half; after which he was banished to Carolina, where he died. When the Accounts of this came Home, his Wife and Daughters at Dumfries were attacked for Nonconformity, and spoiled of any Thing they had, and forced to wander up and down in the Hills and Mountains, for Three Years and an Half.

Robert Lennox
of Plumpton.

Robert Lennox of Plumpton was reduced to great Losses and Straits before the Revolution, as appears by a Petition under his Hand, now in mine Eye. After Pentland, though I cannot find he was there, his Estate, worth Two thousand Merks yearly, with a good House upon it, was taken from him, and he forced to flee to England, where he was for Three Years in a wandring Condition. At length, with his Wife and Children, he went over to Ireland, and settled at Glenevie, where, the Lord blessing his Labours in Merchandizing, he came to have a good Stock, and was very useful to get a Presbyterian Minister settled there, where none had ever been. For this he was persecuted by the Bishop and his Official, and excommunicated, and upwards of Four hundred and thirty Pounds Sterling taken from him, whereby he was reduced to Beggary almost. Some Relief was got to him by my Lord Granade, and some others, and he ventured over to Scotland, and raised a Process against the Donator of his Estate, a Papist. When he produced his Charter of his Lands, it was taken from him, and he cast in Prison, where, through bad Treatment, he was brought very near Death, and got out; and afterwards lived upon Charity till the Revolution. All this he narrates in his Petition, which is all I know about him.

Thomas Lennox.

I find another Person, Thomas Lennox of Plumpton, in an attested Account of the Sufferings of the Parish of Borg, a very considerable Sufferer. I cannot learn whether he be any Relation of the former, but the particular Hardships he was under, before and since Pentland, are in short; Sir James Turner extorted from him Two hundred and thirteen Pounds; and, being imprisoned a great Part of Two Years, his Fees to Jaylors, &c. cost him Two hundred Pounds: Extorted by Sir William Bannentyne, Two hundred sixty six Pounds, thirteen Shillings, four Penies, besides Loss of his whole Crop, and most of his Houshold-plenishing: All this for mere Nonconformity, and without any Process against him. At one Time he was imprisoned at Edinburgh Three and thirty Weeks, and at another Three Months, precisely for refusing the Test.

Thus we have some Account of the Severities and Forfeitures immediately after the Defeat at Pentland. The Sufferings of several other excellent Persons upon this Score, will come in in the Progress of this History. 'Tis Time now to come forward to the Account of other Occurrences this Year, and to the stopping the Severities in part by the disbanding the Army, Bond of Peace, and Indemnity.

‘Fifthly, We do require you with all Speed to provide Arms and Ammunition for the Defence of the Kingdom; for which Purpose We do allow all the Remainder of the first Year’s Taxation; and because Money may not be presently raised, We do allow --- our Commissioner to allow such Rates for Advance of the same, as you think necessary.’
 ‘Sixthly, We do require you to take some effectual Course, that every Parish secure the Persons of their Ministers from Violence and Affronts.’
 ‘Lastly, For exemplary Punishments of the late Rebels, for the terrifying of all Men from daring to attempt any Thing of the like Nature hereafter, upon any Pretext whatsoever, and for the more effectual rooting out of rebellious Principles, We do peremptorily require you without any further Delay, to give present Order for the Criminal Pursuit of all Heritors, or Men of Estates, all Preachers and military Officers who were in the late Rebellion, or who assembled themselves without Our Authority, in order to the Rebellion, before the Justice-general, to the end they may be tried according to Law, and being found guilty, forfeited without any further Delay. So expecting a ready Obedience, and speedy Account from you, We bid you heartily Farewel. Given at Our Court at Whitehall the 12th Day of March, 1667. and of Our Reign the Nineteenth Year.’ By his Majesty’s Command.

LAW D E R D A L E.

That same Day the Council, ‘Appoint a Committee to meet and think upon Rules to judge what Persons are disaffected, and the fittest Means for securing the Persons of Ministers in every Parish.’ The Clerk is ordered to form Proclamations, conform to the Second and Third Articles of his Majesty’s Letter. They ordain a Warrant to the Advocate to pursue Heritors, &c. in Terms of the Sixth Article.

The Council’s Procedure upon it.

At their next Meeting, March 22^d, they approve the Two Draughts of the Proclamations laid before them, which are published March 25th. The First is, For bringing in of Arms from the Shires of Air, Lanerk, Renfrew, and Wigtoun, and Stewartry of Kirkcudbright, against the 1st Day of May. I have insert it, App. N^o. 20. The Order is universal through these Shires, and Gentlemen are only allowed to wear walking Swords. It seems no Body in these Western Shires, were allowed to have the Privilege of defending themselves or Families from Thieves and Robbers, they were so deeply leavened with Presbyterian Principles. One Pretext for this unreasonable Treatment of Subjects, is, To prevent the invading the Ministers of the Gospel, who were lawfully admitted Preachers of the Gospel among them. Parishes are made liable for all the injuries done to legal Ministers, not only when in the Exercise of their Ministerial Function, but when in their Houses and Families: And accordingly, as we shall have Occasion to remark, most iniquitous Fines were extorted from Parishes, when Thieves and Robbers came and spoiled the Curates Houses; or they themselves, by their Incivilities, Injustice, Unrighteousness, and Oppression, had provoked some passionate Persons to fright them, which the People of their Parish could neither prevent, neither so much as knew off, till the Attempt was over. These Attempts are charged upon these they now call Rebels in the Proclamation, most groundlessly: None, I can learn of, who were up at Pentland, and indeed no Presbyterian, approved these Riots. The Proclamation likewise seems to insinuate as much, as if those who had been at Pentland, were in Concert with the Dutch; which is a very idle and groundless Innuendo. Indeed this Proclamation had no great Consequence as to the bringing in of Arms; a few were brought together, and, a little while after this, were cast into the Sea.

Proclamation for bringing in of Arms from the Western Shires. App. N^o. 20. Remarks upon it.

Jointly with this, another Proclamation of the same Date is emitted, prohibiting all Persons who withdraw from Ordinances, and keep not their own Parish-church, to keep Houses above a Hundred Marks Value; as may be seen in the Paper it self, App. N^o. 21. This satisfied the Prelates somewhat, but did not much fill their Churches. Had this Act been executed against all Neglecters of publick Ordinances, I am persuaded the King might have had some very good Houses from many of the Managers, and their Friends, and even from some of the Bishops themselves, who cared very little for, and as little frequented any Assemblies for Worship.

Proclamation the same Date, about keeping of Houses. App. N^o. 21.

That same Day, they make a Return to the King’s Letter, and acquaint him with what they had done, and are to do, as to every Article of his Letter. A good Part we have seen in those Two Proclamations; but they give his Majesty their Opinion as to the ordering the Militia, and some other Heads, of which the curious Reader will perhaps desire to be informed of, and therefore it follows, App. N^o. 22.

Council’s Answer to the King’s Letter. App. N^o. 22.

I do not find a Sederunt of Council from March 22^d, till June 6th. The Reason of which I do not pretend to give; they use not to have so long Intervals. That Day a Letter is read from the King, dated May 4th.

King’s Letter about encouraging the Clergy.

‘That whereas nothing can be useful for Our Service, or more conducive for reclaiming the People from these treasonable and phariseick Principles, wherewith they have been poisoned by factious Preachers, than the encouraging the sober and orthodox Clergy, 1667. Ground in England, and in August this Year he resigned his Staff; and the Interest of our Scots Prelates at Court, leaned much upon him and his Party of High-fliers. And perhaps this Disappointment was not a little owing to a Difference fallen in of late 'twixt Lawderdale and several of our great Men in Scotland, who had been his Friends in his Debates with Middleton, yea, had been brought into their Posts by his Influence.

Differences among our Statesmen, and those who oppose Lawderdale, who stand by him.

Changes in the Council and Officers of State this Year.

King's Letter, March 12. upon the Declaration and other Things.

Of this Numoer were Duke Hamilton, Roths, Newburgh, Linlithgow, Dalziel, with the Officers of the Army; and almost the whole of the Prelates joynd them. These made up a separate Party from Lawderdale's Friends in the Council, who were the Earls of Argyle, Tweddale, Kincardin, the Lord Cochran, Sir Robert Murray, and some others. Lawderdale's Favour with the King made him able with his few Friends to make a Stand against his Enemies, and his Interest above produced very considerable Charges in Scotland this Year.

In March I find the Earl of Airly and Lord Cochran are made Counsellors; in June Sir Robert Murray is made Justice-clerk; in October the Earl of Roths's Commission is declared void, and he is divested of several Profits he enjoyed, and made Chancellor; the Army is disbanded, and an Indemnity granted, as we shall hear. These Civil Changes, save in as far as they had Influence upon the Sufferings or Respite of Presbyterians, I leave to be accounted for by others.

After the Convention of Estates were up, Lawderdale prevailed with the King to send his Letter, dated March 12th, to the Council, which, though severe enough, was not so agreeable to the Projects of such who were concerned in the Army: yea, it was a considerable Disappointment to the Party who opposed Lawderdale, and the Forerunner of a greater. The Council read it, March 21st. By it they are allowed to put the Declaration to all suspect Persons, and to incarcerate such as refused it. But they cared not much for bare Imprisonments, those produced little Money, and it was the Estates of the Whiggs and their Money they had in their Eye. The Conversion of Phanaticks by Imprisonment, was either despair'd of, or little at Heart. This Letter is of that Importance, and had so many Consequences, that it must have a Place here.

The King's Letter read in Council, March 20th.

- CHARLES, &c. We Greet you well. The Convention of Estates of that Our ancient Kingdom, having liberally and cheerfully contributed to the Maintenance of the Forces raised, and such as We should think fit to raise at this Time, for the Defence of the Kingdom against any foreign Invasion, or intestine Rebellion, We have seriously considered of the fittest Means for securing the Kingdom against Invasions from abroad, for rooting out of the late Rebellion, preventing the like for the future, and for quieting and preserving the Peace of the Kingdom, and the Good of the Church, as it is now settled: And for these Ends having heard those lately come from Scotland, and considered the Advices which We have had out of Scotland, We have resolved to send you these following Powers and Directions.
1. First, According to the Advice of Our Privy Council, for the better Discovery of such as are dangerous, We do impower you to tender the Oath of Allegiance, and the Declaration, which was by Our Parliament required of all who are or shall be in any Place of Trust, unto such active and leading Persons of the disaffected Party, as you shall find just Reason to suspect, and secure the Persons of all who shall refuse either the one or the other, when so tendered unto them.
 2. Secondly, We do authorize you in Our Name to emit a Proclamation in due Form, requiring all, both Gentlemen, and Heritors, and Commons, within these Shires where there appears most Disaffection, (which you are to set down in that Proclamation) to bring in, by such a Day to be named by you, all Arms of what Sort soever, and all Powder, under such Pains and Penalties as be by you thought fit; and that these Arms and Powder be forthwith secured in any of Our Garisons of Edinburgh Castle, Stirling Castle, or Dumbarton Castle, you always allowing Gentlemen to wear their Swords.
 3. Thirdly, We do authorize and enjoin you to seize all serviceable Horses, in the Possession of any disaffected or suspected Person of what Quality soever; provided always, that such Horses be first apprized by honest and indifferent Persons, at the Sight of the Sheriff, or some other Person or Persons appointed by you for that Effect.
 4. Fourthly, We do authorize and require you with all possible Diligence, to model a Militia of Horse and Foot in the several Shires of that Our Kingdom, to be ready to joyn with Our Forces, as they shall be commanded, for securing the Kingdom, as well against intestine Commotions as foreign Invasions, which you are to model, and offer to Us with all possible Expedition for Our Approbation; which being signified, and We having named Persons loyal and well principled, to command them, you may speedily proceed to put the Kingdom in a Posture of Defence.

‘Fifthly, We do require you with all Speed to provide Arms and Ammunition for the Defence of the Kingdom; for which Purpose We do allow all the Remainder of the first Year’s Taxation; and because Money may not be presently raised, We do allow --- our Commissioner to allow such Rates for Advance of the same, as you think necessary.’

‘Sixthly, We do require you to take some effectual Course, that every Parish secure the Persons of their Ministers from Violence and Affronts.’

‘Lastly, For exemplary Punishments of the late Rebels, for the terrifying of all Men from daring to attempt any Thing of the like Nature hereafter, upon any Pretext whatsoever, and for the more effectual rooting out of rebellious Principles, We do peremptorily require you without any further Delay, to give present Order for the Criminal Pursuit of all Heritors, or Men of Estates, all Preachers and military Officers who were in the late Rebellion, or who assembled themselves without Our Authority, in order to the Rebellion, before the Justice-general, to the end they may be tried according to Law, and being found guilty, forfeited without any further Delay. So expecting a ready Obedience, and speedy Account from you, We bid you heartily Farewel. Given at Our Court at Whitehall the 12th Day of March, 1667. and of Our Reign the Nineteenth Year.’ By his Majesty’s Command.

App. N^o. 22.

I do not find a Sederunt of Council from March 22^d, till June 6th. The Reason of which I do not pretend to give; they use not to have so long Intervals. That Day a Letter is read from the King, dated May 4th.

King’s Letter about encouraging the Clergy.

‘That whereas nothing can be useful for Our Service, or more conducive for reclaiming the People from these treasonable and phariseick Principles, wherewith they have been poisoned by factious Preachers, than the encouraging the sober and orthodox Clergy, 1667.

Clergy, against whom the greatest Rage appeared in the late Rebellion. And whereas We are resolved not only to encourage and protect the Bishops in the Exercise of their Callings, and all the orthodox Clergy under them, but also to discountenance all of what Quality soever, who shall shew any Disrespect or Disaffection to that Order and Government: Therefore We do more especially and earnestly recommend it to you, who are trusted under Us with the Government of that Our ancient Kingdom, to give all Manner of Countenance and Encouragement to the orthodox Clergy, and to punish severely any Affronts or Disrespect put upon them; to the end that they may be the more endeared to their People, when they see how careful We, and all in Authority under Us, are of their Protection in the due Exercise of their Calling.

Remarks upon it.

Indeed when many of the orthodox Clergy, as their Name now is, took no Care to conciliate Respect to themselves by their Doctrine and a proper Ministerial Carriage, but, by their violent persecuting Temper, drew down the Hatred of their People; there was no other Way left to support them, but the secular Arm that had made the Bishops, and forced in this Clergy upon Scotland. I have heard nothing of any Rage, or particular Injuries done to the Episcopal Ministers, by the People who were in Arms lately; but somewhat of the Nature of this Letter was necessary at this Time, when it was found proper to take a different Course from what the Prelates inclined to.

Proclamation for the Protection of the orthodox Clergy.

According to this Letter, and indeed beyond the Expressions in it, a Proclamation is emitted next Council-day, June 13th, making Heritors and Parishioners liable for all the Damages done to Ministers, and that in the strongest Terms: And we shall afterwards find it rigorously enough put in Execution. Since I have not seen it in Print, I have insert it, App. N^o. 23. and it needs no Remarks; some upon the Matter may fall in afterwards.

App. N^o. 23.

Letter from the King, urging the Forfeiture, and other Heads.

That same Day, another Letter from the King to the Council is read, pressing in warm Terms, the forfeiting of such who had been concerned in the Rising, and escaped from it; the Issue of which was the Justiciary Court, held August 15th; as we have seen in the former Section. The King there makes an Innuendo, That some of his Judges were too favourable to that Party; with some other Particulars, which the Reader will best see in the Proclamation itself, which I have annexed, App. N^o. 24. The Occasion of it was the Clamour of the Bishops, and an alledged Attempt made upon Mr. Patrick Swinton Curate of Borg in Galloway, who was indeed very active in the Persecution of that Country. I own any irregular Attempt, even under Provocation, is a Fault; and I will not in the least offer to vindicate it in any whosoever.

App. N^o. 24.

Sir Robert Murray comes down from Court, to get true Accounts of the State of Things.

The Project being now formed above, and Things thus disposed for slackning Severities against the Presbyterians, and dismissing the Army; Sir Robert Murray came down from Court, to get a true Account of the State of the Country, and the Carriage of the Army. He was a very learned and ingenious Gentleman, a great Ornament of his Country, a diligent Promoter of every Branch of useful Knowledge, and moderate in his Temper. Indeed, true and useful Learning makes all who have it, heartily against Persecution for Conscience Sake, and a Friend to the Liberties of their Country. The Primate's contradictory Accounts, and the great Interest these concerned in the Army, had in the Scots Council, all the Counsellors almost being under Pay, made the King very justly suspect the Informations he got from Scotland. In June, I find Sir Robert admitted to the Office of Justice-clerk.

He is made Justice-clerk.

Pains taken to evince the Necessity of keeping up the Army.

While Sir Robert is in Scotland, all the Efforts possible were made by the Prelates and the Army, to force some Evidences of the Necessity of the continuing the Forces now in Pay. One Day, Letters come in to Edinburgh, signifying that the Whiggs were in Arms again. Indeed another Pentland would not have been unwelcome to some now. At another Time, the Accounts came in of Attacks upon the legal Ministers Houses. I find it believed by People who understood the Circumstances of those Attempts, that some of the Army did perfonate the Whiggs, and plundered, and rifled, or at least threatened some of the Curates Houses; but having seen no particular Proofs of this Fact, I cannot assert it. However, those Attempts were made a strong Argument for the keeping up of the Army; yea, Sir William Bannantyne was sent into Galloway a second Time, to exact the Bonds he had taken from a great many there, which yet were not payable till Martinmas, in Hope that the poor People might be prevailed with to resist such palpable Injustice; and great was the Struggle at the Council-board to preserve the Army, the chief Hope and Support of the Bishops.

Disbanding the Army put off till the Peace with the Dutch is concluded.

Some Favours to confined Gentlemen, William Lawrie of Blackwood and the Laird of Aikenhead.

Till once the Peace with Holland was concluded, it was not found proper to disband the Forces: But mean while, I find, in July, many Prisoners, upon the Account of Pentland, are set at Liberty, upon their signing the Declaration; and some Favours are granted, but awkwardly enough, to some Presbyterian Gentlemen confined and imprisoned. William Lawrie Tutor of Blackwood, is allowed to come out of the Castle of Edinburgh, and to have the Liberty of the Town, about his Affairs. James Hamilton of Aikenhead (at the writing of this, 1715. lately dead) applies the Council, shewing, 'He had been confined to the Town of Inverness, and Liberties thereof, for Ten Months; and, after the Payment of a ' good

‘ good Part of his Fine, was confined to his own House, and a Mile about it, where he had lived peaceably; and all this for mere Nonconformity, as we have heard; craving, he might be permitted to come to Edinburgh about necessary Affairs.’ The Council grants him Liberty, upon giving Bond, under the Penalty of Ten thousand Merks, to return to his Confinement ’twixt and the 1st of August next.

1667.

That same Day, July 11th, the Council have before them a Report of a Committee they had appointed for considering the Case of the Prisoners after Pentland, and come to the following Issue as to this Matter.

Case of the Prisoners after Pentland.

THE Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, having considered the Report of their Committee for examining the Prisoners in the Tolbooths of Edinburgh and Canon-gate, upon the Account of their Accession to the late Rebellion; bearing, That they have examined the said Prisoners, and thereafter considered their own Confessions, do find all of them to come under one of these Four Classes. 1. Some that are risen in Arms, and are, by their own Confession, clearly guilty of Rebellion, and refuse the Allegiance and Declaration. 2. These who are so guilty, and are content to take the Allegiance and Declaration. 3. These who have been taken upon Suspicion, that they have had some Accession, by resetting, abetting, or otherwise complying, and nevertheless deny they had any Accession, and against whom as yet there is no Evidence or Probation of Guilt, who refuse to take the Declaration. 4. These who are in the Condition above written, and are content to take the Declaration: In which several Classes the Committee have placed the several Prisoners, conform to the Lists thereof, given in.

Committee's Report.

The said Lords having considered the said Report, with his Majesty's Letter, giving Order for sending such of the said Prisoners as were guilty, to the Plantations, do ordain the Persons contained in the first Class, who are clearly guilty of Rebellion, to be sent to Barbadoes with the first Opportunity; and ordain a Letter to be written to the Secretary, to endeavour to procure his Majesty's Pardon and Favour for the Two Prisoners in the Second Class: Ordain these in the Third Class to continue in Prison; and recommend to the former Committee to examine how and by whom they were imprisoned, and to call these who did imprison them, to give Evidence against them; and ordain these in the Fourth Class to be set at Liberty forth of Prison, they taking the Oath of Allegiance and Declaration; and such of them as are able, finding Caution to appear when they shall be called, and to keep his Majesty's Peace in the mean time; and such of them as are not able, enacting themselves to that Effect, under the Penalties contained in the Laws and Acts of Parliament.

The Council's Orders upon it.

By the Registers of August 1st, I find that Lawderdale received this Opinion of the Council; and acquaints them, as the King's Will, That as to Simpson and Rome of Beech, the Two spoken of, the King remits them to the Council, and approves of what they had done, and leaves it to the Council to determine of all the Commons that were in the Rebellion, as they shall think best for his Service, and the Quiet of the Nation; reserving the landed Men, and such as are under Process for Treason, to the due Course of the Law. And this Power, as to the Commons, is afterwards explained, upon the Council's Desire, of all the Commons at Pentland, whether in Prison or not.

The Approbation, and leaving of Commons to the Council.

At length a Letter from the King, dated August 13th, comes down, peremptorily ordering the disbanding the Army; it stands, App. N^o. 25. The Peace with France, Holland, and Denmark, had been concluded in the End of July. The Nation could not much longer bear an Army, at least acting as they did, without Ruin. A Captain's Place was now as profitable as a good Estate; and no Redress could be got of the Cruelties and Injustice committed by them, the Privy Council being mostly made up of the Army. By this the Presbyterians had a considerable Breathing, when, upon the Event of a Peace abroad, they expected the utmost Rigour, and the Bishops resolved it.

The Army ordered to be disbanded, by the King's Letter, Aug 13. App N^o. 25.

The Forfeitures we have heard passed this Month, balanced the Dissolution of the Army, to the Two chief Officers, Dalziel and Drummond, and the rest behaved to be satisfied. I am told, the Archbishop of Glasgow was extremely chagrined at this Step, and said, Now that the Army was disbanded, the Gospel would go out of his Diocese. The King's Letter is very peremptory, and the Army is paid and disbanded, except Two Troops of Horse, and Linlithgow's Foot-guards.

The Officers and Bishops dissatisfied. The Archbishop of Glasgow's Expression.

Now, for a Season, Matters are managed by the more moderate Part of the Council, Tweeddale, Sir Robert Murray, and others, under the Direction of Lawderdale.

When the Army is removed, the next Question in Council is, How the Country shall be kept in Peace without the Army? Here the Two different Parties in Council acted their different Parts, according to their differing Views and Designs. The Bishops and their Party, who had managed all here for some Time, were violently for pressing the Declaration upon all suspected Persons, and no doubt quoted the King's Letter of March last, allowing this.

Different Methods proposed for the Peace of the Country, when the Army is disbanded. The one Side for pursuing the Declaration.

1667.

Forfeitures and Spoil were now a little out of their present Hopes, but still that Party continued to press the hardest Measures they had any Prospect of accomplishing, expecting such Measures might at length irritate the Country, and open a new Door for Violence and Force. In this their good Friends concerned in the Army heartily joyned them.

The other Side propose a Bond of Peace.

The moderate Party, Tweddale, Kincardin, Cochran, and Sir Robert Murray, who now had the Treasury in Commission, with such as joyned them, proposed a Bond of Peace to be taken and subscribed by all to whom it should be tendered; and alledged this would either be taken, and so the End proposed was gained; or be refused, and then the Refusers, which they imagined would be very few, would be exposed, and every Body would observe their Unaccountableness, in standing out against so reasonable and easy a Demand.

This carries in Council very narrowly,
September 13.

After Abundance of warm Reasoning anent the Two Expedients, the Council came to state the Vote, which of them should be gone into, the Declaration, or Bond of Peace. When the Rolls were called, Sir Peter Wedderburn Clerk to the Council affirmed, the first Expedient carried. Sir Robert Murray contradicted him, and the Rolls were again called, and the Clerk affirmed a Second Time the Declaration carried. Sir Robert a Second Time contradicted him. Great Heat arose, and the Chancellor blamed Sir Robert for questioning the Clerk's Fidelity. He answered, he would credit his own Senses more than any Clerk in the World. And the Rolls being called, and the Votes distinctly and narrowly marked, it was found, the Bond of Peace was voted to be the Expedient, by the Plurality.

This Council-day, September 13th, the Members were fully convened: Both Sides had mustered their Forces, and there were present, 'Earl of Rothes the King's Commissioner, Archbishops of St. Andrews and Glasgow, Duke Hamilton, Marquis of Montrose, Earls of Kelly, Weems, Airlie, Callender, Annandale, Tweddale, Kincardin, and Dundee, Lords Drumlanerk, Sinclair, Cochran, Bellenden, General Dalziel, Lieutenant-general Drummond, Sir John Gilmer Lord President of the Session, Sir Archibald Primrose Lord Register, Sir John Nisbet Lord Advocate, the Lord Justice-clerk, Sir Robert Murray, Sir James Lockhart of Lee, the Lairds of Haltoun and Niddry.'

Council's Proposals to the King, September
13.

The Council, after their Debates are over, offer some Propositions to the King, for the Peace of the Country when the Army is disbanded, that after Examination, he may signify his Pleasure thereanent: And they are as follow.

1st. That a Proclamation be issued, bearing a general Pardon and Indemnity to all that were in the late Rebellion, except these that are forfeited, or under the Process of Forfeiture; as also all such, as since the late Rebellion, have done Violence to the Persons of Ministers, invaded their Houses, or robbed and taken away their Goods, the said Persons indemnified always coming in to such as the Council shall appoint, betwixt and a blank Day, and giving Bond, and sufficient Surety for the Peace, or otherwise give their own Bond and their Oath, that they are not able to find Caution, at the Sight of these who shall be appointed by the Council.'

2^{dly}. That such Noblemen and Gentlemen, Heritors and Feuars, who shall subscribe Bonds for blank Sums of Money, for themselves, and their respective Tenants and Servants, to keep the Peace; the said Noblemen and Gentlemen, Heritors and Feuars, for their Relief and Security, shall have Power and Warrant to take Bonds from their Tenants and Servants for blank Sums of Money, not to rise in Arms against, or without the King's Authority; and not to buy any Arms, or keep Horses above the Value of Threescore Pounds Scots; with Power to disarm their Tenants, and if they refuse to give Bonds, as said is, in that Case, if they have no Tacks nor Rentals, that they remove them from their Possessions; and if they have standing Tacks or Rentals for Years yet to run, that they raise Letters, and charge them for that Effect under the Signet of the Privy Council, for which these shall be a sufficient Warrant to the Clerk thereof to grant the same, and shall cause denounce them Rebels, and put them to the Horn; whereupon it is declared, that their Masters shall have the Gift of their single, or liferent Escheat gratis, in so far as may be extended to the Rooms and Possessions belonging to their Masters.'

3^{dly}. That a Militia be settled, in that Way that his Majesty shall be pleased to appoint.'

4^{thly}. That the King's Royal Pleasure may be known, as to all Noblemen, Gentlemen, Heritors, and Feuars, who shall enter in Bond for themselves, or their Tenants and Servants to keep the Peace, and, if they need, to be pressed with the taking of the Declaration.'

5^{thly}. That an express Order be sent for taking off the Proclamation of the 25th of March last, for bringing in of Horses and Arms, as to all such as have taken the Oath of Allegiance and Declaration, or have carried Arms for his Majesty's Authority against those in the late Rebellion.'

King's Answer
by his Letter
October 1, to the Council.

Upon the 8th of October, the King's Letter in Answer to their Proposals, comes to be read, with a Proclamation of Pardon and Indemnity, dated October 1st. This I have insert here from the Register, as follows.

CHARLES, &c. Whereas you, having considered of the best and most effectual Ways, 1667.
 for the securing of the Peace of that Our Kingdom, did, upon the 13th of September last, offer to Us Five Proposals, that, after Examination thereof, We might signify Our Royal Pleasure and Commands concerning them. We have considered the said Proposals, and have thought fit to return you this Our Answer, that We approve of the First Proposal; and in pursuance thereof, We send you this inclosed Proclamation, which We require you to publish in the ordinary Way. We do also approve the Second Proposal, and require you speedily to give Order for these Bonds from the Noblemen, Gentlemen, Heritors, Feuars, for themselves, and their respective Tenants and Servants to keep the Peace, and for their Relief, as is exprest in that Proposal. As to the Third Proposal, We shall give Orders speedily for settling a Militia in that Our ancient Kingdom. In answer to the Fourth Proposal, it is Our Royal Pleasure, as to the Noblemen, Gentlemen, Heritors, and Feuars, who shall enter in Bonds for themselves, Tenants, and Servants, to keep the Peace, according to the Second Proposal, that they be not prest with taking the Declaration, enjoyned by the Act of Parliament for Persons of publick Trust. And lastly, in pursuance of your Fifth Proposal, We do authorize you to take off the Proclamation, dated the 25th of March last, in relation to all such as have already taken the Oath of Allegiance and Declaration, or who have carried Arms for Our Authority against those in the late Rebellion. These, We hope, shall prove effectual Means for securing the Peace. Yet, lest there should be any so malicious, as not to accept of this Our gracious Pardon, and for the more effectual executing of what is proposed, We do require you to advise of the most convenient Quarters for the Horse and Foot yet standing, to the end they may speedily march thither, and carefully observe such Orders as you shall appoint. We do again repeat what we seriously recommended by Our last Letter from Whitehall, concerning countenancing Our Archbishops and Bishops, and all the orthodox Clergy. And as We have here signified Our Pleasure about your Proposals for the Quiet of the Kingdom; so We are no less solicitous for the Peace and Quiet of the Church, recommending to you, that all prudent and effectual Course may be pursued for the Peace and Quiet of the Church, for Obedience to the good Laws made thereanent, and for punishing the Contemners and Disobeyers of the same. And so We bid you heartily Farewel. Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the First Day of October 1667. and of Our Reign the Nineteenth Year.' By his Majesty's Command.

LAWDERDALE.

I find by the Registers, that there hath been Heat among the Counsellors upon receiving of this Letter, and the Council do not, as hitherto they never failed since the Restoration, order immediate Publication of the King's Proclamation, but appoint a Committee to consider the Letter and Proclamation.

To Morrow, October 9th, the Council order some Alterations to be made in the Names of the excepted Persons, in the Proclamation of Indemnity. They find there is no such Person as — Row Chaplain to Scotstarbet. They order Caldwell and Kerland to be designed Younger,
 Mr. Trail to be designed Chaplain to Scotstarbet, and Paton they order to be designed late Preacher, and Row's Name to be scored out; and then appoint the Proclamation to be printed. I have insert it, App. N^o. 26.

sons.

Proclamation
of Indemnity,
App. N^o. 26.

This Pardon and Indemnity had this Remark made upon it by some, when it came out,
 That in the Beginning it pardoned all, in the Middle very few, and in the Close none at all.
 After the Amendments made upon this Proclamation, which are Censures on their own Rash-ness, and Inconsiderateness in their former Acts, among the excepted some still remain dead, and others of them who were not at Pentland, as hath been remarked. In short, the Reader will notice, that the same Lists almost are in the Proclamation discharging Harbour, the Ad-vocate's Commission for processing by Forfeiture, and these Exceptions in the Pardon.

Remarks upon it.

The Exceptions are very large, about Sixty in Number, and include the Persons of any Consideration almost, which they got Notice of. These, with about Forty executed, and an Hundred killed, and a good many who died of their Wounds, do make up near a Third Part of the People who had been actually in the Engagement at Pentland; and the rest were such whose Names they had not come to the Knowledge of, and generally mean Country-people, whom they needed scarce notice. So the King's Mercy in this Indemnity does not extend it self very far.

The Exception of robbing Ministers Houses, is cast in to throw an Odium upon all engaged in that Appearance. It hath been already noticed, that at this Time it was alledged, some of the Army, under the Mask of these honest People, had been put upon this Work; but I can find no Presbyterians engaged in those Attacks. The last and greatest Clog put upon the Indemnity is, the Bond of Peace, with a Clause of Nonresistance in it, which ren-dred it almost useless to any who had been at Pentland; and very few of them, as far as I hear of, took it. However, this Pardon, such as it was, tended to the Quiet of the Country, and joyned with the disbanding of the Army, which was by far the more merciful and gracious Act, gave a little Breathing to the Presbyterians in the West and South.

Joynly with this Indemnity, the Council publish their Act of the same Date, containing the Names of the Persons appointed by them in the different Shires, to take Subscriptions from such as claimed Benefit by this Indemnity, and annex the Copy of the Bonds, with Caution and without it, required of them; which the Reader will find App. N^o. 27. and order all the Prisoners at Edinburgh, to be dismissed upon signing the Bond.

That same Day, the Council agree upon the Bond of Peace to be signed by Noblemen, Gentlemen, Heritors, and Feuars, for themselves, Tenants, and Servants, and make an Act thereanent, which I have insert, App. N^o. 28. and from it I shall set down here the Tenor of this Bond, which, at this Juncture, was very much pressed on the West and South-country. As it stands in the Registers, it runs;

Tenor of the Bond of Peace.

I A. B. do engage, bind and oblige my self, to keep the publick Peace, under the Pain of a Year's Rent of all and whatfomever Lands and Heritages pertain to me, to be paid in case I contravene; and also I bind and oblige me, that these who are, or at any Time hereafter shall be my Men, Tenants, and Servants, during the Time they shall be Men, Tenants, and Servants to me, shall keep the publick Peace, under the Pains respective aftermentioned, to be paid toties quoties, if they, or any of them shall do in the contrar; that is to say, of the Payment of the full Value of a Year's Duty, payable to me for the Time by the Tenant or Tenants that shall happen to contravene; and for my Servants, in case any of them shall contravene, the full Value of a Year's Fee. Which Sums foresaid, I bind and oblige me, my Heirs, Executors, and Successors, in the Case foresaid, to pay the Commissioners of the Treasury, Treasurer or Treasurer-depute, who shall happen to be for the Time, for his Majesty's Use: And consent thir Presents be registrate in the Books of Privy Council.

A shorter Form of it.

I have before me a good many other Copies of the Bond of Peace at this Time pressed, which all agree, and are only a little shorter than this taken from the Registers. And though the above Draught is that which was imposed by Authority, yet having Ground to think that what follows was the Shape in which it was offered up and down the Country, I have likewise added it.

I A. B. do bind and oblige me to keep the publick Peace, and if I fail, that I shall pay an Year's Rent: Likewise, that my Tenants and Men-servants shall keep the publick Peace, and in case they fail, I oblige my self to pay for every Tenant his Year's Rent, and for every Seryant his Year's Fee. And for the more Security I am content thir Presents be registrate in the Books of Council.

This became Matter of warm Debate.

This short Bond was framed, as were most of the publick Papers of this Time, so as it became Matter of warm Debates amongst conscientious and religious People, who feared an Oath, and, which are next to it, Bonds and Subscriptions. The Words were so general, as, at first View, they seemed to contain nothing contrary to the Principles of a Presbyterian, and those who desired to stand firm to the Land's Covenants: Yet, they were so ambiguous, as it might be affirmed by the Judge who tendred this Bond, that the Subscriber did homologate the present Government, both in Church and State. So it became Matter of Dispute and Controversy among these who were opposite to the Bishops and their Ways.

Expedient proposed by some, of a Declaration and Protestation. Copy of this App. N^o. 29.

To obviate this Ambiguity, an Expedient was offered by some, of a Declaration of the Subscribers Sense and Meaning, with a Consent of the Imposers to it; and a Protestation taken against the supposed unlawful Meaning of the Words in the Bond, and all done by Way of Instrument, in the Hands of a publick Notar, before Witnesses. A Copy of one of these Instruments, taken, or designed to be taken, December 30th, 1667. for the Paper is only a Double, I have insert, App. N^o. 29. Whether this Method was fallen into by many, or accepted by the Persons appointed to take Subscriptions, I cannot say. By the Clause about Nonresistance in this Copy, it seems to relate to some concerned in Pentland.

Many Papers sent upon these Bonds.

Many Papers pro and con, anent those Bonds of Peace, were handed about at this Time. The Hinge of the Debates lies in the Import of keeping the publick Peace, and the nonresisting Clause in the printed Bond, annexed to the Council's Act above referred to, App. N^o. 27. which indeed defeat the pretended Design to these Persons, and probably was cast in by the Prelates and their Friends, as knowing it would render the Pardon very much precarious.

The Question stated, and the Debate summed up.

The Question then was plainly stated thus, Whether he who engageth to keep the publick Peace, engageth to do nothing which may disturb or alter the present Laws to which the publick Peace plainly refers? Or, Whether the Subscriber only binds himself to the Duties of Righteousness commanded by the Moral Law? It was said upon the one Hand, That no more was in keeping the publick Peace, but what we are antecedently bound unto by the Second cond Table of the Law: And, on the other, it was urged, That when Two Persons enter into a solemn Treaty with each other, they are bound, not only to all moral Duties, antecedently lying upon them, but even to every Particular in the Treaty, and are to keep by it, even though it be to their own Hurt, according to all Articles and Clauses in it. The other Branch of the Debate ancient rising in Arms, and resisting Tyrants, or Subjects endeavouring to have unjust and unrighteous Laws repealed by Arms, when precluded of all other Methods of Redress, both which had been done in Scotland more than once, landed in long and nice Reasonings.

People did divide in their Judgments and Practices, as frequently happens in dubious and debatable Cases. Some took it, and others refused it, under different Views of the Extent, Import, and Meaning of the Words. Yet, for any Thing I can learn, there followed no Alienation of Affections among Presbyterians, but the greatest Harmony was kept up. It was good that this Trial did not last long; but our Managers within a little laid it aside.

Different Practices, and yet Harmony kept up.

Sir George Mackenzie, and the Jacobites at this Day, aggravate the Wilfulness of those who refused this Bond of Peace, from the Consideration of the general Nature of the Terms in which it was conceived, affirming, That there was no more demanded thereby, than the ordinary Surety of Lawborrows; and that seeing any private Man may force his Neighbour to give him such Surety, much more might the King, who had Reason to be jealous of their breaking the Peace, from their late Rising at Pentland. A few Considerations will abundantly show the Insufficiency of this Reasoning.

Remarks by Sir George Mackenzie upon such who refused this Bond.

The more general the Terms were, the more ensnaring was the Bond; because, when the Managers of these Times had a Mind to be at a Man, they could easily, upon the least Shadow of an Offence, bring him within so wide a Noose. The Oath of the Test was conceived in very general Terms; yet, as we shall see afterward, when the Earl of Argyle, at taking of it, restricted its Generality, by declaring he did not mean to bind up himself to wish or endeavour any Alteration he thought to the Advantage of Church or State; he was hereupon sentenced to lose his Head. The very same Risk did every Man run at this Time, who subscribed the Bond to keep the Peace, in case he had any such Meaning, which 'tis certain every conscientious Man would have. The Instance of Lawborrows by private Men, does not hit this Case; for, if any Neighbour oblige me to find Surety to him, I can oblige him, on the other Hand, to find Surety to me: But in this Case, when unlimited Subjection was enacted by Law, it had been high Treason to demand any such Thing of the King. In short, how much soever the late Rising at Pentland, may be supposed to give the King Ground to be jealous that they would break the Peace; 'tis as plain that the Government's former Conduct to Presbyterians, gave them better Ground to be jealous, that it would give them the greater Provocation so to do.

Reflections upon them.

That same Day, October 9th, the Council form and agree to Two Acts. The one was printed, taking off the Restraint put upon Persons in the Western Shires, as to carrying Arms, by the Proclamation dated March 25th last; and allowing such who take the Oath of Allegiance, subscribe the Declaration, or have carried Arms for the King against the late Rebels, as full and free Liberty as any other Subjects, to have and carry Arms: Declaring always, that nothing in this derogates in any ways from that Part of the said Proclamation for the Defence of the Persons, Families, and Goods of Ministers.

Part of the Proclamation, March 25th last, rescinded.

The other was of more general Consequence, and related to Persons disobedient to Ecclesiastical Authority, which not being in Print, I insert here from the Registers.

Acts, October 11th as to Persons disobedient to Ecclesiastical Authority.

THE Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council being informed, That there are many profane Persons, who are not only scandalous in their Lives and Conversations, but being cited before Church-meetings, to answer for the same, are contumacious, and refuse to appear, after lawful Citation, to the great Contempt of Ecclesiastical Authority, as now settled; whereby open Profanity is like to abound and increase, and Ecclesiastical Government and Discipline like to be weakened and suffer in the Exercise thereof: Therefore the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, give Power and Warrant to all Magistrates and Ministers of Justice within this Kingdom, upon Intimation made by the Bishops, within their respective Dioceses, to apprehend such Persons, and incarcerate them, until such Time as they shall find sufficient Caution to compare and answer before the Church-meetings authorized by Law, as have cited them for such Scandals, whereof they are, or shall be accused. With Certification, that all such Magistrates and Ministers of Justice, who shall refuse to apprehend and incarcerate, as said is, shall be answerable before the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, under all highest Pains.

This Act was improved by the Bishops far beyond the Letter of it, which seems to restrict it to such as are openly profane. And all who, as they called it, were irregular, and did not subject themselves to their Authority and Courts, when cited for their not keeping the Church, and the like, were harassed and imprisoned; while, in the mean time, Papists and Quakers, as we shall see, were scandalously overlooked.

In November, the Council agree to some Regulations and Orders to the standing Forces, and record them, November 15th. They are frequently referred to afterwards, and are Documents of the Irregularities and Depredations committed by the Soldiers upon the Country; therefore I have annexed them, App. N^o. 30. Those Regulations were very little looked after by the Makers of them, and, generally speaking, as little observed by the Soldiers. That same Day, the Council form an Act concerning the Forces, Horse and Foot, in the Shires of Lanerk, Air, and Wigtoun, to prevent Abuses; which I have likewise added, App. N^o. 31. But none of these were of any great Use to relieve the Country from the Abuses of the Army.

Upon taking the Bond of Peace, by the Council-records I find several of the Gentlemen confined in the Year 1665. liberate; some upon a Bond of Caution, and some without it. Upon the 21st of November, Sir Hugh Campbell of Cesnock, James Dunlop of that Ilk, and James Holburn of Menstry, petition the Council they may be liberate from their long Imprisonment in the Castle of Edinburgh, and beg their Case may be recommended to his Majesty. The Council write a Letter to Lawderdale, signifying they were made Prisoners by the King's immediate Order, and desiring the Secretary may represent their Case, and that of others in Prison, to the King. In December, a Return comes, ordering them to be liberate, Cesnock giving Bond and Caution for keeping the Peace, under a Thousand Pounds Sterling, Menstry and Dunlop under Twelve thousand Merks Scots.

The same Day, I find the Laird of Blackstoun liberate by the Council's Act following.

‘ANENT a Petition presented by Maxwel of Blackstoun, bearing, That by Order of Council, dated the 13th of December last, the Petitioner was committed Prisoner to the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, and by a posterior Act, transported to the Castle, where he has ever since been detained Prisoner; Therefore humbly craving to be set at Liberty: The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council considering the foresaid, and that the Petitioner is not excepted out of the Indemnity, and that there is neither Sentence nor Process of Forfeiture depending against him, give Order to set him at Liberty, he giving Bond to keep the publick Peace, under the Pain of Ten thousand Pounds Scots.’

Ralstoun and Robert Halket.M. G. Montgomery.

And upon other Applications, I find another Letter from Lawderdale, January 22^d next Year, ordering William Ralstoun of that Ilk, and Robert Halket, to be set at Liberty, upon their signing the Bond of Peace, with Caution: And Major-general Montgomery is to be set free, only upon his Parole of Honour to keep the Peace. The Council's Act anent him is but short.

Council's Act liberating him.

‘ANENT a Petition presented by Robert Montgomery, late Major-general of his Majesty's Army, 1651. shewing, That the Petitioner having remained (excepting a little Time) now by the Space of Two Years and Four Months, with all Silence and Submission, in the Castle of Stirling; and as, in the Knowledge of his Innocency, he is confident he hath failed nothing in his Faithfulness and Loyalty to his Majesty, so he is most desirous to remove all Suspicion of his Carriage for the future; humbly therefore desiring, That Order and Warrant may be granted to the Effect underwritten: We the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, having considered the said Petition, with his Majesty's Pleasure signified anent him, give Warrant to the Governor of the Castle of Stirling, to set him at Liberty; and ordain him immediately to repair to Edinburgh, and subscribe such Bonds as are set in the Books of Council, for keeping the publick Peace of the Kingdom, as they have ordained.’

Here the Council go some further than the King's Pleasure signified to them by his Secretary.

Other Gentlemen, John Cunninghamhead, Rowalland, kept in Prison.Sir James Stuart and Sir John Cressy sent to Dundee.Mr. Alexander Smith brought from Zetland.Mr. Hugh Peebles allowed to come West.

Mean while, some others of the Gentlemen, formerly confined without any Reason given, are kept under their Confinements, such as Sir George Maxwell of Nether-pollock, Cunninghamhead, and Rowalland; and upon the 26th of November this Year, Sir James Stuart late Provost of Edinburgh, and Sir John Chiesly, are, by the Council's Orders, sent from their Confinement in the Castle of Edinburgh, to the Tolbooth of Dundee. And, upon December 12th, I find Mr. Alexander Smith, sometime Preacher, banished to Zetland by the Commission for Church-affairs, is ordered to be brought to Leith, and presented before the Council. And Mr. Hugh Peebles, late Minister at Lochwinnoch, in the Shire of Renfrew, confined to the North for several Years by the same Commission, is allowed to go West to order his Affairs, upon giving Bond of a Hundred Pounds Sterling, to answer the Council when called.

Little more considerable offers this Year. In July the Council had passed an Act against Papists, and recommended the Execution of it to the Archbishops. By the Registers there appears a plain Slackness in the Archbishops, in all Acts made against Papists; and many Letters are writ to them upon every such Occasion, before any Return can be had, as has been remarked in the First Book. Another Instance I give here. In December, the Council ordered the Clerk to write the following Letter directed to the Two Archbishops.

The Bishops negligent as to the Council's Act against Papists.

Most Reverend,

BY an Act of Council of the Penult of July last, it was ordained, That a List of the haill Papists in every Parish within the Kingdom, should be made by the Minister of each Parish where they live, and be returned to the Council before the Second Thursday of this Instant, which is now elapsed: And finding that the Care of that Business, which is so important, is recommended to your Grace, as to all Parishes and Bishopricks within your Diocese, the Council has recommended to me to give you Notice hereof, that a speedy Return may be made, that accordingly they may proceed to the Execution of the Acts of Parliament made against Papists; and, in order thereunto, what Commands your Grace shall think fit to send, shall be obeyed by Council's Letter to the Archbishops.

Your Grace's most humble Servant,

PET. WEDDERBURN.

The Violence wherewith the Two Archbishops pushed on the Persecution against Presbyterians, is the more aggravated by their Coldness in doing any Thing which might be hard upon the Papists: It may be a good Reason also, and is an undoubted Proof of the great Hazard we were in of returning back to Rome; yea, this and other Steps, taken now and afterwards, paved the Way for a Papist's mounting the Throne, and the desperate Plot of destroying the whole Reformation, so happily disappointed by the late happy Revolution.

Observes upon this.

Upon the 12th of December, the Council emit a Proclamation against the known Book, entituled Nephthali, or the Wrestlings of the Church of Scotland. It is ordered to be burnt, and all Copies of it are ordained to be brought in to the next Magistrates, against the 1st of February next; and any who have Copies after that, are to be fined in Ten thousand Pounds Scots. The Book was compiled by Two very great Men; the Reasoning Part of it was done by one of the best Lawyers of his Time Mr. (afterwards Sir) James Stuart of Goodtrees, whom we shall meet with frequently in the following Periods; and the Historical Part by a very worthy Minister, the Reverend Mr. James Stirling Minister of the Gospel at Paisly. An Answer was published to it by Bishop Honnyman; but he evidently weakened the Cause he undertook to defend, and was taken up, with great Strength of Reason, by the foresaid Mr. Stuart, as were some other Authors of his Kidney, in that useful Book Jus populi vindicatum.

Proclamation against Nephthali. Its Author. Answer and Reply made to it.

Thus I have gone through the Sufferings immediately succeeding Pentland, and the State of Things this Year, till the Indemnity stopped a little the Persecution. In this Calm, Mr. Alexander Dunlop, and Mr. James Fergusson, Two eminent Presbyterian Ministers, died.

C H A P. III.

Of the State and Sufferings of Presbyterians in the Year 1668.

Under the Calm, by the Indemnity, the persecuting Spirit remains with the Bishops.

It hath been said just now, that the Presbyterians had a Calm after the Indemnity. This must only be understood comparatively with the Rigour used immediately after Pentland, and the Severities of the Army, and the many Executions then so common. The same Spirit of Persecution raged in the Ecclesiastical State. Indeed the King's Change of Hands did not permit them to run their full Length, as heretofore; yet, now and then, during this and some others of the more easy Years to the Whiggs, some very sharp Documents were given, that the same bitter Temper remained.

Reasons of the Lenity of the present Managers, towards Presbyterians:

Many were the Occasions of the Lenity of the present Managers. Just Clamours were raised from all the Corners of the Country, of the Severities of Sir James Turner, Bannantyne, and the Army, and it was popular to take a contrary Course. The King had changed his Cabinet-council in England, and laid aside some of the High-fliers. The Constancy and Religion of the Sufferers had left such Impressions on some, that, I am told, the Earl of Dumfries said openly in Council, That if they went on to take away more Lives, all Scotland would turn such Phanaticks as these People were. In short, the Bishops more and more discovered their cruel and selfish Temper, and were generally disliked; and such who had publick Affairs among their Hands, were neither so much under the Prelates Management, nor so violent in their Temper, as the former Set.

Yet Presbyterians wanted not their Difficulties this Year.

They believed an Injury and Act of Injustice might be done against a Whigg as well as another Subject, and did not altogether regulate themselves according to the Maxim laid down now for near Seven Years, That nothing done against a Presbyterian could be wrong; yet Presbyterians were far from being overlooked, and wanted not their Difficulties, as shall be noticed. Yea, some were pleased to think, that the Managers might have discovered their Zeal against Popery better, than by the boring the Tongue of a Fellow of no good Reputation indeed, for saying, what many now jealous, and every Body afterwards saw, That the Duke of York was a Papist.

Division of this Chapter.

This Chapter then will naturally fall into Two Halves. The Stop put to the Severities in the former Period, by some of the Persecutors their being called to an Account; and the remaining Sufferings of Presbyterians, with their State and Circumstances during this Year. I begin with

S E C T. I.

Of the Council's Enquiries into Sir James Turner and Sir William Bannantyne their Cruelties and Oppressions.

Enquiry by the Council into Sir James Turner's Carriage.

IN the Beginning of this Year, the Council came to enquire into the Carriage of Sir James Turner and Sir William Bannantyne; and I shall give the Account of their Procedure mostly from the Records. Had a joyn't Enquiry been made into General Dalziel, Sir Mungo Murray, and others Procedure, as great, if not greater Oppressions, might have been found.

Letter from the King requiring this.

To deduce Sir James Turner's Examination from its Rise last Year, I find a Letter from the King, November 26th last, signifying to the Council, 'That he had received divers Informations of many illegal Executions by Sir James Turner, during his Command in the West, and therefore he orders them to enquire into that Matter, and report.' That Day the Council appoint the Lords Halkertoun, Register, Advocate, Justice-clerk, Lord Cochran, Lieutenant-general Drummond, and Sir Robert Murray, to try Sir James, and report to them.

Commission given to the within written, to examine his Carriage in the South.

Before this Committee, Abundance of Gentlemen and others appeared, gave in Informations, and adduced Witnesses, clearly proving a great many grievous and atrocious Things against Sir James and those under his Command, which were so many evident Vindications of that poor oppressed Corner their rising in Arms, and Evidences of the Necessity they were laid under so to do. Some of them have been pointed at, and Particulars would be endless. As the best Account I can give of this Affair, I here insert a Copy of the Report given in to the Council by their Committee, as the Issue they came to in this Matter, February 20th, 1668. which they transmit to the King.

Many Things found proven against Sir James.

Apud Edinburgh, vigesimo die mensis Februarii, 1668.

Report anent Sir James Turner.

THE Committee appointed for Trial of Sir James Turner's Carriage, having given in their Report, bearing, That, according to Order, they having met upon the 28th of November last, drew up fit Queries and Instructions concerning it, and Orders to some Gentlemen in the West, to take Information of all Sums of Money exacted by Sir James, or his Order, for Fines, Cefs, or otherwise, and of all his Departments: And to be sure of a speedy Return, sent Thomas Buntine with Letters, and the Orders above mentioned, appointing him to attend the Prosecution of them, and bring back the Reports; which accordingly he did, before the 10th of January.

Report about Sir James Turner, Feb 11 17 20.

The Committee did thereafter deliver to Sir James, a Paper containing some Grievances drawn out from the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright only, those in the other Shires not being so clear and full. They allowed Sir James to see all the Reports in the Clerk's Hands, and enjoined him to give in his Answers in Writing, the 17th Instant, which he did. And the Committee having read and considered all, and examined Sir James upon every Point that occurred, after a full Debate, agreed to offer to the Council their humble Opinion, That the Council do, in Obedience to his Majesty's Commands, transmit to the Secretary the following Report, to be communicated to his Majesty.

The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council did no sooner receive his Command in his gracious Letter, of the 21st of November last, for taking exact Information of Sir James Turner's Department in the West, but they ordered and impowered a Committee of their Number, to enquire diligently thereinto; and by their Report it appears, that upon Informations from the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright, given in upon Oath of Parties, or their Masters or Neighbours, many illegal Exactions have been made, and Disorders committed, such as,

1^{mo}, Quartering of Soldiers, for levying of Fines and Impositions. 2^{do}, Exacting Cefs, or Quartering-money, for more Soldiers than were actually present, sometimes for double the Number, or more; and that besides free Quarter for those present, sometimes Eight Pence, sometimes Twelve Pence, sometimes Sixteen Pence, and sometimes more for each Man. 3^{io}, Cefs exacted for divers Days, sometimes Eight, Ten, or more, before the Party did actually appear. 4^{to}, Imposing of Fines, and Quartering, before any previous Citation, or hearing of Parties. 5^{to}, Fining without due Information from Ministers. 6^{to}, Fining such as lived orderly, as appears by Ministers Certificates. 7^{mo}, Fining and cessing for Causes, for which there are no Warrants from Acts of Parliament or Council; as 1^{mo}, Baptizing of Children by outed Ministers. 2^{do}, Baptizing by neighbouring Ministers, when the Parish-church was vacant. 3^{io}, Marrying by outed Ministers. 4^{to}, For keeping of Conventicles. 8^{vo}, Fining for whole Years preceding his coming to the Country, and that after they had begun to live orderly. 9^{no}, Fining Fathers for their Daughters baptizing their Children with outed Ministers, though forisfamiliar Six Months before, and living in another Parish. 10^{mo}, Fining, without proportioning the Sum with the Fault. 11^{mo}, Fining in whole Parishes promiscuously, as well those that lived orderly, as those that did not. 12^{mo}, Fining whole Parishes, where there was no incumbent Minister. 13^{to}, Fining one that lay a Year bedfast. 14^{to}, Forcing Bonds from the innocent. 15^{to}, Cessing People who were not fined. 16^{to}, Taking away Cattle. All those Actings are illegal.

Misdemeanors of other Kinds were, 17^{mo}, Agreeing for Fine and Cefs both in one Sum, whereby Accounts are confounded. 18^{vo}, Not admitting of Complainers, who were cessd, to come to his Presence, alledged to be his constant Practice. 19^{mo}, Permitting his Servants to take Money for admitting People to him, and yet Access denied. 20^{no}, Increasing the Number of quartering Soldiers after Complaints. 21^{mo}, Exacting Money for removing of Soldiers, after Cefs and Fines were paid. Every one of the foregoing Articles was made out by Information upon Oath, which yet doth not amount to a legal Proof; which in most of those Cases will be difficult, if not impossible, to obtain, in regard that no Witnesses can be had, that are not liable to Exception, unless by examining Officers, Soldiers, and Ser-vants, which would take up much Time and Labour.'

'Sir James Turner's Defences, as to such of the foregoing Articles as he acknowledged, are Commission and Instructions from the then Lord Commissioner, for quartering, to raise Fines, for fining those who forbore going to Church, or married or baptized by outed Ministers, or kept Conventicles, and that upon the Delations of credible Persons, and to pre-fer them to those of Ministers: But he does affirm, that all the Commissions and Instructi- ons were taken from him by the Rebels, when he was made Prisoner, and so hath nothing to shew for his Vindication. And for all the other Heads above written, he either denies Matter of Fact, ascribes the Transactions to others, or pleads Ignorance.'

'The Sums of Money received for Fines and Cefs, and Bonds taken, he acknowledges to have amounted to Thirty thousand Pounds Scots. The Sums charged upon him by the Country, besides Quartering, come to about Thirty eight thousand Pounds Scots; where- in is not reckoned what was exacted from any of those who rose in Rebellion, and some Parishes whence no Information was returned.'

'And as to his Surprisal, he says, 1^{mo}, He had but Sixty six Foot in those Parts under his Command. 2^{do}, That they were all dispersed through the Country about the Fines, so that there was not so many left with him as to keep Guard at his Lodgings, nay, not so much as one Soldier before the Gate. 3^{to}, That he had no Order to keep a Guard about him, or to fortify himself, altho' there be a strong House within the Town, called the Castle, to which he might have retired with some Thirteen Soldiers, who came in that Night before he was taken. 4^{to}, That he had Intelligence, there was a Rising in the Country; and that a Corpo- ral of his was wounded by a Shot, who told him, there were divers Persons got together, who had Intelligence from the North of a Rising there, with an Intention to march to the Citadel of Air, and to seize the Citadel, and Arms which had been taken from the Coun- try. 5^{to}, That about Midnight he wrote to George Maxwell of Munshes. 6^{to}, He sent Orders to more of his Soldiers to meet the next Morning, intending towards New Gallo- way where the Rising was reported to be. 7^{mo}, That he had risen about Six of the Clock that Morning, but, being indisposed, lay down, and when up in his Night-gown, about Eight of the Clock he was surrounded and taken.'

'This is all that is to be expected for his Majesty's Information concerning Sir James Tur- ner: As to what further concerns the Money he intromitted with, it may be looked after according as his Majesty shall appoint.'

'The Lords of Council having heard and considered the foresaid Report, do approve there- of, and ordain an Extract of the same to be transmitted to the Secretary, to be communi- cated to his Majesty.'

Observation
upon the Report.

From this Report we have a pretty full View of this Matter; and when we consider, this Report comes only from the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright, and some Parishes in it, and takes in nothing of the Oppressions which concern the Persons who were actually in the Rising, it will appear how vast Sums were uplifted in the Shires of Dumfries and Galloway.

King's Return to the Council, and his Directions as to Sir
James.

March 10th, the Council have a Return from the King, wherein he tells them, He had considered the above Report, and thinks fit to declare his Pleasure, That Sir James Turner be no more an Officer in his Service. He orders the Council to call for him, and receive up his Commission, and to call Sir James, Sir William Ballenden, and others, to an Ac- count for the Money and Bonds uplifted by them for Church-fines, to the end, that what is unjustly taken, especially Bonds, be given back, and what remains may be employed in charitable Uses.

Sir James delivers up his Commissions.

The same Day Sir James appears before the Council, and delivers up his Commission to be a Major, dated February 12th, 1664. and his other Commission to be a Lieutenant Colonel, of the Date July 28th, 1666.

He states his Accounts with a Committee of Council.

And to give the Whole of this Account together; Upon the 7th of May, the Committee of Council, appointed to examine Sir James's Accounts of Money and Bonds uplifted for Church-fines, gave it as their Opinion, That seeing there would be Difficulty to prove the Charge, given in by the Country, of Thirty eight thousand Pounds or thereby, against Sir James, the Charge of Thirty thousand Pounds ingenuously confessed by him, be admitted without further Enquiry. And as to the First Article of his Discharge, a Thousand Pounds Sterling for quartering; they are of Opinion it should be allowed, since it was usual in such Cases. That the Second Article of his Discharge, Eight thousand one hundred and Fifty Pounds Scots of Bonds taken, and delivered in to Alexander Keith, be likewise allowed. That his Third Ar- ticle of an hundred and fifty Pounds Sterling, as his Charges, by his going and coming to Edinburgh, be allowed, considering his Losses when made Prisoner at Dumfries. His Fourth Article, of Forty Pounds Sterling given to some Ministers, likewise allowed; and some some other smaller Articles, for Shortness, here omitted: And his last Article of Six thousand Merks taken from him when Prisoner, the Committee give it as their Opinion, being perswaded of Sir James's Ingenuity, that it be admitted. The Council approves, and discharges accordingly.

It will be easily perceived, the Council and their Committee do not go the length of summing up with this Gentleman. His Defences are much the same before the King's Council, with these he made to Colonel Wallace's Council of War. He urged his Orders from the Commissioner, and Letters from Bishop Sharp and other Bishops: And if he was to be believed in his own Cause, his Severities were not by far so great as his Instructions bore him to. However, to stop the Clamour of the Country, it was thought proper to remove him from his Posts, and many were of Opinion, his Commissions were so large, as he ought not to have received them.

Remarks upon the Whole.

I wish I could give as full an Account of the Enquiry made anent Sir William Ballenden or Bannantyne's Oppressions, and illegal Exactions: But I find only one very general Article anent him in the Council-registers, and I shall begin with it, and then give what I meet with concerning him in other Papers come to my Hands.

The State of Sir William Bannantyne's Oppression.

In prosecution of the King's Letter, dated March last, ordering a Trial to be made of his Carriage, he was imprisoned, and a Committee appointed to examine his Accounts; and, upon the 4th of August, the Council come to pass the following Act about him. 'The Lords of Council, considering the Complaints given in against Sir William Ballenden, and the Answers given thereunto, do fine the said Sir William in the Sum of Two hundred Pounds Sterling, allowing to him a Precept drawn by the Lords of the Treasury for One thousand three hundred Merks, which he answered: And in respect the said Sir William hath exhibited all the Bonds and Papers taken by him in Galloway, and given sufficient Caution to remove off the Kingdom betwixt and the First of September next, and not to return without special Order, under the Penalty of Five hundred Pounds Sterling, do assilie the said Sir William from all other Pains and Punishments that might have followed upon the said Complaint.'

Council's Act about him.

This Sentence was reckoned exceeding soft and favourable to Sir William; far greater Outrages had been laid in against him than against Sir James Turner. The Gentlemen of Galloway gave in Libels and very full Proofs of his horrid Extortions, Filthiness, Rapes and Cruelty. Some Parts of his Carriage have been noticed, and many more might be here added.

Remarks upon it.

He made great Fires, and laid down Men to rost before them, when they would not, or could not give him the Money he required, or the Informations he was seeking. It was fully proven, that, among other Barbarities, he was perfectly inhumane to a Gentleman in Galloway. He is not named in this Account now in mine Eye; but from what is above, I guess it to be Gordon of Largmore. The Gentleman had been at Pentland, and through his Wounds there, and Hardships before he got Home, he fell very ill, and was at the Point of Death, when Sir William orders him to be brought to him dead or alive. The Party brought with them a Cart, knowing the Gentleman could neither ride nor walk, and tell him, He must now go with them. He raised himself a little upon his Bed, and told them, He now defied Sir William and all his Persecutors, and forgave them, adding, That very shortly he would be in better Company; and then leaned down again, and in a very few Minutes died.

His horrid Cruelties.

These Things could scarce prevail with many of the Members of the Council, to imprison Sir William, until some of the Gentlemen offered to prove some treasonable Speeches against him, tending to incite them to a new Rising, and that he professed himself willing to joyn with them. The Secret of this we have already heard of; and it was the Project of the Party, who were for keeping up the standing Army, but durst not now be owned. Upon this he was imprisoned, and got this Part of the Libel shuffled by, by confessing some Expressions tending this way, as uttered by him with a Design to expiscate the Designs of the Whiggs: And shortly he is set at Liberty, and the former Fine imposed, and Act of Banishment passed against him.

He incites the Country to a new Rising.

Away he flees to Court, and there puts the best Face he could upon Matters, with the Help of his Friends, whose Interests he had served in Scotland: But his old Masters could not prevail with Lawderdale to remit the Fine. It is said, upon this he undertook some wicked Design upon that Nobleman's Life; but the particular Vouchers of this I have not seen. It is certain he was obliged to leave the King's Dominions. He went over to the Army now in the Low-countries, and served in the Siege of Grave, and was there killed. It is added, That as he was walking very negligently within the Reach of the Cannon of the Town, some called to him to take Care of himself, for he was too near. He answered, Cannons kill none but fey Folk. He had scarce said so, till a Cannon Ball came upon him, and carried out his Heart some Distance from his Body; which was sadly agreeable to a wicked Imprecation too ordinary with him.

He goes to Court, and is obliged to quit the King's Dominions, and is killed before Grave.

This melancholy End of this wicked Persecutor, brings to my Mind a pretty remarkable Judgment upon Two of the same Kidney, though far inferior to Sir William in Wickedness, or or Quality. David McBryar an Heritor in the Parish of Irongray, and Member of Middleton's Parliament, who was to have witnessed some Points of alledged Treason, in his Minister Mr. John Welsh his Sermons, about the Time of Middleton's Parliament, and turned after that a violent Persecutor, was evidently frown'd upon in Providence as to his Business: His Substance was sensibly blasted, and in a few Years he fell into great Difficulties; so that being in Hazard to be laid up for Debt, he was obliged to skulk amongst his Tenants, and hide the best way he might. About this Time one John Gordon a North-country Merchant, just such another as McBryar, came South to agent the Business of a Curate in that Country, who had come from the North. Gordon, when at Dumfries, had borrowed Mr. Chalmers, Curate there, his Sword, and when travelling through Irongray, he met Mr. McBryar in the Fields, looking very melancholy and dejected. Gordon presently concludes him to be a Whigg, and requires him to go with him, as a suspected Person, to Dumfries. The other, after some shifting Answers, refused, fearing only the Prison for his Debts. This Shyness, without a Reason given, made him the more jealous by Gordon, who draws his Sword, and told him, He would force him to go with him. McBryar, either in resisting or running, is killed, being run through the Body, and died in the Spot. The other made no Secret of his having killed a Whigg, to the People about. When they saw the dead Body, they knew Mr. McBryar, and seize Gordon, and carry him into Dumfries, where presently, by Sentence, he is hang'd, for murdering a Man as honest as himself. This strange Incident made the Country People say, It was a cursed Thing to harass the Whiggs: And indeed a holy Providence appeared in it, making one Persecutor to cut off another.

Pursuit against Provost Cuning- ningham in Air,
for Oppression, stopped by the Archbishop of Glasgow.

When the Council have Sir James Turner and Sir William Bannantyne before them, honest People began to hope they might be heard in their Complaints, against some others who had illegally oppressed them. Therefore some Persons in Air, particularly Bailie John Fergusson, and some others, gave in a Charge against William Cuningham Provost of that Town, containing many Acts of Riot, Injustice and Oppression, alledged to be committed by him. Cuningham makes his Interest with the Archbishop of Glasgow, and so comes into Edinburgh with Confidence enough, and not ill founded: For after his Accuser had been at the Charges of taking in Forty Witnesses and upwards, to prove his Libel, and was just about to table it, he is told by some of the Members of Council, That unless he agreed with the Provost, and dropt this Design, the Declaration would be put to him. His Throat not being wide enough to swallow this, he was obliged to withdraw, and hold himself quiet. Great were the Discontents that Bannantyne was so easily passed, and Enquiries into the Carriage of others thus were fraudulently stopped. However the Notice taken of these two, made Presbyterians take a little Heart, and Sermons were some more frequent than formerly. But I go forward to

S E C T. II.

Of the Procedure against Presbyterians this Year, the Bond of Peace, Severities against outed Ministers, Mr. Mitchel's first Attempt, and some other Matters.

State of things with Presbyterians this Year.

HAVING thus given some Account of the Notice taken of some of the Instruments of the Severities against Presbyterians the former Years, I come now to take a View how Matters went with themselves through this Year, and that as much in the Order of Time as I can now recover.

Bond of Peace offered to the Barony of Glasgow.

I may begin with some further Account of the Bond of Peace, and the Circumstances of the Sufferers as to that. When it was imposed in the Close of the last Year, the Persons required in several Places, did not meet in order to the signing of it. I find particularly, December 4th, the Heritors, and Feuars of the Barony of Glasgow, did not convene; and the Council appoint the Archbishop of Glasgow and Marquis of Montrose, to see it done against the First of January. Upon the Backwardness of People to it, the Council write to the King, for his Orders what to do now upon the running out of the Time fixed in the Indemnity, and anent the Bond of Peace.

Upon the 16th of January, the King's Letter anent the Indemnity and Bond, comes before them; which I insert here.

King's Letter,
requiring Accounts who have signed the Bond, and who not; and who have accepted the Indemnity, &c.

Right Trusty, &c.

HAVING received full Information of your Care and Diligence for providing of Money, and disbanding the new Troops, as also for appointing the Bond to be signed for keeping the publick Peace; We do return you Our hearty Thanks: And whereas We are are informed, That divers do neglect or refuse to sign those Bonds, in some of the Shires, We do require you to send Us a particular Account, who have signed the Bonds in the several Shires where they were appointed, and who have neglected or refused to sign; and if any have neglected or forsworn that necessary Service: As also, who of those that were accessory to the late Rebellion, have accepted Our gracious Pardon; and in what Places the same hath been slighted; together with your free Opinion what is further necessary to be done, in relation to Security for the Peace, and what Course is fittest to be taken with these of the late Rebels, who have slighted, and not accepted Our gracious Pardon: But above all, We most especially recommend to you to use all possible Means and Endeavours for preserving and settling the publick Peace under Our Authority, and with special Care to countenance and maintain Episcopal Government, which in all the Kingdom We will most inviolably protect and defend. You must by all Means restrain the Gatherings of the People to Conventicles, which are indeed Rendevouzes of Rebellion; and execute the Laws severely against the Ringleaders of such Faction and Schism; and return to Us your very free Advice, wherein you need Our more particular Commands for those Ends. We did lately recommend to you, the ordering of Our Troops and Companies to such Places as you should think most convenient, and We appointed who should command them, in Absence of Our Chancellor: And now considering how needful a General is to so few Troops, We do think it fit to intimate Our Pleasure, That Our Commission to Our General, in that Our Kingdom, and all other general Officers, be recalled; being resolved to appoint general Persons where We have an Army. And in the meantime you are to give Orders to the Commanders of Our Troops, as you shall find expedient for Our Service.'

1668.

It took some Time before the Council could return an Answer to all the Particulars in this Letter: So upon the 27th of February, I find they make the following Return to Lawderdale, which, as containing a very distinct Account of the State of the Country, anent the Indemnity and Bond of Peace, I insert it here.

Apud Edinburgum, 27^{mo} mensis Februarii, 1668.

IN Obedience to His Majesty's Commands, a Committee was appointed; and by their Order was given for bringing in an exact Account of these who have signed the Bonds for keeping the publick Peace, who have neglected the doing thereof, who of those in the late Rebellion, have accepted of His Majesty's gracious Pardon, and who have slighted the same. By their Report it appears, there are few or none of the considerable Heritors in the several Shires, who were appointed to sign the Bond, have not signed the same, except such who had formerly taken the Declaration, or whose constant Residence was not within the Shires, and did not apprehend themselves obliged thereunto.'

The Council's Return, 1668.

The Bond signed generally.

As to those accessory to the late Rebellion in the Shire of Lanerk, One hundred and forty seven have taken the Benefit of His Majesty's gracious Pardon, and signed the Bond for their future Deportment; and One hundred have not. In the Shire of Air, Fifty seven have taken the Bond, and Seventy two have not. In the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright and Dumfries, Fourteen have taken the Bond, and One hundred and twenty eight have not.'

Who have accepted the Indemnity, and who not.

The whole Number of those who have come in upon his Majesty's gracious Pardon, being Two hundred and eighteen, and of those who have not embraced it as yet, Three hundred, who, for the most Part, are very mean Persons, as Servants, Subtenants, and Craftsmen; and the remanent who were in the said Rebellion, were either killed in the Field, or publickly executed, or are since dead, or fled out of the Kingdom.'

Accepters, 218. Refusers, 300.

As to the further securing of the Peace and Quiet of the Kingdom, it is our humble Opinion, 1^{mo}, That His Majesty may be pleased to grant Warrant for issuing a Proclamation, discharging all such who have not subscribed the said Bond for keeping the publick Peace, to have or wear any Arms, Sword, Durk, or Whinger, or any other whatsoever; or to have or keep any Horses above the Value of Fifty Pounds Scots, after a certain Day to be affixed; and that a Power and Warrant might be given and granted to all Sheriffs, Stewarts, Bailies of Regalities, Magistrates of Burghs, Justices of Peace, and all Magistrates whatsoever, to search for, and seize upon all Arms in the Possession of such Persons, and to exact Ten Pounds Scots, teties quoties, of the Haver or Wearer of such Arms, the one Half to be given to the Discoverer, and the other Half to be disposed upon by the Judges, as they shall think fit. And further, That they be impowered to seize upon, and intromit with all Horses which shall be found in the Possession of those Persons, above the Value of Fifty Pounds Scots, paying the said Sum always to the Party: And that also, by the said Proclamation, it may be declared lawful for any Person whatsoever, who knows of any Horses in such Hands, above the said Value, to seize thereupon, bringing bringing always along with him, a Magistrate of a Burgh of Landward, or any of the Officers or Messengers at Arms, or any Notar publick with Witnesses, and in their Presence make Payment of the Sum of Fifty Pounds Scots; and in case of Resistance, Complaint being made to any of the Magistrates foresaid, that they cause the Horse be delivered to the Person who seized the same, without Payment of any Price therefore, and otherwise punish him in whose Hands the Horse was found, in his Person, at their Discretion.

That Persons may yet be admitted to the Benefit of the Bond and Indemnity.

2^{do}, Because, through the Absence of those Persons who were appointed to take the Bonds from the Rebels, by reason of their Sickness, or their being at Edinburgh attending Law-suits in the Time of the Term, the Meetings for subscribing were not so timely, nor so punctually observed, and that many of the Rebels themselves were fled the Country, or lurking in obscure Places, and so did not know of the several Diets, before the Time was elapsed, and that divers have come in since, and others may; it is our Opinion, That all that have or do accept of the Pardon, and sign the Bond before the Intimation of his Majesty's further Pleasure to the Council, may be admitted thereunto, and that his Majesty may be pleased to signify his Pleasure accordingly.

A Proclamation proposed, with Names of the Rebels in it, and Power to Magistrates to seize them, and a Declaration that all Refractors be reputed Rebels.

3^{tio}, That his Majesty may give Warrant for a Proclamation, wherein the Names of all such of the Rebels, as shall not then have taken the Bond, may be insert; and that Magistrates, and others his Majesty's Judges, and Officers in Burghs and Landward, may be commanded, upon their Allegiance and Duty, to seize and apprehend them, and present their Persons to Justice; and that all Heritors, and others his Majesty's Subjects, may be discharged to harbour, reset, or keep any Correspondence with them: With Certification to such as shall fail herein, they shall be punished as Aiders and Abettors of Rebels, and accessory to the Rebellion. And if it shall be found, that any of the Rebels have, or shall have any Reset, Supply, or Entertainment within the Bounds of any of these Heritors, who have not taken the Bond for the Peace, that every such Heritor shall be pursued, and proceeded against, as guilty of the Rebellion.

No more can be done against Conventicles.

Against Conventicles there are Acts of Council, so many and so full, as nothing can be added thereunto; but the Council will be careful to see them put to due Execution; and, by their Act of the last of January, herewith sent, have taken Order for Removal of all outed Ministers, forth of the City of Edinburgh, and other prohibited Places, and restraining Conventicles therein.

At the Close, the Council recommend it to Lawderdale the Secretary, to lay all these Things before the King.

David Barclay sent to Montrose.

According to this Desire of the Council, they are permitted to receive Persons upon the Bond of Peace; and 'tis made very much a Rule of their Procedure. In April, I find David Barclay Prisoner in the Castle of Edinburgh, for some Concern, I suppose, in Pentland, upon his declining to sign the Bond, is sent to the Tolbooth of Montrose. In February this Year, the banished Ministers in Holland, sent over their Sentiments of the Bond, in warm Terms, as a great Defection, and a Burying of all covenanted Reformation-work; which wanted not its Influence to hinder some to take it.

Sentiments of banished Ministers upon the Bond.

A good many Prisoners for being at Pentland, sent to America.

Thomas Lennox, above condemned to die for Pentland, is liberated in April, upon signing it. Andrew Robertson, Prisoner on the same Score, is allowed to transport himself to New England. In June, I find John Bryce Mealmaker in Cambusnethan Parish, William Fergusson Weaver in Lanerker, William Adam Smith in Williamstown, Prisoners. When brought before the Council, they acknowledge their being at Pentland; and, upon their refusing the Bond, they are banished to Virginia: With Certification, if they return, the Pains of Death will be inflicted. And I find a short Work made by the Council, in a general Order, July 30th, That all who are in Prison for the Rebellion, and shall refuse the Bond, are to be sent to the Plantations; and thither not a few were sent this Year.

All the Prisoners who refuse the Bond, ordered to the Plantations.

Proclamation against Rebels, with their Names May 9. App. N. 32.

Letters directed against my Lord Torphichen and others, for harbouring Rebels.

Agreeably to the Proposal in the Council's Letters above, I find a Proclamation published, May 9th, ordering all Magistrates and Officers of the standing Forces, to seize and apprehend about a Hundred Persons, whose Names are annexed to the Proclamation, as having slighted the Indemnity offered. The Proclamation is added, App. N. 32.

It seems to be in pursuance of this and other Proclamations, That the Council, June 25th, Order out Letters against the Lord Torphichen, and other Heritors of West-calders, and others to be condescended on by my Lord Haltoun, (thus it runs in the Council-records) to answer for harbouring John Gilchrist, James Minimo, and Thomas Finlay, and not apprehending them, and offering them to Justice, for their Accession to the Rebellion, 1666. This Process was for some Time in Dependence, and brought no small Trouble to several Persons very innocent in this Matter.

The King leaves it to the Council, to do with all at Pentland, as they see best.

By a Letter, dated July 23^d, the King leaves the Council to do with those concerned in Pentland, as they see good. His Words are these. 'We now think fit to refer it to you, to take such Course with all in the Rebellion, 1666. who are not particularly forfeited, as you think fittest for the Peace of the Kingdom, either by banishing them to the Plantations, tions, or admitting them to take the Benefit of Our Pardon, as you think fit.' But presses their ridding the Kingdom of Preachers at Conventicles; which I shall just now have Occasion to notice.

Accordingly, upon the 4th of August, James Anderson, John Wright, and Robert Grier, are banished to Virginia, for being in the Rebellion 1666. And in November, I find a good many concerned in Pentland, are, by the Council, admitted to take the Bond; and Robert Chalmers (who afterwards got a Remission, if it be not another of the same Name) William Miller, and William Murdoch, are banished; and John Denholm banished to Tangier, for resetting some of the former one Night in his House. And William and James Welsh in Irongray, whose Names are wrongously insert in the Proclamation, May 9th last, compearing before the Council, and declaring they were not at Pentland, are allowed to purge themselves, by signing the Bond of Peace, and dismissed. So much may serve for the Treatment, this Year, of those in the late Rising.

Persons banished for being at Pentland, and resetting such.

Let me now come forward to take some View of the Severities used against Conventicles, and the Keepers of them this Year. Field-conventicles were at this Time very rare; but Presbyterian Ministers adventured to preach to large Meetings in Houses and Barns, upon the repeated and importunate Calls of the People, who had fallen off from the Incumbents, because of their Share in the Severities and Oppressions of the former Years. As yet, unless in some Places, where Circumstances forced to the open Fields, it was rare to preach out of a House. I shall cast together here, what I find this Year done against Conventicles, and such as frequented them, leaving the Treatment of the Ministers to the next Article.

Severities used this Year, against Keepers of Conventicles.

May 7th, I find, the Council having called, and convened before them,--- Miller of Wexford, for being lately at a Conventicle in the Shire of Air, which he confessed, fine him in Three hundred Merks, to be paid presently; and they oblige him to give Bond, under Penalty of One thousand Pounds Scots, that neither he nor his Family, shall, in Time coming, be present at Conventicles. The Three hundred Merks are ordered to be given to Henderson a wounded Soldier.

Miller of Wexford fined for a Conventicle.

The same Day, the Council being informed of several Conventicles kept in several Places, appoint any of their Number to give out Warrants for seizing, apprehending, and committing to Prison, all outed Ministers, or others who shall keep Conventicles, or other unlawful Convocations and Meetings, or to give Warrant to a Messenger to cite them to such Diets of the Council, as they think fit.

Counsellors empowered to give Orders and Warrants against Conventicles.

To favour this Design of suppressing these Meetings for Divine Worship, by such as could not in Conscience joyn with the Curates, May 9th, Instructions are given to the Forces. 'The Earl of Linlithgow, Commander in-Chief for the Time, is allowed to change the Quarters of the Soldiers, as he finds meet. All the Officers and Soldiers are warranted to seize upon and apprehend all outed Ministers, who have kept Conventicles, or preached at them, to dissipate all Conventicles, and seize upon the Minister, and such of the principal Persons at the Meeting, as they can catch, and carry them to the next Prison, especially such as have Weapons. They are empowered to seize upon any they have a Warrant from a Privy Counsellor to apprehend, either as Rebels, or Conventicle-keepers.' In short, they are to observe the Orders given November 15th, 1667.

Instructions given by the Council to the Forces, about Conventicles, May 9.

Accordingly, upon the 4th of June, the Council approve the following Disposition of some of the Troops: A Company of Foot to ly at Dumfries; a Company of Foot, with Fifteen Horse, at Strathewan in Clydsdale; Forty Troopers at Kilfryth; Two Companies of Foot, and Fifteen Horse, at Glasgow; a Company of Foot at Demellingtoun, and another at Cumnock in the Shire of Air.

Disposition of the Forces to bear down Conventicles.

Besides this parcelling out of the Forces where they were most afraid of Conventicles, upon Informations of the keeping of them, Commissions are given out to examine who had been at them. So upon the same Day the Council grant Warrant to Two Gentlemen, to make Enquiry who were at the Conventicles in Fife, in the Town of Austruther, and at Largo: And upon this Trial, July 16th, Council-letters are directed out against Four Persons in Largo and the Neighbourhood, for being present at them.

Commissions given to Gentlemen to examine who have been at Conventicles.

At the Desire of the Prelates, who this Year are mightily keen against Conventicles, the King writes in the forecited Letter, dated July 23^d, after he hath remitted the Rebels to the Council's Pleasure, thus: 'But we do specially recommend it to your Care to rid the Kingdom of such seditious Preachers, or pretended Ministers as have kept Conventicles, or gathered People to the Fields, since January last; for we look on such as the greatest Disturbers of the Peace, and Perverters of the People.' That they were so represented to his Majesty I believe: But the King had not better Subjects in the Kingdom, and there was nothing but peaceable Carriage at such Meetings, and the Gospel of Peace purely and faithfully preached, and the King prayed for. Indeed the Orders given above, to dissipate those Meetings, obliged some to defend themselves when attacked, and the Gospel preached to them; but there were not many Scuffles this Way as yet.

Clause of the King's Letter July 23. against Conventicles.

Remarks on it

Another Method, peculiar to Towns, used at this Time against Conventicles, was, to oblige the Magistrates of Burghs, to give Bond to the Council to pay such a Sum if a Conventicle were Magistrates of Burghs obliged to give Bond against Conventicles.

Magistrates of were held within their Jurisdiction: And ordinarily they had their Relief off the Persons they should find out to have been at it. Accordingly the Magistrates of Edinburgh, July 29th, give Bond to the Council to this Effect; which I have insert, App. N^o. 33. and for some Time, I find yearly 'tis renewed by every Set of new Magistrates. Notwithstanding of all these Efforts, Conventicles grew on the Prelates Hands, in a Proportion to their and their Underlings being disliked for their Oppression and Severities; and the outed Ministers wanted not their Sufferings this Year.

Presbyterian
Ministers Suffering Council's Act, Jan. 31. against them
at Edinburgh.

Which brings me to give some Taste of their Treatment. Upon the last of January, the Council by their Act ordain the Magistrates of Edinburgh, to execute the Act and Proclamation, dated November 1664. against the outed Ministers; and to take special Care that none be permitted to stay within their Liberties, but such as have a Licence from the Council, Archbishop of St. Andrews, or Bishop of Edinburgh; and requiring them to take special Notice, that there be no Conventicles kept in the City, or Liberties thereof. The Hardships of this Act have been noticed formerly.

Of Mr. Michael Bruce.

But to come to particular Persons Sufferings, I may well begin with the Reverend Mr. Michael Bruce. This worthy, useful and affectionate Preacher, had been some Years ago forced out of Ireland, where his Charge and Relations were. Being a Person of great Boldness, and much Love to Souls, he adventured to preach to great Meetings in Houses, and sometimes in the Fields likewise. He ventured into several Places of the Nation, where few other Presbyterian Ministers had preached to any Numbers for some Years.

He is apprehended near Stirling, and is fore wounded.

About the 2^d or 3^d of June, Captain G. Erskine in Stirling Castle, having Orders from some Counsellors, apprehends Mr. Bruce in his own hired House, not far distant. When, to his great Surprise, he found the House beset with armed Men, according to his usual Courage and Briskness, he endeavoured to escape; but was fore wounded by the Soldiers, and taken, and brought Prisoner to the Castle of Stirling. No Care was taken of his Wounds, and he lost a vast deal of Blood. Notice of this Prize is sent into Edinburgh, and, June 4th, the Council have this Resolve about him. 'The Lords being informed, that Mr. Michael Bruce, pretended Minister, is apprehended, who, for these several Years bypast, has made it his Work to abuse People, and, in Contempt of the Laws, presumed to keep frequent Conventicles, preach, baptize, and administrate the Sacraments, without any lawful Warrant, and made Prisoner in Stirling Castle, they order him to be kept close Prisoner, and no Person have Access but Physicians and Surgeons.'

Council's Order about him,
June 4.

Further, they appoint the Sheriff of Stirling, and one of the Justice-deputes, to examine him, how it came, when he was apprehended by Authority, he assaulted, and dangerously wounded ----- a Soldier of the Party, employed for that Effect, and report.

Brought into Edinburgh, June 18. and a Libel formed against him

It was the 18th of June before Mr. Bruce was so far recovered, as he could be carried into Edinburgh; and, when put in close Prison there, the Council order, that no Body have Access to speak with him, except in Presence of a Privy Counsellor, or one of the Magistrates of Edinburgh. When he was examined in the Tolbooth, he was most candid and free in his Confession, refusing to answer nothing put to him. From this Confession the King's Advocate forms a Libel against him.

To which he answers July 2.

As soon as he was able to come before the Council, upon July 2^d, he appears, and when his Libel is read, he owned his Preaching and Baptizing in Houses and the Fields, and defended his Practice, as being agreeable to the Powers he had received from another and higher Court.

Council's Sentence against him.

The Sentence the Council pass, is as follows. 'The Council find Mr. Michael Bruce guilty of Sedition, Faction, and Disturbance of the Peace of this Kingdom, and contravening the Acts of Parliament and Council; and therefore ordain the said Mr. Michael Bruce to be banished and sent away out of his Majesty's Dominions of Scotland, England and Ireland, and do discharge him to return upon Pain of Death.'

His Bond signed in the Council-registers is;

The Bond he signs.

I Mr. Michael Bruce bind, oblige and enact my self in the Books of Privy Council, that, in Obedience to an Act and Sentence of Banishment pronounced and given against me this Day, I shall never return to any of his Majesty's Dominions in Scotland, England or Ireland, under Pain of Death to be inflicted without Mercy, in case I shall happen to contravene: Consenting thir Presents be registred in Books of Council; and constitute Patrick Frazer Advocate, my Procurator. In Witness whereof, I have subscribed those Presents, in Presence of the Lords of Council, at Edinburgh, July 2^d, 1668.'

M. BRUCE.

ROTHES Chanc. I. P. D.

When

When he is about to remove off the Kingdom, the 14th of July a Letter comes from the King to the Council, signifying he was pleased with their Procedure against Mr. Bruce, and ordered him to be sent Prisoner by Sea to London, with the first Conveniency: And, September 13th, he is ordered to be put into a Ship going to London. Whether this was owing to an Application from the Bishops of Ireland, who had a particular Spite against him, or to some other Cause, I know not.

1668.

By a Letter from the King he is sent Prisoner to London.

At London he is banished to Tangier.

But when he came up to London, he was immediately sent to the Gate-house. After he had remained some Time there, he was sentenced to go to Tangier in Africk. I have no distinct Account whether he underwent any Trial at London, or how his Sentence came to be altered. It appears odd enough to overturn a Sentence passed by the Council of Scotland, or to judge a Scot^sman, for Crimes committed in Scotland, at London, after the Affair had been judged at Home. I hear this good and pious Man with great Difficulty obtained a Connivance, and retired to Ireland.

At length he gets off to Ireland.

Mr. Alexander Smith sent to Orkney.

This Account hath run out already so far, that I must be brief on the Sufferings of some other of the outed Ministers this Year. Mr. Alexander Smith, we heard, was ordered to be brought from Zetland last Year; and being come to Burnt-island, upon the 9th of July, the Magistrates of Edinburgh are ordered by the Council, to receive him, and commit him close Prisoner in the Tolbooth. What his Examination and Deportment was there, I know not; but July 23^d, I see him ordered to be transported to Orkney, and Sheriff Blair in Orkney is appointed to receive him; and Mr. Smith required to confine himself to the Island of North-Ronaldshaw. Mr. Andrew Morton Minister at Carmonock was imprisoned about this Time; but I shall bring in all his Sufferings afterwards.

The Bishop of Murray having sent in an Information to the Council, against Mr. Thomas Hog Minister at Kiltairn, Mr. Thomas Urquhart Minister at ----- Mr. John McKilligen Minister at Alves, for preaching at their own Houses, and keeping Conventicles in Murray: The Council grant Commission, July 30th, to the Earl of Murray and Lord Duffus, to apprehend and incarcerate them in Forreß, where they continued some Time, till the Earl of Tweeddale procured an Order to liberate them, upon giving Bail to appear when called. Some of their Sufferings will come in afterwards at more length.

Mr. Thomas Hog, Mr. Thomas Urquhart, Mr. John McKilligen, imprisoned in Murray.

Mr. John Wilkie, sometime Minister at Twinam in the South, had come into Edinburgh for his Health, and was scarce able to remove out of it, through Age and Infirmary. Toward the End of July he is imprisoned, and from Prison first brought before a Committee of the Council, and next before the Council, July 29th. What passed at both I thought deserved a Room, in his own plain and homely Style, from an Original, signed by him, in my Hand, App. N^o. 34. as what will give the Reader a native View of the Methods used with these good Men, by the Managers, and their ingenuous Carriage. They confine him to the Town of Cowpar in Angus, to which he was not able to travel, and so continued in Prison some Time.

Mr. John Wilkie his Trial and Examination.

App. N^o. 34.

I find him September 13th petitioning the Council, that his Confinement may be altered to Moffat, and Ten Miles about, for his Health's Sake. They grant his Desire, and confine him as above, under the Penalty of Five hundred Merks: And, November 12th, when the Use of the Waters at Moffat are over, his Confinement is altered from that to Musselburgh.

He is confined to Moffat.

Upon Information given to the Council against Mr. Donald Cargil, I find, November 23^d, the following Act against him. 'Whereas Mr. Donald Cargil was confined benorth Tay, October 1st, 1662, and that under the Pain of Sedition; and yet he hath repaired to the City of Edinburgh, and other Places at his Pleasure, in high and proud Contempt of Authority; Ordains the said Mr. Donald Cargil, by open Proclamation at the Cross of Edinburgh and Forfar, to be cited to appear before the Council the 11th of January next, otherwise he shall be denounced simpliciter.' I have Reason to think this was an Information purely from Malice. He is not charged with Preaching, but only with coming to Edinburgh, and other Places, after a Confinement more than six Years ago, and many Acts of Grace and Indemnity. When he appears, next January, before the Council, and is heard in his own Vindication, he is dismissed, and only appointed to bide in his Confinement.

Council's Act against Mr. Donald Cargil.

Notwithstanding of these Hardships upon Presbyterian Ministers in Scotland, the King this Year allowed some Breathing to the Nonconformists in England. I am told he did Mr. Bates, Mr. Baxter, and some other Presbyterian Ministers there, the Honour of allowing them to wait upon him; and signified to them, that he knew of their Meetings, which were not according to Law, and designed to allow them more Liberty, provided they carried peaceably. It is said, he was pleased to add, That he had been too long a King of a Party, and now he resolved to be King of all his Subjects. Several Meeting-houses were about this Time built at London.

Some Favours shown this Year to the Nonconformists in England.

Yea, in June or July this Year, the Earl of Tweeddale called for some of the Presbyterian Ministers, who were under their Hidings, and made Proposals to them, anent some Favour and Indulgence he hoped might be procured for them in Scotland. The News were very welcome, and some Conversation and Proposals passed twixt them on this Subject.

Earl Tweeddale makes some Proposals, in June or July, to some Ministers, as to an Indulgence.

1668.

Mr. James Mitchell's Attempt on the Archbishop stops it for some Time. It was made July 11th.

Character of him.

His Attempt upon the two Bishops.

His Escape.

Proclamation by the Council upon this.

The Council's Account of this Attempt in a Letter to the King.

A Search July 13th in the Town of Edinburgh.

The narrow Escape of Maxwell of Monerief.

But an unhappy Incident stopped all for some Time, the Attempt made by Mr. James Mitchell upon Two of the Bishops, July 11th this Year; which, as it was his personal Deed, without Concert or Approbation from Presbyterians, it opened the Door to a severe Treatment of some very worthy Persons not at all concerned in it. I shall give a Deduction of it from what I find in the Council-records, and other Papers of this Time; and some other Notices anent it will offer themselves when he is taken, and his Process comes to be accounted for Ten Years after this.

Mr. James Mitchell was a Preacher of the Gospel, and a Youth of much Zeal and Piety; but perhaps had not these Opportunities for Learning and Conversation, which would have been useful to him. I find Mr. Trail, Minister at Edinburgh in the Year 1661. recommending him to some Ministers in Galloway, as a good Youth, that had not much to subsist upon, and as fit for a School, or teaching Gentlemen's Children. He was at Pentland, and is excepted from the Indemnity, and in all the three Lists we have seen above.

From what Motives I say not, he takes on a Resolution to kill the Archbishop of St. Andrews: And, upon the 11th of July, he waits the Bishop coming down in the Afternoon to his Coach, at the Head of the Blackfrier Wynd in Edinburgh; and with him was Mr. Honnyman Bishop of Orkney. When the Archbishop had entered the Coach, and taken his Seat, Mr. Mitchel steps straight to the North-side of the Coach, and discharges a loaden Pistol in at the Door of the Coach. The Moment the Pistol is discharged, Honnyman sets his Foot in the Boot of the Coach, and when reaching up his Hand to step in, received the Shot, designed for Mr. Sharp, in the Wrist, and so the Primate escaped at this Time.

Upon this Mr. Mitchel crossed the Street with much Composure, till he comes to Niddry's Wynd Head, where a Man offers to stop him, and he presented a Pistol to him, upon which the other let him go. He stepped down the Wynd, and going up Steven Law's Clofs, went into a House, and changed his Clothes, and came straight confidently to the Street, as being the Place where indeed he would be least suspected. The Cry arose, A Man was killed; and some Rogues answered, It was but a Bishop, and all was calmed very soon. The two Bishops made all the Haste they could to the House where they had been.

Upon Munday July 13th, the Council met upon this Affair, and issue out a Proclamation, which is printed, Anent the villanous Attempt upon the Bishops of St. Andrews and Orkney, upon the 11th Instant. Five thousand Merks are offered to the Discoverer, and Pardon to Accessories. They write likewise a Letter to the King, acquainting him with this Matter, and their Account is as follows.

' Saturday last in the Evening, as the Archbishop of St. Andrews and the Bishop of Orkney were going abroad, the Archbishop being in his Coach, and the other stepping up, a wicked Fellow standing behind the Coach, did shoot the Bishop of Orkney beneath his Right Hand, broke his Left Arm, a little above the Wrist, with Five Balls, and immediately crossing the Street, went down a Lane, and escaped; there being no Person near at the Time, but those who were so taken up about the Bishop of Orkney, that they could not observe the Person, nor whither he went. That Night all possible Search was made in and about the Town, and this Day a Proclamation is issued out, sent herewith.

Further, that same Day the Magistrates of Edinburgh are ordered to search the Town and Suburbs for all Persons in the late Rebellion, or who cannot give an Account of themselves; and to shut all the Ports of the Town, except the Nether-bow, where one of the Bailies is to stand, and let out none but whom he knows; and an Hundred Soldiers are ordered to assist the Magistrates.

A very narrow Search was made for the Aggressor upon the Bishops, and it was a Wonder great Numbers were not seized. The Town being the Place of greatest Resort, and where People could lurk best, was at present full of Whiggs, and such who had been concerned in Pentland, and many of them escaped very narrowly.

One Instance I cannot but give of Maxwel of Monerief, excepted, as we have seen, out of the Indemnity, and a Gentleman of one of the best Estates of that Party not already forfeited. He had no Place in Town he could flee to, but came in to Moffat his Stabler's House, and begged his Landlord to hide him. Moffat told him very coldly, He had no Place to put him in, and very indifferently pointed to a large empty Meal-tub, standing in a publick Drinking-room, adding, If he pleased, he should cover him with it. No other present Shift offering, it was done; and, in a few Minutes, the Constable and his Men came in to search the House, and were soon satisfied, expecting no Prey there. They sat down in that very Room, with the Meal-barrel at the End of their Table, and called for some Ale. While sitting, they fell a talking of the Unsuccessfulness of their Search. One of them says, I am sure there are many Whiggs in Town: Another of them rapped violently on the Head of the Tub under which Monerief was, swearing, It may be there is one under that; and so it passed as a Jest, and they were permitted to do no more. Quickly they left the Room, and fall to their Work in other Houses, and the Gentleman came out, having tasted of the Bitterness of Death almost.

Mr.

Mr. Mitchel passes at this Time undiscovered, till some Years after, when we shall meet with him again. His Attempt was known to no Body but himself. People could not but observe the Righteousness of Providence in disabling Bishop Honnyman's Hand, which was no ways designed by Mr. Mitchel. It was well remembred, that Mr. Andrew Honnyman, in the Years 1660 and 1661. set up most zealously for Presbyterian Government; and being a Man of good Parts, was imployed by the Presbytery of St. Andrews, to draw up a Teltimonny for Presbyterian Government, when it was about to be overturned. The Draught was extremely liked by Mr. Robert Douglas, Mr. George Hutchison, and others, to whom it was communicated. He professed to be zealous against Prelacy, to a very great Height; and, in his Sermons, preached with a great deal of Warmth against the introducing of Bishops. I am told, in the Abundance of his Zeal, one Day, he had this Expression to his Hearers, That if ever he spoke or acted contrary to what he now taught them, he should be content to be reckoned a Man of a prostitute Conscience. He met with his Boddings, and indeed was accounted of according to his own Rule. Mr. Sharp debauched him with the Temptation of a Bishoprick; and he was the first, and almost the only Man of them, who drew his Pen in the Vindication of the present Constitution in the Church; and People could not but remark, that Person, who wrote against the Truth he once so vehemently espoused, had a Mark set upon him instead of his Debaucher, and without any Design in the Actor. It was loudly talked, that some Years after this, he met with yet harsher Treatment, from a more dreadful Quarter, when he died at his House in Orkney.

1668.

Mr. Mitchel not discovered at this Time.

Remarks upon the top of Orkney his being wounded in his Hand.

But this unhappy Affair brought several Persons to a great deal of Trouble, and was most unjustly charged upon the Body of Presbyterians. It gave a Loose to the Cruelty of the Bishops, and the Advocate. It must be owned, they had a very considerable Provocation given to their Passions; and at this Rate no Body can be safe: But then, the Measures they took were hard, and mixed with a disingenuous Cunning, unworthy of Judges.

Many Persons brought to Trouble for this Attempt.

A few Days after this Attempt upon the Bishops, an Occasion of much Trouble to Three good People falls out; which was this. A Scuffle falls in between a Servant-woman of no good Fame, and her Mistress, Wife to Robert Gray Merchant in Edinburgh. The Servant, to be completely revenged upon her Mistress, quits her Service, and goes straight to Bishop Sharp, and assures him she can give Account of several Houses where the Whiggs used to haunt, and make some Discoveries anent the Person who made the late Attempt upon him. The Bishop made her very welcome, gave her Money in Abundance, and provided for her Security. It was said the Primate gave likewise very liberally to the Advocate Sir John Nisbet, that he might be hearty in the Pursuit; and 'tis certain Sir John shewed an extraordinary Eagerness in this Matter, to that Pitch, that his Friend Sir Archibald Primrose roundly told him, He would not give over, till he brought the Fury of the enraged People on himself instead of the Bishops.

Robert Gray is brought before a Committee of Council, on this Information, and strictly examined, Whether any Whiggs used in his House? Mr. Gray suspecting the Spring of their Information, and knowing there would be Proofs of it, acknowledged, That upon such a Day, his Cousin Major Lermont, one Welsh, and Mrs. Duncan a Minister's Widow, had dined with him. So much he conjectured his Servant had told them. He was further interrogated, Whether he knew of the Assassin of the Bishops? This he peremptorily denied. The Advocate urged him to swear upon his Declaration. This he flatly refused, as contrary to all Reason and Law, that a Person should swear in such a Case as this.

Robert Gray.

When the King's Advocate finds him positive, he steps forward to him; and, after some pretended Frankness and Familiarity in further dealing with him, he takes his Ring from off his Hand, telling him he had Use for it; and, within a little, sends it with a Messenger of his own to Mrs. Gray, ordering the Bearer to acquaint her, That her Husband had discovered all he knew as to the Whiggs, and the Ring was sent her as a Token, that she might do the same; and so she is brought before the Committee. Upon this the poor Woman discovers more than her Husband had done, and acquaints them with some Houses where the suffering People used to haunt; particularly, Mrs. Kello, a rich Widow, where Mr. John Welsh sometimes lodged and preached; the foresaid Mrs. Duncan, and John Crawford Messenger, who had Notice given him, and got off.

A Trick the King's Advocate puts upon him.

But his Wife, and the other Two, were presently seized, and put in Prison. When Mr. Gray got Notice how his Wife had been abused with his Ring, and what followed thereupon, he took it most heavily, sickned, and in a few Days died, leaving his Death upon this Way of treating him.

He died.

July 22^d, I find Anna Ker, Relict of Mr. James Duncan, before the Council. She is interrogated upon her Knowledge, Who were the Actors in the late Attempt upon the Two Bishops, and her harbouring and Converse with Rebels? Mrs. Duncan refused to answer upon Oath, declared she knew not the Assassines, and would not accuse her self. The Council give her Assurances, that whatever she declared thereanent, shall never be used against her, either in Judgment, or outwith the same; and they promise to indemnify her for any Accession she had to the said Attempt, or harbouring any of the Rebels, providing she declare declare ingenuously, and discover upon Oath what she knows. She continued fixed, that she would not give her Oath. The Lords caused bring in the Boots before her, and gave her to Five of the Clock to think upon it, assuring her, if she would not give her Oath in the Premises, she was to be tortured. In the Afternoon, Mrs. Duncan continued firm to her Purpose, and had certainly been put to Torture, had not Roths interposed, and told the Council, It was not proper for Gentlewomen to wear Boots.

Mrs. Duncan her Trouble, threatened with the Torture of the Boots.

Mrs. Kello.

Upon the 29th of July, Margaret Dury, Relict of Mr. James Kello Merchant in Edinburgh, is before the Council, and refusing to give Oath, as above, is fined in Five thousand Merks, and banished to the Plantations. Mrs. Duncan had nothing, and so escaped the Fine; but, the same Day, is likewise banished to the Plantations: And to Morrow, Janet Chalmers, Spouse to John Crawford Messenger, upon her Refusal, as above, is likewise banished with the other Two. They lay in Prison a long Time: Mrs. Duncan, with Two young Infants, continued there Five or Six Months: Mrs. Kello, having confessed Mr. Welsh had preached in her House, was fined, as above, and continued in Prison a long Time; and it was with no small Difficulty they were at length liberated, after Mrs. Kello had paid much of her Fine.

Cruelty exercised on Mr. James Gilon.

Another Act of Cruelty following upon this Attempt, was the Occasion of the Death of that good Man Mr. James Gilon Minister at Cavers, whose Blood is justly chargeable on the Authors of this harsh Treatment. Mr. Gilon being turned out of his Church at the Entry of Prelacy, had now for some time lurked at Edinburgh, and being tender, he had gone out to Curry, within a few Miles of the Town, for the Recovery of his Health. A Party of Soldiers went out, and, upon pretext of searching for the Aggressors upon the Bishops, seized him, and made him run almost all the Way before them, for Four Miles, to the West-port of Edinburgh, in the Middle of the Night. When thus driven, literally like a Sheep to the Slaughter, he was made to stand some Hours before the Port could be opened. To Morrow, when he was brought before the Council, he was known, and dismissed to his Chamber: But this barbarous Usage disordered him so much, that he sickned, and, being indisposed before, died within Forty eight Hours.

Council's Regulations about the Militia.

In July and August, the Council are much taken up about the Militia, who are modelled and raised through the whole Kingdom. This was alledged to be necessary, because there was no standing Army, albeit we were at this Time in Peace with all our Neighbours. Agreeably to the Scheme in the Acts of Parliament, Two and twenty thousand Horse and Foot were modelled in the several Shires: But so jealous were the Managers of the West-country, that they allowed no Foot to be armed in the Five Western Shires. This unnecessary Raising of the Militia, was a very heavy Tax upon many of the smaller Heritors. Such a Proportion of Land was burdened with the putting out of a Horse and a Man at the Muster, and the Laird or Lord, who did no more but send his Groom and his Horse the Day of Muster, escaped free: Yea, the smaller Heritors were taxed to maintain the Laird's Horse, as if he had been appropriated to the Service, and he paid not a Farthing.

New Orders to the Army upon a false Alarm.

What was the Occasion of the Alarm, I cannot tell; but, upon August 12th, I find what follows in the Council-registers. 'The Council understanding, That some of the late Rebels are drawing together, of Intention to disturb and embroil the Peace, grant Power to the Earl of Linlithgow to draw the Forces together, and dissipate them, and order all where he comes to assist him.' Whether this was a made Project to favour the Raising of Money for the Militia, or to pave the Way for more standing Troops, I cannot say; but I can find nothing like any Stir among the Presbyterians at this Time. However, Lieutenant Mungo Murray is ordered, September 3^d, to search, with Sixty Horse, in the Heads of Kyle and Nidsdale, and apprehend any of the Rebels rising in Arms. Another Party, under William Cockburn, is sent to search in the Glenkens in Galloway.

Robert Cannon of Mandrogate taken, probably willingly, and turns Informer.

Perhaps it was in one of the Searches about this Time, that Robert Cannon of Mandrogate younger, was taken, or probably put himself in the Road of being taken; for he turned Informer, and a bitter Persecutor. The Reader hath him in all the Exceptions from Pentland Indemnity; and the first Notice I find taken of him, is in a Letter from Lawderdale to the Council, dated October 8th, wherein he orders him to be examined anent the Rebellion 1666. and the Advocate accordingly converses with him: And, in November, the Council order Sir James Turner, Chalmers of Waterside, and Mandrogate elder, to come in to Edinburgh, to be Witnesses against him, and signify to the Secretary, they expect important Discoveries from his Trial. But afterwards, they write, They have got nothing of Importance from him. I believe he was gained to the Bishops Lure, and afterwards we shall find him acting a very ill Part in the South.

King's Letters to Council have almost always a Clause in Favour of the Clergy.

Riot committed at Calder.

This Summer and Harvest, I remark all the King's Letters to his Council, upon whatsoever Occasion, almost conclude with Recommendations of the Lords of the Clergy, to their Care, and the orthodox Ministers up and down the Kingdom, and carefully to enquire in to any Affronts and Violences offered to them. I know no Occasions for these, but Mr. Mitchell's Attempt, and the Accounts which come in before the Council, of a Riot committed upon Mr. James Brown Minister at Calder. The Circumstances and Nature of it I have

I have no Accounts of; only, July 30th, the Council order the Advocate to procefs ſome Perſons before the Juſtices, for the Attempt on the Miniſter of Calder.

There is little more conſiderable this Year, unleſs it be the continued ill Treatment of thoſe Weſt-country Gentlemen confined in the 1665. and by the High Commiſſion, which, as far as I have noticed, I ſhall give all together, and end this Chapter with it.

Upon January 9th, the Council change Cunninghamhead's Imprisonment, from the Caſtle of Stirling to that of Edinburgh, becauſe of his Buſineſs with Lawyers here. Upon the 3^d of March, he and the Laird of Rowallan, who, it ſeems, had the ſame Favour, are ordered to re-enter the Caſtle of Stirling. Upon the 4th of Auguſt, Sir James Stuart is ordered to be made cloſe Priſoner in Dundee; and Sir John Chieſly is ſent with a Guard to be made cloſe Priſoner in the Tolbooth of St. Johnſtown. The ſame Day the Council ſend their Orders to the Captain of the Caſtle of Stirling, to put Cunninghamhead and Rowallan in diſtinct Rooms, cloſe Priſoners: And Sir George Maxwel is ordered in Eight Days to enter himſelf Priſoner in the Tolbooth of Kirkaldy, under the Pains of Five hundred Pounds Sterling; and, upon the 5th of Auguſt, his Priſon is again altered to the Caſtle of Stirling.

And John Porterfield of Douchal younger, whom we ſhall again meet with, gives in a Petition, July 2^d, to the Council, ſignifying, 'That whereas he hath been under Confinement, by the Order of the Commiſſion for Church-affairs, theſe ſeveral Years paſt, at Elgin of Murray, and punctually kept his Confinement, and the Lords of Council have allowed him to come to Edinburgh about his Affairs; he humbly begs that his Conſtraint may be taken off, and his Bonds for keeping his Confinement, be given up by the Clerk.' The Lords grant his Petition, upon his finding Caution, under the Pain of Five hundred Pounds Sterling, to appear before the Council, within Four Days after he is called.

Of the State and Sufferings of Presbyterians, the Indulgence granted, 1669. and new Laws made againſt them, in the Year 1669.

AS for ſome Years bygone, the Interests of Prelacy have been upon the Decline; ſo ever ſince Pentland, the Interests of Presbytery have been gaining Ground in Scotland. This is not the firſt, and will not be the laſt Inſtance of the Truth of the primitive Chriſtian Obſervation and Experience, That the Blood of the Saints is the Seed of the Church: The Church's Winters of Perſecution, never want their ſucceeding Springs and Harveſt, in leſs or more. Accordingly, this Year, Presbyterians had a Sort of Reviving, and began to gather a little Strength. The military Diſcipline for their Conversion, was now at an End for ſome time; Mr. Sharp's Cloud at Court continued; the Conſtancy and Cheerfulneſs of the perſecuted Party was convincing; Conventicles increaſed, and the Curates Churches grew thinner.

Yet the Prelates continue to go as great a Length as they may againſt Presbyterians. The Perſecution for Pentland is not wholly over; the Confinement of ſeveral Gentlemen is protracted, and Conventicles are ſtrictly puniſhed: But the Fruitleſsneſs of theſe Perſecutions at length brings on an Indulgence; and to ſoften the Biſhops a little, new Laws are made in their Favours by the Parliament, which ſits in the End of this Year. Theſe Things will afford Matter for the following Sections.

S E C T. I.

Of the Circumstances of Presbyterians, and Procedure against Conventicles, preceding the Indulgence this Year.

The Bishops press the Execution of the Laws against Presbyterians.

WHEN the Bishops want the Army to hunt down the Presbyterians, they improve the Expressions in the King's Letters, of encouraging the Lords of the Clergy and orthodox Ministers; and daily importune the Council to harass and call before them such Presbyterian Ministers as preached at this Time, and to inflict the Pains of Sedition in the Terms of the Acts of Parliament and Council. Some were attacked in the North last Year, where there were but a few, and the more easily discovered and caught; and this Year the same Work is violently prosecuted in other Parts of the Kingdom, especially in the West, where Conventicles were sensibly growing.

The Magistrates of Edinburgh fined for a Conventicle there.

I shall then, in this Section, take a View of the Persecution of Presbyterians for Conventicle-keeping through this Year. March 2^d, I find an Act of Council fining the Town of Edinburgh for a Conventicle held there, in prosecution of the Project formerly spoken of, fallen upon to prevent Conventicles in Burghs. It is but short, and I insert it here. 'The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council being informed, That on Sunday the last of February, there was a Conventicle kept within the City of Edinburgh, in the House of ----- Relief of the deceased ----- Paton; and Mr. David Hume, late Minister of Coldingham, took upon him to preach: And whereas, July 29th, 1668. the Magistrates of Edinburgh gave Bond to pay Fifty Pounds Sterling for ilk Conventicle that should happen within their City, to the Treasury, having Relief off the guilty Persons; The Council decern Sir Andrew Ramsay, and the rest of the Magistrates to pay the said Sum, and grant them Power to make open Doors, and apprehend Persons guilty, for their own Relief.' This is ad terrorem, and to fright other Towns and the Country.

Soldiers sent to the West and Inverness, to hear down Conventicles.

The Town of Edinburgh is under the Eye of the Managers; and, to carry on the same Work, the Soldiers are parcelled out to other Places. The same Day some are sent to quarter at Glasgow, and some smaller Parties to Newmills, Mauchlin, and Kilmarnock, in the Shire of Air, and a Party is ordered to the Town of Inverness, to keep the Presbyterians there and in Murray, in Aw.

Committee of Council to consider what may further be done against Conventicles.

But because Conventicles sometimes were dismissed before they could be reached, and the Parents of Children who were baptized at them, were more easily informed against by the Curates in each Parish, and came soon to be known, a new Act of Council is contrived, to be a Foundation of their Persecution. A Committee of Council, the Archbishops of St. Andrews and Glasgow, Duke Hamilton, Earls of Dumfries, Annandale, Tweddale, and Kincardin, Lords Drumlanerk, and Cochran, the President, Register, Advocate, and Justice-clerk, with the Laird of Lee, meet February 18th, to consider the Acts of Parliament and Council against Conventicles, Withdrawers from their Parish-kirks, clandestine Marriages and Baptisms, and to consider what may be done for restraining them.

Act of Council, March 4th, against irregular Baptisms.

This Committee issues in an Act of Council, March 4th, the Tenor whereof follows. 'The Privy Council considering what a Scandal it is to the Protestant Religion, and how much to the Increase of Popery, Schism, and Profaneness, that Persons should withdraw from Ordinances and Sacraments, and baptize their Children by Persons not authorized by the Church; do therefore prohibit and discharge all Persons whatsoever, to baptize their Children by any other, but such as are their own Parish-ministers, or such Ministers as are established by the present Government of the Church; and declare, that the Father of any Child otherwise baptized, shall incur the Pains and Penalties following: Every Heritor a Fourth Part of his yearly valued Rent; each Tenant a Hundred Pounds Scots, and Six Weeks Imprisonment; each Cotter Twenty Pounds, and Six Weeks Imprisonment; and recommend it to the Sheriffs, Bailies of Regalities, and other Judges, to put this Act in Execution.'

Remarks upon it.

Where the Scandal upon the Protestant Religion lies, in Childrens being baptized by Persons not authorized by a Prelatical Church, does not appear to me. That Popery is increased and strengthened, by narrowing the Church to such as will subject to diocesan Bishops, is very evident from the Nature of the Thing, and our constant Experience in Scotland. Popery hath still been upon the Increase, and Profaneness too, under Prelacy and Persecution: And the Presbyterians have had always Ground to charge the Espousers of Prelacy as Separatists, and Makers of a Schism from our Reformation from Popery by Presbyters, and our first Establishment according to the Scriptural Institution. How far 'tis a Profanation of the Holy Sacrament of Baptism, under such Penalties to ty down its Administration to the Officers of a Church declared to depend upon the King's Will and Pleasure, and its Government to be ambulatory and alterable, as he sees fit, I shall leave to others to consider. As it is plainly contrary

contrary to the Christian Liberty of the Subject, thus in their religious Rights to be bound up to the Will of the Sovereign; so to me this seems to be an irreligious Prostitution of the holy Sacrament, as an Occasion of Persecution of tender Consciences, and what too much agrees with the knitting of the other Sacrament of the Supper, to civil and military Offices, for which all the Reformed Churches are so much reproached by the Papists, though Two of them are only chargeable with this: Yea, the restricting of the Administration of Baptism to a particular Set of Ministers, in order to be a Pretext and Cloke for harassing and violenting the Consciences of such who could not joyn with them, seems to contain something yet worse, if possible; at least this Practice casts no small Stain upon its Authors, who, generally speaking, were all baptized by Presbyterians.

1669.

This Act is transmitted with Letters from the Council, to the Sheriffs of Lanerk, Renfrew, Air, and the Steward of Kirkcudbright, ordering them to publish it at the Market-crosses and Parish-churches in these Shires, together with the forementioned Acts of Council, December 1662. and October 1666. And the Commissioners of the Militia are to inform themselves of all Conventicles and disorderly Baptisms, since November last, and call before them all Ministers and Hearers; and as they find them guilty, to take Bonds from them to appear before the Council: And such as do not compear, or refuse to find Caution, they are required, by a Party of the Militia, to seize upon their Persons; and this Party is to be maintained by the Delinquents, at Eighteen Shillings Scots per Day for each Horseman, and Three Shillings Sterling for the Officer: And all Evidences and Witnesses against them are to be sent with them into Edinburgh.

The Act transmitted to the Sheriffs, &c. in the West, and the Commissioners of the Militia to see to its Execution.

Joynly with this, I find, the Council send Instructions to the Sheriffs and their Deputes in the Western Shires, as to their Procedure against Nonconformists; and they deserve a Room here. March 8th, the Instructions underwritten for the Sheriff-deputes of Air and Lanerk, Bailie of Cuninghame, and Steward-depute of Kirkcudbright, were agreed to by the Council.

Instructions to the Sheriff-deputes of Lanerk, &c.

Those who are to be convened before you, conform to these Instructions, are to be cited in the ordinary Way, and upon the ordinary Time and Number of Days usual before the Sheriff-court; and it is to be adverted, that they be cited personally to give their Oaths upon the Libel, with Certification pro confesso. See, that if they have no other Probation by Witnesses, and if the Witnesses be not ready and able to prove the Libel, it be proven by their Oaths.

If the Defenders appear not, they are to be holden as confest, and Decreet given against them.

If they compear, and the Libel cannot be proven without Delay by Witnesses, they are to declare upon the Libel, and according to their Declaration the Judge is to decern.

If they be not ready or willing to pay the Sums decerned, Precepts are to be directed against them in the ordinary Way; and the same being executed, they are to be sent to Edinburgh, with the Executions, that Letters of Horning may be raised thereupon; and they are to be charged and denounced with all Expedition.

They are to be careful that no Money be taken from any Person for Forbearance, and not to proceed against them: And if the Procurator Fiscal, or Officers, or Messengers, who are to be employed, or any others shall be found to take from any Person, upon any such Account, they will be noticed, and proceeded against, and censured as Malversant, and unworthy of Trust; and they are to advert and inform if any Person be guilty of such Malversation.

The Process is to be as summar and short as can be, and the Dispute and Defences (if any be) are to be heard and discussed verbo, without receiving Defences in Write; and the Clerk is only to minute the Defences, if any be propounded.

If any Persons cited, as said is, shall be content to find Caution, and oblige themselves to frequent and keep the Churches, and publick Ordinances, in the future, as also that they shall not be present at Conventicles, in the Shire, Baronies, or Stewartry foresaid; you are to accept of their said Obligement and Caution, and pass from the Pursuit against them.

The same Day, the Council order some more of the Soldiers to the West-country, doubting, perhaps, the Zeal of the Militia there, for persecuting of their Neighbours. And James Row Merchant in Edinburgh, is fined by the Council in a Hundred Pounds Scots, for being at the above Conventicle in Mr. Paton's. George Mosman Merchant there, is fined in Two hundred Merks, and John Row Agent there, in a Hundred Pounds for the same Conventicle; and certified, that if they be found at another, they shall be banished. Mean while they are imprisoned till they pay their Fines.

Joynly with these Acts and Orders, another Expedient is fallen upon to bear down Conventicles, and a great deal was promised from it. Collectors of the Fines the Law had appointed for Nonconformity, were named about this Time, in the Places where Conventicles most abounded. Mr. Nathanael Fyfe, a poor Advocate, who wanted Employment, and was a Relation of one of the Bishops, had Kyle and Carrieth for his District. Cuninghame was given to the Sheriff of Niddale, Brother to the Earl of Dumfries, who was said to be a great Oppressor professor of the Poor, and not a whit the more unfit for this Work in Hand. James Dunlop of Houshill, a Nephew of my Lord Cochran's, had Renfrew Shire, where, I am informed, he was abundantly easy, being very far from a persecuting Temper: Yet I find, in May, he hath the Thanks of the Council given him for his Readiness to serve the Government. Duke Hamilton was allowed to appoint whom he pleased for Lanerk Shire. The Earl of Nidsdale, a Papist, got Dumfries and Galloway, and to be sure he took Care not to be too severe upon Jesuits, and trafficking Priests. In May I find the Council write to him, to take Care he employed none under him who were not Protestants, and regret the Growth of Popery. 'Tis not good however to give the Wolf the Wedder to keep.

These Publicans and Tax-gatherers, to encourage them to their Work, had Five hundred Merks a Piece from the Council; their Reign was but short, unto the First of June. They wanted a numerous Army to back them, and military Execution brevi manu is not yet allowed; they must prosecute Offenders before the Sheriff, in the ordinary Course of Law; and some of the Sheriffs reckoning these Collectors were come in upon their Field, made the Process so tedious, that they got not much. This was one of the easiest Assessments the West-country had laid upon them.

The Archbishop of Glasgow put the Lord Cochran to exert himself in a very particular Way against the Presbyterian Ministers in his Diocese: And his suffering the Bishop to prevail with him to go the Lengths he went, he having been upon the Party who set up for Moderation, opened People's Mouths to say many Things which need not a Room here; That the worthy Persons he was now harassing, were never so far engaged with the Usurper, as he and others in the Government had been; That all the Evils in that Time, even sitting in Parliaments called by Cromwel, voting the Tender and Extirpation of the Race of Stuarts, were overlooked: But Presbytery, and the almost only loyal and firm Subjects of that Time, Presbyterian Ministers, could not be forgiven.

My Lord, as a Counsellor, gives Warrant to Major Cockburn, an Officer of the Guards, to cite before a Committee of Noblemen and Gentlemen, concerned, I suppose, in the Militia, at Air, in the End of March, several Ministers, whom the Bishops alledged, had acted contrary to Law, and preached and baptized irregularly. Their Names, at least those of them, as we shall hear, who appeared before the Council, are, 'Mrs. William Fullarton late Minister at St. Quivox, John Spaldin at Dregghorn, Alexander Blair at Galsoun, Hugh Archbald at Evandale, James Alexander at Kilmacomb, Andrew Dalrymple at Auchinleck, John Hutchison at Maybole, James Vetch at Mauchlin, Hugh Campbel at Riccartoun, John Gemble at Symington, and John Wallace at Larges.'

Great was the Rigour Cockburn used in forcing them to compear at Air. When he came to some of their Houses with his Men, he was not satisfied with the ordinary Way of legal Citation, nor with their Promises to obey, but compelled them to give Bond for compearing, and mean while would not produce his Warrant for Citation, and perhaps could not for this Part of his Treatment. The Families of others of them he treated most rudely, turning them out of Doors, and obliging them to flit and remove from their Houses, without any Reason given, within Twenty four Hours, to their great Detriment and Loss. And one of the Accounts, from which this Narration is taken, says, The Council were so sensible of this, that Mr. Vetch and Mr. Blair were allowed Three hundred Merks each for their Losses.

All the Ministers appeared before the Meeting at Air, and answered the Interrogatories put to them, with that Meekness and Candor, that most Part of the Members inclined to dismiss them without any further Trouble: But this did not answer the Archbishop's Design, which was to be rid of these worthy Men; and therefore the Lord Cochran prevailed to get them cited to appear before the Council next Week at Edinburgh.

They obeyed, and came thither on Saturday April 3^d, and my Lord Cochran came upon Monday to prosecute them, and it was said, when he went to the Chancellor, he got small Thanks for his Zeal in this Matter, and was blamed for surprizing the Council with this Process of the Ministers. However, from their Books I find, April 6th, 'the Earl of Kincardin, Lord Cochran, and the President, are appointed as a Committee to examine some Ministers from the West, come to Town according to their Bonds given anent keeping Conventicles; and to report.'

Before this Committee the Ministers appeared, and were interrogated separately, Whether they had preached since they were laid aside by Authority? This they all frankly acknowledged. Next, they were questioned, Whether they had preached in the Fields? This none of them had done: And further, Whether they had admitted any more to their Exercise but their own Families? This they all confessed. Then they were all called in together, and asked, What they resolved to do in Time to come? They answered, They purposed to demean themselves peaceably and soberly, as they had hitherto done, and as became Ministers of the Gospel, and to give no just Ground of Offence. The Committee required them to subscribe their Answers; which they did, and were dismissed at this Time, and ordered to appear before the Council upon April the 8th.

A Time of Trouble and Suffering is ordinarily a Time of Jealousy and Scruples; and so this was. Those Ministers were the first since Pentland, who in a Body had been questioned for Preaching. It was now beginning to be too common, though afterwards this Temper ran higher, to censure Ministers in their Appearances, carry as they would. And some were pleased to blame them, as too faint in owning their Warrant to preach the Gospel: Therefore, and because their Expression before the Committee, of demeaning themselves peaceably and without Offence, was debated as to its Import, they saw good in the Interval, before their appearing at the Council-bar, to agree upon the Heads of a Discourse to the Lords, wherein one, in the Name of the rest, should express their Sentiments about their Ministry, and the Necessity of exercising it even at this Juncture; and it was laid upon Mr. William Fullarton to deliver the Mind of the rest.

They agree on a Discourse to be delivered to the Council by Mr. Fullarton, in Name of all present.

Upon the 8th of April they were called in before the Council. The Lords, upon their signed Confessions, agreed upon the following Act concerning them. 'The Lords of Council, by Examination of the Confessions of Mr. William Fullarton late Minister at St. Quivox, &c. ut supra, find that they have contravened the Acts of Parliament and Council anent Conventicles, and Withdrawers from Worship, and have incurred the Penalties therein contained; yet the Council, on divers Considerations, being willing to use all Means to reclaim them from such unruly and undutiful Carriage, and to reduce them to a due Conformity to the Laws of the Kingdom, have thought fit to defer pronouncing Sentence against them, till further Consideration; and declare, That if any of the Persons above mentioned, shall hereafter keep Conventicles, or withdraw from Worship, the Council will not only punish them for their bygone Transgressions, but also take Course to remove them from those Places of the Country where now they reside, and punish them conform to Law.' When they were come in, the Chancellor told them the Council had considered their Confession before some of their Number, and the Clerk was to signify the Council's Pleasure to them, who read what is above.

April 8th, they appear before the Council, their Act about them.

Mr. William Fullarton then begged the Liberty to speak; which being allowed, he delivered himself to this Purpose, as had been concerted.

Mr. William Fullarton has Discourse to the Council.

My Lord Chancellor,

WE have already ingenuously confessed and professed what hath been our Carriage, in reference to those Things laid to our Charge, and have declared under our Hands, that as in all our Actings, we have carried with due Respect to Authority, as it became the Ministers of the Gospel, so we resolve to continue: And it is no small Addition to our Sufferings, that we should be misrepresented, or looked upon by any, as justling with Authority. Yet considering that it hath been in all the Ages of the Church, the Case of the Lord's faithful Servants, from which our Lord himself was not exemed, to be slandered, as no Friends to Cesar, we need not think it strange; for our Witness is in Heaven, and our Record is above, that as we desire to give unto GOD the Things that are GOD's, so also unto Cesar the Things that are Cesar's, there being by Divine Authority an Indispensibility betwixt fearing of GOD, and honouring the King, and none void of the First, can rightly perform the Second. Therefore we judge, the Fearers of GOD are the only loyal People in the World; only our Loyalty is with Subordination to our Lord Jesus Christ, who is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, by whom Kings reign, and Princes decree Justice; and under him to the King's Majesty, and inferior Magistrates, and in this Line of Subordination we shall deny nothing to the King, that shall be demanded, but shall be as ready cheerfully to grant, as any shall be to require it of us. And withal, our Loyalty is not founded upon extrinick Grounds, or Self-principles or Motives, but allenarly upon the Basis of Conscience, and so not regulate by the Revolutions of Time, but remains still the same. Hence it was, That when the Royal Family was in a low Condition, we lay in the Dust, and poured out our Supplications to GOD in behalf of the King's Majesty, that he might be preserved from Sin and Snares, upheld, comforted, and restored to his Throne and Government; and we looked upon the effectuating thereof as the Return of our Prayers, for which we judged our selves obliged to bless the Lord, and promised to our selves, and expected a Reviving from our Bondage, and a Share of that Calm and Quietness, that was thereby to redound to a poor distracted Kingdom. That 'tis otherwise with us we shall adore Sovereignty, who has so carved out our Lot, although the Storm should never blow off our Faces while we are in Time, whereunto with Submission and Patience we ought to stoop.

And now seeing we have received our Ministry from Jesus Christ, and must one Day give an Account to our Master how we have performed the same, we dare have no Hand in the least to unminister our selves; yea, the Word is like Fire in our Bosoms seeking for a Vent. And seeing, under the Force of a Command from Authority, we have hitherto ceased from the publick Exercise of our Ministry, and are wearied with Forbearing; therefore 'tis our humble Supplication to your Lordship, that you would deal with the King's Majesty in our behalf, that at least the Indulgence granted to others of our Way within his Dominions, may be extended to us also. Next, That since we are troubled by one Mr. Nathanael Fyfe, entrusted with the Execution of the Laws against such who do not keep the Church, who is proceeding against us upon that Account, and being now convened before your Lordship for the same Cause upon the Matter, that he may be inhibited to meddle with us. Further, it is our humble earnest Supplication, that your Lordship would compassionate the poor afflicted People of our Country, who are groaning and fainting under sad Pressures, and the Way the said Mr. Fyfe is taking with them, as it is sad, so it is an Addition to our Affliction; and although they cannot comply with the present Ecclesiastical Government, yet they are truly loyal to Authority. Therefore we request you would do something or other for their Ease and Relief.

And your Lordships laying out your selves with reference to those Things, as it will prove acceptable Service to GOD, and will be no Matter of Resentment to you when you enter Eternity, and stand before Christ's Tribunal, but on the contrary will be Matter of your Peace and Joy; so also it will be for a Name of Praise and Renown to you and yours, while you shall be called Repairers of Breaches: Yea, this will be a most effectual Means to secure the Peace of the Country, which we apprehend ye mainly study, and will endear the King's Majesty to his loyal People, and engage all of us to pray, That the Lord would establish the Throne in Righteousness, and that the King's Majesty and Posterity may sit thereupon while Sun and Moon endure; and that your Lordship may be blessed in the Administration of the Government entrusted unto you; and we shall be more and more obliged to remain your Lordship's most humble Servants in our Master Jesus Christ.

The Chancellor's Conference with the Ministers, after the Council had dismissed them.

The Council-house was very throng, and Mr. Fullarton had a very attentive Audience all the while he spoke; and the Ministers were dismissed, with a Charge to live regularly at their Peril. While they are yet in the outer Chamber, going away, the Chancellor was pleased to come and discourse with some of them. He acquainted them, as to the First Branch of their Desire, the Council could not take it upon them to limit the King: And as to Mr. Fyfe, they should be no more troubled with him, the Council having already written Letters to that effect: But as to the Third, He wondered how they could call the People of their Country loyal, when some, within these few Days, brought in by Major Cockburn from Finwick, adhered to their being at Pentland, and their taking the Covenant at Lanerk. Mr. Fullarton answered, 'As to any Persons who do any thing tending to Rebellion, or in prejudice of Authority, as it is exercised in the Line of Subordination to our Lord Jesus Christ, we disown them.' Mr. Fullarton designed this as a waving of this Matter, as I suppose: If he was of Opinion, that the Rising at Pentland contained any thing contrary to Authority, as subordinate to Christ, he was alone, and no Presbyterians I know of, thought so.

Conventicles grow the more they are born down.

Thus the Ministers got safe Home, and preached in their own Houses, as they had done; and the Archbishop is disappointed in his harsh Designs upon them: And my Lord Cochran is said to have expressed himself pretty openly in a Pet, The Ministers shall turn all upside down, before I meddle with them again. Indeed this Year, Conventicles were like the Palm-tree, the more Weights were hung upon them, the more they grew; and there were few Presbyterian Ministers in the West and South, but were preaching in their Houses, and some in Barns, and some few in the Fields.

Although the Ministers were thus dismissed, it may be from some Views the leading Persons had of an approaching Indulgence, yet, the very same Day, a Proclamation against Conventicles in the West, is emitted, discharging them, under heavy Fines upon Heritors; and I give it from the Registers.

Proclamation, April 8, against Conventicles, fining Heritors in whose Ground they are, in 900 Merks.

THE Lords of His Majesty's Privy Council, considering how far the keeping of Conventicles is contrary to Law, and disturbs the Peace of the Kingdom; and that notwithstanding Conventicles are kept and frequented in the Shires of Lanerk, Rensfrew, Air, and Stewartry of Kirkcudbright, they prohibit and discharge them, and discharge all Heritors whatsoever, in these Shires, to suffer or permit any Conventicles, or private Meetings, on pretence of religious Worship, to be kept in Houses, or Lands pertaining to them: Certifying, if they contravene, each Heritor in whose Bounds or Lands a Conventicle shall be kept, shall be fined in the Sum of Fifty Pounds Sterling toties quoties; and ordain these Presents to be printed, and published in the Places above.

Clause about Tenants, said to be added in the printed Copy.

I have not seen the printed Copy, but by several Accounts before me of this Period, I find, that when the Proclamation was published, it contained a Clause, ordaining Tenants to be fined in a Hundred Pounds toties quoties, for Conventicles in their Houses or Ground, but this not being in the Copy in the Council-books, I can say no more of it.

The

The unreasonable Imposition in this Proclamation, is very plain: No Exceptions are made, though the Heritor were never so much a Conformist; though he live not upon the Place, though he had no Hand in, nor gave any Allowance to the Meeting, yet he is made liable to this exorbitant Fine. No question it was designed to put Noblemen and Gentlemen to look after their Tenants, and take Care none should be in their Lands who would invite or countenance any of the outed Ministers: But in its very Nature it appears most arbitrary and unjust; a Punishment in many Cases where there was no Fault, and a Requisition of what was really impossible for Heritors to perform. Neither are they, by the Act, allowed, as the Magistrates of Burghs, so much as a Repetition of their Fine, from their supposed guilty Tenants. Frequently when Things are stretched too far, they break, to the Hurt of the Stretcher; so this unrighteous Act broke it self, and indeed made the Indulgence more pressed for by, and desirable to Persons of Rank. Thus violent Men are taken in the Pit which they digged for others, and the Wicked snared in the Work of their own Hands. Happy was it for the Heritors in the West, there was no Turner, Bannantyne, General Dalziel, nor standing Army, now to execute this Act.

1669.

Remarks upon it.

Thus it discouraged not People much to haunt Conventicles, and Presbyterian Ministers went on to preach to a People who needed spiritual Food very much, and received the Word with all Readiness of Mind. However, in May and June this Year, several Ministers were brought before the Council, till the Indulgence began to appear: I give but one instance or Two.

Presbyterian Ministers sited before the Council, in May and June.

Mr. Matthew McKail Minister at Bothwell, Father, I suppose, to Mr. Hugh, who was executed after Pentland, a true Nathanael, and a very plain Dealer, preached about this Time within a few Miles of Paisly, to a considerable Meeting in the Fields, upwards of a Thousand. His Text was, Isai. 32. 5. From this he described the Churl so, as many of his Hearers applied it to one in that Country of some Rank. If the Picture was scriptural, and indeed the Preacher was very much Master of the Bible, and so natural as to represent the guilty, he was not to be blamed for his Hearers Application. Great Noise was made of that Sermon, but I do not hear Mr. McKail was troubled for it.

Mr. Matthew McKail.

Mr. Gilbert Hamilton was cited, but, either through Mistake or Moyer, was not called. Mr. James Curry, Minister at Shotts, did not compear. Mr. Andrew Morton, Minister at Carmonnock, appeared, and objected against the Legality of his Summons. New Summons was ordered to be given him in due Form, and he escaped at this Time.

Mr. Gilbert Hamilton, Mr. James Curry, Mr. Andrew Morton.

June 3^d, I find the Council give Commission to the Archbishop and Provost of Glasgow, to try who were at a Conventicle lately kept in that City, what Quality they were of, who were present, and how they stand affected to the Government, and report. The Occasion of this was, Mr. James Hamilton Minister at Blantyre, then living at Glasgow, had been informed against for Preaching in his own House. Upon Examination, he is seized by the Magistrates, and sent in under a Guard to Edinburgh, where he was presented to the Chancellor, who, after some Conversation with him, saw good to commit him to Prison.

Commission, the Bishop and Provost of Glasgow, to enquire into Conventicles kept there by Mr. Jam. Hamilton.

This worthy Man used very great Freedom when called before a Committee of Council appointed to examine him, and was no way damped. Being asked, If he had preached in his own House at Glasgow? He acknowledged he had. And being further interrogated, How many his Hearers used to be? He answered, That these Years bygone, when poor Ministers of Christ were forced from their Flocks, and, with Difficulty enough, were able to subsist themselves and Families, they had no Money to hire Palaces and Castles to live in, and their Lordships might easily guess any House he was able to take, could not contain great Numbers of Hearers, neither could he keep People from coming to his House, having no Halberds to keep his Doors, nor Guards to make Use of. Some of the Members of the Committee upbraided him with reflecting upon the Archbishop of Glasgow, in what he now spoke; and endeavoured to impress him with the Bishop's Lenity and Favour, in permitting him to live so long at Glasgow. Mr. Hamilton answered, It was very easy to speak of Lenity and Favour, but he was assured he had not so much Liberty and Favour at Glasgow, as Paul enjoyed under a violent persecuting Heathen at Rome, where he remained Two Years in his own hired House, and preached the Gospel, and no Man was forbid to come to him; but the honest People of Glasgow, and himself, had been frequently threatned with great Violence, if they did not forbear.

Mr. Hamilton is sent Prisoner to Edinburgh. His Examination before a Committee of Council.

Finding they were not like to gain any Ground on him by their Queries, they desired to know if he was willing, for the Time to come, to give Bond to preach no more this way. His Return was, That he had his Commission from Christ to preach the Gospel, and he would not take any Restrictions upon himself, whatever Force others might bring him under. The Chancellor was pleased to ask him, Where his Commission was? He replied, Matth. 28. 19. Go, teach and baptize. The Chancellor replied, That is the Apostles Commission; do you set up for an Apostle? No, my Lord, said he, nor any extraordinary Person either; but that Place contains the Commission of ordinary Ministers of the Gospel, as well as extraordinary Ambassadors, such as were the Apostles.

He refuses to engage to preach no more.

The Committee's Report to the Council, with their Sentence upon Mr. Hamilton.

June 24th, the Council sit and receive their Committee's Report, 'That Mr. James Hamilton Prisoner in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, acknowledged, That he had several Times preached and exercised Divine Worship in his own House at Glasgow, to his own Family, and others beside his own Family were present; and that as he invited none, so he debarred none; and being asked by them, If he would give Assurance in Time coming to keep no Conventicles, and to preach and exercise Worship nowhere but in his own House, and only to his own Family, and such as should be occasionally present in his Family on some other Account, he refused. And being called in before the Council, he adhered to what is above. The Council order him to be kept in Prison till he give Caution in the Terms above.'

Their Act requiring all Ministers to engage not to keep Conventicles:

Which hindered Ministers to compare; and this brought Sentences of Intercommuning, and their being put to the Horn.

Mr. Hamilton continued in Prison till his Health was impaired.

Proclamation, August 3, against Conventicles.

And further statute and ordain, 'That all Ministers who shall hereafter be apprehended, or brought before the Council, on account of Conventicles, either by themselves or others for them, shall give Surety for their peaceable Deportment, and that they shall keep no Conventicles, as said is; and in case of Refusal, ordain them to be kept in Prison, till they give Surety, as said is, and be otherwise censured, as the Council thinks fit.'

Thus, upon Mr. Hamilton's Refusal, they form a general Rule, whereby to proceed against all Presbyterian Ministers; and this Severity afterwards hindered Ministers to appear before them, as hitherto they had done upon the first Call: But when they must choose now either to come under a voluntary Tie, to restrict themselves in the Ministry received from Christ, or undergo a perpetual Imprisonment, they choosed rather to keep out of Harm's Way, as long as they could. This, within some time, brought on the Denouncing and Intercommuning of Ministers. When they were cited to appear before the Council, and, for the Reasons above, durst not obey, Caption was directed against them, and they were put to the Horn.

Mr. Hamilton was remanded to Prison, and lay there a long Time, till his Brother Sir Robert Hamilton of Silverton-hill made Interest for him, and got him out, after his Health was considerably impaired by his Imprisonment, and not till he had given Bond of a Thousand Merks, to compare when called. The Persecution reached several of the Inhabitants of the Town of Glasgow, his Hearers; some of them were brought before the Council, and obliged to give Bond to keep no more of his Meetings.

All those Prosecutions of Ministers and others for Conventicles, land in a new Proclamation against them, of the Date August 3^d, which being short I insert here.

CHARLES, &c. Forasmuch as from Our tender Care and great zeal for preserving the Peace and Quiet of the Church and Kingdom, by Our former Proclamations We have discharged all private Meetings and Conventicles, under pretence of religious Worship and Exercise; yet, in divers Places of this Kingdom, divers outed Ministers and others, take on them to preach and exercise the Functions of the Ministry, in Meetings of Our Subjects, not warranted by Law, to the high Contempt of Our Authority and Government, to the Disquiet of the Peace of this Church and Kingdom: Therefore, We, with Advice of the Lords of Our Privy Council (but Derogation in any Sort from Our said former Proclamations, or Pains therein contained) do command all Heritors timeously to delate any who, within their Bounds, shall take upon them to preach, or carry on Worship, in such unwarrantable Meetings and Assemblies, and make their Names known to the Stewards, Lords, Bailies of Regalities, Sheriffs and their Deputies, to Magistrates of Burghs, Justices of Peace, and Officers and Commissioners of the Militia, within whose Bounds and Jurisdictions they may be apprehended: And do hereby authorize and command the Sheriffs, and others foresaid, that, after Intimation made to them, that the Persons foresaid are within their respective Bounds, they make exact Search and Enquiry after them; and if they be found, that they apprehend, and incarcerate their Persons, and acquaint the Lords of Privy Council of their Imprisonment; and require the Magistrates of Burghs to receive and detain them Prisoners, till further Order; and that this they do, as they will be answerable, under the highest Pains. Likeas, That all Our Subjects be hereby advertised, that We are resolved in the future, to put Our Laws and Acts, Statutes and Proclamations, vigorously in Execution against Withdrawers from publick Worship in their own Congregations; and ordain these Presents to be Printed and Published.

The Indulgence stops the Prosecutions for Conventicles in the West. In other Places Trouble on that Score continues.

Hamilton of

This is what I have met with as to Conventicles this Year, before the Indulgence: Upon the granting of which, in the West, for some time, Conventicles were not much noticed; in other Places, where few or none were indulged, they continued. I find, upon the last of September, William Southram, who had been Prisoner in the Canongate Tolbooth some Months, for being at a Conventicle, is liberated, upon finding Caution under Five hundred Merks, to compare when called: And, December 9th, the Lords of Council being informed of a Conventicle in Fife, kept at ----- where ----- did take upon him to preach, and exercise all the Functions of the Ministry; at which Conventicle were present ----- Hamilton of Kinkell, John John Balcanquhal Brother to the Laird of Balcanquhal, and John Geddie Steward-clerk of Fife. 1669.

Letters are directed against them, to compear against this Day Eight Days, under Pain of Rebellion. I find no more anent them for some time.

Kinkell, John Balcanquhal and John Geddie.

There are some other Steps of Severity in this Period, before the Indulgence, I shall cast in, with some other Matters, in the last Section, that the Thread of the Account of Things of the same Nature, may be as little broken as can be. And now I come to give some Account of the Indulgence, begun to be granted in July this Year.

S E C T. II.

Of the First Indulgence granted to Presbyterians, July 1669.

THE full Accounts of this and the following Indulgences granted to Presbyterians, shall be very much left to such who write a complete Ecclesiastick History of this Time. Perhaps too much is in Print already anent the Indulgence. I am sure too much was said and writ upon this Head. The greatest Heats were indeed some Time after this, as may be noticed.

Full Accounts of this Indulgence left to others.

Indulgences must not be reckoned Part of our Sufferings in this Church; yet being the Occasion of Differences among good People, and a Respite from Suffering to several very worthy Men, and really an Aggravation of the Severities exercised against others who shared not of this Benefit, when allowed to some; my Account of Presbyterians under the Cross, would be lame, without somewhat about them in the Order of Time when they were granted.

Some Account of it necessary here.

By this Time every Body, save the Clergy, were sensible of the Necessity of some Liberty to Dissenters from the present Church-establishment in Scotland; since by no Means they could be brought over the Belly of their Light, and known Principles and Covenants, to subject unto Prelates and their Underlings. Multitudes through the Nation were calling aloud for this, the Courtiers began to promise it, and in private to put it into some Shape.

The Necessity of it seen by many.

The Earl of Tweddale, at this Time in no small Favour with the King, and close Friendship with Lawderdale, who was jealous by the Bishops to retain some Regard to his old Friends the Presbyterians, till his second Marriage altered him very much: My Lord Tweddale, I say, had frequent Conferences with some Presbyterian Ministers, concerning some Liberty designed for them; particularly with Mr. John Stirling, who was his own Parish-minister, Mr. Robert Douglas, and some others.

The Earl of Tweddale's Conferences with Presbyterian Ministers upon it.

He prevailed with them to send up a Letter to Court, to be a Handle to their Friends at London to work upon in their Favours. A Copy of it I have not met with, but am informed, it contained very full Expressions of their Affection to the King, their firm Loyalty, and a Disclamation of some Positions now alledged to be treasonable, charged upon some Presbyterians.

They write up to London. Contents of their Letter.

Tweddale goes up to Court, either with this, or a little after it, and found his Work the easier there, that the Presbyterians in England were at present connived at in their Meetings, and in Ireland likewise, as appears from a Part of a Letter, April this Year, from a Minister there to one in Scotland, a Month or Two before this, which I take Liberty to insert, because we yet want a full Account of the State of Presbyterians there in this Period.

He goes up to Court.

After his regretting the Persecution in Scotland for Conventicles, he adds, 'But 'tis Matter of rejoicing, that the Lord's Work seems to be reviving here, (Ireland) Christ hath a Church here, that appears with the fairest Face, and the cleanest Garments, and has proven most faithful with God of any of the Three, and really hath much of the Light of his Countenance. The Sun seems to be fairly risen on this Land; whether it may be soon overclouded I cannot say, but Presbyterians Liberty is in many Places little less than when they had Law for them. They are settling their Ministers with Encouragement, and building publick Houses for their Meetings, and providing Vacancies with Ministers. About a Month ago, I had Occasion to be at Dublin, where the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administrate publickly on the Lord's Day, at the ordinary Time, and some Hundreds standing without, the Doors and Windows of a throng Meeting-house being cast open; a publick Fast on the Thursday, Two Sermons on Saturday, and as many on Munday. To all this I was a Witness, and more than a Witness. The Harvest is great, the Burden-bearers are few, and the few are not idle.' But this only by the Way.

Part of a Letter upon the Liberty Presbyterians in Ireland had at this Time.

The Earl returns with the

When a Spirit of Persecution is at some Stand in England and Ireland, some Favour was the more easily granted here; and, July 15th, a Letter is presented by the Earl of Tweeddale to the Council from the King, which I here insert from their Records.

CHARLES R.

King's Letter to the Council, dated June 7, containing the Indulgence.

Right Trusty, and right well Beloved Cousins 'and Counsellors, &c. Whereas by the Act of Council and Proclamation at Glasgow, in the Year 1662. a considerable Number of Ministers were at once turned out, and so debarred from preaching of the Gospel, and Exercise of the Ministry; We are graciously pleased to authorize you and Our Privy Council, to appoint so many of the outed Ministers, as have lived peaceably and orderly in the Places where they have resided, to return and preach, and exercise other Functions of their Ministry in the Parish-churches where they formerly resided and served, (provided they be vacant) and to allow Patrons to present to other vacant Churches, such others of them as you shall approve of; and that such Ministers as shall take Collation from the Bishop of the Diocese, and keep Presbyteries and Synods, may be warranted to lift their Stipends as other Ministers of the Kingdom. But for such as are not, or shall not be collated by the Bishop, that they have no Warrant to meddle with the local Stipend, but only to possess the Manse and Glebe; and that you appoint a Collector for those and all other vacant Stipends, who shall issue the same, and pay a yearly Maintenance to the said not collated Ministers, as you shall see fit to appoint.

That all who are restored and allowed to exercise the Ministry, be, in Our Name, and by Our Authority, enjoined to constitute and keep Kirk-sessions, and to keep Presbyteries and Synods, as was done by all Ministers before the Year 1638. and that such of them as shall not obey Our Command in keeping Presbyteries, be confined within the Bounds of the Parishes where they preach, ay and while they give Assurance to keep Presbyteries for the future.

That all who are allowed to preach, be strictly enjoined not to admit any of their neighbour or any other Parishes unto their Communion, nor baptize their Children, nor marry any of them, without the Allowance of the Minister of the Parish to which they belong, unless it be vacant for the Time. And if it be found, upon Complaint made by any Presbtery unto you Our Privy Council, that the People of the neighbouring or other Parishes resort to their Preachings, and desert their own Parish-churches, that according to the Degree of the Offence or Disorder, you silence the Minister who countenances the same, for shorter or longer Time; and upon a Second Complaint verified, that you silence again for a longer Time or altogether turn out, as you see Cause; and upon Complaint made and verified, of any seditious Discourse or Expressions in the Pulpit, or elsewhere, uttered by any of these Ministers, you are immediately to turn them out, and further punish them according to Law, and the Degree of the Offence.

That such of the outed Ministers who have behaved peaceably and orderly, and are not re-entred, or presented as aforesaid, have allowed to them Four hundred Merks Scots yearly, out of the vacant Churches, for their Maintenance, till they be provided of Churches; and that even such who shall give Assurance to live so for the future, be allowed the same yearly Maintenance.

And seeing by these Orders We have taken away all Pretences for Conventicles, and provided for the Wants of such as are, and will be peaceable; if any shall hereafter be found to preach without Authority, or keep Conventicles, Our express Pleasure is, that you proceed with all Severity, against the Preachers and Hearers, as seditious Persons, and Contemners of Our Authority. So leaving the Management of those Orders to your Prudence, and recommending them to your Care, We bid you Farewel. By his Majesty's Command.

Given at Our Court at Whitehall, June 7th, 1669.

LAWDERDALE.

Remarks upon it.

The Four hundred Merks in the Letter not given to the outed Ministers.

A great deal hath been said pro and con upon this Letter in Print; and I shall upon this Subject keep to Matter of Fact, and add nothing to revive the old Burnings, scarce yet extinguished. But it seems necessary to remark, that the Reader may not think all the Clauses of this Letter equally executed, that, as far as I can find, the Matter of the Four hundred Merks yearly the King here allows for the Maintenance of outed Ministers, was never made forthcoming to many of them, neither have the Accounts of any not indulged, who shared in the vacant Stipends, come to my Hand. Whether this was from the failing of the Fund, or their continuing to preach to their own Families, when there was not Access to hear the indulged, or from their want of Interest among the Managers, or that this Clause was only designed as a Blind to make the rest go the better down, the Judgment of peaceable and orderly Behaviour being still in the Managers Hand, or that it was prevented, as too much Favour, by the Bishops and their Friends, tho' once intended at Court, I know not.

I only

I only add further, that upon the 8th of July, 'The Council finding, by Act of Parliament all the vacant Stipends since the 1664. were to be uplifted for the Increase of the Stock of Universities, and a Collector appointed; a Committee is ordered to examine how that Affair stands.' This seems to have been a Fetch of the Bishops, when they knew the Indulgence was a coming, to prevent at least, one Part of the King's Will; and an Act of Parliament, allocating the vacant Stipends to Universities, would be a good Handle, at least to prevent the Four hundred Merks to the Nonindulged.

When the King's Letter was read in Council, it appeared extremely dissatisfying to the Prelates and their Party; and the Chancellor is reported to have said pretty openly, He would prevent its being of any Use to the Phanaticks in Fife. This Opposition to any Favour to Presbyterians, delayed the granting it for some Days, and there was a Committee named, to whom the King's Letter was referred.

The Act of Reference is, 'The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council appoint the Lords Archbishops of St. Andrews and Glasgow, the Lord Duke of Hamilton, the Earls of Argyle, Tweeddale, Kincardin, and Dundonald. (i. e. The Lord Cochran, whose Patent for Earl of Dundonald is read in Council, June 3^d this Year) the Lord President, Register, Advocate, and Lord of Lee, or any Five of them, to consider the forsaide Letter, and of the fittest Way how the King's Pleasure herein may be made effectual, and to report, and recommend it to the Chancellor to be present at the Meetings of the said Committee.'

In this Interval, the Lords of the Clergy, and some of their orthodox Ministers, had a Meeting to fall upon Means to hinder the Indulgence, which they apprehended would be ruining to their Interest. No practicable Measures could be proposed to prevent it altogether, since the King had made known his Pleasure: But Bishop Sharp, to comfort his Brethren, promised to do his utmost to make it a Bone of Contention to the Presbyterians. Indeed he wanted not Abundance of serpentine Subtilty; and when his Attempts to break it altogether failed, he set himself with all Vigour to have it so clogged from Time to Time, as to break Ministers and People of the Presbyterian Judgment among themselves.

The Committee named to ripen this Matter, had before them the fixing upon the Ministers to be indulged, and the Draughts of the Council's Acts thereanent; and when these are ready, and the Ministers advertised, with whom they were to begin, this was laid before the Council, and approved. I shall give the Acts and Ministers Names, as I find them standing in the Council-books, and add any Thing I find further noticeable from other Papers.

'July 27th, the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, in pursuance of his Majesty's Letter, dated June 7th, do nominate and appoint the following Persons to preach, and exercise the other Functions of the Ministry at the following vacant Kirks underwritten.'

- Mrs. ' Ralph Rogers, late Minister at Glasgow, at Kilwinning.
 ' George Hutchison, late Minister at Edinburgh, at Irvine.
 ' William Violant, late Minister at Ferrie, at Cambusnethan.
 ' Robert Miller, late Minister at Ochiltree, at the same Kirk.
 ' Robert Park, late Minister at Stranraer, at the same Kirk.
 ' William Maitland, late Minister at Whithorn, at Beith.
 ' John Oliphant, late Minister at Stonehouse, at the same Kirk.
 ' John Bell, late Minister at Ardrossan, at the same Kirk.
 ' John Cant, late Minister at Kells, at the same Kirk.
 ' John McMichan, late Minister at Dalry, at the same Kirk.'

Act of Council, July 8. about vacant Stipends.

When the Letter is read in Council, the Prelates are dissatisfied.

The Consideration of the Letter referred to a Committee.

Meeting of the Bishops Clergy to stop the Indulgence.

The Committee prepare Lists of Ministers to be indulged, and the Form of the Act of Council, Council's Nomination and Appointment, July 27.

Of these Ministers to vacant Kirks specified.

THE Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, in pursuance of his Majesty's Pleasure in the said Letter of June 7th, in his Majesty's Name and Authority, command and ordain all such outed Ministers, who are or shall be appointed to exercise the Ministry, that they constitute and keep Kirk-sessions, and keep Presbyteries and Synods, as was done by all the Ministers before the Year 1638. And the Council declare, that such of them who do not keep Presbyteries, shall be confined within the Bounds of the Parishes where they preach, ay and while they give Assurance to keep the Presbyteries. The Council does strictly command and enjoin all who shall be allowed, as said is, not to admit any of their neighbour or other Parishes unto their Communions, nor baptize their Children, nor marry any of them, without the Allowance of the Minister of the Parish to which they belong, unless the Parish be vacant for the Time, nor to countenance the People of the neighbouring or other Parishes, in resorting to their Preachings, or deserting their own Parish-churches: And that hereunto these give due Obedience, as they shall be answerable. And ordain these Presents to be intimated to every Person who shall, by the Authority foresaid, be allowed the Exercise of the Ministry.

Council's Act upon their Nomination.

Thus the Matter of the Indulgence, as coming from the Council, stands; and I shall give an Account of all the rest of the Persons indulged together, if once I had considered the Circumstances of the first Ten, when they receive their Allowance from the Council.

1669

All the Accounts I have seen, make it the 3^d of August this Year, when the abovenamed Ministers, and with them Mrs. John Scot, William Hamilton, and others in the following List of this Day's Date, appeared before the Council: But I find nothing in the Books of Council of this, neither the Copy of Acts of Indulgence given them upon this Day, inserted from other Accounts, which I find no Ground to question.

The Ministers come to Edinburgh, Aug. 3^o lay it on Mr. George Hutchison to deliver their Mind to the Council at their receiving the Indulgence.

When they come before the Council, the Chancellor has a Discourse to them, and the Clerk delivers them their Acts of Indulgence.

Tenor of the Acts when they were indulged to another Place than formerly they had been at.

Tenor of the Acts indulging them to their own Kirks.

Mr. George Hutchison's Speech to the Council.

The Ministers, when come to Edinburgh, after Consultation among themselves, and as many of their Brethren as they could have Access to, agreed to make a Declaration to the Council, against what had the Appearance of Evil in their Indulgence, and laid it upon Mr. George Hutchison to deliver their Mind.

When they came in before the Council, the Chancellor signified to them the King's Goodness in allowing them the Exercise of their Ministry, and desired them to manage well, and told them, The Clerk would read and give them their Acts of Indulgence. These were of Two Shapes; the one was unto such as were indulged unto other Kirks than they had been formerly settled at. The Tenor of Mr. Rogers Act, the First in the List of this Kind, ran thus.

'The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council, in pursuance of his Majesty's Commands signified the 7th of June last, do appoint Mr. Ralph Rogers, late Minister at Glasgow, to preach and exercise the other Functions of the Ministry at the Kirk of Kilwinning.'

This Act was signed by all the Members of the Council in Town, save the Two Archbishops. The other Form was to such of the Ministers, as were appointed to their own Churches now vacant: And the Tenor of Mr. Miller's, the First in the List of this Sort, follows.

'Forasmearle as' the Kirk of Ochiltree is Vacant, the Lords of his Majesty's 'Privy Council, in pursuance of his Majesty's Command signified by his Letter of the 7th of June last, and in regard of the Consent of the Patron, do appoint Mr. Robert Miller, late Minister there, to teach, and exercise the other Functions of the Ministry at the said Kirk of Ochiltree.

This Kind was signed as above; and both Sorts were delivered, after Reading by the Clerk, to the Hands of all the Ministers present, respectively: And after all had got them, the Clerk was ordered to read the Act above set down, dated July 27th, containing what was called their Injunctions, which was read to them all.

After which, Mr. George Hutchison craved Leave from the Council to speak; and being allowed, delivered himself thus.

My Lords,

'I Am desired, in the Name of my Brethren here present, to acknowledge in all Humility and Thankfulness his Majesty's Royal Favour, in granting us Liberty, and the publick Exercise of our Ministry, after so long a Restraint from the same; and to return hearty Thanks to your Lordships, for the Care and Pains taken therein, and that your Lordships have been pleased to make us, the unworthiest of many of our Brethren, so early Partakers of the same.'

'We having received our Ministry from Jesus Christ, with full Prescriptions from him for regulating us therein, must in the Discharge thereof be countable to him: And as there can be nothing more desirable or refreshing to us upon Earth, than to have free Liberty of the Exercise of our Ministry, under the Protection of lawful Authority the excellent Ordinance of GOD, and to us most dear and precious; so we purpose and resolve to be have our selves in the Discharge of the Ministry, with that Wisdom and Prudence which becomes faithful Ministers of Jesus Christ, and to demean our selves towards lawful Authority, notwithstanding of our known Judgments in Church-affairs, as well becomes loyal Subjects, and that from a Principle of Conscience.'

'And now, My Lords, our Prayer to GOD is, That the LORD may bless his Majesty in his Person and Government, and your Lordships in your publick Administrations; and especially, in pursuance of his Majesty's Mind testified in his Letter, wherein his singular Moderation eminently appears, that others of our Brethren may in due Time be made Sharers of the Liberty, that through his Majesty's Favour we now enjoy.'

Mr. Hutchison's Discourse displeases, and no more of the Ministers are brought before the Council.

So hard a Matter is it to please Sides and Parties, that in a difficult divided Time, such who essay to take the middle Way, oftentimes displease both. Mr. Hutchison's Discourse was by some thought too soft and general, and not a sufficient Testimony against the plain Erastianism that appeared in the King and Council's Procedure; and upon the other Hand it fretted and galled some of the Counsellors, as being too plain. When the Design was going on to indulge some more Ministers, it was resolved by some of those who were next to appear before the Council, to deal yet more plainly with them, as to their Mission and Instructions being allenarly from Jesus Christ. This took Air, and the Counsellors who were offended at the former Speech, moved one Day in Council, That such as should be indulged, should should no more be brought before the Council, but have their Acts of Favour sent them. 1669.

I shall now give the Names of such who were indulged at other Council-days this Year, all together, with their Dates. They had the same Acts sent to them, and the same Injunctions intimated to them as above. Besides the first Ten indulged July 27th, there were indulged and allowed.
